As they walked away to the door, and Samantha scrambled her bundles together and hurried forth to the train, she saw the faces of the young men, and recognized that Fred, the Fred who would like to go to New York, but would go home to his mother in Milltown, was Fred Warner, Widow Warner's only boy—the boy for whom all those "Fourth of July fixins'" had been bought. Her first impulse was to run after him, and tell him how his mother was "lotting" upon his coming home; and his sister determined to make the old house bright and gay, and how she herself had run around Boston after Chinese lanterns, to be hung in the trees, because Widow Warner meant to have a little party and gather all of Fred's old friends on the lawn in the evening of the Fourth. She recalled also that the widow had brought round her old bonnet to have it freshened up, because boys were apt to come back from the city a little bit particular about dress. In her flurry, she actually started to run after the tall young man striding down the platform, whirling his cane in his hand, but her bag dropped and its contents—spools, samples, pencil, notebook, purse, flew hither and yon. In scrambling for these, she lost her bundles. In getting those her umbrella went to the ground, and when, at last, she stood erect in the door of the station, with her various possessions well in hand, the tall young man had disappeared. Before her was the rush of the crowd, hurrying to the train, the rattle of vehicles, and the deafening noise of the street. Behind her a shrill voice crying "All aboard," and, not knowing which way to turn, she obeyed this call, and ran back just in time to drop panting into a seat of the rear car.

Now, at least, there was a chance to recover breath and sense, and, from the whirl of her own thoughts, to rescue some idea that would serve the widow and her boy. She was only a little withered old maid, with no one to care two straws what became of her. Why should she care so much to spare Widow Warner a blow? If Fred knew what was passing in her mind, he would doubtless call her a "meddlesome old piece," and say "he could take care of himself." And so, no doubt, he could, but, then, if he failed to do it this one particular time; if he should not come home on that Sunday train; if he did go to New York with that reckless looking young chap; if his mother had the party, and her boy never came to it at all; surely, that would be too much to expect "the widow's heart to bear? In some way she must spare her if she could. At first, she thought she would go straight to the mother and tell her all she had heard, but that would not spare her the pain and would not save the boy. And save him, she must; or, at least, she must try. She had gone no further than this in her meditations, when a touch on her shoulder, and "Ticket, if you please," aroused her.

"I have no ticket. I had not time to buy it."

"Where to, Ma'am?"

"To Fitchburg—no, wait a minute; I haven't made up my mind."

"Fare, one-forty, ten cents additional if bought on the train," suggested the conductor, kindly, evidently thinking she had come to the end of her money or her wits.

"What time do we reach Concord?"

"In twenty minutes now."

"Very well, give me a ticket for Concord."

At Concord, she inquired what time the next train went to Boston, and quietly sat down in the station to wait. She no longer hurried nor blustered. She had made up her mind. When the train for Boston arrived and she was whirled back into the city in the twilight, she was even able to get forty winks on the train, so quiet and settled in purpose had she become. She took a street car straight to the boarding-house in Hancock street, where she always stayed when her business kept her over night; but, before she entered, she went to a drug store and looked in the directory for the importing house where Fred Warner was employed. She knew the place of business would be closed, but she noted the residence of two members of the firm. Having engaged her room and left her parcels and told the landlady she was going to look for a friend and might not return till morning, she sallied forth again. She had no trouble in finding Fred's employer's house; but, in answer to the note sent up, asking Fred's address, he sent her that of a clerk who had all such items in his charge. Nothing daunted, she tried again, and this time with success—No. 148 D—— street was only five minutes in the street car from the house of her informant. And now began the hardest part of her task, but even for this she had courage. It took more than she had thought it would, though, to face the hard-featured boarding-house keeper, who was summoned, in answer to a statement to the servant, that she desired to wait till Mr. Warner should come in.

"Of course, you can wait, if you wish it, but no one ever knows when young men will come in. Mr. Warner and his room-mate are often out very late. Indeed, no one remains up for them, as they have their own keys."

But Samantha was not to be driven away by any suspicious glances or reluctant consent. "I am an old friend of his mother, and my errand is very important," she said; "and I must see him if I wait all night; I will sit here, ma'am, and Mr. Warner will take me to my lodging when he comes in."

And there she sat, her spectacles on her forehead, and her mouth puckered up like a bag with the string drawn tight, dozing a little, reading a little in her pocket Testament, but looking as determined as the granite of her native hills. And there the landlady left her, after telling a grumbling servant not to retire until the woman was gone. And there a young man found her, who jumped from a cab that rattled up to the door about midnight, and entered with his latch-key. He started up the stairway, then turned, and called the servant from the rear of the hall. Samantha leaned forward in her seat to see if the new-comer could be Fred, and saw, instead, the young man who had been with

CONTINUED ON PAGE 584

The woman of taste, means and refinement always wants the best soap to be had. She well knows that her beauty depends largely upon the healthy tint of the skin; and that this depends upon the purity of her soap. She likes pretty and scented toilet accessories, but she wants good soap for use. She has soaps, and soaps, in fancy boxes, but she has a cake of Ivory Soap at her washbowl.

IT FLOATS.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY, Pittsburgh
BEYMER-BAUMAN, Pittsburgh
DAVIS-CHAMBERS, Pittsburgh
FAHNESTOCK, Pittsburgh
ANCHOR, ECKSTEIN, Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC, BRADLEY, BROOKLYN, JEWETT, ULSTER, UNION, New York.
SOUTHERN, SHIPMAN, COLLIER, Chicago.
MISSOURI, RED SEAL, SOUTHERN, St. Louis.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO, Philadelphia
MORLEY, Cleveland
SALEM, Salem, Mass.
CORNELL, Buffalo
KENTUCKY, Louisville.

YOU may have had occasion to use White Lead in one, two, three or five pound cans and found it unsatisfactory.

If so, it was because it was not Pure White Lead, but some Mixture of Zinc and Barytes (principally Barytes) labeled "White Lead." If you want Pure White Lead be sure the package bears one of the brands named in the list.

If interested in paint or painting, address

National Lead Co., 100 William Street, New York.

HOME BIBLE STUDY BY MAIL

This "Home Bible Study." Book, FREE if you write and enroll at once. Course covers the whole Bible and leads to doctorate and degree. You can take this course at home by mail. Democratic. Best testimonials. For free catalog write

C. J. BURTON,
Pres. Iowa Chris. College, Oskaloosa, Iowa

SUMMER HOMES IN VERMONT

LAKE CHAMPLAIN and THE GREEN MOUNTAINS

A. W. ECCLESTONE, S. P. A.,
C. V. R. R., 366 Broadway, New York

THE LAW OF LIFE

Sickness Should Prompt Searching for God's Purpose

By Mrs. M. Baxter

THE Apostle Paul tells us (Rom. 8:10), that he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by His Spirit that dwelleth in you. This is quickening power for mortal bodies which are now alive, but can die. This word does not speak of bodies which are now dead, else they would be called dead bodies. Here, then, is a quickening power for living bodies. In Romans 7, Paul is speaking about the sin which dwelleth in us, and the great struggle there is between the mind, or will, of man under the law, whether converted or unconverted, and the law of God. A man wants to do right; but a law in his being makes him to do wrong, and he cries, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord. So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin." Then in chap. 8:1-2: "There is, therefore, now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, hath made me free from the law of sin and death." This is the first time in the Epistle of Romans that the Holy Spirit is mentioned.

It was this "law of sin" that made Paul, when under the law, do things he did not want to do. In the inward man he believed God's law was right, and he wanted to do it, but he found another power that acted in him and made him do wrong. There was always the struggle going on, and finally he came to the conclusion: It is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me. Are we to go on like this? No! there is another law.

The power of that same law which quickens the mortal body, also enables Christians to live as conquerors over sin. And the same law which gives us freedom from the bondage of sin, is that law which gives us freedom from the bondage of death—"the law of sin and death." If we look for freedom from the one, we must look for freedom from the other.

Now, some of us have become free from the law of sin, but there is the same struggle in our bodies now which there has been in our souls. There is the feeling: "I want to be well; I ought to be well with such a great physician as I have; but how am I to get away from the law of sickness and death?" Now, what is the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus? The Lord Jesus said again and again, "The Son can do nothing of Himself." He did his work by the power of God in him. "The law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus" is the law that put his spirit and soul and body into the possession of the Holy Spirit, and of the Father, through the Holy Spirit, so that he could say, "The Father dwelleth in me, he doeth the works" (John 14:10). Therefore "the law of the spirit of life" in you as in him is the Holy Spirit. The law of sin and death is just that law which the presence of the Holy Spirit came to deliver us from.

In what sense is the body dead? When the Lord Jesus Christ died on the cross, he died unto sin—unto my sin; as he hung on the cross there, he died as though he were me, he was punished as though he were me; the question of my sin was settled in the body of my Lord, as that body suffered death in my stead, and by faith I am identified with Him. Then, if we are identified with Christ, we take his place as he took ours. He took our place on the cross, and we take our place in Him on the cross, too. I find in my spirit no power to resist sin, but the Holy Spirit in me can do it. Do you see what it means is putting the personal "I," not as one with the flesh, but one with the Spirit? "I am dead." Paul said, "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me."

When we are walking in line with God, we cannot help being at peace, and our nerves do not get upset. We may do the right thing, but not at the right time; we may do the right thing a little too quickly, or perhaps too slowly, and then things get out of gear and the nerves are upset, "because the mind of the flesh is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can it be; and they that are in the flesh cannot please God."

RELIGION IN WORK*

How to Achieve the Ideal of Religion Between Sundays

WAS there any connection between the communism described in the passage associated with the Topic, and the condition developed later, when it was necessary to take up a collection among the Gentile churches for the poor in Jerusalem? We learn from Acts 11:29; Rom. 15:26 and other passages that there was grievous distress and poverty among the Christians at Jerusalem, and it is certainly fair to ask whether they were the result of this distribution of property. It was a noble enthusiasm which led the wealthy to give away their goods; but was it wise or prudent? Did it benefit the people who received them? Is it not more probable that there was for a time unusual luxury and a carelessness in expenditure while the funds lasted? Experience has proved again and again that the best way of helping a poor man is not by giving him money, but by putting him in a position to earn it. In sickness or in an emergency, money should be given freely, but nothing is more mischievous than gifts which are accepted as a substitute for honest work.

It is doubtful, too, whether the "religion between Sundays" that these early Christians practised was altogether the best kind of Christianity. "Continuing daily with one accord in the Temple" must have entailed a neglect of the ordinary duties of life. It would have been better for them to be, as the Apostle enjoined, "Diligent in business, serving the Lord." Christianity does not contemplate withdrawal from the world, but serving God in the world. The working man who does good honest work, all the more conscientious because of his being a Christian; the merchant whose goods are all they are represented to be, who does not resort to the tricks of the trade, and whose religion purifies and controls his business; the professional man whose clients know that he is strictly upright, and that he is a consistent Christian—all these are serving God in their occupations as acceptably as if they were found all day in a place of worship singing and praying. "Religion between Sundays," in its best sense, is honest work sanctified by Christian principle, with a readiness to sacrifice profit rather than consistency.

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society and Baptist Young People's Union for July 19. Acts 2:42-47.

Samantha's Independence Day

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 583

him at the restaurant, and who, she had no longer any doubt, was the room-mate of whom the landlady had spoken. The light in the room was dim, and she sat partly behind the door. He could not see her, but she could see him, and hear distinctly every word he said. "Look here, boy," he said to the colored servant, "do you want to earn a dollar in a half an hour? We are going away to spend the Fourth, Warner and I, and the Providence train leaves in forty minutes. Now Warner has sent me for some of his things, and you just come up and put them in his valise, while I scratch together some things for myself. Hurry now, there isn't a minute to lose." And he ran up the stairs and the servant after him, leaving the poor woman stunned at the defeat of her hope. Suddenly she bethought herself of the Providence train for New York. Fred might be at the station now waiting for his friend. Forty minutes would take her there, and she could see him and persuade him not to go. Acting on the impulse, she slipped quietly out of the front door. The light of the street lamp fell full upon the cab, whose driver was dozing with his head upon his breast. Within, also, sat a man, his head bowed on his bosom; but in the stupid sleep of intoxication, instead of the slumber of fatigue. One glance sufficed for the woman. It was Fred.

"Fred! Fred Warner!" she said to him softly, shaking him by the arm.

"All right, all right, Tom, drive on," said the poor fellow, "let's go home."

Quick as thought she sprung into the cab, aroused the driver by a vigorous poke of her umbrella, and ordered him to drive to the Fitchburg depot as fast as he could go. A yawn, a crack of the whip, and in two minutes they were so far away that even the sound of the wheels was not heard by the servant, who, descending first, stood waiting for his dollar, with Warner's valise in his hand. Five minutes later, Tom came down to find the cab and victim gone.

And away the fugitives went to the depot, while Tom was cursing his luck. Samantha never minded her parcels. She could send by express for them. She never minded double fare for the hackman, or any fatigue for herself. She had saved the Widow Warner's boy. Poor fellow! He must have had many drinks, to be so helplessly stupid.

He slept all the way to Fitchburg, and fell asleep again in the depot before she could send to the livery stable for a team. There was a daily coach to Hilltown, but it did not start till mid-day, and she could run no risk of Fred's being recognized in his present state. So she ordered a stable boy to be sent on horseback to take the carriage back, and drove herself all through the dreary darkness before the dawn, up the long rocky hills. When daylight broke the young man, now fast coming to himself, was lying on the sofa in the little parlor behind Samantha's shop. The aroma of strong coffee stole in to him from her little kitchen beyond. She gave him the coffee and everything else in the way of loving care, but she did not let him off without such a sermon as he never dreamed could issue from such a puckered buttonhole of a mouth as hers. About the time that the coach connecting with the Sunday train arrived, Fred walked leisurely up the street to his mother's home, and had to accept with secret shame a great deal of extra petting because he looked so pale and seemed so overworked. On Sunday night he went to church, and after the service he greeted many old friends; but he left them all, and walked home with the little milliner, Samantha, and in her little parlor she put on her "near-by" spectacles to see his signature upon a little temperance pledge that she had prepared for him. It was his "declaration of independence" against the slavery and chains that threatened to drag his own and his mother's hopes in the dust. He was not to tell his mother of his weakness till he had kept his pledge a year, "for why," said Samantha, "should she be troubled, as she must constantly be, if she knew the danger you was in?" But he told Tom, who grew so anxious as to his whereabouts that he took an early train on Monday to Hilltown. They made him welcome in the home, and he shared the evening among Fred's friends at the party, and Tuesday morning, after the Fourth, on their way to the coach, stopped with Fred a minute, and looked at the ribbons and flowers in the window of Samantha Marble's shop.

And they went in, and Fred left Tom there, and he stayed so long they missed the coach, and had to hire a farmer to drive them to Fitchburg. But the pledge in the Bible had two names, and they both agreed that they had had a glorious Fourth, and never meant to live anywhere again but in the "land of the free." As for Samantha, any listener, pausing at her gate, would have heard a quavering voice singing as she worked, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

You will insure lasting satisfaction in your handiwork by using

Fleisher's Yarns

The spinning is exact; the thread even, lofty and elastic.

Anything you crochet or knit will be soft and elastic, yet hold its shape always.

And so even is the dyeing that you can match any shade any time. Absolutely fast color.

You can tell the genuine by the trade-mark ticket shown above.

Knitting Worsted,
Shetland Floss,
Spanish Floss,
Dresden Saxony,
Germantown Zephyr, etc.

New Knitting and Crocheting Manual, mailed for five tickets from Fleisher's Yarns and 2 cents for postage.

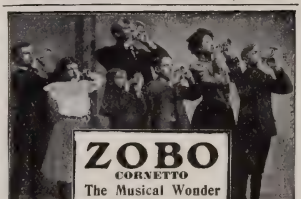
S. B. & B. W. FLEISHER,
Incorporated,
Department B, Philadelphia.

MELLIN'S FOOD
FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS

Puny babies become strong and robust babies when fed on Mellin's Food. Mellin's Food gives strength.

You will be glad that you sent for a sample of Mellin's Food when you see how eagerly baby takes it.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.



Sample sent prepaid for 25c.

You Can Play it on Sight Without Being Taught

Entertains Everybody Everywhere

Free Zobo Entertainments for Home, Church and Sunday School sent on receipt of name and address.

Strauss Mfg. Co., 138 W. 14th St., Dept. 19, New York

Loaned Free

23 page pamphlets of new and suitable Sacred Songs for Camp Meetings and evangelistic services.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

PIANO Do You Want a Genuine Bargain

Hundreds of Upright Pianos returned from renting to be disposed of at once. They include Steinways, Knabes, Fischers, Sterlings and other well known makes. Many cannot be distinguished from new ones, yet all are offered at a great discount. Uprights as low as $100. Also beautiful New Uprights at $125, $135, $150 and $165. A fine instrument as $290, fully equal to many $400 pianos. Monthly payments accepted. Freight only about $6. Write for list and particulars. You make a great saving. Pianos warranted as represented. Illustrated Piano Book Free.

FROM LYON & HEALY

38 Adams St., CHICAGO.

World's largest music house; sells Everything known in Music.

SALESMEN & AGENTS WANTED.

NEW INVENTION. Big Wages to men and women at home or traveling, selling and appointing agents. Wonderful seller. Everybody buys. No toys or novelties. retails $3.50 up. Mr. Gleason made $1,777 first year. Mrs. Howard $59.00 one week. New plan and offer FREE. WORLD MFG. CO., 943 WORLD BLDG., CINCINNATI, O.

GOOD REASONS: — Best materials. Most skillfully put together. Strongest, simplest, easiest, evenest. Never tears the shade. Improved

HARTSHORN

Shade Roller. None genuine without the signature

Stewart Hartshorn

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

Are You Deaf?

We have 25 KINDS OF INSTRUMENTS TO ASSIST HEARING Sent on approval. Write for catalogue.

WM. V. WILLIS & CO. 134 South 11th Street, Philadelphia

OUR HOME MUSIC CLASS

Sight-Singing in 12 Lessons

PREPARED ESPECIALLY FOR THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

By B. C. UNSELD

THESE lessons are published for a practical purpose, not merely as items of information. It is hoped that all who need the instruction will study the lessons, and practice the exercises. Questions on any points that may not be perfectly clear will be cheerfully answered. Inquiries may be addressed to B. C. Unseld, care of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

In every community there are scores of persons who have a little knowledge of music, who have attended a term or two at a singing school or taken a few lessons on the piano or organ, but who have never quite learned to sing at sight; there are many who, while having learned to play well, cannot read vocal music, who can only sing a piece after having pounded it out on the piano; lastly, there are the beginners, those who have never had any instruction in music. These lessons are intended to be of benefit to all these grades of pupils, and while the beginner will be kept constantly in view and the lessons so written that he may understand them, they will be none the less interesting and of benefit to those who already know something about music.

The lessons are addressed to the individual or solitary student, as in all probability the larger number of pupils who will take up the lessons will be of that class. But the best results are to be had where the lessons are studied in clubs, or classes, or little groups. It is, therefore, suggested that group clubs be formed to study and practice under the most competent member. The club may meet at the homes of the members, each in turn, or at the church, as may be agreed upon.

That these lessons may result in the musical improvement of thousands of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is the sincere wish of the author.

Lesson 1

The Scale.—The first thing to be studied is the scale. The scale is the foundation of the whole musical srtcuture, and there is much to be learned about it, first and last, but at the outset of your study all you need to know about it is that,

1.—The scale is a series of eight tones. The tones are named as follows:

Numerals:	One,	Two,	Three,	Four,	Five,	Six,	Seven, Eight.
Syllables:	Do,	Re,	Mi,	Fa,	So,	La,	Ti, Do.
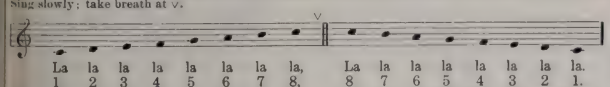
(pronounced)	doh,	ray,	mee,	fah,	soh,	lah,	tee, doh.

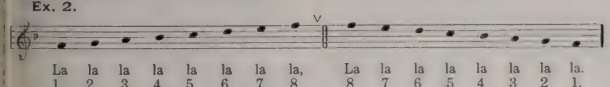
So much in the way of definition; but a mere description or definition of the scale is of no value to you if you have never heard the thing itself in connection with the definition. You should now sing or play Exercise 1, or get a friend to play or sing it for you until you can sing it yourself. Sing it first, several times, to the syllable La (with the instrument, if necessary, and then without help); then to the numeral names, with several repetitions, and then to the syllables, repeated a number of times. Exercises 2, 3 and 4 are to be studied in the same way. The amount of practice these exercises will require will vary with different individuals, some pupils will need more practice than others, each must judge for himself; but no one will scarcely do more than he needs. The staff, notes, and clefs in these preliminary exercises are intended for the one who plays or sings for you. You are to give your attention to the syllables and numbers printed under the notes.

Ex. 1. The notes are for the use of the assistant: the student to sing the syllables and numerals. Sing slowly; take breath at V.



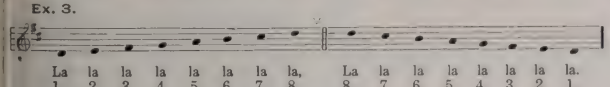
La	la	la	la	la	la	la	la,	La	la	la	la	la	la	la	la.
1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8,	8	7	6	5	4	3	2	1.
Do	re	mi	fa	so	la	ti	do,	Do	ti	la	so	fa	mi	re	do.

Ex. 2.



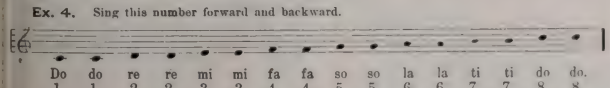
La	la	la	la	la	la	la	la,	La	la	la	la	la	la	la	la.
1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8,	8	7	6	5	4	3	2	1.
Do	re	mi	fa	so	la	ti	do,	Do	ti	la	so	fa	mi	re	do.

Ex. 3.



La	la	la	la	la	la	la	la,	La	la	la	la	la	la	la	la.
1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8,	8	7	6	5	4	3	2	1.
Do	re	mi	fa	so	la	ti	do.	Do	ti	la	so	fa	mi	re	do.

Ex. 4. Sing this number forward and backward.



Do	do	re	re	mi	mi	fa	fa	so	so	la	la	ti	ti	do	do.
1	1	2	2	3	3	4	4	5	5	6	6	7	7	8	8.

In Ex. 4, you sing each of the scale twice—do do, re re, etc. Next, you may make a similar exercise singing each tone three times—do do do, re re re, etc. Again, each tone four times—do do do do, re re re re, etc.

Copyright, 1903, by B. C. Unseld

ANSWERED PRAYERS

Mrs. A. W. A., Lewiston, Me. "Twice in my life I have had my prayers answered so directly that I feel, in gratitude to my Heavenly Father, this acknowledgment of his goodness ought to be expressed, to help those who are timid in asking. Faith must be answered, and your Father knows your needs before you ask him, so honor him in the asking, remembering to ask in his name."

B., Ill. "I wish to add my testimony to the list in the 'Answered Prayer' column. I was in great distress and cried to God for help, promising to acknowledge it to the world. The prayer was answered."

Mrs. D. H. G., New Baltimore, N. Y. "I want to acknowledge that in many ways God has heard and answered my prayers."

M. W., New York. "I do know God is a prayer-hearing and prayer-answering God. We have lately passed through a great anxiety. I called earnestly on the Lord, and he answered. Bless his name! He has blessed me many times, not only in great difficulty, but in the every-day cares of life."

E. B. S., Caldwell, O. "God has been answering prayer for me for thirty-five years, daily and hourly, and he will never fail the humble and contrite soul."

Sarah S., Norwich, Kan. "I am seventy-two years old, and have had so many answers to my prayers that I can't number them."

F. G. M., Barnum, Minn. "I am thankful that I have learned to pray to our Father in faith, knowing that if it be his will, I shall have my request. My spiritual life has been greatly strengthened since I put my whole faith in my Saviour. I have been praying for the conversion of a friend, and I expect that prayer will be answered."

A Trust Builder in Knee Trousers

ROY DUDLEY is the "Promoter" of a "Trust"

Composed of school boys in a Virginia city. In organizing the "combine" he displayed the energy and ingenuity of a Morgan. His dividends amounted to $48 in the first month.

A few months ago young Dudley started to sell The Saturday Evening Post. He got permission to call upon the employees of two department stores and 45 of them secured orders to deliver the magazine. The next day he secured more orders from business men. His chum, "Taffy" Wood, became a little envious and wanted to do the same thing, but young Dudley convinced him that to do so would mean ruinous competition. Instead he offered to resell copies to "Taffy" and to turn over to him a part of the customers already secured, with the understanding that he would get a certain number of new customers. Then he made the same sort of a bargain with Taffy's younger brother.

Three other boys had started to sell The Post before the "combine" was organized. He asked them to join his combination, but they refused his terms and serious trouble was threatened. Next week Master Roy secured 14 new customers in the territory in which his rival was working. Then he offered to "absorb" his competitor by giving him these new customers, provided he would get some more new ones and thereafter buy his copies from the "monopoly." The remaining two boys "compromised" and started work under Roy's direction the following week.

Then Dudley wrote to the publishers explaining what he had done, and offered to place a standing weekly order for three months, provided no new boys were appointed during that time. Within two months he was selling 350 copies a week. One week he sold a thousand copies. This is the record of a boy in knee trousers, ten years old.

IF YOU WILL TRY IT we will send the copies and everything necessary, including A Dainty Little Booklet in which twenty-five out of more than six thousand bright boys tell in their own way just how they have made a success of selling THE SATURDAY EVENING POST outside of school hours.

Some of these boys are making $10 to $15 a week. You can do the same. NO MONEY REQUIRED TO START. We will furnish ten copies the first week free of charge, to be sold at five cents a copy. You can then send us the wholesale price for as many as you find you can sell the next week.

$225 IN EXTRA CASH PRIZES will be distributed Next Month among our boys

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY
403 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

"Just Supposin'"

Just suppose that you knew for sure that we send you a high grade range—some better at a fair price—for from $15 to $20 less than some dealers make you for a range not so good. Would you keep that $12 or $20 in your pocket or would you give it to the dealer? We do save our customers that much money and

We Send the Range on 360 Days' Approval Test

Every range blacked and polished; any man can put it up. We pay the freight. Wouldn't it be wise to investigate? Our book No. 103 is free for the asking. Write for it.

Kalamazoo Stove Company, Mfrs., Kalamazoo, Mich.

All Kalamazoo cook stoves and ranges are equipped with patent oven thermometer

MEN'S HAT NO. 1

In soft, rough finish; colors Gray Mix, Brown Mix and Black Mix.

A 50-Cent Hat by Mail

MEN'S HAT NO. 2

Either of these hats sent postpaid on receipt of 50 cents by mail, postal order or stamps. Send 7 cents for our Fall and Winter Book of Men's, Boys' and Children's Clothing and Furnishings. It's full of interesting facts about Men's, Boys' and Children's Clothing and Furnishings. It's free. Write for it.

MIDDLETOWN HAT COMPANY, 44 Mill St., Middletown, N. Y.

LAWN FENCE

Many designs. Cheap as wood. Strong. Catalogue free. Special Prices to Cemeteries and Churches.

CHILD SPRING FENCE CO.
Box D Winchester, Ind.

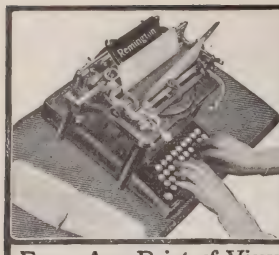
CHEAP RATES

TRANS-CONTINENTAL FREIGHT CO.

AGENTS OR FREE FREIGHT

Richardson Mfg. Co., Dept. 1 Rochester, N. Y.

"Good wives grow fair in the light of their works," especially if they use SAPOLIO



From Any Point of View
THE Remington Typewriter

IS THE BEST INVESTMENT

It leads in durability, reliability, permanent excellence of work, adaptability to all classes of work, ease, speed and convenience of operation, and economy in service.

REMINGTON TYPEWRITER CO.
327 Broadway, New York

ARTISTIC MONUMENTS
Cost No More than Plain Ones in White Bronze

Marble is entirely out of date. Granite soon gets moss-grown, discolored, requires constant expense and care, and eventually crumbles back to Mother Earth. Besides it is very expensive.

White Bronze is strictly everlasting. It cannot crumble with the action of frost. Moss-growth is an impossibility. It is more artistic than any stone. Then why not investigate it? It has been adopted for more than a hundred public monuments and by thousands of delighted customers in all parts of the country. Many granite dealers have used White Bronze in preference to granite for their own burial plots. We have designs from $4.00 to $4,000.00 Write at once for free designs and information, stating about what expense you anticipate. It puts you under no obligations. We deal direct and deliver everywhere. Over $90,000 worth of work sold to Christian Herald readers in the last few years. Agents Wanted.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.
70-90 Howard Ave., Bridgeport, Conn.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO. 5% PER ANNUM

Proper Caution is Compatible with Earnings of 5%

THIS COMPANY is well established and well known. Its patrons are conservative, cautious men. They know the Company's record of 10 years' growth, its present strength, indicated by

Capital and Surplus, . $1,100,000
Assets, ... $1,600,000

They know that, operating under State Banking Dept. supervision, we pay promptly (quarterly, by check) 5 per cent. on all sums, for every day we have the money; and it is withdrawable at pleasure. Let us give you full particulars. WRITE US.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO.,
1131 BROADWAY, NEW YORK

Because of their construction
PRESIDENT SUSPENDERS give most Comfort & Service Guaranteed
"All breaks made good"
"President" on buckle means
"Cannot rust" 50c. and $1.00
Any shop or by mail prepaid
The C. A. Edgarton Mfg. Co.
Box 209-N Shirley Mass
Send 6c. for Catalogue.

DEATH TO HEAVES Guaranteed
NEWTON'S HEAVE COUGH DISTEMPER AND INDIGESTION REMEDY is a veterinary specific for wind throat and stomach troubles. Spasmodic Roaring Recommended. If your Dealer has not got it, send 50c. and 1.00 Size Can Mail or Express paid
Newton Horse Remedy Co., Toledo, Ohio.

STARK TREES best by Test—78 Years LARGEST Nursery. FRUIT BOOK free. We WANT MORE SALESMEN PAY CASH Weed by STARK BROS, Louisiana, Mo.; Dansville, N. Y.; Etc

The Natural Body Brace advertised in this paper in the first issue of this month is a delightful, certain remedy for ailments peculiar to women and girls. It makes walking and work easy; gives good figure and light step. Write the Natural Body Brace Co., Box 171, Salina, Kan., for free illustrated book.

MISSOURI 5% INVESTMENTS.
Let me send you my book. Farm Mortgages. Unquestioned Security. 5 Wardell Bldg., Macon, Mo.
W. K. COMPTON.

Our Mail-Bag

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Teacher, Zanesville, O. Sometimes I read of a "pastor," at other times of a "minister." Are they identical? If not, what is the difference?

"Pastor" is originally a Latin word meaning "a shepherd." In the spiritual sense, it is used to describe one who guides and directs a congregation, as a shepherd guides his flock. Thus the office of pastor is supplementary to that of preacher. Preaching is the initial work, which presents the Gospel offer; pastoral care feeds and strengthens the flock and establishes the work of the pulpit. "Minister" (from "minus," inferior), though now generally applied to the clergy, was originally used to designate those who served in a subordinate capacity, as deacons. At the present time, it is practically synonymous with "pastor."

C. P., Plymouth, Pa. Can you tell me the origin of the statement "Mind your P's and Q's?"

There are several accounts of its origin, the most probable being the following: In the reign of Louis XIV. large wigs were worn. It was an age of extreme form and ceremony, and people in society were continually bowing to each other in salutation. Frequently, in the effort at a low bow, the wig would be disarranged and the cautionary remark, before bowing, to mind your feet (pieds) and your wig (queue), gradually assumed the familiar form of "mind your p's and q's."

Miss S. M. P., Contoocook, N. H. Are you getting up any fund, or taking clothing to help the flood or cyclone sufferers? I know you always do, and I should like to help a little.

Any money contributions received by us will be forwarded; but no clothing is needed, we understand. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD sent $1,000 to Kansas City, Kan.; $1,000 to Topeka, and $500 to East St. Louis, for relief work.

L. R., Ithaca, O. I have been praying for many years that God would give me assurance of salvation, but my prayers are not answered. I cannot understand it, and I am afraid I shall be lost. Is it not true that a saved person always knows that he is saved?

Many good men of whose salvation there can be no question, have at times had doubts, and have suffered acute distress. In some cases the doubts have a physical origin resulting from a gloomy disposition. In others, they arise from too much introspection. In others again, because their conscience reminds them of sins not yet overcome. You must remember that you are not saved because of your feelings, but because Christ died for you. If you have sincerely repented, and are trusting entirely in Christ to save you, and are living in his strength a godly life, you have the right to thank God for saving you, in spite of your doubts. If you cannot take his word that those who come to him through Christ have eternal life, you should ask him to forgive you for doubting him. You may be quite sure that he will keep his promise, whether you have the joy of assurance or not.

A reader in Colorado writes, asking the prayers of God's people, that her husband may find the gold for which he is now searching in the Colorado mountains. We do not consider that a prayer of this sort would be either spiritual or desirable. In the haste to become rich, men forget other things that are infinitely more precious than silver or gold. We do right to ask our Heavenly Father to supply our daily needs; but we would pray amiss were we to ask him for a fine house, a well-filled pocket-book, and a comfortable balance in the bank. "Seek ye first the kingdom and all things will be added unto you"—all our real wants will be supplied.

D. S. L., Lantaff, S. D. How are we to understand the promise of miraculous gifts contained in Mark 16: 15-18?

Simply as it is stated. If you read the Acts of the Apostles you will see that the promise was fulfilled. Christ did not say, however, that the gifts should be continued to the church for all time. It is, of course, within his power to renew them at any time. They were signs, and were to be used as he himself used them in his ministry to lead men to seek higher blessings. He always discouraged the tendency of people to regard him merely as a wonder worker.

H. W., Brooklyn, N. Y. Is there a snake called the hoopel snake? If so, in what country is it found?

You probably refer to the hoop-snake, a harmless reptile, with three red lines on the sides. It is found in the Southern States. We never heard of the "hoopel snake." The stories of such snakes taking tail in mouth and rolling like a hoop are utter nonsense.

F. W. McConnell, Paxton, Neb. Can a man be a Christian who believes in Evolution?

There are many Christian evolutionists. Henry Drummond a very eminent and sincere Christian, believed in evolution, and taught it. Some of our most learned and devout clergymen of all denominations believe in it, as did Dr. McCosh, for many years President of Princeton. It is a mistake to suppose that evolutionists exclude God from his universe, they contend that evolution is God's way of working, and we believe that few, if any, attribute the soul of man to evolution.

R. E. C., Michigantown, Ind. Ball playing on the Sabbath in this State is becoming common. Base-ball clubs meet and crowds gather to witness the game. It is breaking up our Sunday Schools. I am sorry to say church members go, too.

We regret to hear that Sabbath desecration is spreading in Indiana. The churches, the Sunday Schools, Y.M.C.A.'s, and the religious press, should do their full duty in denouncing the violation of the Lord's Day. That professing church members should patronize Sabbath games is incomprehensible.

C. H. B., Sand Creek, Okla. What are the real meanings of such visions as those described by Zechariah of the flying roll, the Woman in the Ephah, etc.

The chapters containing the visions are chiefly concerned with the hope founded on the approaching end of the seventy years, which, as Jeremiah predicted, would be the period of the captivity in Babylon. The flying roll, a huge book with wings, contained the record of sin and curse. The prophet sees it flying from the Holy Land, destroying on its way the houses of the thieves and perjurers. The woman in the ephah (5: 5-11) represents the principle of evil and of temptation. She, too, like sin and the curse, must be removed from the land, and she is carried away to the land of Shinar, which the Jews regarded as the fit abode of wicked things. The chariots of the winds (6: 1-8) are God's messengers commissioned to avenge Israel. The black horses go north, that is to punish Persia; the dappled, south, that is against Egypt; and the white, west, that is against Greece, then becoming formidable. The horses of the fourth chariot have a general commission for any part of the world in which enmity to Israel might develop.

R. A. H., Providence, R. I. Why were men of illegitimate birth excluded from the congregation of Israel as mentioned, Deut. 23: 2?

It is doubtful whether the prohibition had a general application. The word used in the original, appears to refer to a special form of illegitimacy. The prohibition against intermarriage with the heathen surrounding Judea, or with the Canaanites, was very stringent. It had to be so, to prevent the introduction of heathen customs, which, in the case of the Canaanites, were very revolting. It was still worse when a Hebrew formed an illicit connection with a Canaanitish woman, by which he evaded the penalty for inter-marriage. The passage you quote, is believed to have been directed against the offspring of such unions. The object of the prohibition, as with many other laws, was to keep the Hebrews wholly and entirely separate from their heathen neighbors.

Annie R., Kensico, N. Y. What does "rajah" mean and what is its equivalent in English?

It is a Sanscrit word, meaning "king." "Maha-rajah" means "great king." "Raj" is the equivalent of the Latin "Rex," which it strikingly resembles.

Inquirer, Brooklyn, N. Y. Do not the changes in the Revised Version of the Bible imply a doubt of inspiration? Have we all along been using a Bible that needs so many changes?

The changes do not affect the question of inspiration. No one ever contended that the translators who prepared the Authorized Version were inspired. The Revisers have simply given us a more accurate translation, and none of the changes they have made affect doctrine. They are valuable, but they do not show that the readers of the Authorized Version were misled in any way.

Christian Worker, Chicago, Ill. A saloon-keeper recently offered me some money to be used in my mission work, or in relieving the poor. Ought I to accept it, or should I regard it as tainted money?

You cannot regard it otherwise than as tainted money; but we do not see that the aspect should prevent your accepting it and using it in the manner suggested. If the money were given you as a bribe to induce you to discontinue denouncing the saloon, or if you felt that receiving it involved you in any obligation to favor its license, or to close your eyes to any violation of the law, then of course, you should refuse it; but as an unconditional gift we see no reason for its being rejected. The money probably came from the poor, and you will return it to those to whom it legitimately belongs. It is probably a very small percentage of the money that they have lost through the saloon.

When Golfing, Shooting, Fishing use
HORLICK'S MALTED MILK

A delicious, satisfying food-drink—in powdered form instantly prepared with hot or cold water. Also in tablet form, either natural or chocolate flavor—ready to be eaten as a quick lunch. A compact, strength-giving, emergency ration for the sportsman, athlete, and traveler. Made of pure, rich milk from our own dairies, and the extract of selected grain, malted by our special process.

Used and sold everywhere—all druggists.

SAMPLE If you are not using it now, let us send you our unique Shakespearean Booklet and a trial package, postpaid, FREE

Horlick's Food Co., Racine, Wis. U.S.A.
39 Farringdon Road, London, Eng. 25 St. Peter Street, Montreal, Can.

FREE
"Frozen Dainties"
Write for the new edition of this famous guide to making frozen desserts. It is complete and trustworthy, like the Triple Motion WHITE MOUNTAIN Freezer which it recommends.
The White Mountain Freezer Co., Dept. A Nashua, N. H.

Dr. Lyon's
PERFECT
Tooth Powder
Used by people of refinement for over a quarter of a century
PREPARED BY
J. W. Lyon, D.D.S.

Rider Agents Wanted
in each town to ride and exhibit sample bicycle
'03 Models high grade $9 to $15
1901 & '02 Models, best makes $7 to $10
500 2ND - HAND WHEELS
all makes and models good as new $3 to $8.
Great Factory Clearing Sale. We ship on approval and 10 day's trial without a cent in advance.
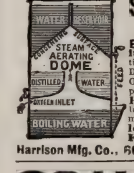
EARN A BICYCLE taking orders for us. Write at once for bargain list and our wonderful special offer to agents. Tires, equipment, sundries, half price.
AUTOMOBILES Bargains in new and second-hand Autos and Motor Cycles. All makes and styles. If interested write for Automobile Catalogue.
MEAD CYCLE COMPANY, Dept. 64 CHICAGO, ILL.



SALESMEN and AGENTS WANTD.
BIG WAGES—Our Famous Purifian Water Still, a wonderful invention—beats Filters. 20,000 already sold. Demand enormous. Everybody buys. Over the kitchen stove it furnishes plenty of distilled, aerated, delicious, Pure Water. Only method—saves lives and Dr. bills; prevents typhoid malaria fevers. Write for Booklet, New Plan, Terms, Etc. FREE. Address,
Harrison Mfg. Co., 568 Harrison Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

SCALES FREIGHT PAID BEST QUALITY LOWEST PRICE ON TRIAL ALL SIZES. FREE LIST. JONES BINGHAMTON, N. Y

MAPLEWOOD
Near Cincinnati, Ohio.
A Sanatorium established in 1875 for the private care and treatment of Drug and Alcoholic Addictions. Thousands having failed elsewhere have been successfully treated by us. Home treatment if desired. Address The Dr. J. L. Stephens Co., Dept. R 3, Lebanon, O.

OUR MAIL BAG

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 586

J. N. M., Edmunds, N. D., calls attention to these striking coincidences:

The statue on the capitol dome represents Freedom. It was raised into place Dec. 2, 1863. Was it a chance that so significant an event should have transpired on the fifth anniversary of John Brown's execution? Was it by chance that the Sixth Corps, after assisting in the conversion of the Valley of Humiliation, into the Valley of Blessing, should arrive in Washington on that day, to witness Freedom's enthronement? Was it by chance that the first bloodshed of the Civil War was on the anniversary of Lexington? Was it by chance that the destruction of Early's army was on the anniversary of Yorktown? Was it by chance that the surrender at Appomattox was on the anniversary of Christ's triumphal entry into Jerusalem? Was it by chance that Lincoln was assassinated on the anniversary of the Crucifixion?

L., South Sharon, Pa. I was asked one day if I knew how the Atlantic Ocean got its name. I did not. "Well," said my informant, "it was in this wise: A Welshman and his wife went out in a skiff one day for pleasure. The man's name was Richard and the woman's Jane. A storm came on, and they drifted out to sea. There they were at the mercy of the great waves for a day and a night. In the morning the woman cried out, 'At land, Dick; at land, Dick,' and Dick, almost exhausted, said, 'Oh Shan! Oh Shan!' That was the way it became known as the Atlantic Ocean."

Our Welsh reader's humorous version of the naming of the Atlantic is amusing enough. He may never have heard of the tradition of the lost island Atlantis, which sank with its forty odd million souls in a single night, as the world's most ancient historians relate.

Miss Edith Norcross of Roxbury, Mass., writes:

When I opened THE CHRISTIAN HERALD on February 18, it was with great pleasure that I read your account of the Mary Tewksbury School. I was on my way to teach in that little shanty schoolbuilding by the river, in Columbus, Ga. Kind friends from my home in Boston, had provided me with books and useful school supplies. How I wish I could take you all with me into that little schoolroom, to look upon the barefoot and poorly-clad children, with their bright and eager faces, so anxious to learn. Will you not be glad to know that from that article printed in your paper, fifty dollars was sent in by Mistead friends, and we decided to put this in the bank toward a new building fund. I decided to make personal appeals to the business men of Columbus for money for our new building. After making one hundred and forty-seven calls, I collected two hundred and fifty dollars. A friend gave a stereopticon lecture in one of the churches, from which twenty-eight dollars was realized. We now have in the bank three hundred and twenty-eight dollars towards our new school. I presume that the friends of the CHRISTIAN HERALD will be very glad to know that they were the first to contribute to the building fund, and really gave us the impetus for the work. A lot has been donated for the building; the total cost of the school will be eight hundred and fifty dollars.

A. F. De F., Del Roy, O. Can you inform me whether the immigration to the United States for June has been keeping pace with April and May? April gave us 126,286; May, 137,514. I find May has been the month of flood tide immigration for several years, June being invariably less than May. Look at the following:

	1899	1900	1901	1902	1903
April	40,276	60,807	65,362	85,607	126,286
May	53,954	69,464	82,837	107,091	137,514
June	37,337	54,498	52,589	75,560	What?

From the above it is clearly seen that May is the climax, and that June is less than April.

This year, owing to exceptional conditions (the trouble in Russia, Servia and Macedonia), it would not be surprising if June immigration exceeded that of May. There is no other ground, however, for anticipating any material change in the ratio of previous summers.

Mrs. E. J. L., Malden, Mass., writes:

I noticed a question in the Mail-Bag, relative to the prejudice against marriages in May. Although married but a few years, great happiness and blessings have attended us thus far, and we anticipate no great disasters rising out of our choice of May as a marriage month. It would hardly seem possible in our enlightened age, that one should rule out any month of God's calendar, as unlit, or surrounded by superstitions unfitting it for marriage.

It is an old but absurd superstition, that May marriages turn out badly. It is still found to prevail, especially in the rural districts of Great Britain, France, and Italy.

Reader, Findlay, O. The price of the Red Letter Testament is $1.

Several readers. Write to Rev. L. D. Ewing, Dexter, Mo., for information about the "War on dancing."

A. R. B., Memphis, Tenn. According to tradition, Patrick was born at Kilpatrick, near ancient Ailcuide, now known as Dumbarton.

Miss G. D., Nineveh, N. Y. The Scottish pronunciation gives the accent on the second syllable, Car-negie. In the U. S., the first syllable is usually accented.

Reader, Griffin, Cal. Write to Dr. Sorsen, Calumet, Mich., about Finnish immigrants for domestic service.

C. A. B., Moline, Kan. For the benefit of J. L., Oakdale, O. "I will suggest that Hope is a compound of desire and expectation; Faith is a compound of hope and trust, or confidence in God and his word only, for anything less than that is liable to fail us. We meet with our Father in prayer, asking according to his will for such things as we think we need, leaving it entirely with him as to how and when he will answer. The word Faith has been so often used in connection with sublunary things which fail us, that it has, to a great extent, lost its significance as given us in Heb. 11:1."

A RIGHTEOUS NATION*

Strong Men and Strong Women the Nation's Hope

OUR religion is essentially personal. Society cannot be saved in a mass. The world will never be redeemed as a whole. It will be done by the change in the individual. We need good laws, and legislation is capable of doing much for the improvement of the community, but the best legislation in the world can never make the people righteous. That must be done, if done at all, by each individual becoming righteous. There might be the most stringent prohibition law enacted and enforced, and yet the people not be really a temperance people. Unless they have in their hearts a good, wholesome hatred of intoxicating liquor, they cannot be relied on to resist temptation when it presents itself. That is the genius of the Christian faith. It is a law of liberty. Its ideal is to have men so good, that if all law was abolished, they would be as good without law as with it. As with the training of a child, who as a child must obey his father's commands, but when he becomes a man is so dutiful and so good, that he does, being free, the very things that previously he did under compulsion; so the ideal Christian is good because he loves to be good. All the government and the discipline that God has given to the world tends to that one consummation, of a race free to sin, yet voluntarily choosing righteousness.

Our nation's hope, from this standpoint, is not so much in being governed by strong men, as it is in having a people strong in righteous principle. Such a nation, with the freedom of choice that we have, will inevitably have a strong government. Strong men would not tolerate the government of weaklings. They might make mistakes sometimes, for the aspirant for office sometimes pretends to be the thing he is not; but the blunder is soon corrected, and the right man reaches the right place. The one essential need is the recognition of righteous principles and the resolute determination that those principles shall control the national policy. When the community reaches that point, there will be no fear of the statesmen elected to office being mean, or of their truckling to iniquity.

*Topic of the Epworth League for July 19. Ex. 18:21; Deut. 16:18; Eph. 6:10-18.

AN EXCELLENT OPPORTUNITY

For Those Seeking a Most Desirable Investment

Grantwood-on-Hudson and Morsemere

as directly opposite Grant's Tomb and Riverside Drive

GRANTWOOD MORSEMERE

LOTS AT GRANTWOOD $200 to $300 AT MORSEMERE

EASY PAYMENTS $5 down and $5 monthly, for lots under $200

These properties have already proven their profit possibilities; but to demonstrate our faith in their future increase, we will guarantee that if the actual increased value within two years from each purchase is not equal to 10 per cent. per annum on your cash investment (to determine by the price at which we are selling similar lots at that time) we will refund the entire cash paid us, with interest at 6 per cent.

If interested we will give you a FREE TRIP TO NEW YORK

COLUMBIA INVESTMENT & REAL ESTATE CO.,

1137 BROADWAY, NEW YORK CITY.

CAPITAL AND SURPLUS $335,137.69 ASSETS $929,171.87

BANK BY MAIL.

4%

ASSETS $14,500,000.00

Write to-day for Illustrated Booklet No. 18—tells about our bank and our modern, safe and convenient method of Banking by Mail. Deposits of $1 and up received, 4 per cent. interest paid.

PITTSBURGH BANK FOR SAVINGS

SMITHFIELD & FOURTH AVE

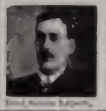
ESTABLISHED 1862 PITTSBURGH PA

REAL ESTATE WANTED

For Hundreds of Cash Buyers.

U. S. Real Estate Journal, 55 House Block, Ilion, N.Y.

DO YOU WANT CASH



REAL ESTATE OR BUSINESS?

FRANK P. CLEVELAND.

Participating Life Insurance

Protects your family and provides a cash profit for yourself.

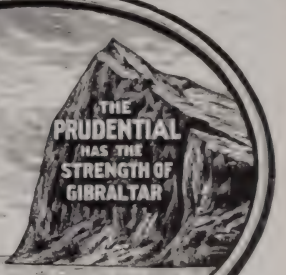
The Prudential

Insurance Co. of America

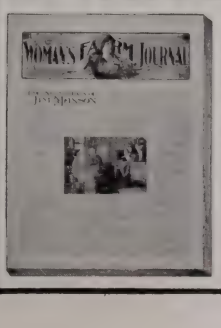
JOHN F. DRYDEN President

Write for Information, Dept. 70

Home Office: NEWARK, N. J.



A WHOLE YEAR FOR 10 CENTS.



THE WOMAN'S FARM JOURNAL

is a beautifully illustrated monthly paper devoted to woman's interests. It is 13 years old and now has over 300,000 regular subscribers. In order to double our subscription we will send it a whole year for 10 cents if you also send names and addresses of four lady friends who you think would subscribe on same terms.

EACH NUMBER CONTAINS 96 COLUMNS OF

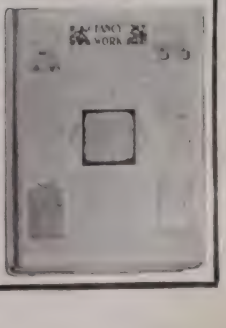
Splendid Stories, the Latest Styles and Hints on Dress, Lessons in Embroidery and Fancy Work, with original designs, hundreds of New Cooking Recipes, all about the Garden, Flowers, Chickens, Buckwheating, etc.

HOW TO MAKE POCKET-MONEY AT HOME.

Thousands of our readers make from $3 to $10 per week at home through The Woman's Farm Journal. Don't put off subscribing at this low price. Lay down this paper and do it right now. Tell your friends about this grand offer, or better still, show them this and have them also subscribe.

THE WOMAN'S FARM JOURNAL,

120 Journal Building, ST. LOUIS, MO.



THE CITY OF OPPORTUNITY

A HARBOR VIEW IN SUPERIOR—THE GATEWAY OF THE NORTHWEST

WHAT $10. will do for you ---- IN ---- SUPERIOR.

The chance of a lifetime to participate in the wonderful growth and development of this Prosperous City. SUPERIOR IS THE GATEWAY OF THE NORTHWEST. Millions already spent by the Government and Transportation Companies, foreseeing the immense future of Superior.

Superior, Wisconsin, offers one of the greatest opportunities of the day for the large and small investor. The development of the Northwest is marvelous, and Superior is its gateway; the distributor of its products and supplier of its necessities.

Already one of the greatest ports in the world, the terminus of four Great Western Railroads, and the second city in the great state of Wisconsin. Superior at the head of lake navigation is the eternal point of transfer between producer and consumer, east and west, land and water.

Superior has the largest grain elevators, ore docks, coal docks and warehouses in the world, and is rapidly developing into a great city.

It is a perfect location for the manufacture of cereal products, coke, iron, steel, furniture, woodenware, stoves, farming implements, railroad and steamship supplies, glucose, malt, etc.

Millions have been and are being spent in permanent improvements by Railroad and Steamship Lines to handle the traffic that cannot go elsewhere.

The United States Government has spent over three millions of dollars in harbor improvements, and appropriated $300,000 for new Government Buildings.

THE LARGEST GRAIN ELEVATOR IN THE WORLD AT SUPERIOR
230 feet high—capacity 3,200,000 bushels—cost $2,000,000

Great Cities are built at the meeting point of natural advantages, and here at the head of lake navigation, in the heart of the wheat and timber belt, with the great iron and copper ore beds on one side and a magnificent grazing country on the other, stands Superior.

Great men look far ahead before investing their money, and when such men as James J. Hill, General John H. Hammond, Senator Breckenridge, Senator Beck, Thomas A. Scott, Frederick Billings, W. W. Corcoran, and others, started to develop Superior they realized that at this point a great industrial city was destined to be built; nor has their judgment been wrong, for from that time Superior, a mere village of a few hundred with no railroads, has now developed into a prosperous, growing City of 35,000 inhabitants and is on a firmer foundation than ever for a great future growth.

Capitalists alone cannot build a City. The small investor and settler form the backbone of any stable community. Realizing these facts, this Company is now offering to the public a few blocks, situated in almost the geographical center of the town.

It costs nothing to know our plan. See what we will do for you.

OUR OFFER Is a very liberal one, especially so to the man of moderate means, who wishes to put a few dollars aside monthly as an investment. We only ask $10.00 down and $5.00 a month on a $150.00 lot, and the size of these lots is 25 feet by 120 feet; should the purchaser die before he has paid for his lot in full, a deed will be delivered to his heirs without any further payments, or should the purchaser be taken sick or lose employment, we will carry his lot for a year, without any payments other than 20 cents per month as interest.

No taxes whatever will begin until the purchaser has paid for his lot in full and a deed has been delivered.

Our prices will not always be as low as they are now. Superior is developing rapidly, and, with this development, the price of real estate will increase. Large profits are made in rapidly-developing communities.

Why not take advantage of our offer, and buy a lot at once?

Upon receipt of $10.00, we will select for you one of our best $150.00 lots.

We will send you free maps of this section and our beautiful new illustrated booklet, "The City of Opportunity," which shows in detail the wonderful growth of Superior and the Northwest.

It costs you nothing, send without delay for full information and details. ADDRESS:

Superior Consolidated Company,

30 Broad Street, New York City.

REFERENCES:—Talbot J. Taylor & Company, Bankers, New York City; First National Bank of Superior, Wisconsin; Bank of Commerce, of Superior, Wiscousin.

If interested in manufactures, write for specific details.

☞ We have positions open for a few good salesmen. Liberal terms offered. Write us at once.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
Published 52 Times a Year

NEW YORK, JULY 15, 1903

VOL. 26—NO. 28. PRICE 5 CENTS
Offices: Bible House, New York

SEE ARTICLE ON PAGE 595

The Summer Gospel Campaign — Service in the Tent "Evangel," New York

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Reader, Milford, Pa. Is it right for a pastor to permit entertainments of a worldly character to be held in the church, singing comic songs and giving comic recitations?

It is inconceivable that any pastor would knowingly permit the church to be the scene of a comic entertainment. He may have misunderstood the character of the performance. A lecture, a concert, a reading might be given without violating good taste and the sense of fitness and decency; but to turn the pulpit into vaudeville is inexcusable.

Mrs. R. A. H., Oregon, Wis. 1. Will a Christian commit suicide? 2. Are there any sanctified people on earth at the present time or have there ever been?

1. Read the sermon on the subject in the present issue. 2. There are doubtless many good Christians who do not sin wilfully, but there is none absolutely perfect in this life. Natural sin—that which is involuntary—and wilful or deliberate sin, committed knowingly, are totally different. A sanctified person may and does commit sin; but through grace he is kept from deliberate sin.

R. E. W. G., Lupton, Mich. "I have been reading lately that the Galatians of ancient history and of New Testament times were the last offshoot of the Gauls, who, after migrating from Bactria with the Aryans, left their settlements in Scotland, Ireland, Wales, France and Spain, got back into Asia Minor. Can you tell me anything of the characteristics of the modern descendants of those same Galatians, or refer me to some easily obtainable book on the subject? The spirit of travel or of restlessness must have been very strong in them."

Galatia means, literally, "The Gallia of the East." They were an intermixture of Gauls and Greeks. See Ritter's Erdkrunde, Mannert's Geography of Greece and Rome [German], and Merleker's Comparative Geography [German].

"Old Preacher's" letter, which recently appeared in THE MAIL-BAG, has brought out several replies. A. C. McPheeters, Piney Flats, Tenn., writes:

My heart holds a very tender place for the dear, faithful old servants of our blessed Master. I think he could do a good and enjoyable work, and at the same time be making a living in an humble way, if he would write to Rev. E. O. Guerrant, of Wilmore, Ky., the President of the "Soul Winner's Society."

Van B., Salem, Mass. Are there any works attributed to Moses, besides the Pentateuch?

The ninetieth Psalm, as you will see by its heading, is ascribed to him, and it is remarkable that many scholars, who deny that Moses wrote the whole of the Pentateuch, believe that he wrote that Psalm. It has also been contended that he wrote the book of Job; but that is mere conjecture, and very few scholars ascribe it to him, or profess to be able to name the author.

Mrs. J. P. H., Marquette, Neb. Is it a sin to get angry? What is meant by "Be ye angry and sin not?"

Yes, to give way to anger, is a sin. The text quoted, refers to "righteous indignation," at some flagrant wrong or injustice, a feeling which is pardonable and even noble.

J. A. T., Scenery Hill, Penna., writes: I submit the following lines, wishing to know whom the author is:

"No endeavor is in vain,
The reward is in the doing;
And the rapture of pursuing,
Is the prize, the vanquished gain."

Possibly some reader may know the author's name.

Sufferer, ——, Ind. When a wife has been unfaithful, and the husband has not obtained a divorce, and the wife writes to him professing repentance, and begging to be forgiven and taken back, should he consent, if he has young children, the eldest a girl of twelve years?

It would be well to see her and find out whether the repentance she professes is genuine, or is merely a pretence to regain her home. If she is not truly contrite, and does not sincerely feel the wickedness of her conduct, there would be a risk in receiving her of a repetition of the offence, and perhaps of corruption to the children. On the other hand, if she is sincere, she is of all women least likely to be again led astray and will be most careful and vigilant in bringing up the children. Their interests and the salvation of the wife should be the chief consideration of the husband in deciding. He is a better judge than we can be, of her character and of her stability and sincerity. The wrong done to himself should not weigh with him in coming to a decision. He is bound to forgive, as he hopes to be forgiven. For the sake of the woman, however, we would say that if the husband is in doubt, it would be well to give her the benefit of the doubt.

Student, Troy, N. Y. What is Juggernath, the Hindoo deity, and the character of the worship paid to him?

Juggernath, or, more properly, Jaganath (an incarnation of Vishnu), is called "The Lord of the World." Sir William Hunter writes of this heathen deity:

Jaganath's priests, by skilfully working upon the Indian passion for pilgrimage, have for six centuries made Orissa the Terra Sancta of the Hindoos. He owes his long reign to that plasticity which admits the whole Hindoo Pantheon within his walls, and which, during six hundred years, has ever instinctively accommodated itself to the changing spirit of the times. By the ingenious device of successive incarnations, Vishnu (Jaganath is accepted nowadays as his ninth incarnation), has made himself the centre of a whole cycle of religious systems, and secured the adoration of many races belonging to widely separated stages of civilization. Without losing his own identity, he assimilated the attributes of nine of the most popular gods. Sixty years ago the Baptist missionaries entered Orissa, and a few years later one of them wrote "Reflections on Scenes beheld near the Temple of Jaganath; or Meditations among the dead, Written after seeing ninety pilgrims lying dead in one place during the Car-festival or 1825; with illustrations of the extreme wickedness of idolatry." On the same occasion one hundred and forty-three bodies were counted at another place!

X, Philadelphia, Pa. Will you please give your opinion as to whether a farmer needs as much education as other business and professional men?

His education, to make him proficient and successful in his business, should be on different lines from those that are adopted in training for other callings. Some of our colleges have added agricultural departments to their other branches to meet this special need. Write to Cornell University for pamphlet describing agricultural training. At the same time, the more education any man receives on general lines, the better.

Maggie K., Kansas City, Mo. Please tell me where in the Bible, men are called God's messengers.

See II Chron. 36:16; Isaiah 18:2; Matt. 11:10, Mark 1:2; Luke 7:27; and similar passages.

B. S., Beaumont, Kans. I don't believe a God of Love would send cyclones and tornadoes to kill his children. Some people say he doesn't send them, but he allows the devil to do it. This is confusing to me, and I would be glad to have some one to give me light on this through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

You should not trouble about these matters. There are many things we cannot understand in this world, which will, no doubt, be made clear to us hereafter. God is not the author of evil. See answer to J. P. F. in THE MAIL-BAG of July 1.

M. Thomas E. Hill, of Duluth, writes to THE MAIL-BAG, proposing as a remedy for floods, that

The government set apart a portion of what is now expended each year in repairing damage from floods, and from this fund give fair compensation to every farmer and landowner who will construct a lake, covering an area of an acre or more, in the swamps and lowlands of his farm. Follow this by turning all tile and other drains into these made lakes and reservoirs. The rainfall thus remains where it belongs. It remains in the uplands where it falls, to evaporate in the warm days, to come back in rains and dews, preventing drought, and so cooling and moistening the atmosphere as to prevent the cyclone.

Reader, California. 1. Who was Machiavelli? 2. Will you please explain the ocean tides, and how they are influenced by the moon?

1. Nicolo Machiavelli, of Florence (1493-1527), was a noted teacher; author of The Practice of Politics, and The Prince, and his system was by some denounced as "the most pernicious maxims of government, founded on the vilest policy." Any cunning piece of diplomacy was therefore termed "Machiavellian." 2. Any good encyclopedia will give the information.

E. B. S. and F. C. A. write that S. A. B. Mansfield can find the poem, "In Pastures Green," by Henry H. Barry, in a little volume, entitled "Daily Strength for Daily Needs." The verses are:

In "pastures green?" Not always, sometimes He Who knoweth best, in kindness leadeth me
In weary ways, where heavy shadows be.
So whether on the hilltops high and fair
I dwell, or in the sunless valleys, where
The shadows lie, what matter? He is there.

Apropos of a recent communication in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD referring to the Story of the Hymns, Mrs. M. C. W., Augusta, Ga., writes:

A professor in Rochester University, in 1875 (Rev. J. H. Gilmore), had been reading the twenty-third Psalm one day, and immediately afterward, wrote those lines, "He leadeth me," etc.—an evident inspiration. Some years ago, he exchanged photographs with Hudson Taylor, founder of the China Inland Mission, who remarked, "How pleased Mr. Hsi will be to see this." "Who is Mr. Hsi?" asked Mr. Gilmore, "why should he care to see it?" The answer was, "Mr. Hsi is one of the best native workers in China. Some time before, two medical missionaries had gone to a town in the interior and established a little hospital. The mandarin, hearing of it, sent for the owner, who was this Mr. Hsi, and rebuked him for letting the place to such people. He inquired what the missionaries did and was told they prayed and sung hymns. He then ordered Mr. Hsi to give him a sample of one of the hymns, and there, in that Chinese court of justice, hundreds of miles from any church or pastor, Mr. Hsi, who had just emerged from heathenism, sang, "He leadeth me, oh! blessed thought." Thus was favor gained—not only for the good work of the hospital, but a peaceful greeting awaited all the missionaries."

F. M. L., Brush, Colo. Write to Evening News, Lincoln, Neb., for information.

Reader, Rahway, N. J. The immigration to the United States in twenty years has undergone a great change. In 1882, 100,000 came from Norway and Sweden; last year only 54,000. In 1882, 669,000 Germans; last year 28,000. In 1882, 153,000 British; last year 46,000. The bulk of the immigration now is Italian, Austro-Hungarian, and Russian-Jewish.

SELIMA, A SINGULAR VILLAGE ON THE SLOPE OF MT. LEBANON

In this strange village of 500 families (Druses, Maronites, Greek Catholics, and Greek Orthodox), Dr. Ghosn-el-Howie, the Christian preacher of Schweir, Mount Lebanon Syria, visited and preached the Gospel a few weeks ago. Dr. Howie and his wife were kindly received by the natives, and even by the Greek Catholic priest. Selima was, in a former age, a populous place, and one of the seats of heathen worship, condemned in the Bible as having an evil influence on the Israelites. The photograph of the strange-looking village—which strongly recalls some of the Arizona cliff-dwellings—was apparently taken in winter, during the snows. Architecturally, and as to its general plan, Selima seems to be a maze, whose interminable passages might well puzzle the stranger.

Miscellaneous Questions

Mrs. J. W. Martin, Tenn. Never heard of it.

Mrs. M. C. B., Plainfield, N. J. The phrase is "Man proposes; God disposes."

A. L. B., Jackson, Mich. We believe you can procure it from some Milwaukee newspaper. Try the Sentinel.

J. B., Brooklyn. For the twelve months ending June 30, 604,924 aliens arrived at the port of New York, as against 497,791 the year previous.

O. B., Lancaster, O. 1. Hypnotism is not yet an accepted science. It is largely in the hands of charlatans and humbugs. Better let it alone. 2. You would be second cousins. We do not know whether there is any law in Ohio against such marriages, but the local authorities in any parish will inform you.

"FOR INASMUCH"

A Jewess pleads for her race in Russia

"For inasmuch as ye do it unto the least of these, ye do it also unto Me."

WHAT woman would stretch out her hand
To man, though crowned king, who said:
"Thy child is banished from my land,
Though thou may'st enter unafraid?"

What brother who's to honor sworn,
Would hold a man in heart-embrace,
Who held his sister up to scorn—
Or stoop to show him friendly grace?

And think ye, Christians, verily
The Christ, your Master—the Man-God,
Far less than least of these would be,
And ever tread on Russian sod.

While brothers of his flesh are barred?
While innocent their blood is shed?
While in that land so evil-starred,
No rest for any Hebrew head?

Thou brave land by the Western sea,
Stand rooted thou in righteousness—
Let all thy children equally,
Drink of thy cup of blessedness.

ANNETTE KOHN.

NEW YORK, JULY 15, 1903

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

VIEW OF THE CITY OF BELGRADE, THE CAPITAL OF SERVIA

THE ROMANCE OF A DYNASTY

The Grandson of a Peasant Bandit Placed on the Throne of a Land His Ancestor Fought to Liberate

DEEPLY as the European Powers profess to deplore the massacre in the Servian capital, which destroyed the last representative of the ruling dynasty, it is evident that they will accept the situation, and will all eventually recognize Peter Karageorgevitch as the King of Servia. He has been received with enthusiasm by the citizens of Belgrade, has been solemnly blessed by the Pontiff of his church, and has been duly installed in the royal palace. His difficulties are now beginning, and there is every probability of his realizing, with more intensity than other kings, the truth of the great dramatist's words: "Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown." At the very outset, he is solemnly enjoined by Austria, Russia, and the other powers, to punish the murderers who removed his predecessor, and so opened his path to the throne. None knows better than he, how suicidal it would be to obey such a mandate. The army on which his safety depends, and the Servian people whom he rules, would rise against him at once, if he attempted to punish the men who, by "removing" Alexander and his ambitious consort, are, in popular opinion, entitled to national gratitude. It is evident that Peter is in a dilemma which will require all his diplomatic skill for its solution.

Reports of his personal life encourage the hope that Peter will prove a wise and tactful ruler of the little kingdom. His associations at Geneva were with men of liberal views, and his own expressions lead to the belief that he has no sympathy with the autocratic despotic ideas which too often get into the minds of hereditary rulers. He is about fifty-five years of age, and brings to his task a matured understanding and a thorough knowledge of international politics. His wife, to whom he was tenderly attached, was a daughter of the Prince of Montenegro and a sister of the present Queen of Italy. Since her death, unlike his dissolute brother, he has lived a quiet, studious life, and has won the respect and esteem of eminent scholars and statesmen. He has one daughter, who is nineteen years of age, and two sons—George, born in 1887, and Alexander, born in 1889. Both were educated at Geneva, but have since been sent to St. Petersburg, George to obtain a military education, and Alexander to study law. They will now be recalled to their father's capital, as the laws of Servia require that the heir to the throne must be brought up in Servia. They are said to be bright boys, speaking Russian, French and German perfectly, and well advanced in their studies.

KING PETER'S ELDEST SON

The family of the Karageorgevitchs, of which King Peter is the head, has had a romantic history. His grandfather was an obscure peasant, ignorant and poor, but a man of splendid courage, and a daring fighter. In 1803, when Servia was groaning under the military tyranny of the Turkish janissaries, those regiments which were a terror as much to the Sultan as to his enemies, George Petrovitch (which means George, the son of Peter, the peasants of that day being treated as slaves, not entitled to a surname), first came into notice by his leading a little band of followers against the hated janissaries. Pursuing the guerrilla tactics, this fierce man cut off scattered detachments and so harassed the enemy that his name was a synonym for terror. They called him Kara George Black George), and the name became so popular with the Servians, that it was adopted by the family. His followers grew, until, by the year 1811, he was able to take the field in a pitched battle, and ignominiously defeated the enemy.

KING PETER IN SERVIAN DRESS

Only one year later, Russia took a hand in the trouble, and Kara George, prematurely aged by hardships, and dispirited by the prospects of his country, fled for his life. But the cause was not lost. One of his lieutenants, Milosh Obrenovitch gathered the scattered patriots and led them to victory. By skilful diplomacy he disarmed Russian hostility, and conciliated even Turkey. He soon had more power in his hands than his former superior, Kara George, had ever wielded, and he appeared to be on the verge of dictatorship, when Kara George, bearing in his exile of the brighter prospects of the cause to which he had consecrated his life, returned to resume his command. But Milosh had no liking for being superseded, nor were the Servian patriots slow to perceive that Milosh, the dashing young leader, could do more for them than the sire aged Kara George. The returned leader was assassinated by friends of Milosh, who was then recognized as the patriot chief. In 1812 he was formally recognized by the Powers, and Turkey gave a reluctant assent to his rule as Prince of the Servians. Thus the man who had been only a swineherd on his father's farm, became the acknowledged ruler of his country.

Difficulties with Turkey, with Russia, and with his own subjects, developed early in his reign, and after a struggle of nine years, Milosh grew weary of the conflict and abdicated in favor of his son, Milan. This young prince died only four weeks after his accession, and was succeeded by his brother, Michael, then only sixteen years old. The difficulties increasing during his minority, Michael sought safety in flight, and the Servian people invited Alexander, the son of Kara George, to become their ruler. For about sixteen years Alexander maintained himself in the throne, though having to suppress formidable insurrections. At last, in 1858, he laid down the reins of power, and the aged Milosh was recalled. Two years later he died peacefully, in his eightieth year, and his son Michael returned to the throne. His second reign lasted eight years, and then he was murdered by the opponents of his dynasty, who, however, were not strong enough to prevent another Obrenovitch, the cousin of the murdered ruler, succeeding him.

This was Milan, the most dissolute, unprincipled monarch of his time. He was so utterly given up to vicious pleasures that the business of government wearied him, and he was easily persuaded to abdicate in favor of his son Alexander, then a boy thirteen years of age. Strong hopes were entertained of him, but when he became infatuated with Madame Draga Maschin, the daughter of a cattle-dealer, and the former wife of a colonel in the Servian army, a woman said to be sixteen years older than the king, the Servian people lost all confidence in him. He fell completely under his wife's influence, and disgusted the whole nation by his capricious and unconstitutional acts. The extent of the unpopularity of the Queen was exposed, when it was learned that the leader of the assassins, who killed her and the king, was a relative of her former husband.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 602

KING PETER

The American Pulpit

: : Sermon by : :

Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage, D.D.

The Suicidal Epidemic

Text—Job 2 : 9 :

"Curse God, and Die"

TWO incitements: desperate, fierce, defiant, outrageous! The one urges the broken-hearted father, the financial bankrupt, the physically-tormented man to grit his teeth, and with flashing eyes and uplifted hand hurl a futile malediction at the Almighty, to curse God with an eternal blasphemy. What a shocking, appalling suggestion! Enough to make all heaven stand aghast in horror, and to render even the demon-infested caverns of a hopeless inferno silent with fear, and to turn the flushed cheeks aflame with the fires of eternal woe, white with terror. Curse God! Who could do that, but a human being crazed, and desperate, and reckless under intolerable anguish!

The second incitement puts in the hands of the sufferer the suicide's knife, the hangman's noose, or the phial labeled with the two fatal words, "Deadly Poison." To how many in every age has that insidious temptation come? In the United States alone more than thirty thousand persons have yielded to it during the past four years. In Chicago alone, 1,294 persons passed out of life by the suicide's gate in three years—nine victims on a single Sabbath. In two months of the present year seventy-five lives have ended in self-immolation. How long will the human race listen to that hideous voice which bade Job seek in death escape from his misery? That tempter's voice is sounding louder and louder every day. Shall the crime of self-murder be allowed longer to spread the pernicious doctrine that, with one stroke of the razor across the jugular vein, or with one plunge in front of a flying locomotive, or with one leap from high building or lofty palisade, the would-be suicide can find rest, eternal rest—God-given, blissful oblivion for all who are weary of life, and peace for souls sick of the results of sin?

The increasing suicidal epidemic of the present generation should be halted in its onward march of destruction. I lift my voice to-day in warning against this evil. It cannot be stayed by upbraiding a mangled corpse, or by calling the dead man a coward. I would prayerfully and earnestly try to indicate some of the causes which produce it. Then, in guarding you against the incipient evils, I might, perhaps, by the grace of God, keep some from ever tottering and swaying on the verge of the precipice, or tumbling into a suicide's grave. The gunpowder magazine can be exploded by a spark. We would deal this morning with primal causes, rather than with resultant conflagrations.

First, I charge atheism with the chief responsibility for the crime. Self-murder is the hideous black-visaged executioner of the merciless monster we call atheism, agnosticism, infidelity. It is the old, slimy serpent, coiled up under the overshadowing branches of the gnarled and worm-eaten tree of unbelief, at the foot of which sits the grinning, blear-eyed hag, misery, crooning a dirge for a lullaby. It is the death-rattle of a human being, whose parched lips have been set to the rim of the chalice filled with the scorching, poisonous concoction of blasphemy and falsehood, compounded by a Voltaire, a Rousseau, a Thomas Paine, or a Robert G. Ingersoll. It is the whetstone, wet with human blood, upon which the moral sensibilities can be blunted, and at the same time the suicide's knife sharpened, for it teaches immortal man that there is no hereafter, and that he is responsible for his life's actions to no Divine Maker and King.

No suicidal razor was ever honed upon the leaves of the opened Bible. Though the morning newspapers almost every day are blackened with the awful obituary tragedies of men and women who have deliberately taken their lives by the bloody hand of self-murder, you cannot find among those who perished, in the full possession of reason, a single consecrated Christian church member. You cannot find one person among them all who realized that he was a beloved child of God, and that he expected to go to meet a loving Heavenly Father, unless that person killed himself during a fit of temporary insanity, as did Hugh Miller, the great Scotch scientist, who blew out his brains during mental derangement, or that eminent New York clergyman, who, in delirium, leaped from a window. Why? The Bible distinctly and emphatically declares that no man has a right to commit self-murder. It warns men that they must answer for this terrible crime before the Judgment Seat of Christ, and it holds out to them no hope of pardon during all eternity. Read the eighth chapter of Revelation, "And murderers, and whoremongers, and idolators and all liars shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death." Read the first epistle of John, third chapter and fifteenth verse: "No murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." In the sound of such a divine warning, does any Christian man, with his eyes wide open, attempt to sound the "open sesame" of the pearly gates of the New Jerusalem with the crack of a suicidal pistol? Dare any Christian, by self-destruction, obliterate that life which God alone can give, and which God alone has a right to take away.

The whole tendency of the Gospel of Jesus Christ is opposed to this suicidal epidemic; the whole tendency of unbelief is to promote and increase it. To the atheist, life is a single span, one abutment of which is the cradle and the other the grave, at which he meets annihilation. To such a man there is no better principle of life than to eat, drink and be merry, for to-morrow he dies. He would make life a comedy for all, and death a great finale. His idealism would do for his fellowmen as that millionaire capitalist recently did for his friends. He provided, by last will and testament, that "no service of a religious character be held at his grave; that a special train of Pullmans be chartered to take his remains from Louisville to Cincinnati to be cremated; that the buffet cars be well stocked with good things to eat and drink; that while his remains are being cremated, an orchestra render a programme of popular and select music, and that when an intermission is reached, the friends ask the members of the orchestra to drink 'to the dead man's memory.'" That is the consistent outcome of the total annihilation belief. The earnest Christian disciple says "Life is not a joke; Death is not a finale." Life is an opportunity for doing good, and for struggling against evil. Because the good as well as the evil live on for ever and ever, we ought to put ourselves in the hands of the Almighty, who arranges our lot for us, and say as did Job, "All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come."

The unbeliever in the Gospel, says: "If there is a hell, it is to be found this side, and not the other side of the grave. When things go wrong, the best way to escape suffering is to snap the silver cord of human life and silence the beating heart." The Christian disciple says: "Sanctified troubles, are a spiritual means by the grace of God, for raising an immortal soul on and up. Unsanctified troubles are the inexorable means of dragging a sinful, defiant soul on and forever down. 'He that is unjust, let him be unjust still, and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still, and he that is righteous let him be righteous still, and he that is holy, let him be holy still.'" Such are the two extremes: the tenets of the believers, in total annihilation at the brink of the grave, and those of the earnest disciple of Jesus Christ. Do you wonder that I charge the hideous monster atheism, agnosticism and infidelity with being the chief causes of this accursed suicidal epidemic? Do you wonder that I look to the Gospel of Jesus Christ to stay the hand of self-immolation? Will you not, by buckling on the Gospel armor, prepare to wage incessant war against the insidious demons who blight the lives of your fellow-men, by robbing them of peace, joy and faith, and leaving them so despoiled and embittered that they prefer death to life?

False standards for happiness can be catalogued among the frequent, prolific causes of the suicidal sin. They are the decoying mirages which tempt the weary life's traveler to lose himself in the midst of a Sahara of sand. They are the deceitful stars, twinkling their benedictions over altars of silver and of gold, and of fame, which suddenly go out, and leave the devotees worshiping in total darkness. They are the musical voices of the sirens singing their sweetest songs when luring their victims on to fatal shipwreck.

JOB TEMPTED BY HIS WIFE TO COMMIT SUICIDE

In the false standards of happiness can be found the origin of the disappointments which so often end in suicide. Men do not first seek wealth or fame to possess those treasures, as a miser might hoard up his gold. They desire the merchant prince's palace, and the king's throne, because they foolishly think that Happiness is a coy maiden, who loves to robe herself in silks, and to have her throat and fingers a-glitter with precious jewels, and therefore they can the more readily find her in the rich man's mansion than in the poor man's hut. If they cannot have wealth or fame, or worldly honor is about to be taken away from them, then they feel they cannot have happiness. Then with one pull of the pistol's trigger, they fling away their blighted lives, as did the late "Cotton King" of Louisiana, who lost his fortune in Wall street; or, as did the late Sir Hector MacDonald, of the British Army, who killed himself to avoid facing the publicity of a court-martial, and a disgraceful dismissal from the king's service.

Now, my friends, the human being who commits suicide merely because the golden breasted oriole of wealth has plumed her wings and disappeared from sight, or because the iconoclast of trouble has shattered the idol of fame, is doing a fool's business. Happiness, true happiness, the happiness for which we all long, and for which some of us are seeking, is not dependent upon outside surroundings, but upon the condition of the heart. Some of the most unhappy human beings have been the so-called worldly successful men. Did all the unlimited financial wealth of Nathan Roths child make him happy? For many years he was the universally recognized financial king of Europe. In a single day, he made over $9,000,000. At the battle of Waterloo, he was an anxious spectator. As soon as that battle was decided, he put spurs to his horse and rode like the wind toward London. He had a relay of horses awaiting him, and a special boat chartered to take him across the channel. Then, next morning, he appeared upon the London Exchange and circulated the report that Wellington was defeated. Securities tumbled. His brokers bought them up by the millions of dollars worth. The following day, dispatches from Wellington announced that Napoleon's army was annihilated. Securities at once jumped upward. Nathan Rothschild pocketed his millions of profit. But, though Nathan Rothschild was the wealthiest financier in all Europe he was one of the most unhappy of men. When a friend visited him one day and said, "You ought to be a happy man, with all this wealth," Nathan turned, and with a look of scorn, answered, "Happy! Happy! I happy! Bosh! Let us change the subject."

If wealth does not in itself produce happiness, neithe does worldly fame or honor. Men strive for place and power, as if with them they were sure of happiness. They plot and conspire and murder, that they may mount the steps of a throne, and when they succeed, they find that they have gained nothing but anxiety and worry. When the Servian King and Queen, Alexander and Draga, were assassinated, Pope Leo XIII was heard to exclaim in the Vatican, "Oh, when will the people learn that thrones stained with blood are not worth having?" And yet, for financial wealth and worldly honor, thousands of men will surrender their all. They will follow these will-o-the-wisps, though the shining lights may lead them over miasmic swamps and quaking bogs, and into the fatal quicksand. They will seek and struggle and continue to struggle to possess these supposed priceless treasures, because they believe that in them the great heart of happiness, rich-blooded and life-giving, can be found. Then, when they have been defeated in the struggles of life, they sometimes drive the destroying dagger into their own arteries, as a tantalized serpent buries his poisonous fangs in his own flesh.

A Common Error

Moral application: Do not try to build the Temple of Happiness out of yellow bricks. Think not that the broad highway which leads to the throne-room of joy is always lined with applauding and vociferating multitudes. The ground mole may tunnel his way into a gold mine, but he still remains a ground mole. The bat, flying about in the darkness, may be able to push his claws into trembling men's pockets, but he is still nothing but a hateful bat.

Envy and covetousness also lead to suicide. The unwillingness to love our neighbors as ourselves is one of the indirect causes of this dreadful sin. Two ways of looking at this old world: The one is through the green glasses of envy; the result, unhappiness. The other way is through the sanctified crystals of a tender, a holy love; the result, Gospel joy. The one way is to bitterly bemoan, because some people are supposed to be better off than we. The other way is to try to find out how many people are worse off than we are, and then, with a Christian desire, try to help them as we would like to be helped if we were in their place. Through what kind of lenses have you been scrutinizing the human race? Through the green glasses of envy, which makes all the world look dark? Or through the clear, transparent crystals of Gospel love, which always makes all the world look bright? No happy man ever wanted to commit suicide. No man can be truly unhappy, who is trying to help his fellow-man. When he finds that he is making others happy, their joys become part of his joys.

The suicidal knife is blunted upon the whetstone of kindness and love and self-sacrifice for another reason: When a Christian earnestly consecrates his life to helping his fellow-men, he is amazed how many troubles are piled at his neighbor's door, and instead of repining at his lot, thanks God for the mercies he enjoys. He becomes more contented to carry his own burdens, because, as his brother's sorrows grow larger and larger in his eyes, his own shrink by comparison shrink and dwindle, and become less and less. Beautifully illustrated is this thought by an old Latin classic: The gods, hearing the continual grumblings of the human race decreed that all men should be able to choose their own burdens, but they must choose some. They decreed that every man, woman and child should bring their load of trouble to a park and throw it in one place. Then all the different troubles of the world were piled in a heap. The rich man came from his palace, the poor man came from his hut. The old man came tottering upon his staff, the young man came leaping as a roe upon the mountain side. The father came, followed by his swarm of children, the single man came alone. The bridegroom came leading his bride, the widower came after his wife had been snatched from his side. All came with their troubles. All threw their packs in the one pile. "Now," said the gods to the assembled people, "let each individual select any one pack of trouble that he would." Of course the multitudes were overjoyed. Each man at first lifted and weighed the troubles of every other man. "Then, at last," so goes the fable, "each individual, at a given signal, was satisfied to lift up again his own troubles, and in contentment go his own way."

Sympathy a Preservative

No power on earth can make a human being more contented than that which comes from being brought into sympathetic touch with other people's trials, for all people have them. The white, fleecy clouds, off in the distance, circling about the mountain-top, may look like sea-gulls sporting with the crest of a wave. On nearer approach, they are only fog and drizzling mist. The ships, far out at sea, have spotless sail and trimmest hulls. But, upon nearer approach, we see that their canvas is befouled and their hulls scarred with the blows of many tempests. Clear crystals of a tender love will not only make us try to help our fellow-men and desire to live as long as we can for that purpose, but they will also teach us to be more and more contented with our own lives. Brother, better change the lenses in your spectacles. Better be a sunbeam playing in the day, than a sulking owl, solitary and alone, croaking during the night.

A coward's heart is a direct cause for the suicidal sin. "Oh, no," says someone, "that cannot be. A suicide may be this, or that, or the other thing, but he is not a coward. No man is a coward who dares to commit self-murder. No man is a coward who will calmly look death in the face, and defy the grinning skeleton of the tomb."

Ah, my friend, you are wrong. The direct cause of the suicidal sin is invariably the result of a coward's heart. It is the act of a man who runs away from trouble, instead of courageously grappling with it. The bravest of deeds is to die, if necessary, to save others. But it would not be heroic for men to die, merely because they are too cowardly to fight. Neither is it heroic or brave for any man to commit suicide, merely because he is too cross-hearted to meet the responsibilities of life, or face them. The noblest word in every language, or all the English language in short, is that word which expresses courage in following to the bitter end, even unto death, the path of duty, and endures the keenest distress or a lingering death, as it were, sooner than give the appearance of cowardice, or following that stern mind through an unwholesome pain-way.

Christian Fortitude

Now my friends, as the personal cry is often caused by a coward's heart, how can we best increase cour and true? How can we better right this tendency to self-murder than by subtly and cross-sentimentally and dauntlessly meeting the most pressing duty which is nearest at hand? How can we come to be courageous better than by fortifying our immediate obligations which we know we owe to our God and our Christ? We have all read of the Roman sentinel who, during an awful eruption of Mount Vesuvius, was ready to die at his post, when the officer of the guard did not relieve him, and allow him to fly for his life. Should we not be equally ready to be brave and true to that great Commander who shall yet ride the white horse of victory, and in the great Millennial Day come to claim and defend his own? He has placed us here to do our duty, to live his life in the world, to serve Him by serving our fellow-men. Shall we cravenly desert our post? Shall we declare that the task assigned us is too hard for us? Rather let us look to Him for the daily strength that He promises to his faithful servants, that we may endure as seeing Him who is invisible. So let us stand unflinchingly beneath his standard until his summons reaches us, and we quit with the triumphant shout, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course. I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness."

The bravest act is all the world, for some men, is to publicly confess Christ. While we are preaching to-day on the suicidal sin, are you ready to be as brave as William Cowper once was? In a time of great mental depression, he was on his way to the River Thames to take his own life. When he arrived near the fatal waters, he saw there a man fishing at the end of the dock from which he intended to throw himself into the stream. He turned back. Then he went home and tried to stab himself to death, but the knife snapped in two. Then he tried to hang himself, but the rope broke. Then William Cowper realized what he was doing, and how cowardly he was. He confessed his error before the world, and gave himself up, as never before, to sound forth the Divine praise. Oh, my friends, will you not realize that one of the chief reasons of the cowardly tendency to suicide is the unwillingness to publicly confess, and work, and live for Christ? As all roads were once supposed to lead to Rome, every act and deed and thought of your life should lead you to the foot of the Cross. Then, oh then, if you are true to Christ, you will never be false to yourself. Then, oh then, your life, instead of having a suicidal tendency, will be an eternal life of triumphant joy.

A PASTOR'S EXPERIENCE ON THE FLOOD

WHEN the telegraph flashed the news to the East, of the great floods in Missouri and Kansas, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD communicated with its correspondents in the inundated cities, for the purpose of ascertaining the extent of the disaster, and also as to the measures to be adopted for the relief of the sufferers. Among those who responded promptly, and who performed effective service in emergency, was the Rev. William Potts George, D.D., lately pastor of the Westminster Congregational Church in Kansas City, Mo. Dr. George conveyed to the Mayors of that city and of Kansas City, Kan., THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S offer of assistance, and although, fortunately, it was not needed in the former city — which proved abundantly able to care for its own destitute people—it was very cordially welcomed by Chief Zimmer, Assistant Chief McConnell, Dr. C. M. Stemen, Mayor Craddock, and the relief committee on the Kansas side of the river, where upwards of twenty thousand persons had to be temporarily sheltered and fed.

Dr. George's efforts, however, did not end here. He was one of the first to cross the swollen river, personally investigated conditions in the flooded districts, and photographed some of the scenes for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The trip across occupied nearly three hours. On the return trip, he found great difficulty, and it was only after considerable delay that a steam launch was fortunately obtained, which conveyed the pastor and the representatives of a local journal to the Missouri side. The journey across the swollen and turbulent river, dotted with floating debris, was made by moonlight. For three days, Dr. George continued to give undivided attention to the investigation of the relief work, forwarding telegrams of progress to this journal. Although his efforts were wholly unofficial, and therefore unnoticed in the general press reports, it is due to him that they should receive this grateful acknowledgment at our hands.

REV. WM. POTTS GEORGE, D. D.

For years the Rev. Dr. George has conducted a highly successful work in Kansas City, as minister of the Westminster Congregational Church. Previous to accepting that position, he had conducted successful pastorates in New Jersey, Seattle, Wash., and elsewhere. He is a man of broad scholarship, whose reading has not been confined to theology, but has covered a wide field in science, history and sociology. His sermons show how thoroughly alert he is to the bearing of Christianity on the subjects occupying the public mind, and thus that religion is not the antiquated, obsolete thing that some people consider it, but a vital present force for our own time. Thoroughly in earnest, well up-to-date in his teaching and methods, Dr. George has won the respect and affection of every church to which he has ministered, and his genial, hearty nature has made for him warm friends among his ministerial brethren and among Christian men of other creeds.

During President Roosevelt's stay in Kansas City, on a Western tour, he attended the services in the Westminster Church. At its conclusion he heartily expressed his gratification at the pleasure he had enjoyed, and subsequently wrote Dr. George, declaring that his Sunday service had been an oasis in his trip.

Recently, the severe illness of his wife, and his solicitude for her entire restoration to health, induced Dr. George to sever his pleasant pastoral relation in Kansas City. He decided to come East, where he will doubtless be gladly welcomed by many churches, some of which will probably succeed in securing him as pastor. Up to the present time, however, he has not definitely accepted any of the propositions that have been made to him.

When his decision to leave Kansas City became known, there was general sorrow in the community. The Congregational Council, composed of the ministers and leading members of the churches, passed a series of resolutions expressing their sense of their loss, among which were the following:

That we glory in the masterly pulpit ability of our brother, who has defended the faith in a manner among peers and has risen to Westminster's much many thoughtful and earnest souls, and in the city and without the city, have been brought to a decision that has helped him, and he to prove of the doctrines of Jesus. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.

That we commend the courage and faith of Dr. George, which has stood to such untiring success in an increase of membership, and the hope of such broad foundations for the church that a new church building to be erected a greater work can be done.

That we commend Dr. George to all churches as a leader believed and trusted of men, for the Great Head of the church will give to him future triumphs, as in the past.

That we recognize his commanding position in the city as an active participant in all good works, ever active in temperance and social reform, fearless in utterance and broad and progressive in spirit.

Testimony so enthusiastic from representative men among whom he has labored so long, must be very gratifying to Dr. George. It too often happens that such appreciation does not come to the worker and his work until it is too late to cheer him in his service. Better than all post-mortem eulogies are such words as these spoken in person. We trust that in some immediate future, in which his brilliant qualities will have an opportunity for exercise, he may prepare for many years of the good work for his Master and the race.

Rev. Dr. George's address, while in New York, will be care of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Ten Thousand Children Sold for Food

Consul-General McWade Tells of Kwangsi's Great Famine and the Welcome to "The Christian Herald" Relief

IN the following official dispatches, which have been supplied to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from the State Department, Washington, D. C., a flood of light is thrown upon the actual condition of affairs in Kwangsi Province, China, where famine now prevails. No more frightful picture of famine horrors has ever been written than is found in these letters, forwarded by Consul-General McWade, from Canton. Ten thousand children sold on the block at public auction, to provide food for their parents; cannibalism resorted to, to stay the fierce pangs of hunger; a vast population foodless and helpless; these are conditions which have been growing steadily worse for months. Fortunately, as the dispatches show, a portion, at least, of the sufferers, will be helped by the relief furnished by the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. That relief is now being distributed under joint missionary and official supervision.

The letters are given in full below:

"CONSULATE GENERAL
OF THE UNITED STATES,
CANTON, CHINA, May 12, 1903.

"HON. FRANCIS B. LOOMIS,
Ass. Sec. of State, Washington, D. C.

"Sir:—In further continuation of my No. 19 to the department, dated April 22, 1903, concerning the famine in the Province of Kwangsi, I have the honor to report as follows:

"On the morning of May 5, 1903, I learned through reliable missionary and other sources, that the famine was increasing, and its area spreading. One gentleman wrote from Kweishen, as follows:

"'Boys, girls and women are sold daily at the river side. I attended such a sale this afternoon, and saw babies and children handled and felt as though they were pigs come to market. Some are so thin and starved that no one will purchase them. The magistrate informs me that at first he wished to prohibit the sale; but when he saw that unless the children were sold, both children and parents must starve, he changed his mind, and allowed the sale to continue. The gentry estimate that some 10,000 children (boys and girls alike), have already been sold, and that eight wives out of every ten in this district have also been sold.'

"I have received the following fairly accurate estimate of the starving population of the villages in the stricken district:

Wing Wo Lee, district on the west and south banks of the West River, 14,000; Sung Keong Lee, upper and lower districts, 13,600; Kwan Ling Lee, 14,500; How Luk, 24,000; Too Lee and Hoi Phong, 18,000; Sow Lee, 10,700; Sun Yut Lee, Hoi Phong, 9,000; Kut Yee Lee, 12,000, Chung Sow Lee, 14,000; Chew Lee, 8,000; Poo Lee, 5,000.

On the same morning I received the following from the Rev. John E. Fee, an American missionary at Kwai Ping:

"THE HON. R. MCWADE,
U. S. Consul-General, Canton:

"Dear Sir:—Kindly tell those who have given so liberally, that we thank them most heartily on behalf of those who receive of their liberality. The work has grown until there are now about five thousand persons coming daily, and these numbers are bound to increase during the next two months, and especially as we are now giving out a larger portion of rice to those who need. The distress is appalling, and even with what has been done, very many are dying daily. (This relates only to one district.)

JOHN E. FEE."

TSCH, A NATIVE EVANGELIST

. . .

On receipt of the above, I cabled to the Department as follows; duplicating my dispatch to Minister Conger at Peking:

"Secretary of State, Washington:

"Famine increasing Kwangsi about one hundred and fifty thousand starving. MCWADE."

On the same day I received the following cablegram:

"McWade, Canton:

"Cable particulars Kwangsi famine, extent, area, number affected, is American help necessary? Is reputable committee formed? CHRISTIAN HERALD."

I promptly replied by cable as follows:

"Christian Herald, New York:

"One hundred and fifty thousand starving Kwaiping district, area 300 miles, famine increasing, American help urgently besought, relief properly distributed American, English missionaries through me. MCWADE."

On May 6 I heard through reliable native sources, representatives of the Kwong Yan Charitable Society of Canton, that there were over twenty-five thousand natives starving in Naning, and forty-eight thousand in immediate need of relief in the Tsun Fa district. As these reports reached me simultaneously with those concerning the progress of the bubonic plague, I embodied the situation in the following summarized cablegram, duplicating it to Minister Conger at Peking:

"Secretary of State, Washington:

"Bubonic plague increasing Canton, Honam, Shun Tak, Yeung Kong, Heung Shan. Famine increasing Kwangsi, American Missionary reports body victim eaten by starving. MCWADE."

Prior to sending the foregoing, I received the following from Rev. C. E. Nelson, an American missionary:

"KWAIPING, April 19, 1903.

"Dear Mr. Nelson: We are pressed for money, and the boats cannot provide as much as we need, therefore I trouble you again. On Monday we gave to about five thousand persons seven thousand two hundred portions, and yet the need is increasing. This A.M. as Mr. Sehr and I went out, we saw the remains of a man who died from starvation last night, cut up and every bit of flesh that was left on him had been taken and eaten by some of his starving comrades. The sight made us sick, and so little is being done to meet the present needs. You no doubt know that the Governor of Hong Kong has taken up the matter and is sending us rice, the first we hope to get on the 3d or 4th of May. This will be a great relief to us. JOHN E. FEE."

CHINESE CHRISTIANS AND SCHOOL CHILDREN AT CHAO HSIEN

. . .

On the evening of May 8, 1903, I received the following cabled instructions:

"McWade, American Consulate, CANTON.

"Department in receipt five thousand dollars from CHRISTIAN HERALD, New York, for relief famine sufferers, Province Kwangsi. Draw on Secretary State at sight for same. LOOMIS, Acting."

I promptly informed His Excellency Te Sou, Viceroy of the Two Knangs, of the gratifying intelligence, and on the following day, received the following reply:

"From H. E. Tak, to the Hon. McWade, U. S. Consul General.

"Your Honor: I have read your dispatch informing me that you had wired to the United States, appealing for subscription for the relief of the famine sufferers in Kwangsi, and have just received a telegram from Secretary Loomis, that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of New York, had remitted to you, through him, the sum of $5,000.

"I am feeling deeply grateful for the kindness you have conducted, sometime ago, by giving and raising subscriptions for the relief of those sufferers, who are indeed in a most distressed state, and are in want of assistance.

"I again learned that you have further added to your kindness, by wiring to your great country appealing for money to help the starving people; so it is obviously evident that you are a kind-hearted people, and treat other nationalities as well and as kind as your own countrymen, and that the missionaries of your great country have so ably aided this charitable work in such generous and liberal manner, made me feel indeed deeply grateful and thankful, and from my heart I thank them.

"I have now commanded the Honorable Kung Hsin Chan, Superintendent of Foreign Affairs, to inform all the benevolent institutions in Canton to have this charitable and good deed recorded and published, and I have now the honor to request that you will please convey my heartfelt thanks to the State Department and to the charitable American people, to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and to the Missionary Associations."

As soon as I received the Viceroy's dispatch, I cabled to you as follows, duplicating my dispatch to Minister Conger, at Peking:

"Secretary of State, Washington. Viceroy requests me wire heartfelt appreciation CHRISTIAN HERALD'S donors' contributions five thousand dollars aid starving Kwangsi; gratefully thanks you. More help urgently needed. MCWADE."

On the evening of May 10, I received the following communication from the Rev. John E. Fee:

"KWAIPING, May 7, 1903.

"HON. R. M. MCWADE,
"U. S. Consul General, Canton.

"Dear Sir: Your kind letter of April 28th came to hand yesterday and again we thank you for not only the funds sent, but for the kindly interest you have shown in the work and in us personally.

"Will you kindly express our thanks to those who have so liberally given financial aid in this work, and especially to the officers and crew of the U. S. S. Monterey, and the U. S. S. Callao.

"The severity of the famine increases steadily, as the people gradually come to the end of all they have. Thus far many have had things that they have been selling, viz: wives, children, farm implements, bedding, clothing, bed boards, and woks (large cast iron pots, in which they cook their food), cattle, etc., etc., until now there is nothing left, and their only hope is the free distribution of rice."

Although rice is scarce, yet it is much cheaper here than at any of the other treaty ports, so I have bought 1,800 piculs of it, and as soon as they are loaded on the three cargo boats which I have engaged, I will dispatch them up the West River.

The distribution will be made in the usual systematic and impartial manner, and will be under the supervision of American missionaries and the literati, gentries, and officials of the stricken districts. The Rev. A. J. Fisher, of the American Presbyterian Mission, will be on one of the relief boats, and will be met at Wuchow by the Rev. Dr. H. K. Shumaker, of the United Brethren in Christ Mission, and the Rev. John E. Fee, American Presbyterian Mission. His Excellency, Viceroy Te Sou, will furnish a strong steam launch to tow the relief boats up the West River. I will ask Lieutenant Anderson, of the U. S. S. Callao, to escort them up to Wuchow, where H. E. Wong Chih Chun, Governor of Kwangsi, will have boats and small launches ready to convey the rice to the places where it is most needed.

All of the relief boats will carry American flags and banners, with inscriptions in the Chinese language stating that the rice has been bought for the relief of the starving natives with American donations raised by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of New York.

I have the honor to add that my three personal contributions, given at various times, amount to $575.

ROBERT M. MCWADE, U. S. Consul-General.

From Peking (May 30), the Hon. E. H. Conger, U. S. Minister to China, writes to Dr. Klopsch as follows:

"Yesterday I called on an influential and intelligent Chinese who had just arrived from the South, and he informed me that accounts of the suffering from famine and disorder of the people of Kwangsi could hardly be exaggerated. It is consequently a very good work which you have undertaken, and one in which I wish you the fullest possible measure of success.

E. H. CONGER."

YANG, A NATIVE EVANGELIST

It would seem providential that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD relief should have arrived at the time when most urgently needed. We trust that it may be blessed in the saving of many lives, and in the deepening the feeling of sincere friendship entertained by the Chinese officials and people for the American missionaries, and for the great-hearted Christian nation that has done so much for China in its time of need.

A Summer Gospel Campaign in Four Cities

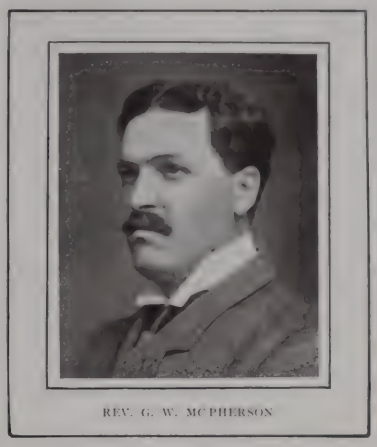
NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA, INDIANAPOLIS AND CHICAGO CHURCHES UNITING IN LOCAL EVANGELISTIC TENT WORK -- A GREAT SPIRITUAL HARVEST HOPED FOR

IF we may judge from present indications, the midsummer Gospel campaign, to be conducted simultaneously in a number of leading cities, will this year eclipse all previous records, both as to the extent of the work and the large number of churches co-operating in the movement.

In New York City, the Tent Evangel meetings, which for several summers past have been held on Fifty-sixth street, between Broadway and Eighth Avenue, under the management of Rev. Hartwell S. Pratt, and a committee of representative preachers, are this year conducted by the Rev. G. W. McPherson. This is the only place in New York where Gospel Union Meetings are held every evening except Sunday, during July and August. They are also held on Sunday afternoons. Among the well-known Metropolitan and other pastors who preach in the Tent Evangel, are the Rev. John Balcom Shaw, D.D.; Rev. R. S. McArthur, D.D.; Rev. Geo. Lorimer, D.D.; Rev. P. S. Hanson, D.D., of London; Rev. D. D. MacLaurin, D.D.; and Rev. Dr. Weeks, of Toronto. The services are thoroughly undenominational. Prominent ministers and evangelists of the different denominations are invited to preach in the tent, and the members of several different churches work together harmoniously, with the common object of saving souls. At these evangelistic services, large gatherings are assembled, and the Gospel message is listened to with closest attention. As is always the case in the heated term when many of the churches are closed, there are thousands who are glad to find a cool place of worship, where they may hear the Word and receive spiritual encouragement and consolation. In past years, there have been many glorious conversions as the result of the services in the Tent Evangel. Wanderers have been reclaimed, and large numbers have sought religious instruction. While some who attend are church members, the audiences are largely composed of people who have no regular church connection. These attend, attracted by the music and the cordiality of the Gospel invitation. Many to whom these services become, under Divine blessing, a means of transforming their lives, ultimately unite with the churches of their choice.



REV. G. W. McPHERSON

Rev. G. W. McPherson, the new leader of the Gospel work in Tent Evangel, is a young Canadian preacher-evangelist. He was pastor for a time at Mahopac Falls, afterward coming to Brooklyn, where he served the Memorial Baptist Church nearly three years. In both fields God gave him success in the winning of souls. Three years ago he devoted himself exclusively to evangelistic work, and has since been engaged in the larger cities in many of the Eastern and Middle States. His methods are conservative and spiritual. He has a firm and abiding faith in the power of God's Word upon the heart of man.

The cost of the summer work in the Tent Evangel — about $3,000—is defrayed by contributions and plate collections. In the torrid season, the great tent, unlike the hot walls of a building, is always cool and attractive. To crowd it nigh ly with the religiously destitute and the spiritually neglected, who are perishing without Christ, is the aim of the Evangel services, which deserve the most cordial support of all who are interested in the extension of Christ's Kingdom.

Philadelphia's regular summer Gospel campaign under canvas is also well under way, and gives every indication of a great spiritual harvest.

In Indianapolis, Ind., the summer Gospel campaign had an unusually early start. Dedicatory services were held in eight city churches on the south side in a great tent at Prospect and Linden streets, on May 29, where services are to be held during the whole season. This tent evangelistic work is in charge of the Rev. Milford H. Lyon, of Wheaton, Ill. Associated with him in the work are the following pastors and churches: Fletcher Place M. E. Church, the Rev. M. B. Hyde; the Seventh Presbyterian, the Rev. David A. Heron; Hoyt Avenue Methodist Protestant, the Rev. Crates S. Johnson; Edwin Ray, M. E., the Rev. C. C. [illegible] Emmanuel Baptist, the Rev. J. E. Henry; Trinity Congregational, the Rev. Lee White; Barth Place M. E. Church, the Rev. D. W. Nobbs; First German Baptist, the Rev. E. M. Von Meller.

REV. MILFORD H. LYON HIRAM J. LLOYD

A GOSPEL MEETING IN THE GREAT TENT AT INDIANAPOLIS

Speaking of the Indianapolis tent campaign, one of the managers says:

"The month of June has witnessed the greatest religious revival that Indianapolis has known for years. Last November, one of our leading southside churches invited the Rev. Mr. Lyon to conduct an evangelistic campaign. So successful was this movement that it encouraged some of our workers to plan for larger things. An evangelistic union of seven southside churches was formed, consisting of four Methodist and Presbyterian, one Baptist, and one Congregational. That section of the city was districted and was thoroughly visited. A tent seating two thousand was secured, and Mr. Lyon was invited to return and lead in the campaign. A chorus of two hundred voices was enlisted under the leadership of Mr. H. J. Lloyd, of the Bible Institute, Chicago. The results have far exceeded our expectations. During the month, over five hundred have expressed a purpose to begin the Christian life, and the aggregate attendance upon the meetings has reached fully fifty thousand. While there is nothing sensational in the preaching, yet the Message has been presented in such an earnest and attractive manner that some evenings hundreds of people are unable to gain admission."

Rev. Mr. Lyon, the leader of the movement, is a graduate of the State University of Iowa, and for two years was at the head of an academy in that State. For five years he was a successful pastor in Chicago, but realizing the great need of evangelistic work, he resigned his pastorate and entered upon the broader field. For the past four years he has conducted successful revivals in several States. In his writing and preaching, the dominant thought is the great truth of Jesus, not only as Saviour from the guilt of sin, but also as Lord and Master in every department of life. He insists that all who come to the front desiring to become Christians shall receive Jesus, both as Saviour and Master. The Indianapolis Daily News of June 24 publishes a statement over the signatures of leading pastors of the city, enthusiastically endorsing Mr. Lyon's work. At the meeting in the Indianapolis tent, which is shown in the photograph on this page, there were fourteen hundred present.

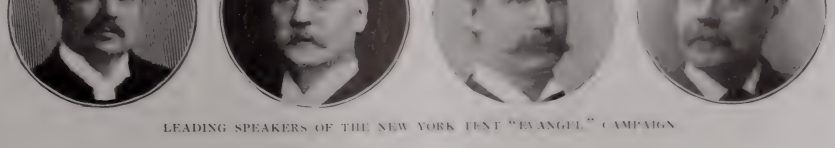
A movement similar in every essential particular to that in Indianapolis is to be inaugurated by Rev. Mr. Lyon on the north side of Chicago. Several churches have joined in the campaign, and a vigorous Gospel crusade under canvas will be prosecuted during the summer months.

A Revival at Hackettstown, N. J.

The congregation of the Presbyterian Church of Hackettstown, N. J., have lately been wonderfully blessed through special evangelistic services conducted by their pastor, Rev. J. C. Chapman. Christians of other denominations were drawn irresistibly to the meetings. Converts number about fifty, thirty-six of whom joined the visible church last communion, but the magnitude of the work has been more especially felt in the instructing, purifying and upbuilding of believers. Mr. S. H. Hadley and Mr. Illman, of the Water Street Mission, New York, gave timely help in their testimony of the power of Christ to save the sinner. Mr. Frank Fitzgerald, the Gospel singer, cradled all hearts in the song that grew into a story of redeeming love.

Mr. Chapman was also well supported in his faithful session, and a large praying band

REV. D. S. MACKAY REV. D. J. BURRELL REV. I. I. CAMPBELL REV. R. S. MACARTHUR



LEADING SPEAKERS OF THE NEW YORK TENT "EVANGEL" CAMPAIGN

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, ASSOCIATE EDITOR — LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor — G. H. SANDISON, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscriptions.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Protection for the Jews

IN deciding to forward to the Russian Government the petition of the United Hebrew Congregations in the United States, appealing to the Czar to put an end to the religious persecution of the Jews in his empire, and to afford them reasonable protection, President Roosevelt has taken a step which cannot fail to meet with the approval of the country, as a whole. It is not in the nature of a formal diplomatic communication from one sovereign power to another, nor is it to be regarded as a remonstrance; but the very fact that our Government consents to become the channel for the transmission of the petition, will invest it with a force and an importance that should go far toward securing for it a reasonable hearing at St. Petersburg.

Especially timely is the sending of this petition, in view of the ominous rumors of an intention, on the part of the Anti-Semites in Russia, to stir up the ignorant native population to renewed attacks upon the Jews. Inflammatory leaflets, urging the peasants to "kiss each other and then kill the Jews," have been circulated in the Russian cities, the purpose being to rouse the Muscovites to a fanatical outbreak, and to repeat the horror of Kishineff. It is represented that the whole empire is reeking with Anti-Semitism, and that a spark may, at any moment, ignite a conflagration in St. Petersburg, Odessa, Kieff, and other large cities, that will make the civilized world stand aghast.

Whether these representations be true or exaggerated, we have no means of knowing. It is beyond question, however, that the position of the Hebrew population in Russia, at the present moment, is an extremely critical one. Believing this, it would be criminal were our own Government to remain silent, or to withhold the petition, when by forwarding it we might avert innocent bloodshed. Humanity demands that it be sent, just as humanity impelled the protests against Weyler's barbarities in Cuba, and those of the lawless Kurds in Armenia. If after such protest, however informal, the Czar and his government should permit the threatened outbreaks to take place, without taking effective steps for their prevention and for the punishment of the instigators, Russia would stand convicted before the world as the abettor of religious persecution and massacre. Imperial evasion of responsibility, though pleaded in the Kishineff slaughter, could not be urged successfully a second time.

There has been an attempt, in some quarters, to misinterpret the motives that urge us to send this Hebrew petition; but we desire the act to stand simply as the outcome of a genuine feeling of sympathy. We are a plain people, and unaccustomed to the shifty, intricate and Machiavellian ways of European diplomacy; but there need be no misapprehension of our conviction, as a nation, that the day has gone by when religious persecution should be tolerated or defended. All the diplomacy on earth cannot make that dead relic of barbarism and of the Inquisition palatable to our modern ideas of civilization.

Let the Czar and his ministers prove the right of Russia to be regarded as a Christian nation, and of Nicholas II. to be accepted as a Christian ruler and a sincere friend of the Gospel of peace and good-will, by employing, if necessary, the entire machinery of the government to put a stop to these attacks upon the Jews. Let them call a halt to the Anti-Semites by such unequivocal commands that the cruel effusion of Jewish blood will never be repeated in Russia. If there be any portion of the Hebrew population of "Holy Russia" to-day that can be classed as undesirable, it has been made so by injustice and persecution. Let Russia treat them fairly, and they will make as good citizens there, as they do anywhere else on the globe.

Our Love—God Wants It

A PLAIN man, a mechanic, a devout Christian, was in the last stages of consumption. One day, as his pastor was leaving his bedside, he called him back, and said: "One thing more I wish to ask. I lie here and talk with God in a way which startles me. I use expressions of endearment, address him by affectionate names, make requests as a child to a parent, indulge in words of adoration; all of which, on second thought, seem to me too free for a mortal to use in his intercourse with his Maker. Yet my feelings are so strong that I cannot restrain myself. Tell me, should I love God in this manner, or should I repress my feelings and check my words?"

The minister said to him: "You ask, may you love God thus. The Saviour says, 'Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might, and with all thy strength.' Do you ever exceed this?"

An expression of satisfaction came over the sick man's face. The next day he had gone to see Him whom, not having seen, he loved.

A lad was on his way from school, with others, in playful conversation. When he reached home, he laid down his books in the hall, ran to his room, and, forgetting that he might be overheard in the room adjoining, said in childlike language: "O God, my heavenly Father, I have come to pray to thee. I do not want anything in particular, but I love thee. I have come to say this. I don't know what has made me feel as I have felt this forenoon, but I have not been able to think of much besides God. I never loved anything so. Whom have I in heaven but thee? And there is none upon earth that I desire beside thee! Yes, there is one thing I do desire, and that is, that all the scholars may feel so towards thee. There is ———," and then he named five or six of his companions. After a few more words, he joined his brothers and sisters in their amusements, not feeling that he had expressed anything of special interest; yet it may be questioned whether in heaven that day there had been any halleluiahs more precious to the Lord than that lad's prayer.

Does anyone say, of what value can such emotions as dwelt in these pious hearts be to God? We might answer, Of what value is anything to God? He will one day give up this world to fire. There is nothing of any value to God, except love. The most beautiful thing God sees on earth, and the thing dearest to him, is a true heart, humbly, joyfully whispering in his ear, "My God, my love, my all—thou art my portion forever!"

A Midsummer Gospel

IT is most gratifying to note that the people who remain in our large cities during the torrid season, are no longer comparatively churchless and neglected, as was formerly the case. Every summer, the preaching of the Gospel under canvas goes on more widely than before. In many cities great, cool, billowy tents enclose large audiences nightly, who listen with rapt interest to the "old, old story." In those audiences are represented all classes of church-goers and non-church-goers, for it is a characteristic of the informal church under canvas that it knows no social distinctions, and that the members of the "submerged masses" may sit with equanimity and acceptability side by side with the mechanic, the business man, or the professional, who belong to the "can't-get-aways." The thrifty mother, whose husband's wages are too small to admit of vacations, finds the cool canvas church a blessing, for she can there gather the children to listen to the precious Word, in such comfort as could not be found between brick or stone walls. While the more fortunate ones are worshiping by the seashore or mountain, these pent-up masses in the cities find in the great tents—such as those that are now spread numerously in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Indianapolis and other cities—a spiritual enjoyment as keen, and a physical recreation as delightful as could well be imagined. Thousands are led to Christ every year at these gatherings.

This tent work is unquestionably the very best way of evangelizing the cities in summer that has yet been devised. It has been said that the devil never takes a vacation, and it does not require a very long reach of memory to recall the time when, from July 1 to September 1, the scores of empty churches and of shepherdless congregations demonstrated the fact that Satan had city territory pretty much to himself during the dog days. All that is rapidly being changed. Our churches recognize their responsibility for the moral guardianship of their flocks, not for nine or ten months a year, but for the whole twelvemonth. And there is no better way to keep the field occupied and maintain the battle for righteousness, than for the churches and pastors of all denominations to extend the heartiest co-operation and support, moral and financial, to the midsummer Gospel tent work in every large city throughout the land. Christ should be preached to the masses in season and out of season.

Among the Workers

—EVANGELIST E. R. HERMISTON of Shiloh, O., will spend the summer in the tent meetings in Philadelphia.

—THE REV. W. E. BENTLEY, is the founder of The Actors' Church Alliance. The Alliance now has a membership of several hundred.

—HORACE E. AYERS, Physical Director of the Y. M. C. A. of Peterborough, Ont., Can., has been called as Physical Director of the Boys' Department, East Side Y. M. C. A. in New York City. He has made an excellent record in the Canadian city.

—FOR THE LAST FIVE months, revival work has been going on at Fort Denand, Fla. Sister Dixon, of Upton, Ky., has been instrumental in leading many into the light. Mr. Geo. S. Henderson of Fort Denand, reports that many who used to spend the Sabbath in hunting and fishing now devote it to worship and to the study of God's Holy Word.

—DR. R. A. TORREY, and Mr. Charles Alexander, have returned to New York from their world-round evangelistic tour of more than a year's duration. They visited Japan, China, Australia, Tasmania, New Zealand, India, England, Scotland, and Ireland, the meetings being followed with marked spiritual blessing, especially those in Australia, Scotland and Ireland.

—THE REV. N. L. CLARKE, of Newton, Miss., aged ninety-two, is one of the oldest active preachers in the South. He has been in Gospel work nearly sixty years, and still acts as pastor of the Baptist Church at Decatur, riding ten miles to fill his appointment. He never had a vacation. He has received 2,500 converts into the church, performed 3,000 marriages and officiated at 3,000 funerals.

MISSIONS IN THE ISLANDS*

The American Church Called to the Evangelization of the Philippines

GOSPEL work in the islands is a story of danger, of martyrdom and of triumph. A brief sketch of it, as far as it relates to the islands of the South Pacific, has already appeared in this journal (May 20, page 439); so that we may now give our attention to the branch of the subject which has a direct interest for the people of our own country. They have done their part nobly in Ruk, Ponape and other islands; it now devolves upon them to take up the work in the Philippine Islands, for the welfare of which we, as a nation, have become responsible. Our politicians and traders will take care that the people are initiated in secular affairs, but they will do nothing, or worse than nothing, toward promoting the spiritual development of the people. That is a duty which can be done only by the church of Christ; and it is a duty which the church cannot afford to neglect.

A beginning was made a few years ago in a humble but most effective way. A lady in New York who has devoted her life to working among the sailors who come to the port, one day came upon a group of sailors from the Philippines. She had no Scriptures in their language to give them, but she found among them one who knew Spanish. She gave him that Gospel in miniature, John 3:16: "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son," etc., and asked him to translate it into Tagalog and Visayan. He did so, and the lady hunted up another Philippine sailor who knew Spanish, and got him to translate it back into Spanish, so as to be sure that the Tagalog and Visayan versions were correct. Then she had a large number of proofs struck off, which she gave to people who were going to the Philippines, and thus the Gospel was sent in its pioneer form to prepare the way for the missionaries. Since then the great missionary societies have taken up the work, but there are ten million persons on those islands, and it will take time and systematic effort to reach them all. There are Roman Catholics, sincere but superstitious; there are thousands more who are nominally Romanists, but are disgusted with the mercenary disposition of the friars; and besides both these classes are immense numbers who know absolutely nothing of Christ and of the Christian religion. This is a sphere that American Christians must regard as peculiarly their own.

*Topic of the Epworth League for July 26. Isa. 41: 1.

THE BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

A WING OF THE VATICAN, THE POPE'S PALACE.

The Pope's Last Hours

ALL Rome was thrown into excitement on Sunday, July 5, by the news that the Pope was believed to be dying. Cardinals hurried to the Vatican as fast as horses could take them: and the Pope's relatives gathered at the bedside of the sick man. When it was seen that preparations for administering the last rites of the church were being made, here could be no doubt that the physicians had given up hope. The ceremony is described as exceedingly impressive. The central figure was the Pope, his face almost as white as the pillows on which his head rested. Only the eyes, always keen and glittering, showed that mental life was still vigorous. Around the bed were twenty-five cardinals, in their magnificent crimson robes. As the Priest Apostolic approached, the Pope feebly uttered the Confession of Faith. Then came the prayers for the passing soul. A passage was read from the Gospels, describing our Lord's crucifixion. As the last words died away, the dying man raised his almost transparent hand, and in a voice scarcely audible, gave his benediction to all present. The sobs of the Pope's nephews broke the silence that followed, and many of the aged cardinals were seen to be weeping. The ceremony appeared to give the venerable sufferer comfort, but it caused physical exhaustion. The physicians administered remedies, but it was clear that the life was flickering, and must soon go out. The Pope was ninety-three years of age, and could not be expected to survive an attack of pneumonia, which was the disease that had precipitated the crisis. The physicians did all that medical skill could suggest, but old age is a malady for which they have no cure. Deeply as Leo was beloved by all around him; profoundly as he was respected by the statesmen of Europe for his wisdom and prudence; reverenced as he was by the millions of Roman Catholics the world over—he had to learn that he must partake of the common lot, from which not even the highest dignitaries of church or State are exempt:

They truly were many priests, because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death (Heb. 7: 23).

Treasure in a Barn

A Brooklyn lady received a visit recently from her widowed sister, whose home was at Fort Lee, N. J. The aged widow had been accustomed to call at long and uncertain intervals, and stay a few hours, talking over old times. She said little at any time about herself or her life, and never invited her sister to return her visit. This time, however, she seemed so feeble and ill, that her sister insisted on her staying over the night. The next morning she was worse, and a physician was summoned; but he was powerless to help her, and in a few hours she died. After her funeral her sister went to Fort Lee to see what she had left behind in her home. She discovered that the home was only a dilapidated barn, weather-beaten and paintless. The neighbors said the deceased had been living in the old structure for ten years. Going into the hay-loft, the sister was astonished to find it luxuriously and expensively furnished. There were valuable rugs, curtains, fine furniture and solid silver-ware. In the presses were brocaded silks and handsome furs. The value of the goods was estimated at fully ten thousand dollars. It is supposed that the property was left to her by her husband, who was a forty-niner, and that she could not bear to part with it. No one had seen what the barn contained, until after her death, for she had evidently, while living in the hayloft, received any callers in the bare, blank room below. Her life must have been like that of a miser secretly gloating over his wealth. She would have been a happier woman had she allowed her friends to share with her in the enjoyment of her treasures. The disposition is not unprecedented. The Preacher saw instances of it in his day:

There is a sore evil which I have seen under the sun, namely, riches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt (Eccles. 5: 13).

An Electrical Sea

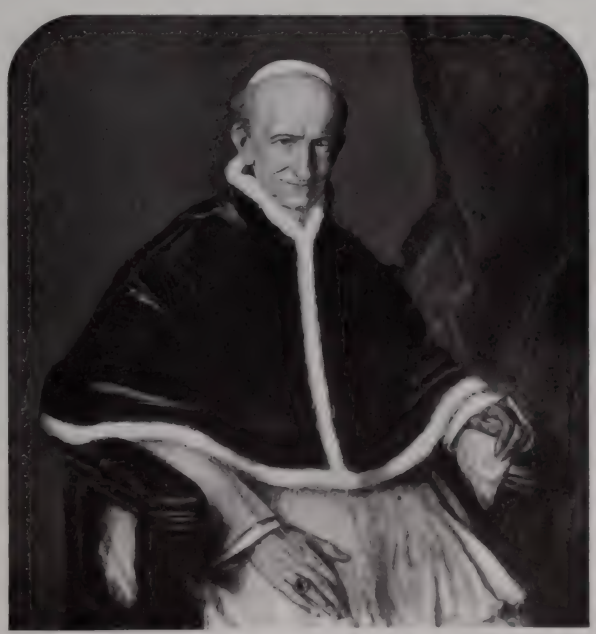
A press dispatch from Denver, Colo., to the New York Sun, reports an extraordinary experiment for which preparations are being made in that city. An agent of an Electric Development Company is negotiating for the conveyance of a cannon to the top of Pike's Peak, or to some other lofty mountain. He proposes, if he can achieve the ascent with the ordnance, to fire in a vertical direction, using a large magnet as a projectile. A thin wire, twenty miles in length, is to be firmly attached to the magnet, as a conductor. His belief is that the rotation of the earth on its axis at the rate of about a thousand miles an hour generates an immense store of electricity which exists above the atmosphere. He argues that if he can throw a magnet beyond the pale of gravitation that it will be drawn into the electric sea and will be retained there. Should that theory be established it is easy to see what enormous results might be expected. Power could be drawn from such a reservoir to supply all the running plants on the continent. The scheme will doubtless be ridiculed by practical scientists, but the agent is evidently in earnest, and as he points out, it is not more ridiculous than our present applications of electricity would have appeared to scientists a century ago. If there really is such a sea of electricity above our atmosphere, as the agent believes, we may be very sure that no efforts will be spared to obtain power from it. Yet the power which is most needed by our race—the power which transforms character—exists to an unlimited degree, and it may be freely obtained from above; but comparatively few seek to obtain it:

As many as received him to them, gave he power to become the sons of God (John 1: 12).

A Pest and Its Antidote

The Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C., is engaged in an interesting experiment. It is hatching a few bugs which were brought from Northern China by Mr. Marlatt, one of the entomologists connected with the Department. During a recent visit to that region he noticed on the trees of a plantation the gray scale of waxy secretion known in the countries as the "San Jose scale." Mr. Marlatt recognized it only too readily, for it has involved the loss of fruit trees here worth tens of thousands of dollars. The owner of the plantation in China, however, was not worried about the pest. He told his American visitor that he could easily get rid of the pest by means of the hedgehog bugs, which like to live on the waxy secretion. Mr. Marlatt soon had an opportunity of witnessing the proof of the boast. On his next visit the waxy secretion had almost entirely disappeared, and the trees were in normal condition. Knowing the havoc wrought in America by the pest, he secured a large number of the hedgehog bugs, which he brought back with him. All of them, except twelve, died on the voyage, but the dozen survivors were at once set to work, and proved their ability to clear a tree of its destroyers, in a short time. They have been carefully preserved in cages, and are multiplying at an enormous rate. It is believed that in a short time, there will be a sufficient number for a supply to be sent to any district afflicted with the pest. When a horticulturist, whose trees are being destroyed by the pest, hears that he can obtain a remedy from Washington, how quickly he will apply for it! Unhappily there is not the same promptitude on the part of men, whose condition is far worse—men who are losing, not their property, but their souls, by the pest of sin, yet who do not seek the remedy which God has freely provided:

Is there no balm in Gilead; is there no physician there? Why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered? (Jer. 8: 22).



POPE LEO XIII. IN HIS PONTIFICAL ROBES

BRIEF NOTES

A Cuban correspondent of a religious journal published in Boston, Mass., says that President Palma is a Presbyterian.

The Bible Teachers' Training School, the Rev. Wilbert W. White D.D. President, has just closed its year, having had 116 students enrolled.

Dr. George Adam Smith, the famous Biblical scholar who has been ill with typhoid fever at Cleveland, O., is reported to be improving and hopes are now entertained of his recovery.

The Rev. G. Campbell Morgan has received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from Chicago Theological Seminary, in recognition of his earnest and influential labors as a preacher and evangelist.

Congregational churches throughout the country will regret to hear that Dr. Daniels, the efficient and indefatigable secretary of the American Board, feels it necessary to resign his office. During the past ten years he has given the Board most valuable service and his loss will be deplored.

Messrs. Grenfell and Hunt, who discovered the Logia or Sayings of Christ at Oxyrhynchus in 1897, have been making a further search in the same region, and have found another fragment containing a number of sayings of Christ, some of which are contained in our Gospels. One, however, is new, and is believed to be genuine, as it is quoted by Clement. It reads, "He that wonders shall reign, and he that reigns shall rest."

The portrait of Rev. R. J. Campbell, published in this journal last week was used by the courtesy of The Pilgrim Publishing Co., of Fifth Avenue, New York. This firm are Mr. Campbell's American publishers and from them all his published sermons and books may be obtained.

The tower and bells of the cathedral in Faribault, Minn., have been dedicated by Bishop Edsall as a memorial to the late Bishop Whipple. The giants of the tower number Dr. Leonard Mich. bishop of the Diocese of Montmagny, Lord Ashburton, Secretary Hay, ex-President Cleveland and a whole village of colored folk near the bishop's winter home in Florida.

We sincerely regret to hear of the death of Mrs. Hannah D. Hume, the venerable mother of the two famous missionaries, Dr. R. A. Hume and Rev. D. S. Hume of India, who rendered valuable service during the famine in pressing upon The Christian Herald and other denominational missionary committees.

A frivolous visitor to the Fiji Islands said to a Fijian chief, "It is really a pity you have not a church as fine as those missionaries." Some months afterwards the Fijian chief's eyes flashed as he said, "Do you see that stone? I killed one victim. By and by I killed another victim. I killed one victim for each of the churches for our boasts. If you had not seen the missionaries and the Bible, you would have met the same fate."

A GREAT OPPORTUNITY

We would remind those of our readers and their friends who desire to take advantage of our remarkable 12-VOLUME TWENTIETH CENTURY WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA offer, to send in their orders at the earliest possible moment. This greatest of up-to-date Encyclopædias can be had for a very limited time at $13 spot cash; on instalments of $2 a month, $14; on instalments of $1 a month $15. It contains over 75,000 complete articles, 40,000 geographical references, 12,000 biographies, 50 full-page plates and 1,000 engravings. 5,000 noted specialists were the contributors. Address Christian Herald Book Dept., 92 Bible House, New York City.

PRAY AND OBEY ❋ SAUL REJECTED AS KING

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR JULY 26
I. SAMUEL 13: 23

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

GOLDEN TEXT--I. SAMUEL 15: 22:
"TO OBEY IS BETTER THAN SACRIFICE"

AFTER the coronation of Saul as monarch, at Gilgal, he surrounded himself with all the grandeur of a royal court, and made successful wars against his enemies. His heart seems to have been filled with pride and ambition, and he failed to obey the commandments of the Lord. He evinced great personal bravery, princely prowess and military skill, and was a tower of strength to his people and a terror to his foes; but his faith in God, which was ever weak and vacillating, failed him in the time of his prosperity, and he became vain, haughty, self-willed, self-reliant, and disobedient." These sins appear in the lesson of to-day, especially the last named. In imagination let us frame pictures that will be a panorama of the story.

The Israelites, 210,000 in number, encamped at Gilgal, a plain in sight of Jericho. They have just returned from routing the Amalekites. King Agag is King Saul's prisoner. The fattest of the cattle captured from the Amalekites are in Saul's camp. The presence of the captives, men and beasts, is a stain upon the victorious banner of King Saul in direct disobedience to God's command that none should be saved alive.

Samuel comes to the camp in Gilgal. King Saul greets him in a self-congratulatory manner, saying, "Blessed be thou of the Lord. I have performed the commandment of the Lord." In so saying, he wears the mask of a hypocrite, which Samuel quickly tears away by asking, "What, then, is the meaning of the bleating of sheep and the lowing of oxen which I hear?" The excuse is made that the animals were spared for offerings. "To obey is better than sacrifice," is Samuel's swift, strong rebuke.

Samuel is turning to leave. Saul grips his mantle, and it is torn, as Samuel endeavors to pull away. Samuel turns and says, "So has the Lord rent your kingdom." Saul acknowledges that he has sinned, and begs Samuel to stay with him while he offers a sacrifice to God. Samuel yields to his request.

The headless body of King Agag lies upon the ground, Samuel having executed the death sentence of God, and gone to his home. Saul is in his tent, with head bowed upon his hands, in bitter remorse for the disobedience by which he has forfeited his crown.

Illustration and Application

In this lesson there are several secondary truths, such as covetousness versus contentment, and modern "sacrifices"; but the heart of the lesson—a lesson for all ages—is that God will not accept praying as a substitute for obeying, nor giving as a substitute for living. There is danger that in Bible classes time will be wasted in a long debate on the question whether Samuel might not have been mistaken when he said to Saul, that God had ordered the extermination of the corrupt Amalekites and their cattle. The sentimentality of to-day, which lacks the blood and iron of a strong sense of justice and a strong hatred of impurity, hesitates to believe in the divine surgery of the Old Testament, by which a race that had become a cancer was sometimes cut out of the world. Such judgments present difficulties, but so does the pestilence which carries off the children of the guilty, and even some others who are innocent, in a wholesale natural retribution for violated natural laws. Confessedly, Saul disobeyed what he believed to be the command of God.

The kernel we need to get out of the story as quickly as possible, not lingering on the threads of the historic husk, is that when a command of God comes clearly to one from the Bible, or from conscience, or from those who as rulers or parents are truly acting as God's deputies, nothing can take the place of obedience—neither half obedience, nor forms of worship, nor gifts. The old sacrifices were prayers and gifts combined, and both Saul was ready to offer God as substitutes for obedience. And in this many in our own time are wonderfully like him. We naturally think first of the man who gets rich by disobedience to divine and human laws, who seeks to deceive God and himself and the people as to his real character, by making large gifts to religion and charity and education. He often seems to succeed in deceiving himself and the people, but this lesson assures us that with God nothing a man can give can take the place of the brotherly motto, "live and let live." Other cases come readily to mind of those who seek by heaping flowers on coffin lids to atone for the wrongs that hurried the gray heads below in sorrow to the grave. The Pharisees who devoured widows' houses and yet—perhaps therefore—made long prayers, are not all extinct, though we believe they are rare. Those who criticize Christians for not living as they pray, are themselves guilty of Saul's sin if they are refusing to obey Christ's command to confess him before men, and at the same time are "saying their prayers" every night as a sort of charm or offset to their disobedience. Hypocrisy is lack of accord between theory and practice either way. To profess religion and not possess it is hypocrisy; but so is the reverse course. "Be what you seem," but also seem what you are.

Obedience is the great lesson to teach, and none need it more than the children of this age, when "personal liberty" is exaggerated and personal responsibility minimized.

* * *

When Jacob had been long in Haran, God commanded him to return to Palestine. The wrong he had done to his brother Esau, now a mighty chief with hundreds of followers, made him raise the question with his wife Rachel, whether it would be really prudent and safe to do what God required. It looks absurd in him to many who are raising the same infidel question every day. But Rachel, with a good woman's swift intuition, would not reason about such a matter. She said without hesitation: "Whatsoever God hath said unto thee, do." And almost the same words came in New Testament times from another "blessed among women." At the marriage in Cana, when the wine gave out, Mary, the mother of Jesus, instinctively felt he would some way meet the want, and went among the servants to say: "Whatsoever He hath said unto you, do it." Ananias and Sapphira illustrate the dark side of the lesson—Saul's side, as they come to the apostles, pretending to give all they have, in order to win applause for great piety and generosity. Reputation is what men and women think of us; character, what God knows of us. And they prized both reputation and money more than character, to their own ruin in both worlds. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked." An insincere prayer, or a gift that seems to be offered to God, but is really only the purchase price of human applause, is but a form of profanity and sacrilege. "Lord, make us real!"

What is it like in the Bible?

* * *

How nature, in all its "kingdoms," teaches obedience to law! Everything follows the law of its being steadily except the human race. Man continually tries to break law, but he cannot really break it, though it often breaks him. In violating God's laws, he collides with the universe to his own overthrow. How Saul was finally brought down from his high estate by harboring the hidden, and, perhaps, at first, the little sin of covetousness, is illustrated by the following incident from natural history. Some shepherds once saw an eagle soar out from a crag. It flew majestically far up into the sky, but by-and-by it became unsteady in its motions, and began to waver in its flight. At length, one wing dropped, then the other. The poor bird struggled vainly for a moment, and then fell swiftly to the ground. The shepherds sought the fallen bird, and found that a little serpent had fastened itself upon it while it rested on the crag. The eagle did not know that the serpent was there. But the reptile wound its lithe body around the wings of the eagle, and gradually tightened its grip while the proud monarch was sweeping through the air, and the eagle came reeling down into the dust—a picture of Saul's fall and of many like it.

What is it like in Nature?

OBEY { your parents, your rulers, God.

* * *

One day a teacher was trying to teach the children that God wanted us all to do just the work he gives us, though often it seems very small and insignificant. She told them she was going to ask them, every one, to do something for her. "I want you each," she said, "to write out one short text for me on these little cards," showing them some about the size of a lady's visiting card.

What is it like in Common life?

"Oh, we can all easily do that," they said.

SAMUEL REPROVING SAUL

"Well, let them be well done, dears," said the good old lady, "for I want to keep them in remembrance of you for many a day. Just one text written on a card, and please bring them to me this day week."

After school there were various comments on the old lady's request. The squire's youngest son said: "I'll write her out a whole Psalm, and get father to have it nicely framed." "And I," said a little girl, "shall write on some ornamental cards, and make them up with cherry-colored ribbon." "And I will buy a pretty little book, and write some texts in it," said another. On the Monday following, when they gathered as usual in the pretty cottage, the walls of which were covered with roses and woodbine, various parcels were presented to the lady. She opened one after another, but the words of pleasure which the children expected were not spoken. Almost the last parcel to be opened was a tiny one, containing only one of the cards she had given the children, with simply a text written on it.

"Janie," the teacher said to a quiet and rather poorly dressed young girl, "I see that you alone have done just what I asked you. All these presents are very pretty, but not at all what I wanted. Now, my children, you will be surprised to hear that your old teacher is going to America. I am going to join my nephews and nieces there, and I wanted to take some small remembrance of each of you with me, and meant to put all these cards in this little ivory box. This beautiful frame, and the basket, made of separate pieces of cardboard, I could not pack and take all the way to America. Janie did just what I wanted, and her work only, you see, fits the place for which I wanted it. 'Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it.'"

It is a strange fact that with increased reverence for natural law, due to the advance of science, there has come a decreased regard for higher moral and civil laws, due to the excessive emphasis on personal liberty, in the age of democracy.

* * *

Amid the gloomy pines of Chancellorsville Stonewall Jackson had surprised the Eleventh Corps, and was driving it in utter rout. Not a Federal musket was in sight save such as were being borne to the rear as fast as frightened legs could carry them. Six hundred men remained to meet the victorious rush of twenty thousand. Suddenly out in front of the guns rode General Pleasanton, and paused where Major Keenan sat with his three hundred cavalry. "Major," he said, "you must charge into the woods with your men, and hold the enemy in check until I get these guns aligned and shotted. You must do it at all cost. The reply came quick and hard, "It is just the same, General, as saying, 'You must be killed,' but, General, I will do it!" O, what a scene that was! I wish we had some American Tennyson to immortalize that charge. Three hundred horsemen, with deep spurs and flashing sabres, flying at the throat of twenty thousand! Nobody had blundered; somebody must die for the army, that was all! Then every man died in his stirrups. But they died not in vain. The few minutes gained for the gunners saved the day, for the batteries had meanwhile been double-shotted, and not even Jackson's veterans could stand such raking fire.

What Is It Like in History?

Soldierly obedience is even harder to give when the peril is less in the daily routine of life. General Grant, in his last illness, took his medicine just as and when the doctor ordered it, in an unquestioning obedience unusual among the sick of our day, which it is thought, considerably prolonged his life.

Let us not glorify war, but let us learn its one great quality of unquestioning obedience—

> Theirs not to make reply,
> Theirs not to reason why.

The whole lesson might be taught on the outline: God's justice in a double trial. The (1) indictment, (2) trial, (3) sentence, (4) execution, first of Amalek, second of Saul.

* * *

CONTENTMENT.—A king said to a poor boy that served him in some way at a hotel: "Well boy, what do you do, and what do they pay you?" "I help in the stable," replied the lad; "but I have nothing except victuals and clothes." "Be content," replied the king; "I have no more."

Gleanings

* * *

MODERN SACRIFICES.—A French surgeon, who was on duty in the late war between France and Germany, tells of a soldier who offered to God a true "sacrifice," in the modern sense, and of the sort Isaiah extolled, in contrast to such heartless sacrifices as that of Saul (Isa. 1: 11-28). On the 8th of October the chloroform began to give out at Metz. A few local druggists had tried to make it; but the product was not fit for use, and the real article was scarce. At the temporary hospital of the redoubt, where I was on duty, we had very little left. As we did not know how long the siege might yet last, it was our urgent duty to be sparing with it. On the morning after the fight at Ladouchamps, there was a terrible influx of wounded, and we had our hands full. A chasseur of the guard is brought into the operating room with his hand badly shattered. It is found necessary to take off the bone to which the little finger is attached. The man comes in on foot, still holding fast his gun which he carries slung over his back. "Well, my good friend, we shall have to have a bit of an operation." "I know it, major; that is what I'm here for." "Would you like to be made insensible?" "Oh dear, yes. I've suffered so much all night I don't think I could stand it." "Are you very particular about it?" "Why, is it very scarce now—that stuff that puts you to sleep?" "We have scarcely any left." The chasseur reflected a moment in silence; then, suddenly: "Well, keep it for those who have to lose legs or arms; but be quick." He put his thin blue cravat, stiff bloody, in his mouth, lay down and held on his hand. The operation over, the question was asked, "Did it hurt you much?" "Yes, but what can you do? we poor fellows must help one another." With such sacrifice God is well pleased.

Our Household Circle

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

A Thing of Cheer

IT is the greatest pity that religion, in many minds, is regarded as a thing of gloom. Long faces, sombre expressions, woful sighs, lowered tones, every cadence suggestive of a vale of tears, are supposed to be the appropriate accompaniments of piety. A Christian family, it is fancied, must be exceedingly sober, even sorrowful and serious to the point of repression of all natural gayety; while the Christian home is a place to flee from and shun. All this is a mistake. No house in the wide world should be so full of mirth, of fun, of honest, sparkling and infectious gayety, as a house wherein Christ's love ever abides. No person in the wide world has a right to be so happy and to look so happy, clear through every experience and every vicissitude as the Christian. Religion is a thing of cheer. Heaven is a grand city of many mansions "conjubilant with song." Heaven's light and heaven's melody and heaven's sweetness are outpoured upon earth, wherever there is aspiration and endeavor of souls redeemed and grateful, and aware that they are saved by grace. In the individual life, religion should mean strength, courage, serenity, and a gladness bubbling up from an unseen spring. In the household, religion should mean peace, amity, self-denial of each for the rest, an altruism that is tersely condensed in the Pauline phrase, "in honor preferring one another." The merriment of children, the joy of life, the fullness of satisfaction, the radiance of contentment should be wherever there is pure religion and undefiled. For it is, first of all, a thing of cheer.

The Christian has God's warrant that whatever may happen, he will be carried safely through it. "As thy day, thy strength shall be," "Underneath are the everlasting arms." He has Christ's injunction to take no anxious thought concerning the morrow. People talk as though not to worry was a bit of modern philosophy, but it is as old as our Father's care, our Elder Brother's love. The Christian has a song in his soul, let the surface agitations of life be what they may. Anchored forever his hope is within the veil. Beyond him are the golden hills of heaven. Around him is an atmosphere of heaven's own light. Religion is a thing of cheer.

Unnoted Heroes

In one day lately, two policemen of New York performed acts of heroism as if duty were their guiding star. One man dived three times for a drowning child, then, breathless and panting and soaked to the skin, ran with his unconscious burden to the hospital. "Here he is; work over him quick!" he cried out to the surgeon, and reported the case to his sergeant as "a boy pulled out of the water." Another brave man jumped between an incoming ferry-boat and the dock, to save a drowning man. All honor to these magnificent heroes who make no sign, but simply do their day's work so grandly.

The Bright Side

"But what if there isn't any?"

"But there always is, you know."

"I'm not sure. Often you can't see it."

"That's because it's the upper side. The darkest cloud is apt to have its silver lining and to hide a sunlit sky."

The friends passed on, talking eagerly. The unseen loiterer, who had heard their bit of chat, wondered if the cheery old lady whose optimism had kept her face so fresh and her eyes behind her spectacles so bright, was right or wrong. And the longer the loiterer considered, the deeper became a conviction that the old lady had gotten hold of a great and beautiful truth. There's always a bright side, let our experiences of pain and grief be what they may. No experience of ours misses its reckoning as a part of God's plan in our lives. No chastening for the present is joyous. Yet chastening means development and, in the end, breadth, gladness, strength and power are its outcome. After the morning, swift paces the dawn light. There is always a bright side. Not always is it the earth-side though. The bright side may be in heaven.

A Royal Lady's Perfumed Robes

We are told that her Majesty Queen Alexandra has the drawers of her bureaus and wardrobes thickly strewn with rose petals, over a lining of white tissue paper. Her clothing is laid between layers of rose leaves, a covering of tissue paper on top, and the drawer closed tightly on all that fragrance. Powdered orris root spread upon paper and laid in drawers and closets perfumes the clothing of many an American queen. A delicate, elusive perfume is a sign of gentle breeding, but heavy, lingering odors, however sweet, are indicative of coarseness. Dressmakers often send gowns home with tiny sachet bags fastened in folds of the skirt or tucked into the corsage. Perfumes are wholesome and to some extent serve an antiseptic purpose.

This is the Friend of the Family

This? What? Why, any sort of food that does not need to be cooked. There are cereals of many varieties which, in these summer days, may be put on the table just as they are, eaten cold with cream and sugar, or served with fruit. Make your cup of coffee, and you have an excellent meal at no special trouble or pains. These modern inventions are certainly friendly to families, and a great help to busy housemothers.

OFFSHORE FISHERS

Offshore and away to the deep blue sea,
Where the bread of the children awaits their toil;
Offshore, and glad will the children be,
When the men sail home with the shining spoil.

Correct Speech

To be grammatically correct is one thing, to be slovenly in speech is another. Beware of slurring your words, of dropping your final g's, of running your sentences along an inclined plane so that the last word is lost in mystery. Cultivate the rising inflection at the end of every sentence. Do not use baby talk when your little tots begin to speak. Small children appreciate parental love-making in good English, quite as much as they do idiocy in broken Choctaw.

Table Manners

Teach the little one table manners as soon as she is old enough to hold a spoon. Nothing forms a completer dividing line between well-bred and ill-bred persons than manners at table. Eating in company is not merely for gratification of appetite. It is in some sort a festival, and should be so regarded.

DAISY-TIME

Daisies in the summer fields,
Tossing like the wave;
Daisies in the pasture land,
Daisies bright and brave.
Million-fold and white and gold,
Lo! the daisies shine.
And the poorest child may say,
"All this wealth is mine."

Writing Compositions

THE clever school boys and girls of New York have lately been writing compositions in rivalry for the prize offered by a daily newspaper. Among the young competitors, eager to secure medals or premiums of money were children of many lands, one little winner indeed being a lad of Chinese birth, whose essay compared most favorably with those written by boys of Occidental races. A glance at the names of the children who wrote compositions, revealed the cosmopolitan character of New York, for those names included every shade of foreign extraction from Russian Jew to Italian or Neapolitan or Polish strain, as well as many names that were unmistakably American.

No exercise is more educational than this of writing out what one sees or fancies or reads about, in good English. Children enjoy it unconsciously if allowed to take for their theme a subject on which they have some information. It brings into play spelling, grammatical construction, neatness of style and simplicity of language. A teacher whose class in composition does her credit has taught her pupils to think as well as to write, has done much toward disciplining their minds, quite as much as if she had succeeded in giving them great proficiency in mathematics or history.

Boys and Purity

"We all have to change our residence to another part of the city," said a man, lately, as he was discussing with his wife some problems of home importance. "Arthur cannot be suffered to drift into intimacy with the Bonner boys."

The father had satisfied himself that the Bonner boys were morally neglected. He was doing the right thing in taking his son from that neighborhood.

That a boy should be kept pure in heart, should be sedulously preserved from the least contact with anything depraved, is necessary to his future health, vigor, and clean manhood. Therefore, parents should watch their boys' associations, be extremely careful what their boys read, and, without seeming to do so, exercise a wise supervision over their playtime as well as their school-time. Surreptitious card-playing and furtive cigarette-smoking are the first steps to ruin in the life of many a boy.

It is a safeguard for a boy to have pleasant companionship with nice, well-brought up girls, and the boy who meets his sister's friends on terms of agreeable companionship is better off and likely to be freer from temptation of a gross kind, than the boy who seldom meets girls, and is shy and ill at ease in their society. Outdoor sports, in which both sexes compete on an equality, are excellent in their effect on boys as well as on girls, and this not only in the physical realm, but also in the realm of the moral and spiritual.

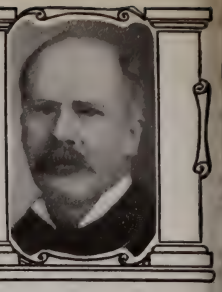
The Week's End Visit

In these busy days, a gracious manifestation of hospitality is the week's end visit. He or she who has a home in the suburbs, or in the green peaceful country, remote from city stir and noise, may invite a friend or two to come from Friday till Monday, or from Saturday till Monday. The Saturday half holiday is no longer exceptional, and most business houses give their employees a chance for relief then. A clerk or stenographer, or anybody else who is busy all the week, is very grateful for a week's end visit. If it can begin on Friday, then a whole Saturday is at the guest's disposal, preferably for outdoor exercise. A hostess need not be worried about her visitors and their enjoyment, if she can give them the freedom of garden and field, if she may let them play tennis or golf, ride, drive, or row a boat or even lounge on a veranda. The Sabbath should not be considered. Guests do not wish to be excused from keeping step with the family, attending church, and getting the sweet enjoyment of a Sabbath in the country affords to mind and body. When Monday morning dawns, see that breakfast is early on the table, and speed the parting guest that he may reach his office in good season.

THE NARROW GATE

by REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON, D.D.

Author of "IN HIS STEPS."



CHAPTER II.—Continued

IN the afternoon he closed up the office at three o'clock and went out for a walk. He wanted to think a little outdoors. There was a stream near the town with a fringe of woods on the banks. He walked down to a spot where a small ravine entered this fringe of trees, and sat down at the foot of an old elm.

As he sat there he realized that his dreaming days were over and that his active life work had begun. The president's prayer recurred to him. There had been one or two phrases in the prayer that stuck in his mind. "Make us brave to begin and patient to keep on." "Grant this son of thine a vision of real value so that he may not be afraid to lose those things that are not worth keeping at the expense of the things that are of eternal worth." "If the time comes when he is tempted to throw away his ideal, remind him, Lord, of that One who chose a cross instead of a crown."

He got up from the foot of the elm and slowly walked down the ravine until he reached the stream. He followed that for a mile or more, quietly reviewing his experience and measuring his opportunities. He was not conscious of any remarkable feeling, or of any unusual revolution of spiritual help, but when quite late in the afternoon he found himself back in his little room, he was calmly confident of his course, and in a certain defined way that was more satisfactory to him than a more positive exaltation, he felt assured of continuance and stability in the policy he had deliberately outlined. He read his daily Bible passage, and offered his evening prayer with a cheerful faith in the power of right, that was in one true sense, the nearest approach he had ever known to a personal communion with God.

The next morning, according to his promise, he went with Mr. and Mrs. Edwards to the First Methodist Church to hear Mr. Vernon.

When the preacher began the service, Douglas felt disappointed. His disappointment was evidently shared by the unusually large congregation. The church was filled, and the people were even standing in the back part of the house. But as the service went on, Douglas began to experience a change of feeling. The preacher was a very plain, unattractive man, about forty years old, with a voice which was not very well trained, and a manner which at times was so awkward as to be painful. When he reached the place of the sermon in the service, he stepped out from behind the pulpit and said abruptly:

"My text this morning is the whole Bible."

"His text is bigger than his sermon," muttered Mr. Edwards to Douglas. But it was at this point that Douglas and every one else began to get interested, and lose the first feeling of disappointment.

"Brothers and sisters, to tell the whole truth, I didn't want to come here," the preacher began, after his announcement of his text. "I have just been having a five years' fight with the devil over the saloon in Leander, and we had licked him out of that town, and I wanted to rest a little while. But I got my appointment to come here, where the same old devil is at the same old stand, and it almost discouraged me at first when I heard of my appointment, for I felt as if I had earned a rest after those five years; but the Lord and the bishop thought otherwise, and here I am; and now that I am here, I am going to love all of you people, and do my best to have you love me. I won't ask you to love me for my good looks, for that would be asking too much; but if you can overlook any failings in that direction, I will try to do the same in your case. If I were a member of this church, I would want to have my minister be very frank and honest at the very start; not keep anything back, nor try to please everybody, and I am going to outline in brief what I believe we all ought to practice. That is the reason I chose the Bible for my text. It contains the whole duty of man. And if what I say this morning offends anyone, I hope you will remember the Bible has said it all these years; and if you are offended, you are not being offended at my words, but at the Word of God. It is his truth that I am going to give you."

He then went on rapidly to choose a number of verses from the Bible which, he said, were fundamental, and represented his thought of the preaching that the times demanded. Douglas was interested in it all, and especially in one part, when he mentioned the saloon again. The congregation had all lost the indifferent and disappointed air that had marked it, and was now thoroughly interested and aroused.

"Among other things that I am going to do while pastor of this church, by the grace of God, is to preach and pray and work for the removal of the saloon and the gambling-house in this town. I see no more reason for licensing the saloon than for licensing a place where men are allowed to burn so many houses every year for so much a year, or steal so many pairs of shoes at so much a year, or assault so many people at so much a year. The saloon has no more right to be licensed than a counterfeiter's den. It is evil, and only evil, and as such I believe the church ought to fight it. That is what I intend to do, and that is what I want every member of this church to do. Let me read you a letter."

He took a paper out of his pocket and began to read. The stillness all over the house was painful as the reading went on.

"I received this in my mail last night. I venture to say it is only the first out of a large number that will reach me before I have been here six months.

"'MR. VERNON:

"'Dear Sir: I write you concerning my boy, who has just left the farm to go to Colby. I've heard of your fight against the saloon in Leander, and how you succeeded in driving it out, and I read in the paper that you are going to Colby, and I don't know anybody in Colby, so these are the reasons I am writing this letter to you. My boy is seventeen years old; he got tired of the farm life and begged to go into town. A neighbor's boy, who is a clerk there, got him a place in a hardware store in Colby, and I fixed up the boy's trunk, and he left us two weeks ago. He's written me twice since, but I learned from my neighbors only yesterday, that their boy and mine had been going into the saloons in Colby. O, sir, if you can know what that means to me, you would not wonder that I am writing this letter. The boy is not bad. But he is weak and easily led. I have no friend or acquaintance in Colby, or I would write them, instead of troubling you, a stranger. But will you not do something for me for my boy? God knows his father fought the drink for twenty years, and, finally gave up, and died in a drunken spree. Then I sold what few things we had, and with the help of my brother secured the little farm on which I am now living, and moved out here with my children. I had a terror of the city or the town where the saloon was licensed, and I wanted my children to grow up where the temptation would not reach them. When Frank, that's my boy, began to get restless, and I saw he was unhappy on the farm, I knew it would do no good to try to force him to stay here, and I prayed with every stitch I took on his clothes, and, as I packed his trunk, my supplication was, 'O, my Father, if you are good, and, if you hear prayer, keep my boy safe.' We are very poor, and I have been more or less of an invalid all my life. I am writing this as I sit up in my bed. I have two beautiful children—a girl nineteen years old, who does the work in the house, and a noble son, twenty-two years old, who manages the little farm. Frank is my baby. My brother, if you or your church people can reach my boy and get him under Christian influences, won't you do it? For the sake of Christ, won't you do something? It's asking a good deal and putting a heavy burden on one, who, I have no doubt, is already carrying a great load, but I do not know where else to turn for help. As you love God and believe in Christ, help save my boy, and a mother's blessing will be yours as long as you live.'"

Mr. Vernon looked up from the reading of this letter, and for a moment the stillness was unbroken, while every eye was fixed on the plain, but honest, face of the preacher. Then he said in a low voice, while the people in the rear of the church leaned forward intently to listen:

"Do you wonder that there are some people in this country who are called fanatics and cranks by the politicians and the respectable drinkers, and the indifferent church members who never bear any one's burdens? Do you wonder that some of us have no other remedy for an institution like the saloon except its termination? Is there any other business known to the human race that deliberately, for the sake of money, in cold blood, makes its living out of the broken hearts of mothers, and the ruined souls of boys like these? Is it any wonder that some of us are ready to pledge our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor in a war against this tyranny, which is greater and more insolent and unbearable than the tyranny of any king or monarch known to history. And will this church answer this letter, or will you tell me how to answer it? Shall I write this woman, politely telling her we cannot do anything, and that the saloon is a legally licensed institution, and is here to stay, and we are sorry, but the boy must learn to resist temptation, and so grow strong? We will invite him to church and Sunday School, and welcome him into our League, but as for removing the saloon, that is beyond our power. What do you advise? It's only a boy from the country. It's true, his mother's heart out on that lonesome farm is agonizing over him, but what will Colby do for money to pay for its running expenses; for the salaries of its school-teachers, and the improvements of the new park? For all these things are paid out of the saloon license. But I don't ask this church to answer this letter for me. I have no doubt as to the answer, and I say right here, as we meet for the first time in the relation of pastor and people, that when I answer this letter to-morrow, I shall tell that woman that the church in Colby will do its utmost to save her boy, and I shall add, that as for myself, I shall never cease, during my stay here in this town, to fight this institution with all the strength God has given me until, by his grace and the efforts of all those who believe as I do, the saloon is exterminated from Colby forever!"

CONTINUED ON PAGE 603

"THE RUSTLE OF APPLAUSE ROSE INTO A VIGOROUS HAND-CLAPPING"

Copyright, 1903, by Charles M. Sheldon

One Day with our Waifs at Mont-Lawn

THIS charming little unconventional sketch of the typical happenings of a day at Mont-Lawn, is from the pen of a member of House-mother Collins' staff of teacher-assistants. We believe it will interest many readers.

Towards evening the teachers are called to their post of duty by the approaching peals of laughter and merriment of the latest delegation of arrivals, and exclamations are heard in various tones and pitches: "Oh! isn't this nice?" "How long are we going to stay?" "I want to stay a month." "I want to stay all summer!"

LITTLE POSY-GATHERERS OF WILD FLOWERS

How they scramble out of the carriages, and, running into the tent where supper is awaiting them, deposit their bundles in rather a tumbled heap. One of the teachers inquires how each will ever find his or her own bundle; and another teacher, who had been there before, answers, with a twinkle in her eye, "Wait, and you will soon see."

Then their enjoyment in partaking of the food, and their request, "More bread! More bread," for which they seem to have an unlimited capacity!

It is with hearts of rejoicing that we greet the groups that come to us each day, who come from the din and dirt of the city into God's green fields, invigorating air and extended freedom.

As I write, the merry shouts of children are heard from every nook and corner of Mont-Lawn, where day and night alternately spread out a changeful succession of wonders for these young eyes to look upon; where the grass is green and the sky blue, that the young feet may find soft resting-places, and the young head a beautiful roof over it.

Every day will be a new discovery and every night will receive into its dreams some new object from the world of sights and sounds, which teach of the omnipresence of our Heavenly Father. Nature surrounds her children with invisible teachers and makes even their play a training for the highest duty—that of glorifying our Lord and Master. The young feet have come to the very threshold of the temple, and may all the hearts who guide, pulsate with the love of Christ who gave his life that these little ones might be saved.

While the children are gleaning lessons from nature, the teachers have great opportunities of studying human nature. Here we see the little lame boy carried about by the teachers and the "little mothers" who have younger sisters or brothers to take care of. One "little mother" cries out, "Oh, he's run away from me!" A little girl writes home asking them just to "please send me one penny." In many cases the tragical and humorous are very closely connected. Another "little mother," about eleven years old, undressing a younger brother, discovers that a brother in another dormitory has their night dresses. She asks if she may go to her brother. She goes, but comes back, saying, "I can't find him." The teacher, "Did you look for him?" Little girl, "I looked in beds, in the chapel. He's lost." She goes to another dormitory with the teacher, and at the call of the name "John McGraw," a blond haired boy pops up his head, and the little girl, like the irate mother who has found a lost child, vents her anxiety in a forceful manner, and exclaims, "I won't bring you again."

Another, who has her stockings tightly tied on with strings that have gotten into a hard knot, asks if she cannot leave them on. The teacher says they must be taken off, as the circulation will be hindered. The little girl replies, "Yes, she might have bad dreams."

One lovely morning our children were awakened by a chorus of birds and children's voices, and a sentence came floating in through the windows from the fields: "Johnnie, I've found a blackberry." The children spent the greater part of that morning making daisy chains and adorning the teachers and themselves. In the afternoon Dr. Klopsch, who is beloved by the children, visited the Home and entered into various sports with the little folks. He again visited them Sunday afternoon and gave a very interesting and helpful talk.

Many are the odd sayings of the children. On a rainy day, one little girl, who had got her feet wet, said she must take off her shoes and stockings, because "her brother died of ammonia on account of wet feet."

The children are delighted with the flower-beds on the lawn, which are laid out in symmetrical designs—as stars, crescents, diamonds, etc.—and look forward with enjoyment to the process of planting and taking care of a bed, appointed to a designated group under the supervision of a teacher.

Plenty of good food, downy cots, and loving care, will be their portion. Best of all, they will be brought under ennobling influences, and taught of a Heavenly Father's mercy and loving care for them. May they acquire such a love for the right, that their lives may be made nobler and brighter by their visit to Mont-Lawn.

IMPLICIT OBEDIENCE

God's Demand on all His Servants

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

GOD gave Saul a crowning opportunity to carry out his purposes of utter destruction upon the Amalekites, who had attacked Israel when they came out of Egypt (Ex. 17: 8-16.) And Saul took Agag, the king of the Amalekites, alive, and utterly destroyed all the people with the edge of the sword. But Saul and the people spared Agag, and the best of the sheep and of the oxen, and of the fatlings and the lambs, and all that was good, and would not utterly destroy them; but everything that was vile and refuse, that they destroyed utterly.

It was not obedience; it was not true service: therefore it was disobedience and rebellion. God is a strict Master: if he is not obeyed to the letter, it is not obedience at all. "Whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all" (James 2: 10.) And now, while Saul is all unconscious of it, Samuel is called into God's council chamber, that he may speak to him of Saul. "It repenteth me that I have set up Saul to be king," were the solemn words spoken in that holy moment by God to his prophet, while King Saul was exulting in his success, "for he is turned back from following me, and hath not performed my commandments." And Samuel did not say what many have said, "It is just as I expected," for Samuel had prayed for Saul, and you cannot pray for anyone without loving him. "It grieved Samuel, and he cried unto the Lord all night."

And from that night of prayer Samuel arose to go and meet Saul; and when he found him, for he had to follow him to Gilgal, Saul, inflated with his success, saluted him with the words, "Blessed be thou of the Lord, I have performed the commandment of the Lord." What meaneth then," was the stern rejoinder, "this bleating of the sheep, and the lowing of the oxen in mine ears?" And Saul, like Adam at the time of the fall, sought to shirk the responsibility by putting it upon the people. David sought to shield his people (II. Sam. 24: 17), for he was kingly; but such kingship was not in the man who was the people's choice, and he was ready to throw them over whenever it suited him. "They have brought them from the Amalekites... the people spared," etc., implying that he had nothing to do with it. Where was his authority? Samuel was not to be deceived: he came from the presence of the Lord, where all is transparent, and he spoke with the authority of God. No question of the people; thou art the king, and the responsibility is thine, and Saul again asserted his own obedience and again blamed the people, explaining that the sheep and oxen were reserved for sacrifice. "And Samuel said, Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams. . . . Because thou hast rejected the Word of the Lord, he hath also rejected thee from being king." From this time Saul was no longer king in God's eyes. The first requisite for a king is to know how to obey him who has permitted him to be king.

Saul now owned that he had sinned, but there was no brokenness of heart: he did not turn to God, but only asked pardon of Samuel, whom he entreated to turn with him and worship the Lord. Samuel knew that Saul could not, with an unbroken heart, offer worship which would be acceptable to the Lord, and he refused. Then Saul laid hold of the skirt of Samuel's mantle and it rent, and Samuel said unto him, "The Lord hath rent the kingdom from thee this day, and hath given it to a neighbor of thine that is better than thee." It was the second disobedience of Saul, and this time it might not be forgiven. Like many children of God as well as many unsaved people, Saul was quite willing to serve God, but in his own way, making exception where he chose.

If You Are Looking for a perfect condensed milk preserved without sugar, buy Borden's Various Brand Evaporated Cream. It is not only a perfect food for infants, but its delicious flavor and richness causes it superior to any cream for coffee, coffee tea, chocolate and general household cooking. Prepared by Borden's Condensed Milk Co.

MELLIN'S FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS FOOD

Puny babies become strong and robust babies when fed on Mellin's Food. Mellin's Food gives strength.

You will be glad that you sent for a sample of Mellin's Food when you see how eagerly baby takes it.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

Reduced Prices on Suits and Skirts.

WE are offering exceptional values in Suits and Skirts for Summer wear, and suggest that you come to-morrow and have your choice of these unusual bargains. Suits and Skirts made to order a week hence cannot be had at these prices. Investigate this unusual opportunity to save money.

Handsome Suits and Pongee Costumes $6.97, former price $10.

$12 Suits reduced to $8. $15 Suits reduced to $10. $20 Suits reduced to $13.34. $25 Suits reduced to $16.97. $30 Suits reduced to $20.

Rainy-Day, Walking and Dressy Skirts, in the newest models, $3.34, former price $5. $6 Skirts reduced to $4. $7.50 Skirts reduced to $5. $10 Skirts reduced to $6.67. $12 Skirts reduced to $8.

We thoroughly understand the making of garments from measurements sent by mail because we have had fifteen years' experience in doing that very thing.

Orders can be filled with the greatest promptness, very often in three days' time. If the garment which we make for you does not prove satisfactory, send it back promptly and we will refund your money.

Catalogue, samples and Bargain List will be sent free by return mail. We have very few Cataloguing left, so write at once if you wish to take advantage of these reduced prices. Be sure to ask for Catalogue No. 612.

NATIONAL CLOAK AND SUIT COMPANY
119 and 121 West 23d St., New York.

55 Cents Cheaper When Made With KNOX'S GELATINE

It's extravagance to pay 55 cents for eight recent Sweetened Packages of Gelatine to make a gallon of Jelly, when two packages of Knox's Gelatine, total cost 25 cents, make a gallon of the exactly better dessert. Of course you wouldn't do it if you actually realized how expensive it is. Besides, only KNOX'S is made from absolutely pure calves' stock. Always ready to serve in one hour. Enough for ten large portions cost only 2½ cents.

FREE PINT SAMPLE and Instructive Cook Book for 4 cts. in stamps to cover packing and postage. Full ½ gallon package 10 cts. 2 for 25 cts. Ask your grocer's name. Money refunded if unsatisfactory.

Chas. B. Knox, 55 Knox Av., Johnstown, N.Y.

IMPERIAL GRANUM

Best and most economical FOOD for BABIES and INVALIDS

Sold by druggists. Sample Free from John Carle & Sons, Dep. F 153 Water St., New York City

I Print My Own Cards

THE PRESS CO., Meriden, Conn.

THE ROMANCE OF A DYNASTY

Continued From Page 591

THE MILITARY GUARDING THE ROYAL PALACE AT BELGRADE

Servia, true to old habits, turned her eyes in the emergency to the old dynasty. When Alexander Karagorgevitch abdicated in 1858, his son Peter, then a boy twelve years old, accompanied him into retirement. He had been educated in France, and had won distinction fighting in the French army, in the Franco-Prussian War. He bore a good character, and had the confidence both of Russia and Austria. He it is, who has now undertaken the difficult task of rehabilitating the country.

King Peter's arrival in his capital, on June 24, was made the occasion of popular enthusiasm. He wore the uniform of a Servian general, and looked grave, and almost nervous, as he descended from his car amid a fanfare of trumpets. He shook hands with the premier, M. Avakumovics, who ended a speech of welcome with calling for cheers for King Peter, to which the crowd responded loudly. His Majesty read his answer to the premier's welcome in somewhat low tones, thanking him, and promising to do his utmost for the good of the kingdom.

He expressed his pleasure at again coming to Servia after forty-five years' absence from his beloved fatherland, and added that his soul was filled with gratitude to God, and with a consciousness of the duties that awaited him as king. He then thanked the ministers for having fulfilled their duties to the fatherland as the interests of the country demanded. He was happy to have an opportunity of expressing his gratitude for their services.

The presentation of the ministers followed. Colonel Machin, Minister of Public Works and brother-in-law of Queen Draga, who took a leading part in the assassinations, wore full uniform and all his decorations.

King Peter throughout the presentations was extremely grave. He did not speak a word and did not smile, but simply shook hands with those who were presented to him. The introductions were followed by the traditional picturesque ceremony of the offering of bread and salt by the Mayor of Belgrade.

An immense torchlight procession took place in the evening in addition to the illumination of the city. When the procession reached the new Konak, the king's appearance on the balcony, surrounded by the ministers, was greeted with a tremendous outburst of cheering from a dense mass of people gathered in front of the palace.

It was obvious to all that the king was not elated by his elevation to the throne. The gravity of his demeanor, and the paucity of his utterances, showed that he fully appreciated the difficulties of his position.

WAR on IMPURE LITERATURE

IN these days, when the printing press is turning out such a vast product, it is necessary, especially for the sake of the young and inexperienced, that a vigilant watch should be kept on that product, to guard against the introduction in homes, schools and colleges, of impure literature. This is the special mission of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, of which Mr. Anthony Comstock is founder and General Manager. That Society, by the seizure and wholesale destruction of large quantities of immoral books and pictures, and by the prosecution and conviction of the men engaged in that infamous traffic, is rendering most valuable service to every Christian and law-abiding home in the nation.

Do you wish to help this Society? If so, write to Mr. Comstock, with a generous contribution, or you may send to the care of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. You will be doing real missionary work, and your act may be the means of saving somebody's son or daughter from contamination.

Concerning his work, Mr. Comstock himself writes:

"During the past year 116 arrests have been made by the Society's officers, 9 convictions secured, and over 2 tons of impure literature, pictures, etc., seized and destroyed. Summing up the entire record of the Society for the Suppression of Vice since it began in 1872, it has made 2,654 arrests and seized 84 tons of matter, the latter including books, papers, prints, negatives, electro-plates, type, steel and copper-plate engravings, woodcuts, circulars, letters, names and addresses, lottery and pool tickets."

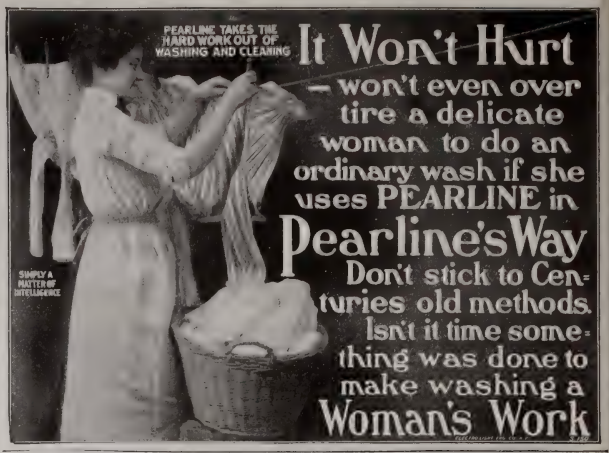
The South American Field*

A Neglected Sphere in Which Missionary Efforts are Needed

ONE result which it may most earnestly be hoped will come of the present revival of interest in the cause of missions, is a resolute and systematic effort to evangelize South America. Though the field is so vast and though it is so near to us, less has been done for it by the American church than for Africa, China or India. In Brazil, with its eighteen million inhabitants, there are only some sixty missionaries, if so many. In Venezuela about ten; in Peru, with five million population, there was until a few years ago only one missionary. In Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Argentina, Colombia and Bolivia, mission work is barely commenced. It is estimated that in the whole continent, with a population of about sixty millions, the entire missionary force is not more than three hundred.

Probably one reason for the neglect of this needy field is the fact that it is nominally Christian. The Romish Church has been there for centuries, but it is a question whether the influence of heathenism has not corrupted the church more than the church has affected heathenism. It was recently stated by a missionary in that field, that intelligent Roman Catholics repudiate the Catholicism that is taught in the churches and schools, and that many of them prefer to attend the Protestant churches. Certain it is, that when the missionary goes among the people, he finds them ignorant and superstitious, and ready to welcome pure Gospel teaching. The Indians, especially, are utterly without Christian knowledge, no systematic attempt to reach them having been made. In the larger cities and in rural districts in which the Roman Catholic Church is powerful, there is fierce opposition to the Protestant missionary; but when he can reach the people he finds a ready and even enthusiastic reception for his message. Rev. R. J. Young and his wife, whose work in Brazil has frequently been described in this journal, report most hopefully of missionary prospects in that land, and testify to the readiness of the people to receive the Gospel.

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society and Baptist Young People's Union for July 26. Luke 21:25-32.



PEARLINE TAKES THE HARD WORK OUT OF WASHING AND CLEANING
SIMPLY A MATTER OF INTELLIGENCE
It Won't Hurt
— won't even over tire a delicate woman to do an ordinary wash if she uses PEARLINE in Pearline's Way
Don't stick to Centuries old methods. Isn't it time something was done to make washing a Woman's Work

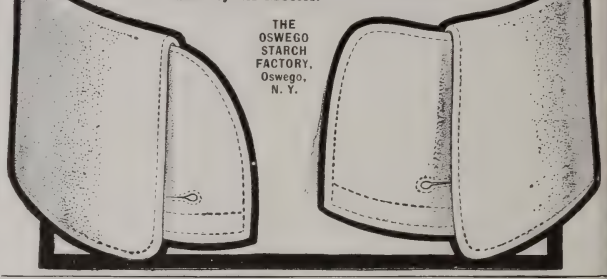
LINEN WON'T WILT

if starched with starch that has plenty of body and elasticity. Starch that goes in—fills the pores of the linen, making it firm; yet pliable. Collars starched with

KINGSFORD'S
OSWEGO
Silver Gloss Starch

Stand up under all conditions of weather and wearer. They have the body and staying quality that last until relaundered.

Sold by all Grocers.



A HOT WEATHER PROPOSITION. Washing comes just as often, more of it, and harder in hot weather. Women wash beyond their strength the old way. A new and easy way has come to pass. The lifts the burden, removes the drudgery, brings washing within her strength and saves the clothes. Why do without it and sweat, swelter and suffer, if washing can be done easily and with less expense? Don't take our word for it—try the EASY for 30 days. If it won't save its price before hot weather is over, send it back. We pay charges both ways.

Syracuse Easy Washer

Our book, full of up-to-date formulas for domestic laundry work, free.

DODGE & ZUILL, 540 S. Clinton Street, Syracuse, N. Y.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO. 5% PER ANNUM

Non-Speculative Investments 5% Yielding

THIS Company affords the security of the highest class real estate mortgage, without the annoyance of collecting interest and supervising the mortgaged properties. Our loans are made upon choice real estate worth 60 per cent. more than amount of mortgage, employing

CAPITAL AND SURPLUS OF . $1,100,000
ASSETS OF $1,600,000

Operating under New York Banking Dept. supervision, this Company is earning for its patrons and paying them (quarterly, by check) 5 per cent. for every day the funds are in its possession; and they are withdrawable at pleasure. WRITE US.

Industrial Savings & Loan Co.,
1131 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

DEAFNESS

The Morley Ear-Drum

is the most recent and most effective invisible device for the relief of DEAFNESS. It is easily adjusted, comfortable and safe. Send for descriptive booklet.

The Morley Company,
Dept. E,
19 South 16th Street. Philadelphia.

BIBLE STUDY BY MAIL

BIBLE STUDY COURSE

At home by mail. This book "Home Bible Study" free if you enroll now. Terms easy. For free catalog write

C. J. BURTON, President Iowa Christian College, Oskaloosa, Iowa

LEARN PROOFREADING

If you possess a fair education, why not utilize it at a genteel and improved profession paying $15 to $35 weekly. Situations always obtainable. We are the original instructors by mail.

HOME CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL, PHILADELPHIA

Individual Communion Cups

Send for FREE catalogue and list of 2,000 churches now using our cups.

Sanitary Communion Outfit Co., Dept. 7 Rochester, N.Y.

Loaned Free

32 page pamphlets of new and suitable Sacred Songs for Camp Meetings and evangelistic services.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

CLEAN CUT CAKE TIN

FREE TO AGENTS

Flat thin knife cuts loose a perfect cake. $2 Outfit free Exp. prepaid.

HOUSEHOLD NOVELTY WORKS, Chicago, Ill., or Buffalo, N.Y.

THE NARROW GATE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 600

Over the church there swept a rustle of pplause. It was started by some of the omen, until it rose into a vigorous hand-lapping, the first time in the history of at church that such a demonstration had ver been known.

Edwards looked at Douglas and his ook conveyed the same idea that Douglas ad already swiftly entertained. A crisis the political, business, and church life f Colby was at hand, and the next few eeks were going to witness some of the ost interesting and intensely important vents in the lives of many in that con regation.

CHAPTER III.

WHEN the service was over the congregation went out very slowly. A number stayed to speak to the inister.

"Let's go up, and tell him we're with im," said Edwards, and Douglas quickly ssented, for another reason as well. There as a line of people shaking hands with he minister, and Edwards and Douglas aited until nearly the last. When they ere in front of him, Edwards introduced imself and then Douglas.

"O, you're the new editor of the Bea-on. I haven't had time to come around o see you. Mrs. Vernon has been ill too. nd I have not had a moment's time to all. But I saw enough of the paper to hank God. Why, look here, young man, ou're a young fellow. How old are ou?"

"Twenty-five. I hope I'm young enough o learn something."

"Learn something! You're teaching he rest of us. I glanced at your outline f policy for the paper and it gave me in-piration. I said to myself, 'I am not oing to be as lonesome in Colby as I eared.' The Lord be with you, Brother Douglas."

"And with you, sir."

"I say Amen to both of you," exclaimed Edwards, who was in a fine state of excitement. "I didn't really expect to hear what I've heard this morning, Mr. Vernon. I thought at any rate you would probably wait a few weeks and feel your way."

"Why should a man wait to feel his way with a congregation when the issue is as plain as sin? There is too much feeling the way with the pulpit in America. But it does my heart good to meet you two. I've heard of you, Brother Edwards. There are some who have not bowed the knee to Baal."

"Yes, the applause showed that. Very unusual. Never heard the like in a Colby church before," said Edwards.

"It was the letter," said Douglas, "I saw several women crying. I want that letter, Mr. Vernon, to print in the Beacon."

"I'll give you a copy of it when I call to see you in the office to-morrow. I want to talk over matters generally. Pray for me, both of you."

Edwards insisted in taking Douglas home with him to dinner, and during the meal they discussed the situation.

"Things are going to get stirred up in Colby I guess. That sermon of Vernon's was a stem-winder. It went to the bottom. It'll make him enemies as well as friends. Did you see Judge Butler's face?"

"I don't believe there will be as much opposition to Mr. Vernon as you think, James," Mrs. Edwards ventured to say. Mrs. Edwards always took a hopeful, charitable view of people and events.

"I hope not, Julia. But sometimes the devil is his liveliest in the church. I've seen more rows started between church members than any other one class of people."

"And yet," said Douglas thoughtfully, "it is through just such men as Mr. Vernon in the church that all the social questions are being bravely and intelligently brought to the public notice. The inchristian men and women of society are never active in any reform."

"That's right. O well we have at least more than a fighting chance. We know where Vernon stands, and we know where the Beacon stands, and we know that we're in for an interesting time. Mark my prediction though. There's going to be trouble at the First Methodist. Judge Butler's one of the trustees. There are others who feel as he does."

TO BE CONTINUED

DUNCAN CLARKE

Champion of Michigan

A "Money King" Among Boys

HE IS a "Captain of Industry"—a little "Money-King" among his playmates. In controlling trade he is as shrewd as the money-kings of the "grown-ups." And his profits are in proportion. Over $50.00 in Prize Money alone from The Saturday Evening Post within three months is his record.

He began by making a clean sweep of his block, getting everybody possible to sign an order directing him to deliver for four successive weeks. Street by street he canvassed his part of town with such success that all his boy friends were excited about it, and wrote to us clamoring to be agents. But Master Duncan had thought this problem all out for himself long before. He figured that we would not be apt to take chances on new boys to compete against him, if he could sell at the rate of 50 copies a week. So he wrote us a letter, requesting control of the whole town—knew he "could sell unassisted all the copies the people would buy"—wanted us to refuse all other boys; said he could "beat all of them put together, anyway," and wound up by inclosing a cash deposit to pay in advance for fifty copies a week for several months, just to show that he "meant business."

We complied with his request to refuse to sell to the other boys. Since then he has sold an average of 100 copies a week for almost a year. His town, lying in the copper country of the upper peninsula of Michigan, has been built four years and has just 750 inhabitants, and he is ten years old.

In a Dainty Little Booklet which we will send to any boy free, twenty-five out of more than six thousand bright boys tell in their own way just how they have made a success of selling THE SATURDAY EVENING POST. Pictures of the boys—letters telling how they built up a paying business outside of school hours—interesting stories of real business tact.

Some of these boys are making $10 to $15 a week. You can do the same. NO MONEY REQUIRED TO START. We will furnish ten copies the first week free of charge, to be sold at five cents a copy. You can then send us the wholesale price for as many as you find you can sell the next week. IF YOU WILL TRY IT WE WILL SEND THE COPIES AND EVERYTHING NECESSARY.

$225 in Extra Cash Prizes will be distributed Next Month among boys who sell FIVE or more copies weekly.

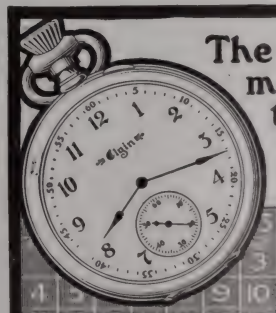
The Curtis Publishing Company, Boy Department, 403 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.



The Minutes that make the Days, that make the Years, are truthfully told by the

ELGIN WATCH

Every Elgin Watch is fully guaranteed. All newsstores have Elgin Watches. "Time-makers and Timekeepers," an illustrated history of the watch, sent free upon request to ELGIN NATIONAL WATCH CO.

ELGIN, ILL.

"HELLO POLLY"

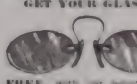
Parrots are the most fully adaptable and interesting of all feathered pets. We import good talkers, handsome plumage, large size, and we guarantee every bird to learn to talk. A beautiful Cockatoo or Mexican

PARROT $3.90 for only

If you send before Sept. 1st. These prices are for cash and limited to one bird. A bird cage $1.00, extra. Parrot Book, containing all information as to how to feed, handle, etc., and Catalog, describing Birds, Cages, Supplies, etc., free if you send this paper. Don't delay, write to-day.

IOWA SEED CO., Des Moines, Iowa.
Largest retail Bird, Cage and Supply House in America.

GET YOUR GLASSES AT WHOLESALE



LARSCOPE

FREE, with our beautiful illustrated book of Spectacles and Eyeglasses. MAIL ORDER ONLY. Send today.

GRAND RAPIDS WHOLESALE OPTICIANS,
Dept. G, 40-42 Houseman Bldg., Grand Rapids, Mich.

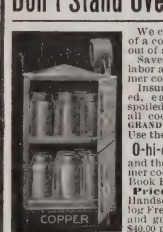
The pleasanter you can make cleaning the teeth, the oftener it will be done.

RUBIFOAM

does the work of disagreeable powders while leaving a pleasant taste in the mouth. It is a great encourager of the teeth-cleaning habit. 25 cents at all Druggists'.

E. W. HOYT & COMPANY, Lowell, Mass.

Don't Stand Over Hot Stoves



We can save you the services of a cook or make a good cook out of a poor one.

Saves you 50 per cent. in fuel, labor and time. Fine for summer cottages.

Insures you delicously cooked, easily digested, never spoiled, steaming hot meals, all cooked over one burner. GRAND FOR CANNING FRUIT. Use the

O-hi-o Steam Cooker With Doors and the great problem of summer cooking is solved. $1 Cook Book Free, 6 cents postage.

Prices $2.50 to $9.50. Handsomely illustrated Catalog Free. We want good agents and guarantee them $30.00 to $40.00 per week and expenses.

THE O-HI-O COOKER CO., 727 Jefferson St., Toledo, O.

Tricycles for Cripples

Chairs For Invalids

Enable those helpless in lower limbs to go about with absolute ease and comfort. PROPELLED ENTIRELY BY HAND. Noiseless, light running. Strong, simple, safe. Our

Illustrated Catalogue Free,

Shows many tricycles and invalid chairs specially designed for the comfort of cripples and invalids however afflicted. Address

THE WORTHINGTON MFG. CO., Dept. A Elyria, O. [Successors to Fay Tricycle and Invalid Chair Co.]

Rider Agents Wanted

in each town to ride and exhibit sample bicycle

'03 Models high grade $9 to $15

1901 & '02 Models, best makes $7 to $10

500 2ND - HAND WHEELS

all makes and models, good as new $3 to $8.

Great Factory Clearing Sale. We ship on approval and 10 day's trial without a cent in advance.

EARN A BICYCLE taking orders for us. Write at once for bargain list and our wonderful special offer to agents. Tires, equipment, sundries, half price.

AUTOMOBILES Bargains in new and second-hand Autos and Motor Cycles. All makes and styles. If interested write for Automobile Catalogue.

MEAD CYCLE COMPANY, Dept. 64K CHICAGO, ILL.

SALESMEN AND AGENTS WANTED.

BIG WAGES Harrison Blue Flame, Wickless, Fuel Oil Stove for cooking and heating. New, Wonderful invention. Enormous demand. Everybody buys. Big Seller. Generates its own fuel gas from kerosene oil. A spoonful oil makes hopeless fuel gas. Cheapest, safest fuel. No dirt, ashes or big coal bills. All sizes. Prices $3 up. Write for special offer, new plan. Catalogue Free. WORLD MFG. CO., 5236 World Bldg., CINCINNATI, O.

SCALES

FREIGHT PAID. BEST QUALITY. LOWEST PRICE ON TRIAL. ALL SIZES. FREE LIST. JONES BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

MAPLEWOOD

Near Cincinnati, Ohio.

A Sanatorium established in 1875 for the private care and treatment of Drug and Alcoholic Addictions. Thousands having failed elsewhere have been successfully treated here. Home treatment if desired. Address The Dr. J. L. Stephens Co., Dept. R 5, Lebanon, O.

FENCE! STRONGEST MADE.

Bull Strong, Chicken-Tight. Sold to the Farmer at Wholesale Prices. Fully Warranted. Catalog Free. COILED SPRING FENCE CO. Box 47 Winchester, Indiana, U. S. A.

The "1900" Ball-Bearing Washer Free

From Factory to your Door

FREIGHT PREPAID BOTH WAYS ON 30 DAYS' FREE TRIAL

No Deposit or Advance Payment Required. If Not Satisfactory, Return it at Our Expense. No Questions Asked.

This "1900" BALL-BEARING Washer is the greatest time, labor and expense saving appliance ever invented. An absolute necessity to Households, Laundries, Hotels, Boarding Houses, Public Institutions, etc., etc. Only practical, simple, easy running washer ever made. Hundreds of thousands now in successful use.

The "1900" Ball-bearing Automatic Washing Machine is the simplest, easiest running, most efficient machine for washing clothes ever invented. It is a thoroughly practical labor-saving machine for washing all kinds and grades of materials, from the finest laces to the coursest fabrics. It is constructed on scientific principles. It revolves on ball-bearings, which render the rotary movement as easy as the wheels of a high-grade bicycle. The "1900" Washer will wash any garment without boiling, without scrubbing and without wear or tear. There is absolutely no need of using any chemicals. Soap and hot water are the only things necessary to do perfect work.

The Washing is Done while the Operator Sits by the Side of the Tub, Revolving it by the Handle half way around, to right and left.

CONVINCING TESTIMONY.

$1,000.00 will be forfeited to any one proving this letter not genuine.

BRIGGS AVE., Morris Park, N. Y., Feb. 19, 1902.

Enclosed please find bill for washer, with cash to settle same. I can hardly express my satisfaction with the machine, and thoroughly agree with you that the first time you use it you like it, but the more you use it the better you like it. I did not believe it possibly could do what you claimed, but thought it must have some good points or you could not venture to send on free trial. The free trial is a splendid idea, as I never should have been induced by any amount of advertisements to invest any money to find out if it was a good machine. I stood amazed as I lifted articles from the washer on my first trial—articles that as I put them in were so soiled that I exclaimed: "Oh, yes, they'll come out clean and white—?" But they certainly did! I have three little ones and plenty of washing, and pretty much soiled generally, but my only regret is that I did not have the washer years ago, and thus have saved myself very much. Thanking you for being the means of robbing washday of its terrors, I am

Yours very truly, MRS. E. H. VOSE.

REMEMBER—You take absolutely no risk, incur no expense or obligation whatever. The washer is sent by us on 30 days' trial freight prepaid both ways and positively without any advance or deposit of any kind.

For catalogue and full particulars of this liberal and absolutely genuine offer, address

"1900" WASHER CO.,
33 R State St., Binghamton, N. Y.

References: FIRST NATIONAL BANK, Binghamton, N. Y.

Spinal Curvature Corrected in Your Own Home

We offer a certain relief to all who suffer from this terrible affliction. Throw away the cumbersome and expensive leather and plaster Paris jackets and try our Scientific Spinal Appliance.

It does not encase the body like a vise, but allows perfect freedom of movement. It weighs ounces where others weigh pounds. It is so per cent cheaper than the old methods and 100 per cent better. It conforms to the shape of the body so that no one would notice it. It can be worn by the smallest child or the oldest adult with perfect ease and comfort. It will give permanent relief in any case of spinal curvature. They are not made up in large quantities, but each one is made to measure, to meet the individual case, and a perfect fit is guaranteed. If you or any of your friends suffer from any form of Spinal Trouble, write us at once and we will give you full particulars as to how your curvature may be corrected, without inconvenience or discomfort, and Without Leaving Your Own Home. Address,

PHILO BURT MFG. CO., 30 Seventh Street, JAMESTOWN, N.Y.

Squabs Pay Best Hens

Easier, need attention only part of time, bring big prices. Raised in one month. Attractive for poultrymen, farmers, women. Send for FREE BOOKLET and learn this immensely rich home industry.

PLYMOUTH ROCK SQUAB CO 8 Friend Street, Boston, Mass.

ORNAMENTAL FENCING

Made of steel. Best workmanship. Handsomest in design. Perfect yard protection. LOWEST IN PRICE. Fully Guaranteed. Special prices to Churches and Cemeteries. Catalogue FREE.

KITSELMAN BROTHERS, 136 Oak St. Muncie, Indiana.

STARK TREES best by Test—78 Years

LARGEST Nursery. FRUIT BOOK free. We WANT MORE SALESMEN PAY CASH Weekly

STARK BROS, Louisiana, Mo.; Dansville, N. Y.; Ed

MISSOURI 5% INVESTMENTS.

Let me send you my book. Farm Mortgages. Unquestioned Security. 5 Wardell Bldg., Macon, Mo.

WM. R. COMPTON,

We Want You To Try Free

Every Skirt and Waist needs it. a complete outfit of

Minuet

Skirt and Waist Holde

Just four thin plates of aluminum—cannot rust or soil—two to sew on waist, two on skirt; have round, smooth edges—slip skirt pieces behind waist pieces and it is on. No teeth, hooks or projections, can be washed, passed through wringer and ironed over freely. Invisible, takes up no room; holds waist smooth—works as well with waist over skirt.

MINUETS are bought largely for Church and S.S. Bazars—the pretty package attracts attention and the many merits cause easy sale. Special terms when purchased for this purpose.

OUR OFFER—For your dealer's name and 4 cents postage, we will send you, requiring no money in advance, providing you wear them and show to three friends, an outfit consisting of six sets Minuet and twelve pairs waist pieces. Try them—if pleased pay us, if not return what you do not want. They cost only 10 cents per set. If you keep them, we will send a Beautiful Reproduction in Colors (no advertising 10 x 12 inches, suitable for framing, of the "Sunbonnet Baby" painting by Bertha L. Corbett. Miniature with free trial outfit. Better send 4 cents and your dealer's name today. Agents earn good money selling the Minuet. Ask for particulars.

WHEELER & BALDWIN, 610 Garden City Bldg., Chicago

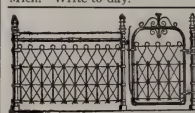
RHEUMATISM

Relieved by External Application

Draws out acid Poisons through the large pores of the feet. Summer is the best time to rid the system of Rheumatism. Michigan's great discovery for the relief of pain sent FREE on approval to everybody. You try it.

If you have rheumatic pains any time during the year, summer is the best time to rid your system of the cause, for your pores open much wider, and therefore the expulsion of foreign matter becomes much easier. Further, the fruit season usually fills one, who has rheumatic tendencies, with acids which cause serious trouble later on. Now, then, you must expel these acids. Send for a free trial pair of Magic Foot Drafts on approval. If you are satisfied with the good they do you, then pay One Dollar for them. If not keep your money.

Many thousands of letters of praise have been written by men and women who had faith or curiosity enough to try these Drafts and were benefited. Don't be incredulous. The only logical way to relieve rheumatism without taking injurious medicines is to draw out the poisons. Magic Foot Drafts will do this—they have done it for hundreds of thousands of people—why not for you? Booklet and Drafts sent promptly upon receipt of your name by the MAGIC FOOT DRAFT CO., RA 15 Oliver Building, Jackson, Mich. Write to-day.



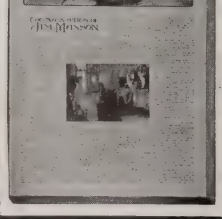
Dwiggins Wire Fence

—correct fence for lawns, parks, etc. Our Catalog shows a vast variety of the newest, most successful styles at 10c to 50c per foot. Write for it (FREE).

Dwiggins Wire Fence Co., 12 Dwiggins Av., Anderson, Ind

The Natural Body Brace advertised in this paper in the first issue of this month is a delightful, certain remedy for ailments peculiar to women and girls. It makes walking and work easy; gives good figure and light step. Write the Natural Body Brace Co., Box 171, Salina, Kan., for free illustrated book.

A WHOLE YEAR FOR 10 CENTS.



THE WOMAN'S FARM JOURNAL

is a beautifully illustrated monthly paper devoted to woman's interests. It is 13 years old and now has over 300,000 regular subscribers. In order to double our subscription we will send it a whole year for 10 cents if you also send names and addresses of four lady friends who you think would subscribe on same terms.

EACH NUMBER CONTAINS 96 COLUMNS OF

Splendid Stories; the Latest Styles and Hints on Dress; Lessons in Embroidery and Fancy Work, with original designs; hundreds of New Cooking Recipes; all about the Garden, Flowers, Chickens, Beekeeping, etc.

HOW TO MAKE POCKET-MONEY AT HOME.

Thousands of our readers make from $3 to $10 per week at home through The Woman's Farm Journal. Don't put off subscribing at this low price. Lay down this paper and do it right now. Tell your friends about this grand offer, or better still, show them this ad and have them also subscribe.

THE WOMAN'S FARM JOURNAL,
120 Journal Building, ST. LOUIS, MO.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
Published 52 Times a Year

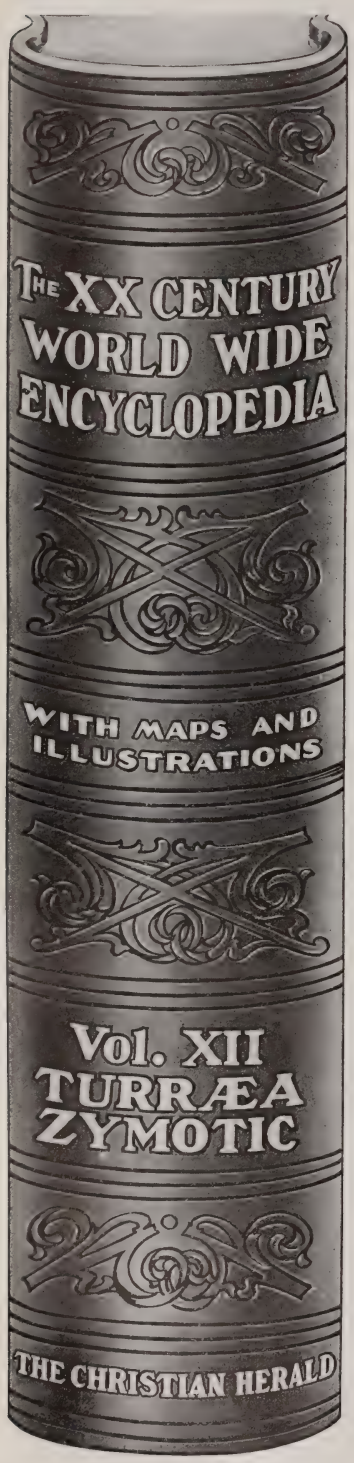
NEW YORK, JULY 22, 1903

VOL. 26—NO. 29. PRICE 5 CENTS
Offices: Bible House, New York

SEE PAGE 613

A WORLD-WIDE REVIVAL — Dr. Torrey Addressing a Great Open-Air Gospel Meeting in New Zealand

Our Great Encyclopedia Offer



12 VOLUMES THIS SIZE

A New Work Never Before Printed

Everything Absolutely New

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA is not an old work brought down to date by the patching up of old plates, but is an absolutely new production, just completed from new plates made from new type, and never before printed from. It contains the very latest information on every subject that can engage the human mind. Undertaken for the express purpose of providing the best Encyclopedia ever published, the Editor and his three hundred specialists have spared neither pains nor expense to carry out the trust with which they were commissioned.

The Best Work of its Kind

Each one of the 75,000 subjects handled have been carefully and scientifically considered, and treated as though the reputation of the entire work depended on that particular article. Hence we have a work more thorough, more comprehensive, more intelligible, even to the untutored mind, than dozens of more pretentious and infinitely more expensive productions.

Just Published A. D. 1903

As a Universal Educator, THE TWENTIETH CENTURY WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA is absolutely unsurpassed. It is a great compendium of all human knowledge, whether pertaining to History, Science, Art, Invention, Geography, Biography, Literature, Commerce, Manufacture, or any other subject. It takes in the whole range, and affords, in the most accessible shape, all the light available to the most careful research, and highest expert authority.

It is very important that the reader bear in mind that this is a New Work, and hence, though an Encyclopedia may already enrich his library, this latest production is nevertheless necessary, in order that he may be posted up to date. An old encyclopedia, set ten or twenty years ago, with a few statistics doctored up to make them current—though bound in genuine Turkey Morocco, or Russia—is still an old work of reference, and affords no later information on science, invention, wars, or the recent events of importance than was contained in the manuscript when first written, twenty or more years ago.

Twentieth Century Information

The Scholar, the Student, the Professional Man, the Banker, the Merchant, the Mechanic, the Laborer, the Housekeeper, the Mother, the Wife, require up-to-date information. The ideas of the last decade will not apply to-day. Things have changed, progress has been made, and an Encyclopedia of the Nineteenth Century is as antiquated in the Twentieth Century as the summer's fashions of 1880 differ from those of 1903.

Contains Most Recent Subjects

Just think of getting your information about Cuba, Philippines, Electricity, Motors, Automobiles, Klondike, South Africa, The Hague Tribunal, and other modern subjects, from a work compiled in 1880, or even before. Surely a few statistical alterations concerning Population, Exports, Imports, etc., will throw no additional light on current matters which interest the great human family far more than mere recent additions to Population, or immaterial changes in the extent of our Commerce. THE TWENTIETH CENTURY WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA is a work of To-day, and handles every subject from the view-point of 1903, and, indeed, many things look quite differently to us now than they did twenty years or more ago.

No Patched-Up Plates

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA throws a new light on the affairs of the world. It has a new view-point. The world has made wonderful progress in every direction. It does not stand still in the matters of Invention, Commerce, Art, Literature, Manufactures and Science, while statistics change, but its progress is in all directions, and some things that are perfection to-day were not even thought of ten years ago. Hence Encyclopedic knowledge is ever changing and ever advancing. We live in a busy, bustling, active age, and a year of the present is equal to a decade a quarter of a century ago. Surely the old Encyclopedias, with doctored statistics, do not and cannot satisfy the demand for up-to-date information.

Twelve Mammoth Volumes

The publishers of THE TWENTIETH CENTURY WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA realized this fact, and therefore they had a new work prepared, newly written, newly set, and newly printed. And it is this great work, the result of the most modern research, that we here offer in twelve mammoth volumes of nearly 700 pages each, with maps of every country and state, beautifully printed, and with many superb half-tone full page inserts, illustrating the progress of the world in all its various and exceedingly interesting phases, all attractively and substantially bound in high grade cloth and genuine gold.

Money Refunded if not Pleased

Please bear in mind that if you are not entirely pleased—yes delighted—with this latest and fullest encyclopedia, you may return it within ten days and get your money back. We have only one set for every one hundred subscribers, and only one price to each and all:

$13 if paid by cash accompanying order.
$14 if paid $2 down and $2 a month for six mos.
$15 if paid $1 down and $1 a month for 14 mos.

Everything Large and Clear

Remember that these are large volumes, that they are twelve in number, that they contain nearly 8,000 large pages, that the type used is large and clear, that the margins are wide, that they are beautifully and artistically bound, that they are safely and securely boxed, that they are put Free on board cars, and that the Purchaser Pays the Freight Charges.

The Greatest Opportunity Ever Offered

The set requires shelf-room thirty-three inches long, ten and a-half inches high, and weighs over forty pounds. This is your greatest opportunity. Embrace it to-day, for to-morrow may be too late. Money refunded if not entirely satisfied.

The Christian Herald Book Dept.

BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY

Send Full Shipping Directions with Order, and be sure to give your Freight Station

NEW YORK, JULY 22, 1903

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

A GROUP OF TEETOTALERS, OF FIFTY YEARS' STANDING, AT BIRMINGHAM, ENGLAND

The Story of John King, Father of Teetotalism

IN these days of notable temperance reunions, national and international, it is inspiring and instructive to look back at the modest beginnings of a movement which has now become world-wide. Only a few days ago, a unique celebration was held in Birmingham, England, by the British Temperance League, which assembled to commemorate its sixty-ninth year of consecutive service in the temperance cause. Of the two hundred and fifty delegates present, there were some who won special distinction, from the fact that they were total abstainers for over fifty years.

It is an open question whether the total abstinence idea first saw the light in 1831 or the year following. In 1808, a society was formed in Saratoga Co., N. Y., which seems to have been the first permanent organization, in modern times at least, founded for the purpose of promoting temperance. It was called the Union Temperate Society of Morean and Northumberland, and its members were pledged not to drink distilled spirits or wine, nor to offer them to others under a penalty of twenty-five cents. The penalty for being intoxicated was fifty cents. These matters now may have a somewhat absurd aspect, but in those days of universal drinking, the movement was a bold one, and doubtless caused much trouble and persecution to its founders. In 1813 the Massachusetts Society for the Suppression of Intemperance was formed in Boston, and in 1826 the American Temperance Society was established in the same city. In 1827 there were State societies in New Hampshire, Vermont, Pennsylvania, Virginia and Illinois, and 220 local societies there and elsewhere, with 30,000 members. In 1828, the first Women's Temperance Society had been founded in Ohio, and this was followed by similar societies in New York and Connecticut in 1829. Simultaneously temperance societies were organized in Scotland and Ireland in 1829, and one at Bradford, England, the next year. There is a record of the formation of a Total Abstinence Society in Paisley, Scotland, in 1832, but Preston, England, contests this, and claims to be the birthplace of the original total abstinence society, as well as of the till then unknown word "teetotal."

In a recent article in the Primitive Methodist Journal, the Rev. B. Whillock interestingly relates the story of John King, the first total abstainer in England. He was the son of a Quaker, and as he grew to manhood he gave way to drinking habits, acquired through bad companions. At that time certain friends of temperance in England, following suggestions from America, were advocating a moderation pledge, allowing the use in small quantities of fermented beverages. John King signed such a pledge, but it did not keep him sober. He soon became convinced that it was of little service. He went to Joseph Livsey, editor of the Preston Guardian, and a moral reformer, and he said to him, "I have found that merely signing against the use of spirits is little or no good, as the bulk of the people here seldom use spirits; they take beer and ale, and some get drunk on them. Now, Joseph, if thou wilt write me a pledge, to abstain from all kinds of intoxicating drinks, I will come to-morrow night and sign it." King came, and signed the total abstinence pledge from all intoxicating drinks. Then he said to Mr. Livsey, "I challenge thee to sign the same pledge thou hast written and I have signed!" For a time he hesitated, it seemed not only a new, but a very far-reaching pledge. King pressed him, with what he could say in its favor, so he added his name to the pledge, and afterwards said, "John, let us keep this matter quiet, for if this fact is made public some persons will think, and say 'we are extreme temperance fanatics.'" John replied, "If the Lord spares me until to-morrow night, I will crack in the cock-pit (a large public building, with galleries around it, from which people could look down to the pit and witness fights; but of later years it had been used for various public uses, including moderation temperance meetings)."

True to his promise, John King "cracked" at the cockpit, telling the crowd there assembled about the new pledge signed by Livsey and himself. He urged all present to follow this example, as it was the only safe kind of a pledge. Six men came forward and signed. One of the six was Richard Turner, a bright but uneducated man, and with a marked impediment in his speech. After he had signed, Turner, addressing the gathering, said, with much stammering, he wanted to tell his hearers that he and the others who had signed would not go half-way in abstinence, but would totally give it up. "We g-give it all up tee-tee-to-tally," he said to emphasize the fact. The audience smiled. They knew his meaning, and they recognized the fact that though the word "teetotal" was not to be found in any dictionary, it was a very good coinage.

"WE GIVE IT ALL UP TEE-TEE-TOTALLY," STAMMERED DICKY TURNER

Turner was afterward known as "Teetotal Dicky," and the word he coined found its way into the dictionaries next year (1832) and continues to this day. Turner became an energetic worker in the temperance cause, and when he died, a great public demonstration took place at his funeral. John King, once the slave of drink, rose to honor and recognition as the leader of a great army of abstainers. He, too, has now passed away, and his grave is at Southport, Lancashire, England.

In his reminiscences of King and Turner, the Rev. Mr. Whillock says: "John King in 1831, was chosen by Prince Albert, the husband of Queen Victoria, to lead the great demonstration of abstainers at the International Exhibition, in the Crystal Palace, Hyde Park. The man, who had been disinherited by his own father, because of dissipation, had become, through the signing of a radical pledge, a moral hero and the leader of a great cause. He received gold medals from the people of London, Manchester, India, and Ireland, commemorative of his pledge."

In the year 1870, King was the oldest station-master on any of the British railroads. He was a man full of the simple religious fervor of the Primitive Methodists. He lived to tell the story of his early life, his struggles against drink, and his final triumph, with God's help, by means of the pledge of total abstinence.

In the great progress that has been made in recent years by the temperance movement throughout the world, the achievements of the early pioneers, as John King and Turner and Livsey, had the courage to make a new departure, are apt to be forgotten. And there are few men who deserve more at the hands of all right-thinking, sober-minded people than John King, who showed to the world that the only way to be truly temperate was to abjure liquor absolutely, or as his friend Turner declared, tee-totally. That this was done at a time when drinking was a fashionable vice makes the act all the more notable and courageous.

The American Pulpit

THE SPIRIT OF CHRIST

A Sermon by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, D.D.

TEXT—ROMANS 8: 9: "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His"

THE text has two expressions—the Spirit of God, the Spirit of Christ. And one wonders at first what is the significance of this use of a second phrase. The change is certainly significant and suggestive. Both expressions refer to the same Person, but while the first reveals the Spirit as the one by whom man is indwelt, and so is lifted into a new sphere of life, the second phrase suggests the result which follows such an elevation. The spirit of God indwelling is unseen, but he produces in the spirit of man the Spirit of Christ, which is manifest. Thus the manifest Spirit of Christ produces, or rather proves, the unseen Spirit of God, and the absence of the Spirit of Christ proves the absence of the Spirit of God.

Herein, then, we have a twofold consideration this morning; first the Spirit of Christ as the type and test of character; secondly, the Spirit of God as the power by which this character is produced, maintained, manifest. The Spirit of Christ is the type and the test of character.

What Is Character?

It was Ralph Waldo Emerson, who once said: "Gentlemen, I cannot hear what you say, for listening to what you are." That is very often the case. Speech is constantly discounted by conduct, and profession is cancelled by the contradictory character that lies behind it. Character is the deepest fact of human life. There can be no final and satisfactory analysis of it; there can be no final and satisfactory statement of what character is. Let me repeat that it is the essential truth concerning a man.

The word means, as I need hardly stay to remind you, originally and simply an engraving, something written upon, carved into; and the man's character is the truth about the man written upon his personality, to be read constantly and clearly by God, to be deciphered slowly and blunderingly by his fellow-men, but it is a fact, the essential fact concerning a man. My character is not what I may want you to think of me, but what I am; my character is not the appearance that I may endeavor to keep up before my own family, but it is what I am in the hidden, inner, secret, actual facts of my being. When Pilate listened to the people who objected to the inscription that he had placed over the cross of Christ, he said to them, "What I have written I have written." And when Pilate uttered the words he said more than he knew, enunciated a philosophy far profounder than he himself at the moment understood. What a man has written he has written, and that which I have written in my life until this moment, is my own character; I have engraved it, and it cannot be obliterated.

How is character manifest? Not in words, nor in occasional deeds. The greatest saint of God may be occasionally heard saying things that are far from saintly, and the most corrupt sinner may utter speech that has upon it the appearance of saintliness. You do not know a man by his words nor by occasional deeds. The meanest man may give the largest amounts, and the man of deepest, truest philanthropy and generosity, may never be able to give anything. You cannot judge a man by the deeds, by the occasional deeds, that you know. Character can only be discovered fully, and finally, from a perfect understanding of the general set of the life. It is the force behind thought, speech, deed. It is the strange region out of which all other things proceed; and because it can only be perfectly known by a perfect understanding of this general set of the life, I repeat what I said at the beginning—character is known perfectly only to God; it is deciphered blunderingly by our fellow-men. Character is to be discovered when it is possible for us to discover a man's spirit, his tone, his temper.

The Test of Character

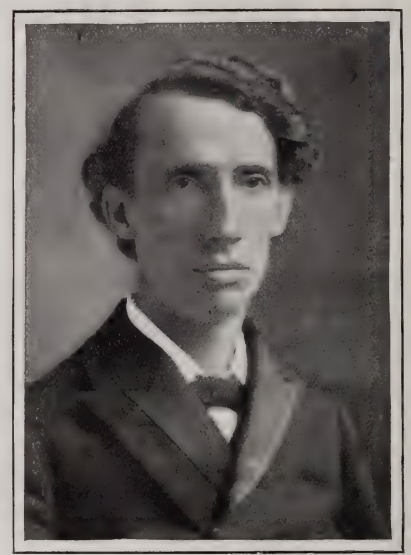
And now the Apostle says, summing up a great argument in that marvelous eighth chapter of the Romans, which is the chapter beginning with "no condemnation" and ending with "no separation"—he says, here is the final test of Christianity—if a man have not the spirit, the tone, the temper, the character of Christ, he is none of his. Not the words that I recite as a creed, not the service I render as a church member, these things do not prove my relation to Christ, but what I am in temper, in tone, in spirit, in character. "If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

There is no statement in all apostolic writings, I think, that is more fierce in the light it flashes upon our profession and our position as Christian men and women than this; and yet, my brethren, I am growingly convinced it is the one and final test both of our relationship to the Master and of the value of our service in the world—not your creed, not your habits, but your temper, your tone, your character, your spirit.

What is this Spirit of Christ? Of course, the question may be answered in a word, and that word will be the old familiar word, love. But to answer it in this word is almost to escape the point of the question. We are simply bound in attempting to answer the question to break the thought of love up, and notice how in the Master love expresses itself. If for a few moments we could look at Him, our blessed Lord, no longer at his deeds, no longer listening to his words, but from some point of vision; if we could watch Him as he moved along among men, if we could see Him in the varied and ever-varying circumstances of the busy thronging days of his life, and if we could see his spirit, his temper, his tone, we should begin to understand what is, indeed, the test of our relationship to Him.

What are the notes, I ask myself, of the Spirit of Christ? What are the facts that, woven into perfect warp and woof, make up the fine and delicate texture of his Spirit? I want to know these if I am to understand what my spirit is to be.

And I say the very first thing that I notice in watching the Christ and discovering what was the spirit of the Man Jesus is his simplicity, and then his serenity, and then his sympathy, and then his gentleness, and then his patience, and then his forgiveableness. I am perfectly sure you have thought of some other and you have said, "Surely he is going to mention that?" No, I cannot mention all. No one thinker in meditation upon the Spirit of Christ can discover all its glories. You will see a great many that I have not mentioned, but these have been borne in upon my spirit.



Copyright by E. Gutekunst

REV. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN

Now Preaching at the Fifth Ave., Presbyterian Church, New York

The essential facts about the character of the Spirit of Jesus—simplicity, serenity; the fact where an essential thing merges into a relative thing—sympathy; and then his attitude towards other people—gentleness, patience, forgiveableness, simplicity, that is, transparency, no cunning, no double dealing, or, to use the word in its very truest sense, no iniquity, no crookedness. Jesus had nothing to hide; he went quietly through all that wonderful life of his. As we read its story, the very first note always is that of simplicity. I look back at my Master, and wherever I meet Him, with the bairns or the apostles, on the mountain or in the valley, with one woman or a crowd, it was the same sweet, simple soul, transparent, never having to prepare for an occasion, always being ready in the transparency and simplicity of his spirit for everything that came.

Then notice next—and I am not at all sure, indeed I believe them to be closely connected—the serenity of Christ. Never perturbed, never characterized by feverishness. In the day of calamity he was the one kingly soul amid the unrest that surged and heaved around him. Mark the contrast quickly—Christ and Pilate, Christ and the High Priests, Christ and the shouting rabble; Pilate afraid of his life lest he should lose his position; the Priests, afraid for their office sake, lest the Christ should live; the people excited by any passing wave of emotion, ready to crown Him yesterday, to crucify Him to-day.

The one serene, quiet, strong, kingly, majestic figure is the figure of the Christ. And the serenity was the outcome of the simplicity. Look at Him again. Sympathy! That is love as an essence, the power going to other lives as an activity. Love is the power that enables you sometimes to make a pilgrimage outside the small circle of your own personality, and live in some one else's personality. That is sympathy. If I asked the majority of people for a definition of sympathy, I think I should obtain as an answer, "The sorrow for those who are in sorrow." That is a splendid half-definition. Sympathy is not only the power that makes it possible for you to weep with me, when I weep; it is the power that makes it possible for you to laugh with me, when I laugh. That is apostolic, that is Christian—"Weeping with those who weep, rejoicing with those who rejoice." I am not at all sure that the latter half is not the more difficult. The most ordinary people can occasionally weep with those who weep, but it takes a man of great heart, or a woman either, to rejoice with a man that is getting on a little faster than you are yourself. That is the supreme test. Sympathy, I say, is the power that enables persons occasionally to lift themselves out of the circle of their own personality, and live in some one else's, and feel with some one else. Sympathy!—bearing with. Now watch the loving Lord. How sympathetic! He was a child with the children; He was master of philosophy with teachers. He was a working man with working men; He had the mother heart when he talked to mothers. Your circumstance? That is his. Your pain? That is his. Your joy? That is his. Your shadow? He is in it. Your sunshine? Its light plays also on Him.

A Spirit of Gentleness

And then, what next? His gentleness. Said Dr Matheson, "We speak of the gentleness of the brook and it is a false figure. The brook has no gentleness the brook is beautiful, but not gentle; noisy, not gentle It laughs over the stones, and runs through its banks of moss and fern. While men may come, and men may go, the brook runs on forever. But it is making all the noise it can, and it is exerting all the force it can. You cannot get more force out of it than it is exerting as it runs. There is no gentleness in the brook. You may talk, if you will, of the gentleness of the mighty river the river that, if it once but breaks and bursts its banks would devastate the whole countryside, yet it quietly and gently carries its burden on its bosom, to the sea and you hardly know it is strong. That is gentleness.' Oh, the gentleness of Jesus! What said he? "Know ye not that I could ask My Father, and he could straightway give me ten legions of angels to fight my battles." All power behind Him, but he left it there and took his way, a perpetual outshining of gentleness power in check, held back. I leave it to your meditation, for no words of mine can perfectly explain the gentleness of Christ.

And then his patience. What it must have been for Jesus Christ to have endeavored to teach those disciples the things he wanted to teach them. Why, Jesus himself said of them, "O, fools! and slow of heart to believe.' and yet how patient he was with them, how he waited for them, how he accommodated his speech to their language, how he accommodated his steps to their goings! Oh, how patiently he bore with their lack of love and their lack of faith! With what exquisite plaintive pleading again and again he attempted to draw them out into some new line of consecration to him, and they almost invariably went back upon his teaching by endeavoring to discover from him which of their number was to have the place of authority in his kingdom And yet he never grew tired. He was the Teacher and they the disciples, and a wonderful fashion of teaching he had. They were so blind and so blundering—may I use the schoolmaster's word, so dense—and yet he always waited for them and led them. I do not know anything more beautiful in the New Testament than this.

Patient to the End

He is now dead, buried, risen, and an angel is giving a message to a woman, and the angel says: "Go, tell"—what? "His disciples." He is going on with this blessed patient teaching. He is not weary of them. He will still come to them and teach them line upon line and precept upon precept, here a little, and there a little. O, patient Son of God! No, this is not forceful enough. If you want to know how patient he is, look back over your own life, as I look back over mine. How I must have grieved him, how my folly, and my blindness, and my waywardness must have tried his heart He has been so patient. He has accommodated his goings to my footsteps. His great infinite speech of profound wisdom to my lisping alphabet. Go back, shall I? No, I will not go back an hour, he is doing it this morning. He has so much to say to me, and I am not able to bear it. Then he waits. The infinite Christ, limited by the capacity of a child, and patient through it all! May God forgive me for any lack of patience in the light of the patience of my Lord and Master.

And then his forgiveableness; who shall speak of that? That is a little word. If you want to know its meaning, you must put into the heart of it the Cross, the bloodshedding of the Son of God, the infinite mercy of the Almighty One. Forgiveness! When saw you Jesus angry because some one had wronged him? When did you hear a single word pass the lips of the Christ, a word of reproach, because some one had even misunderstood him? Never! His forgiveness of personal wrong was of such a nature that he never mentioned it but once, and that was when men were murdering him: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

Places of Test

My brethren, these are characteristics, these are phases, these are aspects. Can you doubt them for a single moment? Take them and weave them into a whole; then you begin to see the spirit of Christ, the temper of Christ, the love of Christ. What are the places where a man's spirit, or tone, or temper, is tested? There are certain facts that come to all of us in life that test us. Let me mention one or two of them. Adversity or prosperity. These are the things that test a man's spirit, his tone, his character. Again, obscurity or popularity. Again, defeat or victory. Now take this one man and look at him in adversity. He is in despair; he casts the shadow of his own despair upon all the lives that are round about him. Watch the same man in prosperity, and he becomes arrogant, overbearing, cruel. Take another man, and put him into like conditions. In adversity, he is patient, quiet, waiting. In prosperity, he becomes prodigal in his beneficence.

Look at this man in obscurity. What is the characteristic of his life? Bitterness. He has never had his chance in the world, nobody appreciates him. That is quite true, but not as he means it! He becomes cynical, hard, his spirit is being revealed by circumstances. Put that same man into a place of popularity, and what now? An overweening, overbearing, overmastering pride, that is more objectionable than the bitterness that characterized him in his obscurity. Take another man and put him in like circumstances in obscurity. What is the character, what is the tone, the spirit of the man? Sweetness, quiet, restful, tender, gentle. Tell him that the world has not learned to appreciate him, and he denies it, and cares not if God appreciates him. He will never sing anything about the flower wasting its sweetness on the desert air. Such nonsense! A flower never wasted its sweetness anywhere. Why should not the desert have some of the sweetness? God knows best! And if in the overruling of his great world he lets the bird drop a seed in the desert, and the seed blossoms, God gathers the fragrance; it is not wasted! This man knows it in his own life. Put that man into the place of popularity, and what then? Then his capacity flashes out as it never did before, and you see the breadth, and the power, and the greatness of the man in the very fact that the higher the place of his popularity, the simpler his habit and manner of life, and speech, and thought. These are the things that test a man's temper and tone.

Now, beloved, these are the phases that test our spirit, our temper, our tone. They do not make them, they reveal them. You cannot go from this church this morning and say, "Well, I am interested in that, I will see to it that when I am in adversity I will be patient, or in obscurity I will be sweet, or when defeated I will be a hero." You cannot do it. You will be then what you are now, and what you are now will but flash itself into light then. These things are the house-tops that reveal the inward facts concerning human life.

Christ Tested in Life

Now, reverently, and without attempting to dwell upon the points, how did the Man of Nazareth pass through these experiences?—for he went through them every one. In the whole of them the spirit of a great love was manifest, the spirit of a great conquest over consequences. With calm, quiet, tender, compassionate, strong, dignified manhood, he passed through them all.

Now hear me. The temper and the tone that I manifest under these circumstances, that you manifest under these circumstances, proves your relation to Christ. Hear it again: "If any man hath not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." What matters supremely? What is the matter of supreme moment in my life and in yours? My spirit, not orthodoxy of creed, not the habits of life, but the temper, the tone, the spirit of the man. I know persons who are severely orthodox, and the temper in which they prosecute their orthodoxy makes it every time. Now it is that spirit of criticism, that spirit of attempting to interfere with the business of other people, that spirit that wants to peep and pry into another one's life, and get upon it such an embargo that has no room in it for a Christ-like or an anti-Christian spirit. So my brethren, there must be the spirit of Christ, the temper of Christ,

The Tone of Christ

Take another simple illustration. Here is a man who tells me he believes in temperance. He does in everything, except in total abstinence, and yet he is a man who is utterly and absolutely intemperate in spirit in his dealing with those who do not agree with his opinions. And if there be any meaning in the Christian measure, in the Christian test, in the Christian ministry, in the Christian salvation, it is that men shall be enabled to do right things in a right spirit. The supreme importance in your life and in mine is what my temper is, the tone is, my spirit is. It is very possible to be attempting to do excellent work in such a spirit that we pull down instead of build up, destroy instead of create.

But how am I to get this spirit of the Christ? Ah, do not fear. "Ye are not in the flesh but in the spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you."

I may put the last thought into a sentence. I pray you attempt to correct the circumference of your life from the centre; do not attempt to correct the centre from the circumference—that is, do not attempt to correct your spirit by altering your habits. Correct your habits by an alteration of the spirit. And how is the spirit to be altered? Only, to repeat the message delivered again and again, by the true, whole-hearted, unquestioning abandonment of your whole being to the Spirit of God will it be possible for you to have the Spirit of Christ.

Let your life be yielded to that Spirit, and though wrought into the very warp and woof of your character is that which is un-Christly and unlovely and unbeautiful, the Spirit of God will subdue these things, and with the touch of an infinite power upon your spirit will transmute the base into the better, the dross into the gold, the spirit all steeped in flesh to the spirit all aflame with Christ. May it be so for you and for me!

MISSIONARIES ON A TRIP TO VILLAGES NEAR TANGIER

MISSIONARY NOTES FROM MOORISH BATTLEFIELDS

TANGIER, MOROCCO, N. AFRICA, June 18.

WE all enjoy reading THE CHRISTIAN HERALD here. It helps us to come in touch with the outside world, even though we are hidden away in this dark land among a barbarous people.

Everything is in a very disturbed state, and for ten days or more the natives have been celebrating the muhed feast, including Mohammed's birthday and also the annual time of circumcision. Threats have been made that during the feast, or immediately afterward, there would be a general insurrection. It has been necessary for the Sultan to collect a large army of the more loyal tribes and station them at every important point. He notified the different consulates to warn Europeans not to go out on the roads or streets of the cities, on the principal days of the feast. Monday and Tuesday of this week were their great days and all were armed with guns. They dance, jump and scream in companies, and thirty or forty fire at once. This they call "powder play," but it could easily be turned to a general massacre of all the Christians. The soldiers at the garrison are all well armed, and their belts full of cartridges, speak warning words to troublesome Moors. A few days ago, a little difficulty arose between the captain of the force and the Governor of Tangier. It seemed as though it would become quite serious. While they talked loudly and angrily, the soldiers on duty separated, and began loading their rifles preparatory to an attack. The Jews and the peaceable natives were frightened, and ran to their houses and barricaded the doors. It looked for a while like civil war; but the two officials finally came to an agreement, and all was quiet again between the two preservers of public order.

For three weeks a large camp of the Sultan's irregulars has been stationed twelve miles from here, among the Fah's tribe, helping themselves to chickens, sheep, and whatever else they could take, until last Monday night, when they made an attack, and burnt up one village, killing and destroying generally. They were soon attacked in turn, however, and several of them were killed and others taken prisoners. Mr. Harris, the Times correspondent, who happened to be in the camp, was taken among the prisoners.

Our native helpers are doing a good work, visiting among the soldiers. For several days they preached and read in the Mulhalla. The governor of the camp got suspicious of them, and had them brought before him and he charged them with being spies from Bu-Hamara (the Pretender). They were stripped of all wearing apparel and searched, but no letters were found, and they were turned loose, after the governor was assured that they were only visitors or teachers. We indeed, need at this time the prayers of the praying people.

Yours for Morocco's lost,
HARRY CURRALL.

* * *

Missionary Fred Weiss, the co-worker and associate of Missionary Currall, and who is now in the United States on a brief visit, sends the following to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

"I am acquainted with a number of young men and women who are ready to go to North Africa to labor for Christ. If there is a reader of your paper willing to support a missionary there, they could do so, and thus become a missionary worker by proxy. A person who labors at home to support a worker in the field, is just as truly a missionary as the one who represents him on the foreign field. It costs $100 to pay the passage to Africa, and $300 to support either a lady or gentleman there for a year. I shall be glad to hear from any individual, church or young people's society, wishing to undertake the support of a missionary, and will answer any further questions they desire to ask. FRED WEISS."

Moorish Rebels Win

According to cable advices from Tangier, the Moorish rebels under Abu Hamara, the Pretender, have won a great victory over the Sultan's forces. News of the progress of the rebellion has appeared in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from time to time, in letters from the Rev. Fred Weiss, missionary in Tangier. Since the rebellion began, one of the most active in the campaign against the rebels has been El Mequelley, the Sultan's Minister of War. It was El Mequelley who was sent to the coronation of King Edward. He is said to have been killed in the recent battle. The rebellion in Morocco is said to have been caused by the Sultan being too progressive.

AMERICAN AND ENGLISH MISSIONARIES IN MOROCCO

Our Gospel Crusade in the Philippines

ALL who have the spiritual redemption of the Philippines at heart, and more particularly those readers of this journal who have aided in supplying the resources for the evangelistic crusade in the islands, under the personal leadership of Evangelist Nicolas Zamora, "the Filipino Apostle," will be greatly pleased and encouraged by the report of Pastor Zamora's labors, which we print below. He writes:

On March 23, 1902, we transferred the place of service of the Central Church from the place of its birth, 62 Plaza de Goiti, Santa Cruz district, Manila, where we had been worshiping since the year 1899, to the Filipino Theatre. We remained in this building until October 5, 1902, when we transferred to the Theatro Libertad, in the same district of Santa Cruz. The services are very full of life.

Every Sunday I have held religious services in the four barrios of Malabon, Julong Duhat, Tangos, Tonsuya, and Tinajeros. Recently, besides these, several new services have been commenced, at the request of the people of this pueblo. At present there are in Malabon three Methodist Episcopal chapels, one in Julong Duhat, another in Tonsuya, and the third in Tinajeros. In Tangos, Navotas, our Methodist members are gathering funds for the building of a chapel. Sundays, therefore, I have service at eight in the morning at the chapel in Julong Duhat. At 10.30 I am at Tangos, Navotas. Often in the afternoon I am at Tonsuya. I am often at Tinajeros on Sunday mornings, trying to return to Manila at twelve or one o'clock, in order that I may hold the service in the Central Filipino Church. Mondays, at five in the afternoon, services are held in Bancusay, Tondo. Since June of 1902, I have entrusted this service to the local preacher, Don Jose Bautista, although I preach there occasionally. At the commencement of the year the members in Bancusay erected a new chapel, fronting upon Calle Real of the barrio.

In January, 1902, I went to Hagonoy to preach. For four days I preached in the morning and evening in its barrios. More than three hundred persons were present at each service. On February 9, 1902, services were begun at San Juan de Juanes, in the San Sebastian District of Manila, for Thursdays, at eight in the evening. More than two hundred people attended these services. On the 16th of the same month I made my first visit to the pueblo of Guguinto, Bulacan Province. Here more than two hundred persons, mainly men, very few women coming, were in attendance. August 16, 1902, in the evening, the Methodist Episcopal Chapel was opened in Lecheros, Tondo, in the presence of three hundred people. On the twenty-fourth of the same month it was my privilege to be present at the dedication of the chapel in the barrio of Atlag, Malolos. The founder of this church was Donna Narziza Dimagiba. Sister Dimagiba was converted to the Gospel of our Lord through one of my sermons, preached in the chapel at Bancusay, Tondo, in November, 1901. When she returned to her own pueblo she preached to her townspeople of Christ, until she gathered together enough to be able to establish a church. About five hundred people from different pueblos were present at this dedication; sixty were baptized, and one hundred partook of the communion.

A GROUP OF TAGALAS AT WORK IN A MANILA FACTORY

On June 1, 1902, I went to Caloocan, to preach the Gospel there for the first time. As I was about to conclude my sermon to the one hundred and fifty listeners in the theatre, the priest, Valentino Tangog, entered, took hold of my coat, and showed his desire for a discussion. I finished my sermon, then began a discussion on the inutility of prayers to the saints (a very essential doctrine to the Romanists), accompanying my arguments with Bible references. The priest was unable to reply. While he doubted the correctness of my Bible (printed without the approval of a Roman bishop), he was unable to cite references to his own, which justified invocation to the saints. After a general discussion, in response to his statement that up to the present he did not know of one Protestant saint, I asked him who declared a man to be a saint after his death. His answer was: "The Pope." I asked if during the three hundred and seventy years in which we had been under the spiritual direction of the friars and the Roman clergy, he had heard of the canonization of one Filipino saint. There was no reply. I told the listeners that it was necessary to have thousands of pesos, in order that the Pope should canonize a dead man as a saint. I also told them that each Roman sect had its own saints; if Dominicans, Dominican saints were to be seen in the churches; if Augustinians, Augustinians; Jesuits, Jesuits, etc. The people then laughed at him and clapped their hands. After our discussion, I promised to show him on the following Sunday all of my Bibles—translations by Padre Scio, Torres Amat, the Vulgate, and the Hebrew and Greek. The following Sunday, I took them with me. More than two thousand persons, who had heard of the discussion, were waiting. We waited for the priest for hours, but he did not leave his convent. Then, accompanied by a great number of people, I went to the convent and showed him the Bibles, renewing our discussion, by showing the annotations of Padre Scio in his Bible, in regard to the inutility of prayer to the saints. He was unable to reply in any other way than by a blow directed at my face, but which I was enabled to escape. Then all present joined in the shout, "Viva Cristo y su Angelio!" Many of those present desired to avenge the blow; but thanks to the precaution of Senor Valentino in retiring to his room, trouble was averted. The texts cited in regard to the invocation of the saints are: John 4:6, 16; 23:6, 37; I. John 2:1; Matt. 11:28 and I. Tim. 2:5. At present, services are often held on Sunday afternoons at Caloocan, with an attendance of about three hundred persons.

During my ministry in Malabon, 1st: On January 12, 1902, our members in Tonsuyo were able to build a chapel; 2d: on August 3d, our brother Simeon Blas, ordered the construction, at his own expense, of the chapel in his barrio of Julong Duhat; 3d: in Tangos, the members are gathering funds for the construction of a chapel; 4th: Brother Felipe Antonio ordered the construction of a chapel in the barrio of Tinajeros, at his own expense.

January 25, 1903, I received a letter from Senor Louis Klopsch, proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, of New York, enclosing a check for one hundred and fifty dollars, gold, for the salary of two Filipino evengelists, for three months, to be under my direction. Don Jose Bautista, and Seriliano Castro, have been selected to take up this work, Senor Klopsch promising to support them for the current year. At present Sr. Castro is in Malolos, and Sr. Bautista is holding service in Manila, and Malabon, although it is expected that he will soon be sent out into the provinces.

NICOLAS ZAMORA.

CHINESE WELCOME OUR RELIEF FLEET

It Reached Kwangsi at a Critical Time—50,000 Chinese Fed by American Gifts

GOOD news comes from Canton by the cable that the famine in Kwangsi is diminishing and the worst is over. This promising outlook is due in a large measure to the prompt steps taken by U. S. Consul-General McWade at Canton, to whose appeals for help THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its readers have liberally responded. The story of the struggle with the famine is told in letters from Mr. McWade to the State Department in Washington. Writing from Canton, May 21st, to Assistant Secretary of State, Loomis, the Consul-General says:

On April 16th, 1903, I sent from Canton three of the largest cargo junks, loaded with 1,800 piculs of rice, to the famine-stricken districts. So as to save time, H. E. Te Sou, Viceroy of the two Kwangs, generously furnished a steam launch to tow each junk. The Rev. A. J. Fischer, an American Presbyterian Missionary, Mr. Chan Key Kin, an American citizen and a partner of the American Chinese Bank of Wah Shuck & Co., Canton, and William Lane O'Neill, Esq., a member of the Bar, of Washington, New York, and Manila, accompanied the launches to help the Revs. John E. Fee and Henry Zehr, of the American Christian Missionary Alliance, the Rev. Dr. H. K. Shumaker, of the American United Brethren Mission, and the Revs. Goff and Anderson, of the English Wesleyan Mission, in the difficult and responsible work of distribution. As Kwaiping and nearby towns and villages are in more complete touch with Canton and Hong Kong, their inhabitants are necessarily the first to receive relief and continue to do so, whilst thousands of unfortunate natives, residents in the interior and more remote districts are dying almost by thousands, of starvation, I instructed our Relief Expedition to proceed direct to the latter, and give succor to those most in distress. The U. S. S. Callao, Lieutenant E. A. Anderson, commanding, escorted the Relief Expedition to protect its members and the cargoes of rice from the attacks of pirates, who infest the West River in large numbers.

From all parts of the two Kwangs, come the grateful thanks of the natives for the big-hearted charity of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, of New York, and those who responded so substantially to its appeal. Everywhere the American people are spoken of as friends of China, and this act of charity is mentioned as "another strong proof of the friendship of the great American nation." Personally, sir, I thank you most sincerely, for your considerate and generous courtesy in placing before our people my appeal for help for the starving and distressed. To the newspapers which published the appeal, to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and to the contributors to the relief fund, I am as profoundly grateful, as are those whose lives they have saved.

In a later communication, dated May 25, Consul-General McWade writes:

I have the honor to enclose three reports, regarding the conveyance of rice to the stricken districts. Two of the reports are presented by Lieutenant E. A. Anderson, commanding, and one by Mr. F. W. Sterling, midshipman and executive officer of the U. S. S. Callao.

I am sure that you, as well as the charitable who contributed to the Relief Fund, will learn with pleasurable satisfaction that the rice and maize which I bought and forwarded with their donations will feed 30,000 of the starving natives for forty-eight days, and that when the new depots for distribution are opened, at least 50,000 natives will obtain temporary relief.

I have the honor again to record the meritorious services of Mr. F. W. Sterling, the midshipman and executive officer of the U. S. S. Callao, through whose vigilance and exertions the rice was preserved intact from pirates, etc. Lieutenant Anderson's escort was absolutely necessary and characteristically carried out. I respectfully ask you to recommend both of these gentlemen to the courteous attention of the Honorable Secretary of the Navy.

Lieutenant Anderson's letter says:

I took the three lighters in tow of the Callao, making the launches fast alongside each of them. In this order we proceeded up the river, anchoring when it became too dark to navigate, and getting under way at early daylight. The launches were ordered to cast off at night and the lighters rode astern of the Callao, an armed guard of four men being placed on the stern lighter and a watch being kept on the Callao. No one was permitted to leave either the launches or lighters while at anchor. On arrival at Wuchau, I reported to the missionaries in charge of the distribution of the food supply and, at their request, kept the lighters riding astern of the Callao, with an armed guard at night, until they were ready to proceed further up the river. The depth of water was not sufficient to permit the Callao to proceed above Wuchau, or I should have towed these lighters to their destination.

Lieutenant Anderson further writes:

From what I could learn from the missionaries, the condition in the famine-stricken districts must be horrible in the extreme. Husbands are selling their wives and children into slavery and prostitution, to avoid starvation. Heartrending scenes are witnessed on the boats, where mothers and children are separated by different purchasers. In some cases, wives have even sold themselves. It is no uncommon occurrence to have these wretched creatures die after receiving food, because they were too weak to prepare it for eating.

I was told by Mr. Hess, the chief missionary at Wuchau, that the magistrate at that place had ordered the execution of one hundred and forty prisoners in the local jail, on the plea that rice was too scarce and expensive to continue to feed them. Not one of these wretches had been convicted of a capital crime.

On the basis of the amount of rice served out per diem, I have, with the assistance of Mr. Hess, calculated that the rice you sent will feed 30,000 persons for forty-eight days. It is the intention to open new depots for the distribution of food, and it is thought that temporary relief will be afforded to at least 50,000 persons by the cargo you sent.

Consul-General McWade has also forwarded reports from B. C. Randall, of Wuchow, Rev. H. K. Shumaker, of Kwai Ping, and others. The latter writes:

On the day of my arrival at Kwai Ping, the relief station was transferred to a large Confucian temple. The local mandarin has granted us all possible help. Our present method of work is to distribute to men and women on separate days. We require a physical examination at the entrance. Those passed are arranged in stalls, from whence they are regularly dismissed to a point where another examination is made, and all the needy ones are given checks, which call for twelve, twenty-four ounces of rice, as is deemed necessary by condition of applicant. Upon presentation of checks the rice is dispensed, and the people carry it home. We are sustaining about ten thousand females and six thousand males.

As the poor people are gradually using up their resources, the number of the destitute gradually increases, and is bound to continue so to do until harvest time. Death from want is all about us, and I have myself seen bodies marked by the cannibal's knife. Heartrending tales of starvation and death come from many districts. One small market town has just been reported, in which 9,000 people are dying for lack of food, and rice is at that place 30 cents per catty.

$10,000 More for Chinese Relief

In view of the renewed appeals cabled by Consul-General McWade, from Canton, in behalf of the famine sufferers in Kwangsi province, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has made an additional contribution of $10,000 to the relief work in that province, making a total of $25,000 sent to Kwangsi by this journal, up to the present time. In acknowledging receipt of the latest remittance (which, like the others, was forwarded through the State Department in Washington), Acting Secretary Loomis writes to Dr. Klopsch, as follows:

"I beg leave to thank you for this handsome additional contribution to the relief of this stricken people, and it gives me very great pleasure to inform you that I have promptly forwarded the money to Consul-General McWade, at Canton, for distribution. FRANCIS B. LOOMIS, Acting Sec'y."

OUR CHILDREN'S "GARDEN OF EDEN"

A Beautiful and Sympathetic Picture of Lovely Mont-Lawn, and its Happy Tenement Waifs

NATURE has sent forth in unusual abundance the summer luxuriance of flowers and foliage at Mont-Lawn, and the great sweltering city is still sending us its troops of little white-faced tenement children to enjoy this beautiful profusion. In eager, wondering groups, they run about, their laughter echoing merrily over the whole country-side.

Although the "Glorious Fourth" is now past and gone, the events of that memorable day are still discussed by the children. They recall every incident of the celebration, and live the day over again, in imagination. They remind each other how, instead of having Easter bonnets, they made themselves Fourth of July bonnets. While one group was making the three-cornered hats, another was cutting strips of red, white and blue, and still another pasting these strips on the hats. And how pretty the bonnets looked, too. Then there are the memories of the ice-cream and firecrackers, and the recollection of a burst of light and noise, and music and laughter, and fast races and prizes, and no end of games and good things. They forget no single incident of the day, from the early flag-raising to the last firecracker at night. They recall enthusiastically the march into the big tent, led by the Abigail Kindergarten Band playing national airs, and the sitting down to that glorious dinner—all for the children. They remember with smiles how the tiny drum-major of the band walked so proudly and swung his baton so high that his big helmet tumbled off. Then there was the bean-hunt, Dr. Klopsch himself throwing the beans and giving out the prizes to the lucky boys and girls.

All these, and many more incidents of that red-letter day are unforgotten; the patriotic songs and speeches in the little chapel, where the Rev. Dr. George, of Kansas City; Rev. Mr. Iglehart, of Peekskill; Rev. Mr. Meed, of New York; Mr. Harry Steel Morrison, the "boy traveler," each of whom gave the little tenement boys and girls much good, wholesome advice. They greatly enjoyed too, the sweet singing of Miss Grace Hildebrand, "The Gospel Nightingale."

Nature has her own fireworks, these warm summer evenings, at Mont-Lawn. On one occasion, lately, a wee city maid in one of the dormitories, told her teacher that "she couldn't sleep, because there was something in her room that made a light, every once in a while." A little boy who heard her, replied in a superior tone, "Oh, I know what that was; it was a lightning bug!"

One of the most pleasing descriptions of Mont-Lawn is that written by Mary Sargent Hopkins in a recent issue of The Ladies' World. The writer says:

"In a most beautiful spot among the green hills standing guard over the Hudson River lies the children's 'Garden of Eden.' Here every summer, for the past nine years, thousands of poor little city waifs have had a taste of what must have been to them like a little bit of heaven dropped down from the skies. Here they gather, from hot, stifling tenements and dark, vile-smelling alleyways, and for the first time in their lives know what it is to run about on soft green turf and gather blossoms from the flower-studded fields.

"Here, after a day spent in an out-of-doors existence, of which they had never dreamed, they romp and play, the games and pastimes interspersed by three good, wholesome meals, partaken of under the big tent, where two hundred unite in singing their thanks before sitting down to the well-spread tables. All around beautiful trees wave, and flowers nod their scented heads; the song of bird and hum of insect soothe tired little brains accustomed all their lives to the incessant clamor of the city streets.

"Mont-Lawn, as this vacation home is called, is a charity, supported in the beginning by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and is the outcome of the efforts of Louis Klopsch, whose charitable work, especially among poor children, is well known all over the country. Ten years ago, during a very hard winter in New York, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD established soup kitchens, where the wretched poor who had not a penny were given food. After the winter was over there still remained a sum of money in the treasury, and Mr. Klopsch, with the help of others he had interested in the work, opened a home at Nyack-on-the-Hudson. Here groups of poor children can have an outing for at least ten days during the heated season, when there is so much suffering and many deaths among the children in the crowded 'East Side' and other localities, where they are herded in such numbers as to make decent living, much less health, impossible.

"Starting with one house, beautifully situated among the green hills overlooking the river, the home could accommodate comparatively few children. Now, with outlying cottages, there is room for two hundred, coming and going in batches. They are gathered up by men and women, who go through the slums taking those who, in their best judgment, are entitled to the help. Some poor little creatures—little child mothers they are called, who spend all their time caring for their smaller brothers and sisters—are taken with their little charges up to this beautiful home, where all day long they live out-of-doors, and at night they sleep in dear little white beds, the like of which they have never looked upon before.

"Their delight with everything is unbounded; they run and jump, and 'scup' this being a Dutch word for swing, they play games, march and sing. The girls gather in groups, with the ever-present crochet, for it is a characteristic of the east-side children that, though they may be clothed in little else than a coat of dirt, they find some way of obtaining a crochet hook and a spool of thread, and it is wonderful to watch their fingers fly, in the making of quite intricate patterns of lace and 'tidies.' But how happy the children are, whatever they are doing, and they give their teachers very little trouble; the great outdoors seems to grant them a gentleness which manifests itself in whatever way they are amusing themselves, and when the day is done they are all tired and ready to go to bed, awakening early on the morrow to another day in this enchanted land.

"During the day and night I spent there, I saw many things that made me glad—and, alas! much to make one's heart ache. Little wistful faces would look up at me as I paused before a group of boys and girls, some of whom could not speak more than a word or two of English. One little Syrian, of whom I was particularly interested, stood apart from the others, solemnly watching them at their play. I took her by the hand, and going upon the wide veranda, seated myself in a big rocking-chair. Taking the forlorn bit of humanity in my arms (she seemed about six years of age), I found that she was very gentle and could understand English a little. She told me her name was Mary. She lay a long time very still, and I thought she was dozing; it was near sunset, and the air so soft and balmy, I was glad if it would lull her to sleep. The little curly head nestled against me, and the long, black lashes drooped over the olive cheek, when suddenly she looked up, without moving, a glance that showed me she was far from sleeping. 'What do you want, Mary?' I asked. She answered only one word—'Mamma'—but it was enough to show that, with the beauty all around her and kindness on every hand, she still longed for the only one in the world who was really mother.

"Saturday afternoons, Mr. Klopsch goes up to Mont-Lawn, and then the out-door games begin in earnest—the 'bean game,' foot races and various other things—which this man of far-reaching interests seems to enjoy as much as if he were one of the little ones. I could not help thinking, and repeating over and over, 'Except ye become as little children.'

"And how the children love the man! When it came time for him to go they hung up and gave him three rousing cheers; then, after watching him as far down the road as they could see and waving their handkerchiefs very suddenly, with one mind scampered to the high platform at the other side of the house (their outdoor dining-room) and waited, anxiously watching a turn in the road, to ride from this point down the mountain side. When the carriage came in sight, more than a mile away, such a cheer as went up from two hundred happy little ones, and such frantic waving of handkerchiefs! And until another turn hid the carriage there was an answering wave of the white signal of love.

A FLAG SALUTE, TO THE MUSIC OF THE BAND

THE GIRLS' FOOT-RACE—WAITING FOR THE SIGNAL

"One of the charmed hours is 'bedtime' at Mont-Lawn. Some of the children are so full of play that they barely want to go to bed, while others are nodding like drowsy poppies; but soon all are ready for Slumberland; then quiet comes, and 'teacher' leads in the simple 'Our Father.' Then they join in their evensong, and sometimes people driving along the mountain road stop to listen to the sweet, childish voices, blending in words of praise and thanksgiving."

Among the hundreds of little ones taken up to our Children's Home during the present month, were eighteen Finnish and Swedish children, gathered by Pastor Blomgren, of the Finnish Church in Harlem. These fair haired, blue-eyed wee folks from the Northland were as bright and happy as any. No one, to look upon their winsome, smiling faces, would have thought that they had only lately come from a land of hunger and suffering. Side by side with the little Finlanders was a group of olive skinned children from Cuba. They, like the little Finns, had come through the fires of fierce tribulation, and it was surely a kindly providence that brought them all together so happily at our Children's Home, where poor little waifs of almost every nationality have at different times found shelter and kind friends.

A Pretty Gift from "Little Sunbeams"

LAKEWOOD, N. J., July 2, 1903.

Dear "Christian Herald":—The Sunbeam Society, of Lakewood composed of little girls from eleven to thirteen years of age, who sent $25 last year to the Fresh Air Fund, are glad to tell you that by the help of their friends they can send $50 (one hundred and five dollars) this year. We want to send as many of the most needy as you can. We would like to make a happy spot in some crippled children's lives.

HELEN [illegible],
Secretary of the Sunbeam Society of Lakewood, N. J.

All contributions in aid of our Fresh Air Home will be acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, ASSOCIATE EDITOR — LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor — G. H. SANDISON, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscriptions.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Prayer in Revival

FEW records of great spiritual awakenings, in modern times at least, possess a deeper interest for the lovers of Gospel truth, than the remarkable story from the pen of Dr. R. A. Torrey, which appears in this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Professor Torrey seems to have been specially chosen for a work as broad and far-reaching, as it was unexpected and surprising in its international development, and which may well be regarded as a marvelous demonstration of divine grace.

That the movement in Australia, New Zealand, and the United Kingdom, was preceded by weeks and months of earnest, believing prayer, is most significant. In those weeks, the throne was importuned daily, nightly, hourly. Home meetings, cottage meetings, church meetings, workshop meetings—all for prayer that God would touch the hearts of men and win them to himself. Then, in His own marvelous and mysterious way, the sudden fruitage came. Hundreds of earnest home-workers had planted and watered the field, but it was reserved for other workers from a far distant land, to put in the sickle and reap the glorious harvest. How the sheaves fell to their labor, Dr. Torrey's story tells us. In one city 1,500 confess Christ; in another, 2,000; in a third, 2,700, and so on all through the field. In a single month, over 8,600 made public confession in one Australian city. Two thousand won in a twelve-day assault upon an infidel stronghold; in some cities, all the visible powers of sin giving way before the Gospel proclamation; drunkards, agnostics, criminals, sceptics, and sinners of every kind and degree, swept in with the rest, at every cast of the Gospel net. But it is essential to note that in every place, wherever a spiritual triumph was won, there had been weeks and months of preparatory prayer.

Was there ever a stronger or more convincing demonstration of the efficacy of prayer to accomplish results than this? If in a few corners of the world, remotely separated from each other, the prayers of little bands of believers, offered up in Christ's name, are answered with such showers of blessing, what would follow were the Christian people of every land to unite in appeal to the Throne with a common object? When the Church of Christ throughout the world realizes, as it eventually will realize, that prayer is the most potent weapon in the spiritual armory, it will then be able to accomplish its work here with a fulness and a consecration heretofore unattainable. In every emergency, whether it be the averting of war, the softening of the hard heart of a ruler toward an oppressed people, the staying of plague or famine, the conversion of a community or a nation—these, and every similar problem, seemingly unsolvable by human effort, will be carried on the wings of prayer to the prayer-hearing and answering Father, who is ever ready to give ear to the petitions of his children.

"The Earth Is Good Enough for Me"

IT is very beautiful when you come to see it truly—that lily of the field. But whence is the beauty and glory in which it is arrayed? The answer is simple—it is the equal product of the earth and the heavens. Round its roots is what the children call dirt—just a rough, dark substance that soils the fingers; that is all you see there. But overhead is the sky, with its light, and the blue air, and the soft dews; and the beauty of the lily is something in which heaven as well as earth has a part. The lily needs more than earth; it needs sky.

That is a parable homely enough, but it is not one that we need to learn? How many people are trying to achieve moral beauty without a sky—without a heavenward outlook! They say, "The earth is good enough for me; life and love are enough; what do I want with heaven?"

There was a man who had a pet eagle, which had been caught when very young, and brought up like a domestic fowl. After some years, the owner, who was about to leave home for a long absence, decided to give the eagle its freedom. He brought it out of the enclosure and turned it loose. It walked about quietly and seemed to have no thought of flying away. The man was disappointed. He took up the great bird and set it on the garden wall. It stood there for a few moments, and then looked up toward the sky. Suddenly it seemed to remember that it was an eagle, whose home was amid the cliffs and the crags. It lifted one wing, then the other—a moment more and it was gone, soaring away into the blue sky.

Ah, what a desecration of life it is to live in the dust when we were created for the heights, noble and divine! Let us lift up our eyes to the hills. We were made for God; we were made to fly. Earth cannot make you or me a perfect man. We must enlist the heavens. There is no beauty without the upward look; no fine achievement of character without the sense of God; the choice of his light and his home.

The Opium Bribe

STRONG efforts are being made by Christian men to prevent a most startling extension of the principle of the liquor traffic, to the traffic in opium in the Philippines. There are speculators who appear to think that, as an income for public purposes is derived in the great majority of our States from the traffic in intoxicating liquors, there would be no inconsistency in licensing men to sell opium to the inhabitants of the islands. So large is the profit on the drug, and so much of it might be sold, that one speculator offers to pay half a million dollars for the privilege of exclusive control of the market. The Philippine Commission has his offer, and probably others, under consideration. We most sincerely hope that all such offers will be rejected. The very fact that they have been made, reveals a grave situation. It shows the existence of a habit which, if extended, must inevitably menace the welfare of the islands. That it would be extended very widely if the Government accepted the half million dollars and granted the monopoly, there can be no doubt. The holder of the monopoly would want to sell all he could, in order to recoup himself and secure a margin of profit. Nor could the Government, having accepted his money, consistently curtail his effort to make the speculation a success. It would practically be a partner in the speculation, though being saved from risk by receiving its share of the profits in advance. Well may we say, "My soul come not thou into such company."

We are glad to see that Bishop Thoburn, of India, who has seen much of the evil of the traffic, has waited on Secretary Root, and urged him to use his influence with the Philippine Commission against the proposed bargain. He advises, with good reason, that the Commission, so far from doing anything which would endorse the traffic, or participate in its profits, should seek a means of restricting it. This might easily be done by prohibiting any one but a druggist selling the drug, and he only, when it is prescribed by a duly qualified physician. That even this concession would lead to abuses, is admitted; but it would, at least, have the merit of interposing obstacles to the traffic, and would mark the attitude of the Government in regard to it. Besides which, the abuses apprehended could be minimized by a strict surveillance of the drug-store, and a supervision of the prescriptions of physicians who showed a lack of discrimination in ordering the drug. The main consideration, however, at this stage, is that the Government shall not stand to gain money by conniving at the debauching of the people of the islands.

"The Father-Heart"

A SOLDIER writing about the battle of Gettysburg, says that the saddest incident of the war which he witnessed was just after that battle. On the outskirts of the field he and his companions discovered a soldier dead, seated on the ground with his back to a tree. His glazed eyes were riveted on some object tightly clasped in his hands. As they drew near his side, they saw it was an ambrotype of two small children. And the strong men were broken down at the sight of that poor father who had dragged himself to that secluded spot and sat down to die, feasting his dying eyes on the faces of his little loves far away. There were six men in the party, and they stood there about the dead man with great lumps in their throats and tears on their smoke-stained cheeks. Scarcely a word was spoken. They dug a grave, and laid the poor fellow to rest, with the picture of his children clasped over his heart. And over his grave, on the tree against which he was sitting, they inscribed the words':

"SOMEBODY'S FATHER"
July 3, 1863

Where else in the world will you find so touching an epitaph as those simple words, roughly cut on a tree over the grave of an unknown soldier? It was the father-heart, the father-love in the dead man that was immortalized.

But go to that other tree that grows on "a green hill far away." Stand close beside it and read what is written there. Not the words dictated in bitterness by mocking Pilate, but the crimson letters which the eye of faith discovers:

Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us.

He that hath seen me hath seen the Father.

Having loved his own he loved them unto the end.

The cross has many voices, but above all it is the voice of a Father's heart uttering its love for the children he would save. Keep close to that sacred tree, and then, however strange God's way, however dark the face of his Providence may sometimes be, you will be able to read, not "Somebody's Father," but "My Father, and he loves me still."

More "Sayings of Christ" Found

A LONDON cable dispatch announces the discovery, at Oxyrhyncus, of a series of new "finds" similar to the "logia" found there in 1897 by Messrs. Grenfell and Hunt, of Oxford. The results of a brief examination of other papyri discovered by the same men in a second series of excavations fully justify the hopes expressed in 1897, that Oxyrhyncus will prove a richer mine than any other for the recovery of early Christian literature. Two, or perhaps three, more seasons' work will be required to exhaust the more promising portions of the site, the mounds of which cover an area surpassed by few Egyptian towns.

The most interesting, perhaps, of the discoveries in the second excavations is a third century fragment of a collection of the sayings of Jesus, similar in style to the so-called logia discovered in 1897.

Six sayings are in perfect condition, but the new logia papyrus supplies more evidence of its origin than its predecessor, where it contains an introductory paragraph, stating that what follows consists of "The words which Jesus the Living Lord spake," to two of his disciples, and moreover, one of the uncanonical sayings is already extant in part, the conclusion of it, "He that wanders shall reign, and he that reigns shall rest," being quoted by Clement, of Alexandria, from the Gospel according to Hebrews.

Your Only Opportunity

There are still a few hundred copies left of the Minion Teachers' Bibles advertised in these columns a few weeks ago at $1 each, all charges prepaid. No book proposition ever published in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD gave better value for the money. The Bible is well worth $2, and but for the fact that we need all the space in our Shipping Department for the incoming premiums for next fall, we could not think of making this sacrifice. This Bible is the regular International Minion Teachers' Bible, American Levant, red under gold edges, with Teachers' Helps and Maps.

Ten years ago, before THE CHRISTIAN HERALD started into popularize the Teachers' Bibles, and put them at a price within the reach of the public, this very Bible which we now offer, in order to close out the lot, at $1 each, could not have been purchased at anything less than $6.

Send for one, and if you don't like it return it and get your money back, without being called upon for any explanation. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD always refunds money if for any reason the purchasers are not altogether pleased. Be sure to address your communication to The Christian Herald Book Department, Bible House, New York.

Thousands Converted in Many Lands

On a Soul-Winning World Tour

By REV. R. A. TORREY

The Story of a Modern Pentecost

DR. TORREY ADDRESSING A GREAT AUDIENCE OF SEVEN THOUSAND IN ST. GEORGE'S MARKET, BELFAST, IRELAND

IN relating the story of God's work in this tour of preaching the Gospel around the world, it is difficult what to tell and what to leave untold. The journey took just about eighteen months. We left Chicago, December 23, 1901, going West. Our first stopping-place was Honolulu. We were there less than twenty-four hours. The brethren were not expecting our arrival until the next day. Two meetings were hurriedly called together, one for Christians in the morning, the other, for native students, in two schools, in the afternoon, but, in this short time, God manifested his presence and his power. In the morning meeting, where we spoke of the baptism with the Holy Spirit, He of whom we spoke was present, and granted his blessing to many hungry hearts. At the meeting in the afternoon, about thirty professed to accept Christ as their Saviour.

Wonders of Grace in Japan

We reached Japan January 16, 1902, and began our work on Japanese soil that night at 8 P. M. Twenty-nine or thirty days were spent in Japan, oftentimes speaking four or five times a day. In all, seventy-two services were held in ten cities of the empire, from Sendai, in the far north, to Nagasaki, in the extreme south. Most of the services were for the Japanese, through an interpreter. We found this a delightful way of preaching the Gospel. We were very fortunate in our interpreters; some of them had heard us in this country, and others had studied books that we had written, and were thoroughly in sympathy with the truths uttered. We usually spent from two to three days in a city. After we got well started, there was rarely ever a meeting for the Japanese, without a good many definite conversions.

Japan had just been passing through a time of great religious awakening, and was thoroughly ready to hear the Gospel. In one city, where we spoke for two days, there were 119 who professed to accept Christ, and in another city, where we spoke for two days, 130. In still another city, where we held five services in one day, 82 persons, mostly men, in a single service, stood up to say that they would accept Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour, surrender to him as their Lord and Master, confess him as such, publicly before the world, and strive to please him in everything. Some of the services were held in churches, others in halls and theatres, and many in schools and colleges. There were in all about 1,000 native Japanese who professed to accept Christ. Among them some who declared that the meeting at which they were converted was the first Christian service they had ever attended, and that they had never heard the Gospel before.

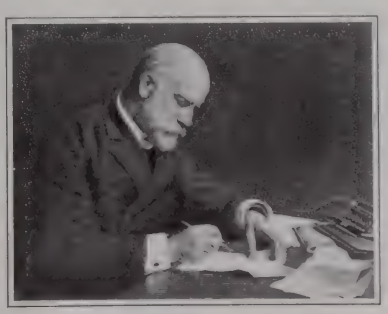
Winning Souls in China

From Nagasaki we sailed for China. We reached Shanghai at 8.30 Sunday evening, February 16, 1902. In thirty-five minutes from the time of stepping off the steamer, we were preaching the Gospel. The first service was for English-speaking people. The next evening we started on a house-boat up the Grand Canal for Hanchow. We reached Hanchow the following Wednesday, and began speaking to the Chinese, through an interpreter, the same afternoon. The streets of Hanchow had seemed so dirty as we had passed through them in the morning, that we were surprised at that first service to find the Church of England, where the service was held, full of neat and bright-looking Chinamen. The thought came to me, "I did not suppose there were so many clean people in the city." There was deep interest throughout the service. We had been told that we must not expect the same definite results in China as in Japan; but at the services on the second day, we made a definite call for all who would then and there accept Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour, surrender to him as their Lord and Master, begin to confess him as such before the world, and strive to live to please him in everything day by day, to come forward and give their names to one appointed for that purpose. At the first call of this kind, eleven men came forward and gave their names.

From Hanchow we went to Soochow, and from thence back to Shanghai. Ten days were spent in Shanghai, with four regular services a day—two for foreigners and two for the Chinese. God exceeded every one's expectation, not only were there many English and Americans who professed to accept Christ, including some in prominent positions in the life of the city, but also many Chinese. Among the Chinese who took a very definite stand for Christ, were those belonging to families of great prominence in the social and commercial life of the empire. There were scores of Chinese in all who professed to accept Christ in Shanghai. In the thirty-one days given to China, we visited eight cities, and everywhere that the Gospel was preached, it proved it had just as much power to save the Chinaman as it has to save the American.

We spent thirty-six memorable hours in Foochow. In that time we held five services in different parts of the city, perhaps the most memorable, that held in the Methodist Episcopal Church, holding 1,500 or 1,800 people. The church was very full at 10.30 in the morning. They listened intently to the address on, "What it costs not to be a Christian." At the close, many stood up professing their purpose to begin a Christian life. At 2.30 the same afternoon, the Word of God was again with power. Many Christians came to the altar, as desiring to lead a more earnest Christian life, and quite a number of persons who had not been known as having any interest in Christianity, came and knelt at the altar, expressing their desire to lead a Christian life.

I shall never forget one fine looking young man, son of a prominent man of the city. He was one of the tallest if not the tallest—Chinaman that I ever saw. He arose in the place where he was sitting, towering above the crowd, and then, lest he be overlooked, raised his hand high in the air. He was the last of a company of thirty sons of prominent men in the city, who had withdrawn their children from one of the Christian schools, and formed a school of their own, for their instruction. The other twenty-nine had already accepted Christ; but this young man held out. When he did come, he came with all his heart.



PROF. R. A. TORREY IN HIS STUDY

Australia's Great Revival

It took us three weeks to cover the 5,071 miles between Hong Kong and Melbourne. Melbourne had been preparing for many weeks for the work. 214 churches were enlisted in the movement. Every evangelical denomination in the city co-operated. For many weeks there had been 1,500 to 2,000 home prayer meetings per week. These prayer meetings were all held upon the same evening. There were fifty missionaries gathered together from all parts of Australasia, to co-operate in the work. For the first two weeks, fifty meetings were held each night in different suburban centres, with a nightly attendance of 53,000 people. Each day at one o'clock, a meeting was held for business men at the town hall, with a capacity of 3,000, and a general meeting at three o'clock in the afternoon. The town hall soon proved too small for the crowds that gathered, and it was necessary to hold a meeting at twelve o'clock for women, and another for men, at one o'clock and another general meeting at three o'clock. The last two weeks of the mission, the evening meetings were held in the Exhibition Building, with a seating capacity of between 7,000 and 8,000 people. The very first day the Exhibition Building was open, it proved too small for the crowds that gathered. It was said there were as many people outside the Building, as inside, and it was necessary to organize open air meetings on the outside of the building.

8,600 Converts

I hold in my hand a printed souvenir card of the mission, received today, which says that during the month "over 8,000 persons made public profession of having accepted the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour." The conversions were from all classes of society, many were from the homes of leading people in the city, and not a few from the deepest depths of degradation and sin. At one of the meetings for the business men, where the song "Where is My Wandering Boy Tonight" was being sung, a man sprang to his feet and said, "I am here, and coming home." He rushed down between the rows of men and went into one of the side rooms, falling upon his knees overwhelmed with conviction. When I went into the room at the close of the meeting, he was sobbing and groaning, and without lifting his head said to me, "Do you think God will ever forgive me for the awful blasphemies that I have uttered about Jesus Christ?" I found afterwards that he was one of the scoffers on the platform of the infidel society of the city. He came to Christ, and found peace through believing in him.

One of the features of the work in Melbourne was the lectures to business men on the "Inspiration of the Bible," "Divinity, its Causes, Consequences and Cure," and kindred topics. These lectures were so effective that they were continued in every city we visited after Melbourne. After leaving Melbourne, meetings were held in eight other Australian cities. The Missions usually continued six days. There were hundreds of conversions in every city where we remained at least six days.

A Mob Overcome

Perhaps our hardest fight was in the little mining city of Maryborough. The plain denunciation of sin in this city stirred up bitter opposition on the part of some, and there was a private meeting of those who were in the opposition and a plan formed to break up the meeting. We were informed of this organized mob, and the whole matter was laid before God in prayer, and we went to the meeting confident that God would give us the victory. The Spirit of God came down upon the meeting almost from the very outset. The mob scarcely lifted its voice. Many men walked right out of the mob and came down to the front and confessed their acceptance of Jesus Christ as their Saviour. As they commenced to walk down to the front one by one, the opposition broke down completely, and as one after another came forward the audience burst into cheers. One of the most notoriously wicked men in the city was converted, and with other men organized a men's society that has been pushing the work ever since. The ringleader of the mob came down to the depot the next day, when we were leaving the city, and apologized for what he had attempted to do.

The last meetings in Australia were held in Sydney. The town-hall, holding 5,000 people, was secured for the meetings. It was the first time in the history of the city that this large hall had been secured for a continuous series of meetings. It was not full the first few nights, but soon the crowds came in such overwhelming numbers that the hall proved utterly inadequate. They would pack the people in till they were standing in every aisle way down to the platform and way out into the corridors, and yet thousands had to be turned away. At a single meeting two hundred came forward and publicly confessed with their own lips their acceptance of Jesus Christ as their Lord and Saviour.

A Battle with Sceptics

The meetings in Sydney were remarkable for the number of men converted. Perhaps the most interesting meetings were those held for business men in the Centenary Hall. I found in Sydney more intelligent sceptics, sceptics who knew why they were sceptics, than in any other city I ever visited; but they came daily to listen to the lectures on "Infidelity," and one after another they publicly and boldly renounced their scepticism, and took the Lord Jesus Christ for their Saviour. For the two weeks that these meetings for business men continued, many men prominent in business and in the political life of the colony, gave up their noon meal every day to attend the lectures. On three occasions we had a question drawer, and we were flooded with questions from sceptics and infidels. As one question after another was answered, it was almost impossible to restrain the enthusiasm of the crowd. When the hour to close came, they insisted on our going on, and on we went, with an ever increasing tide of enthusiasm. Many men on these days had their infidelity shattered. Two missions were held, of twelve days each, in Tasmania, one in Launceston, and one in Hobart. The secretary of the mission in Hobart wrote that there were 2,000 conversions in that city in the twelve days. Two of the most notable conversions in Tasmania were on the same night, one the champion heavy-weight pugilist of Tasmania, Jim Burke, and the other a prominent member of the Upper House. God has used both of these men since in witnessing for and leading others to Christ.

In An Agnostic Stronghold

We spent thirty days in New Zealand, ten days each in three of the four leading cities of the colony. We began our work in Wellington. We were informed that evangelistic work had never had a very favorable reception in that city, and that one of the great evangelists of our day, who had visited it, had said on leaving, "I shake the dust of this city off from my feet," but God gave us the favor of the people from the outset. The mayor of the city met us at the steamer, and was very prominent and active throughout the mission. He was a man that commanded the highest respect of every one and his backing did not a little to secure favor for the mission. Meetings were held in the rink, with a seating capacity of about three thousand, but this soon proved altogether too small and overflow meetings became necessary. The work in Wellington was notable for the number of prominent business men who were affected by it. One business man, well known throughout the colony, at the request of his friends, came to have a personal talk with me. He said that he was an agnostic and that he knew that I could not help him. I tried to show him the way out of agnosticism into faith. He promised to follow the line of investigation pointed out, but said that he knew it would not result in any good; but it did, and he has come out boldly on the side of Christ and is working to bring others to him.

Atheists Converted

From Wellington we went to Christchurch. Christchurch is the hotbed of all sorts of "isms," but also the home of a great many earnest evangelical Christians. It has one of the best halls to speak in that I have ever seen. The hall is seated for 2,800, but it was said that on some nights 4,000 people were jammed into the different parts of it to the corridors; but even then it proved utterly insufficient for the crowds that gathered. On one Sunday evening there were 5,000 people in the main hall and the two other halls in the building, and 5,000 people in the streets outside. Meetings were held both inside and out. In order to accommodate the crowds towards the end, meetings were held for the women at 6.45 and for the men at 8.45. Men waited through the rain on the outside until their turn came, and as soon as the doors were opened burst into the building like a flood. Among the conversions in Christchurch was the Secretary of the Atheist Club of the city. He and his wife had been atheists for thirteen years. Both were converted the same day. He came to hear the answers to questions, the Spirit of God touched his heart. Upon going home he opened his Bible to Luke 15:20, and God used it to bring the wanderer back to himself. Ten days were spent in Dunedin, days memorable for crowded audiences, the presence of the Spirit of God, and the number who accepted Christ as their Saviour.

From New Zealand we went to India, touching at Hobart, Melbourne and Adelaide on the way. In India, meetings were held in Madura, Madras, Calcutta, Benares and Bombay. The Gospel proved to have the same power in India as in Japan and China. It costs more for a high caste Hindoo to come out and accept Christ, and be baptized in his name, than it does for a Japanese or a Chinaman, but the Word of God took such hold upon the hearts of some that they were willing to pay the cost. One high caste Hindoo in Calcutta, who decided to pay the price, was cut off by his father the day he was baptized into the name of Christ. Before he became a Christian he was an heir to a large fortune. Immediately after his baptism he was penniless, but he proved true.

MR. CHARLES ALEXANDER

In Scotland, meetings were held in Edinburgh, Glasgow and Aberdeen, about four weeks in each place. Edinburgh did not have the time for preparation that the other cities had. In fact, the meetings were arranged very hurriedly, but ministers and laymen entered heartily into the work. The first night we were there the Synod Hall, accommodating nearly 3,000 people, and the St. Cuthbert's Church, accommodating 3,000 people, were both secured, hoping in this way to accommodate the crowds, but even this arrangement proved insufficient, and it was said that 5,000 people were shut out from the two buildings. To accommodate the crowds on the following Sundays, the great theatre in the city was secured, with a capacity for 3,500 people. Meetings were held in the afternoon for women, and in the evening for men. The first Sabbath, there was a phenomenally heavy rain (I think it rained five inches). It was thought by some that few women would come out through such a deluge, but the theatre was packed before the appointed hour and many turned away. It was packed again with men in the evening. The Spirit of God was present in power at the first theatre service. More men decided in the men's meeting, than women in the women's meeting, and there were more stood up in the gallery reserved for students than in any other part of the building. During the four weeks in Edinburgh, there were nearly 1,500 who were known to profess to accept Christ in a meeting.

A Buddhist Won to Christ

One of the most interesting conversions in Edinburgh was that of a Buddhist student in the Medical Department of the University. At the close of one of the lectures on the "Resurrection of Christ," he came to me and said that he had been brought up a Buddhist, and one of his great difficulties with Christianity had been the Resurrection, but he was satisfied from the argument that Jesus Christ really did rise from the dead. A short time afterward he came out clearly, and was baptized in the Church of England. Perhaps the most notable feature of the meetings in Edinburgh was the business men's meeting, held in the church in which the disruption took place in 1844. This was attended daily by hundreds of business men and by some of the leading professors in the University. Prominent men would meet me on the street, and with great feeling thank me for the way in which faith in the integrity and inerrancy of the Bible was being established in that city. From Edinburgh, we went to Glasgow. St. Andrew's Hall, capable of accommodating 4,500 people, had been secured for the entire four weeks, with the exception of a few nights for which the hall had been previously engaged, and where it was impossible to buy off those who had secured it. Never before had this splendid hall been engaged for a continuous series of meetings, but toward the end even the St. Andrew's Hall proved insufficient for the crowds that came. There were something over 2,700 people, young and old, who professed to accept Christ during the four weeks spent in that city. They belonged to all classes of society, from the very highest to the very lowest. Glasgow has the best organization for systematic evangelization of any city I have ever visited. It is presided over by Lord Overtown, and governed by a body of prominent business men and ministers of various denominations, who meet once a month. Over $125,000 is spent annually in the evangelization of the city. This organization stood at the back of the meetings, and to it was due not a little of the success of the meetings.

MELBOURNE EXHIBITION BUILDING IN WHICH THE GREAT MASS-MEETINGS WERE HELD

2,000 Confess Christ at Aberdeen

From Glasgow we went to Aberdeen. Aberdeen is built of granite, and its people are said to be of granite. We were warned from the outset that the people were hard to move. We rather liked that. At first they came to listen to us critically, and yet, from the outset, God's spirit began to manifest his power. The large Music Hall proved insufficient to accommodate the crowd that came. Here, again, it was necessary toward the end to hold two services, one for women at 6.30 and another for men at 8. In all, 900 men and boys and 1,100 women and girls were reported as having accepted Christ during the four weeks' mission; but it was said that a very large number of others were converted outside the meetings. In some respects, more important than the conversions, was the stirring up of the Christians to definite personal work for souls. The interest spread from Aberdeen into the surrounding country, and missions were begun in all directions. For all its reputed stiffness, before we got through there seemed to be more enthusiasm in Aberdeen than almost any other place we visited.

MR. ALEXANDER LEADING THE SINGING AT AN OPEN-AIR SERVICE, NEW ZEALAND

Remarkable Scenes in Belfast

Our last mission was held in Belfast, and it was the culmination of all. Taken all in all, the meetings in Belfast were the most remarkable of the tour. It is true that there were more people reported converted in Melbourne than in Belfast, but there were no meetings in Melbourne that for displays of God's convicting and converting power approached those held in Belfast. A new feature of the work in Belfast was the open-air meetings. These were held daily in the vicinity of the great shipyards and great factories. Two thousand men and women would often gather at the noon hour at these open-air meetings. Twenty-seven women were known to have been converted in one factory through the open-air meeting held in that neighborhood. At one of the open-air meetings the women lingered so long, that when they got back to the factory they found the gate shut. They stood on the outside of the gate and began to sing, "There is no Friend like the Lowly Jesus." The superintendent relented and opened the gates, and let them back to their work

Many Drunkards Converted

Another feature of the work in Belfast was the "Saturday Night Sweep." At ten o'clock ministers of the Presbyterian, Episcopalian and other churches, and many laymen and Salvation Army workers gathered together for prayer, and then went out on the street as the saloons were closing, gathering up the drunks as they came out, sometimes going into the saloons and bringing them out. The strange procession was headed by a Salvation Army band. In all they gathered together nine hundred people. They then went into the Shankhill Hall, where they remained in testimony and prayer until two o'clock in the morning. There were said to be sixty-one drunkards converted at the first Saturday Night Sweep. Every church and hall in the city proved utterly inadequate to accommodate the crowds, and as the working people were being shut out from the meetings, it was decided to fit up St. George's market. This covered space is 240 feet long and 127 feet wide. It was seated for 6,000 people, with standing accommodations for 1,000 more.

It was now thought that we had a building large enough for all crowds that would come, but the first afternoon that the market was open 7,000 people crowded inside about an hour before the announced time for beginning, and there were soon 6,000 more people on the outside

An Audience of 13,000 Souls

Meetings were organized for those who were shut out. On the evening of the same day, the place was packed at half past six, though the meeting was not to begin until eight. At eight o'clock we dismissed the first crowd, and the building was filled again. On that first night there were 300 who were personally dealt with, and who afterwards stood up and publicly professed their acceptance of Christ. On the next night there were 2800 on the next 387, and on the closing night, it is said, there were over 500 who accepted Christ as their Saviour. At a meeting of thanksgiving the next day, the Rev. Mr. Ballard, who was all through the historic revival of 1859, and that of 1874, said, never in all his life had he he seen such a display of God's power, as he had witnessed the previous evening in St. George's market. The conversions were from all classes of society. One of the leading men of the city, a prominent Christian worker, had the joy of seeing every member of his household converted. One of the leading singers of the city, a well-known man, arose in the thanksgiving service, and while many were in tears, announced his acceptance of Jesus Christ.

The Last Drawing of the Gospel Net

The superintendent of the harbor sent word to me that some arrangement must be made to accommodate the crowds that he knew would be at the steamship when we left, for the dock from which the steamer started would only accommodate 300. Tickets were issued for 300 of those who had been leaders in the work. Across the street a great open-air meeting was held on the custom-house steps. After we had preached a short Gospel sermon to them, and drawn the net for the last time and said farewell to the 300 on the dock, we thought we had bidden farewell to all our Irish friends, but we were mistaken—the river is lined for half a mile or more with steam launches or other row-boats filled with people, and for half a mile down the river, without a break, the docks were lined with people singing "God be with you till we meet again," and "Never more shall we part." Since our return, we have heard that the work is still being pressed forward in Belfast.

We take it this to be but the beginning of the world-wide revival for which so many thousands of people have been praying for months and years. Let us give glory to God and keep on praying and expecting

"NOW, PEOPLE, SING ALL TOGETHER!"

LAZARUS AT THE GATE

The Lepers in the Little Colony of Bethesda, in Surinam, Dutch Guiana, Send their Thanks to the Readers of this Journal: : :

ONE of the most impressive proofs of the world's indebtedness to Christ, is the sympathy and loving care which his followers bestow on the most unhappy members of the human race. A conspicuous illustration of the fact is the story, told in a former number of this journal, of the effort two devoted Christian missionaries are making to minister to a colony of lepers in Dutch Guiana.

The climate and the circumstances of that region are peculiarly favorable to the development of leprosy. So prevalent has it become, that the Dutch Government has been obliged to institute measures for public protection and to establish a rigid system of seclusion of the sufferers. These measures have had the natural result of producing among the natives a policy of evasion. When the fatal white spot shows itself on some member of a family, the parents and friends of the sufferer shrink from the duty, imposed by law, of reporting the case. They secretly keep the patient at home, and so the horrible disease spreads to other members of the family. It has, therefore, been necessary to increase the stringency of the law, so that a leper found on the streets may be summarily arrested, and a leper hidden in a home may be seized and carried off to the pest-house, if his presence there is disclosed by some person cognizant of the fact. It is to meet these difficulties, in part, that the little settlement known as Bethesda has been established. It stands near the government leper settlement at Paramaribo, Surinam, on the opposite side of the canal. All the Protestant churches of the district have an interest in it, and have full confidence in Mr. and Mrs. Weiss, the Moravian missionaries, who are in charge. There is less constraint there than at Groot Chatillon, the government settlement, and the lepers have a brighter life.

Mr. and Mrs. Weiss are devoted to their work. The letters recently received by them from Bethesda, show that their afflicted friends are deeply grateful for the attention shown to them. Two of the letters bring, each the sad story of a death. The fell disease had eaten its way to the vital organs, and after long years of pain had ended the patients' sufferings. Two deaconesses had been present at each death-bed, and had enjoyed the satisfaction of knowing that the sufferer was trusting in Christ for salvation. What a change that must have been, from the wasting, torturing death in life to the region where there is no pain! To have been the means of bringing such a change, was worth all the repulsive work that the missionaries have done. For they have been nurses as well as missionaries. The horrible sores produced by the disease need washing and cleansing that the patient cannot do. These consecrated Moravians have shrunk from no duty. They have ministered to the bodies as well as the souls of their afflicted friends, and their message of salvation has, in many cases, reached the heart, because, first of all, the sufferer has been grateful for their attention, which has given him a relief from his pain.

The object of the visit of the two missionaries to this country, while secondarily that of a much needed rest, is primarily that of extending their work. When a patient dies, the news quickly spreads, and there are scores of applicants for the vacated quarters. It is hard to think that only one can be accommodated, and so many must be disappointed. The missionaries have abundance of land at their disposal, but they need funds for the erection of cottages. Each would be occupied on its completion by a grateful patient, to whom the comfort of a separate home would be a boon inconceivable in its value, by those who, in health and prosperity, have all they need. Funds are also needed for a small building for public worship.

MR. AND MRS. WEISS, NURSES, AND SURINAM LEPERS

Already our readers have responded to the former article with their usual generosity. Nearly fifty dollars was sent in small sums, and the missionaries gladly notified the lepers that this and other sums aggregating $3,000 toward the $10,000 required, had been received. It has evoked from one of the lepers, William Reeberg, who enjoys the distinction of being able to write English—of which he is very proud—a quaint letter, to which the other inhabitants of the little colony have added their names. He asks that it be published in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, so that each of the contributors to the fund that their good friends, Mr. & Mrs. Weiss, are raising for their benefit, may know how grateful the lepers are. One paragraph, however, will suffice for the purpose. Poor Reeberg says: "We direct our letter to our fellow-men, to thank them in the first rate, for that what they have done already, and further, it must remove you to show more mercy. God's blessings must walk by those lines, and when they are read they must bring love and mercy for the readers, that they can feel love for us that are sing out of the social life. The Lord must be with us. He shall never leave us. We are very glad you gave us the occasion to write a letter by ourselves, that you kindly will publish in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. We cannot thank you enough for what already you have done for us. There are so many sick who want to come here. We can never repay you. But we let that over to Him who said, 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, ye have done it unto Me.'"

A FARMER BOY AN UNCROWNED KING

Samuel Anoints David

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR AUG. 2
I. SAMUEL 16: 4-13

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

GOLDEN TEXT -- "MAN LOOKETH ON THE OUTWARD APPEARANCE, BUT THE LORD LOOKETH ON THE HEART." I. SAMUEL 16: 7

WHEN Samuel had visited King Saul in his camp at Gilgal, and conveyed to him the message from God, that he was rejected from being king, because of his disobedience, and had departed to his home in Ramah, his heart was bowed down, for he mourned for Saul as for one dead. Such grief was displeasing to God, who bade him get up, and be about his duty, which was to find and anoint the successor to Saul whom God had chosen. God told Samuel to go to Bethlehem, and find his chosen one among the sons of Jesse. Samuel had been in Bethlehem many times, as a judge to punish evil-doers, and so his appearance there caused alarm, and led the elders of the city to inquire if he had come "peaceably." "I am come to sacrifice unto the Lord," was the reply. He had come not as a judge, but as a priest. And he went to the house of Jesse to offer sacrifice. It was a family altar, and gathered about it were Jesse and his household, in part, two daughters and six sons. Two sons were missing, one probably dead, the other, the youngest, in a distant field, caring for the sheep. A special interest centres around this family, because Jesse was the grandson of the lovely Ruth, who, to go with Naomi, left her false gods, and kindred, and native land, saying: "Thy God shall be my God, and thy people my people." The sacrifice probably consisted of two parts; first, the burnt-offering, in which Jesse laid his hand, in expiation of the sins of himself and his family, upon the head of the bullock, which Samuel then slew, and placed upon the altar, and burned.

THE MOURNING PROPHET

Then followed the peace offerings of grain or bread, "the bread of God," a portion of which was placed on the altar and burned, and the remainder eaten by those who were represented in the sacrifice. It was a feast of friendship; of the forgiven with the Forgiver, the burnt part being God's portion in the feast.

After the completion of the sacrifice, Samuel sought to discover among the sons of Jesse the chosen of the Lord, who was to be the successor of King Saul. But when each of the six sons present had passed by under his scrutiny, the Lord made known to him that he was not one of the number. Samuel would have made the mistake of taking the oldest and the finest looking son, Eliab, had not God restrained him. Samuel asked Jesse: "Are these all thy children?" Then Jesse bethought him of the youngest, taking care of sheep, and he sent for him. He came, bringing the freshness of the fields with him in his bright eyes, and rosy cheeks, and springing step. The moment Samuel's eyes rested upon him, he knew that it was he whom the Lord had chosen. And in his inmost spirit, Samuel heard the Lord telling him to arise, and anoint him with the holy oil of consecration.

This was a precious mixture of myrrh, sweet calamus, cinnamon, cassia, and olive oil, which Samuel had brought with him in a horn. He poured the contents upon the young head of David, and heaven gave witness by the anointing of the Holy Spirit, that David had become a child of destiny. Samuel returned to his home in Ramah, and David went back to his flocks; but the horizon was greater than it had ever been before, the heavens were higher above him, life had taken on a new significance. In the words of Geike: "The anointing amounted only to a private announcement to David of his ultimate destiny, that he might prepare himself for it, and be ready to act when the decisive moment arrived. Henceforth he left all to God, putting himself in his hands, to be led at his will. Yet a higher estimate of his own capabilities must have dawned upon him. Samuel's counsels became his rule of life, his inner impulse. The serenity and resignation to God exhibited in his greatest perils hereafter, were the results of the new spiritual force, caught from communion with the great prophet. . . To use the exact words of the sacred narrative, from that time, 'The Spirit of Jehovah came mightily upon him.'"

Illustration and Application

Let us get at the very heart of this story. A boy's awakening—a farmer boy's in this case—by contact with a prophet teacher, from whom he goes back to his lowly work to find it idealized, and to realize that he is himself an uncrowned king. Henceforth he can never be "the man with the hoe," a beast of burden with his eyes on the dirt, for he has "hitched his wagon to a star." Even if David had not received his crown on earth, but had remained to the end on his farm, he would, like Burns, have turned his farming into song.

What is it Like in Nature?

This awakening of David's soul, how like the spring awakening of the earth by the north wind that sweeps away the fogs, and the south wind that warms the buds into bloom! A seemingly dead earth breaks out into a symphony of flowers, and fruit, and song. It is our privilege to awake a seemingly dead soul, by a timely word of rebuke or encouragement. Saul, in youth, had the same awakener as David, but the sin he allowed to nest in his heart had destroyed him.

When the caterpillar in New Zealand is about to go into the chrysalis state, it digs a hole into the earth, and goes down, tail first, leaving its head just above the ground, and sleeps, in order that it may develop wings, and become a beautiful insect. But when there, with its head above ground, there is a certain parasite seed that sometimes comes and settles in its ear, and shooting its root down through the body, kills it, and grows up into a plant, called a "rata grub." The dead caterpillar's resurrection has been spoiled by the plant that is growing out of it. So many a boy that might be a David, coming out of the chrysalis of boyhood into a winged manhood of lofty living, becomes, like Saul, only a "rata grub," his life absorbed in some sin whose small beginnings he has allowed a seeding place in his heart.

From a Photograph

BETHLEHEM, AS IT NOW APPEARS

Most beautiful of all parallels to David's awakening is the yet earlier awakening of Samuel, when his mother had given him to the Lord to minister in the Tabernacle. And God himself called him, "Samuel, Samuel." From that hour of his childhood he became God's prophet. In a certain family the father read at home worship, "The child Samuel ministered unto the Lord." Then turning to his youngest child, he asked, "What is it to 'minister,' my little one?" "Doin' thin's for mamma, and papa too, I dess." Then climbing into her mother's lap and nestling in her arms, she added, "And for the dood Papa in heaven."

What is it Like in the Bible?

All through the Bible we are reminded that God is likely to call "unlikely men" to the front. It was Joseph, most hated by his brothers, who became greatest of them all, and their rescuer from famine. It was Caleb, the Kenite, a foreigner adopted by the tribe of Judah, who became its great leader in the days of Joshua. The judges and kings and prophets were often called from threshing floors, and from the plough and flock and herd. Not from the metropolis, but from the farm, in Bible times and since, God has often called his leaders. It has been noted that for the first time in our national history a President has come from Fifth avenue, whose commercial kings are themselves mostly boys who came in from the country with only a handful of this world's goods. Every man should watch for some call of God, but most of us will do our great work not in one great deed, but by daily faithfulness in little duties. Tollgates prove wealth may come through littles.

. . .

What is it Like in Common Life?

A young lady of fifteen—about David's age in this story—who was just beginning to teach, became the intimate friend of her Superintendent, an inspiring personality, with lofty conceptions of a teacher's duties and privileges. By his conversation, though he said not a word of novel-reading, she was so uplifted to life's highest uses, that she discontinued the popular story paper on whose shallow love stories she had previously wasted many hours every week. It was her soul's intellectual awakening. Later came her spiritual awakening, when Mr. Moody came into her life like an influence; then dancing, to which she had been devoted, was sloughed off without an argument or a pang—displaced by highest devotion to nobler interests.

A certain camp-meeting seemed almost a failure in the matter of conversions. The only inquirers at the altar were a judge and a boy. Those who gathered in the altar to prayer devoted nearly all their thought to the judge, and the boy was almost forgotten, as Jesse left David out as of no account in gathering his household. But the judge, having begun a new life late, became a worldly and worthless church-member, while the boy, that day awakened to life's true meaning and great possibilities, became one of the most influential Christians of his time.

. . .

Sad to see was a dear little child of ten hobbling along on crutches. When quite a wee thing she had met with an accident, which had lamed her for life. Very patiently Jessie bore her trouble, for she had early come to trust the Saviour. Just a single regret filled her heart. "I should so like to work for Jesus," she sighed over and over; "but I am afraid he won't use a poor little cripple!"

One morning, however, Jessie happened to pass a small village bookshop. Feeling tired, she leaned against the window to rest a minute. The shopkeeper, an earnest Christian, had hung up some pretty illuminated text-cards very prominently inside the middle pane. As the child peered in, glorious sunshine fell upon one of these, specially attracting her. She read the beautifully traced words, "The Lord hath need of him" (Luke 19: 31).

"I wonder who it is the Lord needs?" she said to herself; "I really can't think, but I will find out in my Bible." So when Jessie got home, she turned to Luke, and read the whole story. "Oh," she cried in perfect ecstasy, "since the Lord used a poor little colt, I am sure that, after all, he will use a poor little cripple." Her joy knew no bounds.

Fifty years have slipped by. In a well-known South English town, a great funeral is slowly wending its way through ancient High Street to God's Acre. What a concourse! Men, women, children; old, young, rich, poor. Ministers, too, of every church. Yes, it is the funeral of Jessie, the lame Bible woman, universally loved and honored.

. . .

What is it Like in History?

Was it Correggio, who in childhood was shown some great picture, and instantly felt the artist awakened in him, and said, "I, too, am a painter!" A less familiar case of artistic awakening was that of a young workman in Central Park, New York, who saw a sculptor in the Zoological Garden moulding a wolf in wax. Instantly he exclaimed, "I could do that." He asked the artist for a piece of his wax, and that night in his lowly room, moulded a wolf with open mouth. To make sure he was not mistaken in his call to be an artist, he brought it the next morning, covered with a handkerchief, to his family, and said, "When I take off the handkerchief all speak together and say what you think I have made." The instant, wondering cry of all was, "It's a wolf." To make assurance doubly sure, before he gave up digging for moulding, he made another figure in wax the next night, and when he uncovered it, all shouted "It's Gip"—the name of the family dog. Then he knew to what God had awakened him, and became the famous sculptor, Edward Kemyss.

TRADITIONAL HOUSE OF JESSE

Let it not be thought, however, that awakening to greatness is the chief lesson of this story. Rather is it awakening to goodness, to usefulness. The man who seeks fame for its own sake is more likely to become infamous than famous. He who aims to be useful to the utmost is the very one most likely to become famous also, but in any case, his name shall be written high in heaven. When Queen Victoria, at seventeen, was told that by the king's death she had become queen, her first impulsive utterance was, "I will be good." The story is not new to readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, but very pertinent to this lesson. It is a great hour, an hour of soul coronation, when any heart is aroused to say in earnest, looking to God for help to realize the great purpose, "I will be good." To resolve daily to be good in some lowly place, with no acclamations of fame, no reward but self respect, and the approval of God, that is a kingly thing to do, that God will not forget.

God of our life—we lift to thee
The chalice of our emptiness.
Fill us, until thy waters press
And overflow in ecstasy;
And our full cup of blessing lead
To the wan lips of human need.
—MARK WAYNE WILLIAMS.

The Western Flood Sufferers

Financial Secretary H. F. Parry, of the Flood Executive Committee, East St. Louis, Ill., writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, acknowledging receipt of a contribution of $500 from Dr. Klopsch, in aid of the flood sufferers. "The money," he writes, "reached us very opportunely."

Mayor Gilbert, of Kansas City, Kans., acknowledges through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a contribution of $10, sent for the flood sufferers, by an unknown friend at Stonington, Conn., to Mr. Gilbert's predecessor, ex-Mayor Craddock.

"Entirely Satisfactory"

Your Bible and other premiums give entire satisfaction—worth twice the money invested.

Salt Lick, Ky. EMORY T. CALDWELL

The Red Letter Bible, together with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD one year, $3. The "Family Art Gallery" free to every subscriber.

THE BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

War in Somaliland

NEWS of British reverses in Somaliland, on the borders of Abyssinia, which was widely published recently, on the authority of French dispatches, proves to have been grossly exaggerated, if not altogether mythical. The war in that country, however, like so many of the "little wars" in which Great Britain has engaged, turns out to be a much more serious undertaking than was first supposed. The Mullah, or Mohammedan leader, has a thorough knowledge of the country, and knows how to choose suitable places for ambush, and also has the essential knowledge, the importance of which in that region cannot be exaggerated, of the places where water can be found. It will, therefore, not be astonishing if he is able to harass the British expedition, and to elude pursuit. The trouble appears to have arisen chiefly out of the arrangements for the security of the Cape to Cairo railroad. The Somali people had been friendly to the British, so long as no attempt was made to penetrate the interior, but it was well known that anarchy and civil war prevailed among the tribes. Abyssinia on the one side, and Italy on the other, were both concerned in the pacification and orderly government of the region, and were particularly anxious for the suppression of the fierce and desperate leader whom they called the Mad Mullah. Great Britain's interest culminated in anxiety for the safety of the projected railroad. With the support of Abyssinia, and the friendly co-operation of Italy the expedition was undertaken by Great Britain in 1901. The Mullah retired into his fastnesses and the expedition failed. A second expedition last year also failed. This year the expedition was planned in the hope of cutting off the Mullah's retreat on the north and on the west, which were his natural routes. The disaster to the British arms now reported, and later contradicted, is probably a more or less successful attempt of the Mullah to break through the cordon being drawn about him. It is evident from the hurried despatch of reinforcements, that the British Government miscalculated the strength of the enemy, and has discovered that a much larger force than that originally sent will be necessary for the accomplishment of its purpose. They are learning now a lesson which previous experience ought to have taught them, but which politicians of the type that often get into office are slow to learn, that it is never safe to underestimate the valor or resources of an enemy—a lesson inculcated three thousand years ago by the inspired King.

CAVALRYMAN IN SOMALILAND

Go not forth hastily to strive, lest thou know not what to do in the end thereof, when thy neighbor hath put thee to shame (Prov. 25 : 8).

Life in the Hidden City

At last a foreigner has penetrated to the hidden city of Lhassa, in Thibet, which many Europeans have vainly tried to enter. Professor Zybikoff, a Russian explorer, has just returned to St. Petersburg, after living in Lhassa for a year. Zybikoff is an enthusiastic Buddhist, and has so thoroughly mastered the dogmas of his faith, that even a Thibetan would not detect his foreign origin. He joined a caravan of pilgrims, who were going to Lhassa, to pay their veneration to the great Dalai, the supreme pontiff of the Buddhist world. He had no difficulty in entering the city in their company, and remained there, mixing freely with the people. His report strips the place of the romance with which mystery had invested it. It is a dirty place, he says, the food is abominable, and the city is grossly immoral. Polygamy and polyandry both flourish there, and the officials are utterly corrupt. The population is about ten thousand. In the centre, is the celebrated temple of Buddha, in which is a gigantic bronze image of the prophet, having on the head a golden crown. Court functionaries and priests make up the bulk of the population; but the chief source of its revenues are the pilgrims who go there to worship. It is a deplorable picture that he draws of a city, which is regarded by his co-religionists as the most sacred city on earth. The contrast between that and the ideal city of the Christian is significant:

And there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth; neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie (Rev. 21 : 27).

Not a Lunatic

The Court of Appeals has just reversed the decision of a lower court in a peculiar case. The relatives of a wealthy man sought to have him adjudged a lunatic, on the ground that a man and his wife with whom he lived, had acquired an ascendency over him, and induced him to give them a large part of his property. The jury decided that the man was weak minded, and consequently incompetent. Acting on this verdict the judge committed him as a lunatic, and against this proceeding an appeal was taken. It has been accepted by the Court of Appeals, which holds that a weak minded person is not a lunatic in the sense contemplated by the statute, and therefore that the verdict of the jury did not justify the action of the judge. "A person may be of weak mind," said the court, "and by reason thereof, easily influenced, or dominated by others; but he would not necessarily be of unsound mind." The distinction is probably legally sound. It is very certain that there are many persons who cannot escape responsibility on the ground of lunacy, who are losing their souls through foolish infatuation with evil associates:

A companion of fools shall be destroyed (Prov. 13 : 20).

Cousin of a King

The news of the massacre in Servia, and of the accession of Peter Karageorgevitch to the throne, had a personal interest for a citizen of New York. His mother, and the mother of the new king were sisters, and the king is consequently his first cousin. His father was a merchant in Belgrade, and in his youth he was a playfellow of the boy who is now spoken of as "His Majesty." Little prospect did there seem then of his becoming a king, and his American cousin finds it difficult to realize him in his new character. He sent him congratulations on his accession, but with the bluntness for which he is noted, he coupled with them an expression of regret that his path to the throne had been opened by murder. Some friends who knew the antecedents of the New York cousin, expected to find him elated by his relationship to royalty; but he surprised them by saying that he purposed keeping right on with his business, and that he would ask no favors from his cousin. Considering the perils which, as we have recently seen, menace, not only the Kings of Servia, but their relatives and friends, he is probably wise in his decision to remain here, and make no capital out of his relationship. He has the opportunity of gaining a much higher and better consecration in the privilege God offers to all who come to him through Christ.

The throne of the Lord is in heaven, and his servants shall serve him . . . and they shall reign forever and ever (Rev. 22 : 3-5).

Swept By a Flood

A catastrophe resembling the famous Johnstown flood of 1889, occurred at Oakford Park, Pa., about thirty miles from Pittsburg, on July 5. Oakford Park is a resort operated by the Pittsburg Railway Company. Pleasure-seekers made it a favorite haunt, and many newly married couples were generally among the visitors. Its most popular feature was a lake about half a mile long and a quarter of a mile wide, made by building a dam across several small streams which run through the valley. An unusually large number of visitors were at the resort to spend the Fourth, and many went on the following day. Late in the afternoon there was a thunderstorm, which drove the pleasure-seekers to shelter. Some of them went into the car barns and others into the restaurant, both of which buildings were in the valley, below the level of the artificial lake. While the storm was at its height there was a crash like thunder, and four feet of the dam gave way. The water rushed through the opening in a fierce torrent, carrying everything before it. Before the visitors could leave their shelter for higher ground the water was upon them, and nearly forty of them are believed to have been drowned. It was a terrible calamity, involving great loss of property as well as of life. It ought to set every public body having charge of such barriers as this that gave way, to examining them, lest they, too, have faults which may lead to disaster. It would be well, too, if, threatened as we are by the tides of sin which come to us from all quarters of the world, we strengthened the barriers that have hitherto protected us and claimed the promise that God has given:

When the enemy shall come in like a flood the spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him (Isa. 59 : 19).

SOLDIERS OF THE SOMALILAND EXPEDITION RESTING AFTER A MARCH

BRIEF NOTES

It is stated on the authority of a church statistician, who has kept careful account of the gifts of the progressive Protestant Christians of this land, that the latter contribute one dollar for the spread of the gospel to every one that they spend for luxuries and vanities.

Among the graduates at Princeton Seminary was a Japanese student for the ministry. Converted at home through the efforts of missionaries, and educated in America, he is to return to his fatherland as a messenger of the Gospel.

An Anti-Christian journal in India calls attention to the fact that the negligence of the wealthy natives in the matter of the widow and the orphan is standing in the way of Christianization and Uplift. It says: "Do not Hindus that Kayastha [a caste] have made away with their girls whom the rulers did not want much? Are not the Kayastha [a caste] the founders of a hospital for Christian females?"

According to the census returns from India for 1901, just published, there are 862,583 Protestant native Christians in that great country, and 1,934,124 Roman Catholic. Between these two the increase [illegible] decade was 1,000,000 [illegible] 1,078,578 to 1,862,583. The figures of the Protestant communities [illegible] were secured with 240,741. The Wesleyan Methodists [illegible] and the Lutherans [illegible] with 152,268.

The central conference of Jewish Rabbis of the United States, after a long discussion of the question of holding Sunday services on Sunday, as is practised by the Reformed Church, decided in favor of maintaining the holiness of Saturday as a necessary [illegible] effort to extend its observance. It was also decided to [illegible] consecrated the study and the observance of Sunday as a day of rest [illegible] has the support of the most influential leaders and [illegible] is increasing among the new comers.

Her Grandfather Was a "Signer"

Thanks, many and sincere, for the fine "Declaration of Independence" and Henry Mayer's colorful book. I assure you I shall have framed and the latter read with interest. You can appreciate my feelings when I tell you I found I became a "signer," was my great grandfather. I have an [illegible] also a print and ink copy of this valuable document and both are too rare to read on the wall without a magnifying glass. Yours is delightfully clear. Gratefully Your Friend, [illegible] Mass.

MRS. MARY BARTLETT RICHMOND.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Here is an inquiry that may interest many other subscribers, and the same answer will apply to all similar cases:

Will you accept two new six months' subscriptions, to date from the beginning of Mr. Sheldon's new story, at 50 cents. each, as advertised by you during the month of June? These subscriptions could not be taken before July 1st, the limit set by you, as the people were away in the country, and did not return until yesterday. When I told them about your offer to send either "Pearson's Magazine" or a facsimile of The Declaration of Independence, together with Henry Mann's Story of the Events that Led Up to it, and "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD" for six months, they were sorry that they had missed the opportunity. I promised them that I would write to you, and tell you at the same time that I did not expect for myself to get the reward which you promised for new subscribers in your generous offer.

Ans. Yes, we will accept these subscriptions, and you may select for yourself a copy of the Declaration and the Book, or a six months' subscription to "Pearson's Magazine." The new subscriptions must begin July 1st, which issue contains the opening chapters of Mr. Sheldon's new story.

C. E. S., Youngstown, N. Y. What is the opinion of Biblical students as to the ages of the antediluvian patriarchs? Is it thought that the years were of the same length as our years?

There is among scholars a difference of opinion as to whether the ages of the antediluvians were reckoned by lunar or solar years, but the general weight of opinion is in favor of the latter. We do not know the hymn mentioned in the last part of your letter.

Pitiful, Jersey City, N. J. If Judas was really the bad man we think him, why did he commit suicide?

He was undoubtedly overcome by remorse. It was suggested by DeQuincey, and with some plausibility that in betraying Christ, he was only trying to precipitate a crisis, out of which he expected to see Christ emerge triumphant. He thought Christ would use his miraculous power to save himself, and when in danger of death, would declare himself King, and would set up his kingdom, in which the disciples would hold high office. When he found that Christ intended to submit, he perceived that his scheme to force his hand, had failed, and he was overwhelmed by the catastrophe he had precipitated. The suggestion is not sustained by the conception we gain of him in the Gospels, but we can imagine an ambitious and avaricious man, acting in that way; if, as is possible, he was impatient with Christ who had powers so great, and yet was so slow to use them to advance his own interests, and those of the men who had left all, to follow him, he may have tried this scheme.

Reader, Donahoe, Texas. 1. Was the late Dr. Talmage a Presbyterian? 2. How and where did the first Christian teachers die?

1. A Presbyterian. 2. Matthew martyred in Ethropia; Mark martyred in Alexandria; Luke hanged on an olive tree in Greece; John died a natural death at Ephesus; James, the Great, beheaded at Jerusalem; James, the Less, beaten to death, Jerusalem; Philip hanged at Hierapolis; Bartholomew flayed alive by a barbarous king; Thomas killed with a lance at Coromandel; Jude slain with arrows; Simon Zelotes crucified in Persia; Matthias stoned and beheaded; Barnabas stoned to death at Salania; Paul beheaded at Rome. These are largely traditional.

Finest of Patriotic Souvenirs

"When will wonders cease?" Your latest premium, the facsimile of the Declaration of Independence, and "The History of Our Flag," are gems that should be in every patriotic family in this broad land of ours—the best patriotic souvenirs I ever have seen. The History leading up to the Declaration is very instructing.

HENRY M. FLANAGIN, M.D.
Penn's Grove, N. J.

Miss M. J. H., Columbus, O. Was the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, in Jerusalem, built by the Masons?

The generally accepted tradition is that about the year 300 the Empress Helena, the aged mother of Constantine, believing she had identified the place of Christ's crucifixion and of his rocky tomb, built the church which is still known as "The Church of the Holy Sepulchre."

E. G., Alma, Ont., Can. To test well-water (asked by M. A. B., Jamesville, N. Y.), fill a flask or other glass vessel with water to be tested, then add two or three drops of sulphuric acid; to this add enough of a solution of potassium permanganate to give the whole a purple tint. Set to one side for three or four hours in a warm place, and if solution loses its color organic impurities are present. Water that acts thus is unfit for use and if necessary to use it, boil it at least for half an hour. If ammonia is thought present, it can be detected by a solution of potassic iodide, in which a solution of mercuric chloride is added, until precipitate just ceases to be re-dissolved; then add an equal volume of strong solution of caustic potash. Allow solution to stand till clear; a few drops will give a yellowish red precipitate with even the slightest trace of ammonia.

SAMARITANS CELEBRATING THE PASSOVER ON MOUNT GERIZIM

From the top of Mount Gerizim, higher than Ebal, there is a magnificent view of the surrounding valleys and inferior mountains, including many villages. On the evening of the Passover, the Samaritans roast a lamb on the rocky ground of the eastern extremity. The illustration shows the priests preparing the lambs for the Passover.

Richards, Calumet, Mich. If a Jew becomes converted to the Christian religion, is he still a Jew? Or, in other words, can a man be a Jew and a Christian at the same time?

A Jew who embraces Christianity is known as a Hebrew-Christian. His belief is changed, but not his race; yet so intermixed with racial custom and usage is the faith of the Jew, that when he changes that faith, a great change in his manner of living necessarily follows. He could not cling to these old customs, if he became a Christian, because they would be wholly out of sympathy with his new faith. It may be said, therefore, that a man cannot be a Jew and a Christian at the same time.

They Are Worth the Subscription

Papers all received; also package containing facsimile of Declaration of Independence, with story of the same, also History of our Flag, for which I return thanks. Am much pleased with them, and shall prize them very highly. They are fully worth the subscription price of the paper.

Providence, R. I. I. E. WAKEFIELD.

C. C. B., Perth Amboy, N. J. Your friends in the country (I am one of them) may like to know just how to get to Mont-Lawn. Will you not kindly publish directions in (say) the next issue, and perhaps twice in subsequent ones of your paper? By what North River steamer or steamers? From what pier and at or near the foot of what street? On what days and hours of the week? Are stages running regularly from Nyack to Mont-Lawn?

The quickest way is to take train on the Northern R. R. of N. J., foot of Chambers or West Twenty-third streets, New York, or at the Erie Depot, Jersey City (trains run frequently), to Nyack, and there take stage to Mont-Lawn, two and a-half miles distant. Or if boat be preferred, take the S. S. Chrystenah at foot of North Tenth street, New York, 3.45 P. M. Stages can be taken at the boat dock Nyack to Mont-Lawn. Boat runs daily except Sundays. On Saturday the boat leaves at 2.30 P. M., foot West Twenty-second street, New York.

J. P. L., Exeter, Can. It is a fact practically undisputed, that the greater part of the disturbances in the United States originate with the foreign element. Those who criticise us ought to bear this in mind.

Amy E. S., Portersville, O. In an attic, among a lot of old books, I found a little book of poems, entitled The Poetical Works of Miss Landon, published, I think, by Henry T. Anners, Philadelphia. Can you tell me anything concerning Miss Landon?

She was an English poet, born in London, 1802. Her first poems appeared about 1820. She published several volumes of verse, and three novels. She married Governor Maclean, of Cape Coast Castle, in 1838, and died there a year later, of an overdose of prussic acid, taken for spasms.

We Are More Than Pleased

The "Declaration of Independence," with the book, came to hand in due time. We are more than pleased. My husband said he would give fifty cents for the pictures alone of those noble men, who so bravely signed the Declaration and fought for freedom. MRS. H. C. MEADSHER.
Leslie, Mich.

E. L. J. What should be the attitude of the Christian Church toward the society called Universalists?

Kindly and with brotherly affection. They entertain the hope that eventually all men, even the worst, will be brought into union with Christ and submission to God. In fact that all men will be saved in the end, though the process may be severe and with great pain. One wishes it might be true, and would be glad if there could be found Scripture to sustain such a hope. But no Universalist would encourage any sinner to postpone the acceptance of the offer of salvation. So, practically, they agree with other churches in preaching the Gospel, and in urging men to come to Christ in this life. Where they differ, is in telling the sinner that he will have to yield in the future and will then be accepted, while the other churches tell him that if he dies without accepting salvation, he will never have another opportunity. The usual ground of complaint against Universalists is that their teaching encourages a false hope.

Constant Reader, N. Y. We believe you can reach it by several lines of railroad or by trolley. Ask the agents.

Mrs. E. H. A., P. O. Box 144 Cutchogue, L. I., will supply any reader who may write to her, with a copy of the old hymn "Christ in the Garden."

Apropos of the use of Gospel texts in the street cars, Moses H. Sydenham, of Kearney, Neb., writes to THE MAIL-BAG:

Why not do the same in all our public schoolrooms of every grade, so that the hearts and minds of our young Americans may be trained while tender and plastic, to become noble characters and good Christian citizens of the Republic, being taught first the principles of the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, in connection with other knowledge and instruction, so that in after coming years they may not forget. Charts, or wall-rolls of the Ten Commandments and the Lord's Prayer in large letters should be displayed permanently on the walls of every schoolroom and taught by Christian teachers. Other short, plain Scripture texts or moral precepts might have a place also—such as, "Thou God Seest Me," "Shun Every Appearance of Evil," "If Ye Love Me Keep My Commandments," "Search the Scriptures," etc., etc. The wall rolls and mottoes or texts are very cheap, and can be procured of any of the publishing houses. I would be a wise policy for all Christian people to make it a special point to see their school officials and have such a system of education carried out.

Miscellaneous Questions

Reader, Hookstown, Pa. No; it is the authorized version.

H. A. S., Sprague, Conn. The pineapple grows on a low-set bush or plant, like a cactus, the fruit itself being the heart or core of the plant, with slender spikes radiating from it.

W. J. G., Los Angeles, Calif. We have never heard that cornet playing injures the voice, but it is quite possible. If you have a good voice, why risk it by cornet practice?

J. W., Berlin, Ont. If by "creek water" you mean a running stream, we should say that moderate bathing there in the hot season would be beneficial. There are many, however, who hold that fresh water bathing in midsummer, unless indulged in moderately is apt to be injurious.

Will Frame the Declaration

Dear Sir;—"The Declaration of Independence" and the book of great interest, were received this morning. I am greatly pleased with them, and hope to have "The Declaration of Independence" framed to hang in the school-house. I wonder how you can make such wonderful offers. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD itself is worth more than the money sent for all. EVELINE L. HILL.
Georgetown, Conn.

She Values the Declaration

The very fine premium (Declaration of Independence) came safe, and I am much pleased with it. Please accept my thanks. A. A. STANLEY.
Union, N. Y.

Our Household Circle

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

Letters and Love-Letters

WHAT a curious thing is the imperishability of a letter. Years after the writer is dead and forgotten, a letter, yellow with age, its ink dim, its folds falling apart, may rise up as alive in sentiment, as merciless to reference to statement, as accurate as to facts as if its date had been written yesterday. Spotless reputations have ere now been smirched and stained by the unearthing of that most fatal among human documents, an ordinary letter. Light has been thrown upon state secrets and a cold blast of air scattered the dust of royal closets, all through the discovery of letters concealed for a century or two. It would seem almost as if the vitality of the never-dying soul, supreme and triumphant over the dying body, asserted itself and took its defiant stand in a letter, a thing crawled by human fingers on so slight a stuff as parchment or paper.

. . .

Love-letters have been found between the folds of books, letters which by some wretched mischance never reached their destination. Phyllis, poor maid, pined away or else married the wrong man, because Stephen's letter never reached her hand, and years pass, and another maiden of the family reads the quaint missive that meant so much and achieved so little.

Angry letters indited in moments of vehement indignation have separated chief friends. Resentful words, spoken, had made only a superficial wound, but written, they pierced with a stiletto's stabbing sharpness deep beneath the tissues of self-love and they are never forgiven.

. . .

"Destroy my letters," wrote a brilliant woman recently to a life-long correspondent. "Since E.'s memoir has been published and her intimate letters have been spread out for everybody to read, I have taken fright. I don't want my letters put in a book after my decease."

By an odd coincidence, noted because the ink on this epistle was hardly dry, the recipient met a friend a few hours after who said casually, "You hear often from ——, do you not? Somebody should keep track of her letters. They will make a charming volume after she is gone!" The bulk of biographical literature is composed of letters, and it is interesting because the letters are unintentional revelations of those who wrote them, showing them as it were in undress, declaring their innermost feelings and exploiting their good sense or their folly. There is indeed something tragic about a letter, looked at as a document infused with at least earthly immortality.

Shall we have letters in heaven? Bunyan seems to have thought so, for in his all but divine dream, the post brought to Mr. Standfast, to Christian and others, the message summoning them to the Court of the King. And what is Revelation, that splendid succession of heavenly visions beheld by John the Beloved, but a succession of letters from the golden shore. If we need letters for our felicity there, where "the daylight is serene," be sure we shall have them.

Letters have a very singular individuality. By no chance, for instance, does a bill ever resemble any other letter. It probably arrives with other letters in the guise of friendliness, but it is more like a policeman in plain clothes than anything else one can think of. Demand on value received sticks out of it through the thickest envelope, and it lifts its front with a certain arrogant challenge, especially if the purse be low, and the debtor a spendthrift. One does not need to be a mind-reader to know at a glance which letter comes from an old college chum, which from a long silent friend, and which from the grocer.

There are the letters with black edges, sadly indicative of sorrow. Grief has visited the home. Here is its badge. And this aristocratic square or oblong envelope, smooth, creamy, and complacent, is the mercury of bliss; it brings a wedding announcement. This dear little letter, in careful, well shaped script, is a child's first effort, bless her precious heart and dimpled hands. Here is a husband's letter to the loving wife at home. Let us hope it is not signed "Aff yours," but is expansive and caressing and full of comfort to the lonely heart. A son's weekly letter to the old people on the farm, a mother's letter to her boy in town, an evident business letter properly addressed on the type-writer, a letter to one in prison, to one on a death bed, to or from one in a far country. Oh, the letters in the postman's bag, the mystery and romance and rippling laughter and muffled moan of agony, that are all crowded together in that heavy pack.

The moral of it is, if moral there be, take pains with your letter-writing. No idle business this, but serious and intense and worth doing with the very best you can.

Raising Money for Charities

"I never mind asking for money to do God's work," said a woman the other day. "I am not begging for myself when I am raising funds for charity."

"No," observed her friend, "but people treat you as if you were. No task is so hard and so thankless. Count me out when money must be raised, unless it is by means of a fair or an entertainment. Then people feel that they are getting something in return for what they give."

"I'd rather ask for the money outright. Those I ask have the liberty of refusal. If they say No, I proceed to somebody else. If they allow me to explain the needs of my cause, they generally give a contribution. Either way, I am not ashamed of doing my best."

GETTING IN THE HAY

No sign of rain, the laden carts
Are filled with fresh-cut hay,
The farmer and his men are glad,
This bright midsummer day.

BE BRAVE

BE brave, my soul: the coward drop
That pales my cheek would bid me stop
When glancing spears before me thrust,
Should trail my banners in the dust.
Oh, soul of mine, if thou would'st save
The wavering day, be bold, be brave.

What boots it that the hills are steep,
What matter that the low mists creep,
Who cares that foes in ambush throng,
Be brave, my heart, uplift a song,
When closest draws the hostile line,
Strike home, the victory shall be thine.

Know this, that never fell defeat,
That never shame nor swift retreat
Are his who plays the manful part,
In whom no traitor's fear can start;
Content to die, but not to yield,
Till heaven itself desert the field.

Be brave, from starry spaces far
Theery is heard, thy helpers are Invisible but hurrying on,
To crown thee when the fight is won.
Oh, heart of mine, where'er the strife,
Be brave. In courage is thy life.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Susanna Wesley

THIS summer all eyes have been turned toward the great founder of Methodism, John Wesley. He had a great mother. Susanna was a woman of most pronounced, if not of modern, views on the training of children. She had nineteen children of whom seven died in infancy. The nursery rule in the large family was according to regal. Implicit obedience was exacted and enforced as a law of God, as was the custom in most of the well ordered homes of that day.

Mrs Wesley taught her children to read and to do so from their early education. When they grew up she was their sponsor and confidante, and few mothers have had more remarkable children, for all were gifted, high spirited and remarkable. John Wesley and his brother Charles were the sweet singers of Methodism, the other six magnificent orator and organizer—are the best remembered.

Samuel Wesley, the ministerial father, was no weakling, but a man of parts and principle. His wife and he were not always agreed on subjects important to both, but they expressed themselves with candor and fearlessness, and did not quarrel.

Susanna Wesley is the mother of whom the story is told, that when her husband asked her, "Why have you told that child the same thing twenty times?" the patient educator pithily replied, "Because nineteen was not enough."

Committed to Memory

The emphasis of committing something to memory is on the verb. If one commits a deposit to a safe in the bank, it is there locked a combination lock, and may be had again on call. So it is with the Bible texts and chapters one learns by heart, as the old phrase runs, with the poetry one recites until the rhythm had fixed it in the brain, in brief, with anything at all that one entrusts to that obliging warden, memory. No faculty serves one better, if only one allows it to do its work.

Much luggage along the road may as well not be committed to memory. A memorandum book in the pocket and a list made out of engagements is a valuable accessory to the day, and saves bothering over what is transient. But in view of the rainy day of old age or infirmity, of blindness that may befall one, or deafness, of loneliness in a strange land, commit to memory's care some treasures which will help to cheat life of weariness bye and bye.

School Manual Training

At Asheville, North Carolina, in the Normal and Collegiate Institute, under the auspices of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions, the students not only acquire a thorough normal school course, but are carefully taught every needed branch of housewifery. The whole work of the school, except the scrubbing of the floors, is done by the pupils, who acquire the arts of home-making in a practical way, under competent instructors. I was there lately, and saw with my own eyes, one hundred and eight loaves of perfectly baked bread, drawn from the great oven. Cooking, sweeping, and laundry work, are carried on under skilful teachers, each set of girls, after six weeks of work in one department, changing work with another set. The manual training includes instruction in sewing. It helps rather than hinders the student to vary intellectual work with practical labor, in this way. Out from this school, ably managed by Rev. Dr. Lawrance, the graduates go to carry light and joy into many a lonely home in the mountains, often transforming a hamlet from primitive ignorance to a condition of knowledge, which is itself a revelation of what the little school ma'am may do when she is God's messenger, to those who need uplifting love.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—JAMES. Do not offer your arm to any woman unless she is ill, infirm, or blind.

—IRENE. A summer cold often hangs on with peculiar obstinacy. Try change of air and some hot toddy.

—MOLLY. Foolish you are to worry as you do. If you did you would not be so critical about her dress and her manners.

—ALICE. Flowers may be preserved for some days if set in a cool place at night, and put in fresh water every morning.

—A. A. Fault finding husbands, like other bad habits, seldom a bad habit, and complain when there is no need, sometimes become.

—EMILY. At your garden party have cool tea, coffee, lemonade, or hot chocolate, the sandwiches dainty and delicious. Watercress, very thin sandwiches and delicate cakes complete the menu very nicely.

—IDAN. Salads may be made of any kind of vegetables cut in cubes, laid in fresh lettuce, and dressed with oil and vinegar. Raw tomatoes, stuffed with chopped nuts and dressed with mayonnaise, are delicious as a salad.

THE NARROW GATE

by REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON, D.D.

Author of "In His Steps,"

CHAPTER III—Continued

DOUGLAS began his work Monday morning with a lively consciousness of impending events. Mr. Vernon brought in the copy of the letter, and Douglas turned it over to his helper to set up at once.

"I wish the Beacon had a circulation of a million copies, and that this letter could be read by five million people in the United States," said Douglass with emphasis.

"I wish the entire population could read it," Vernon replied. "Do you know what staggers me every day of my life as I think of the saloon business, is the apathy of the people. The most heart-breaking facts in lives of mothers and little children don't seem to move the public very much. I once showed a church full of people a list of horrors all due to drink, that I had clipped from the daily papers in one week, tragedies that put on the stage would make everybody shed emotional tears, and then, as usual, go home and do nothing, and that church full of people received the narrative of that list of horrors with the same indifference apparently that they would have shown to the reading of so many advertisements."

"The people yesterday were not indifferent," Douglas ventured to say.

"No, there's hope in that. I don't mean to be pessimistic. I'm not, either. Only it makes your heart ache sometimes to face the nominal Christianity which professes so much and does so little."

Douglas was on the point of asking him whether he expected opposition from some of his church people, but on second thought he kept silent, not wishing to suggest something which Mr. Vernon had not as yet mentioned. The minister went out after a hearty word of encouragement on the policy of the Beacon and a prophecy concerning its influence.

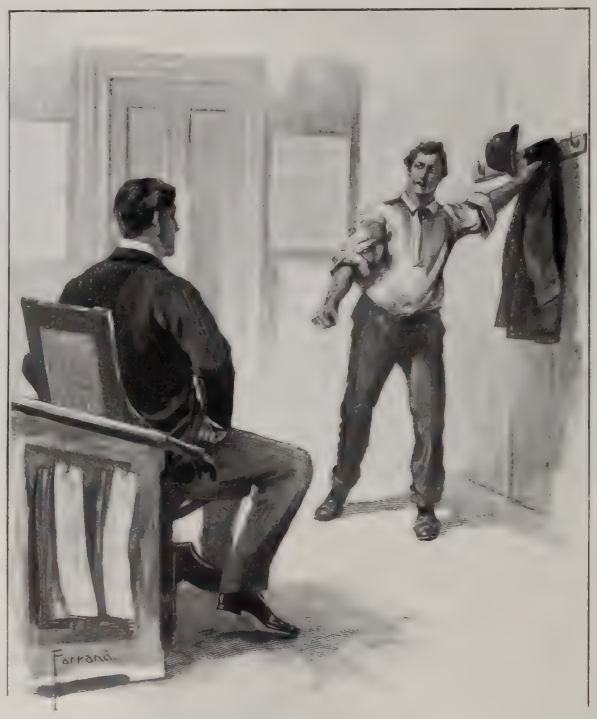
All through that day and the next Douglas worked energetically, feeling the pressure of the movement he had himself begun. He wrote up the service at the Methodist church, and gave a graphic picture of the scene when the applause began. In two brief but strong editorials, calling attention to Mr. Vernon's brave beginning, he commended his action in every way.

"The Beacon believes in that sort of preaching," one of the editorials concluded. "And we believe the Christian people of Colby will endorse Mr. Vernon in his outspoken declaration of war against the saloon and all it represents. Certainly all the mothers in Colby who heard that letter from the mother on that farm must feel responsibility for the safety of their own boys. The saloon is evil and only evil. It has not one redeeming quality. It is not a social necessity. It does not exist to supply such a purpose, and never had any other than to sell liquor to any one who had the price to pay for it. Its history proves it to be absolutely heartless and conscienceless. Every minister, every church, every business and professional man, every father and mother, ought to unite to destroy a common enemy of civilization, an enemy more dangerous than fire, or flood, or pestilence, or war, or all these things combined."

Mr. Edwards' prediction about the flood of mail Douglas would probably get on Monday was only partly true. The editor did receive a large number of letters, and by Wednesday night the number had increased to a very respectable mail for a country town editor. But while some of the letters were abusive and some ordered their papers stopped, nearly if not quite half of the letters were commendatory and encouraging.

On the whole, the letters proved very interesting reading. Thursday morning brought a fresh lot from the county precincts. Douglas was at his desk cutting open the envelopes, and noting with some satisfaction that a good many of them contained money-orders for subscriptions, when his attention was suddenly directed to the young man who had been his helper at the presswork of the paper.

His name was Coleman, and Douglas did not know him very well. He had worked as pressman on the paper before Douglas bought it and had been recommended to him by Cleary, the former owner.



"I HAIN'T GOIN' TO QUARREL," SAID COLEMAN, "BUT I'M GOIN' TO QUIT"

He came up to the desk where Douglas was sitting, and without any preface or explanation, he said abruptly:

"I'll have to leave you to-day, Mr. Douglas."

Douglas looked up in astonishment.

"Leave me to-day!"

"That's what I said."

"But the forms are not made up, and we go to press to-morrow!"

"Can't help that; I've got another job, and I've got to leave."

Douglas looked at him in growing astonishment and anger.

Then, for the first time since assuming charge of the paper, he lost his temper, and spoke sharply.

"You have no right to leave me this way without giving me notice!"

"It's a free country," Coleman answered coolly. "There's no rule about giving notice."

"Only the rule of common every-day courtesy, which evidently you don't possess," replied Douglas, sitting up in his chair very rigid, and looking at the tall pressman savagely.

"I hain't goin' to quarrel," Coleman answered slowly; "but I'm goin' to quit. You can get some one else in my place, I s'pose. I'm done with the Beacon."

He turned around, and started to walk over towards the corner, where he was in the habit of hanging up his hat and coat when he came into the office. Douglas swiftly recovered himself. He had not the remotest idea of the reason for the pressman's sudden action, and it had taken him completely by surprise. He got up and walked over towards the man. Coleman took down his hat and coat, and turned about to find Douglas near him.

"You haven't given me any reason for leaving."

"You haven't asked me for any."

"Then I will now. What are you leaving for?"

"For good."

Douglas took a step towards the man and came as near striking him in the face as he ever had been tempted to hit any one.

"Is it on account of the policy of the paper?"

"Don't care to say."

Douglas felt at sea. After a moment's thought, he said.

"Is it a question of wages?"

"Possibly."

"You've never said anything to me about it. You seemed satisfied with our arrangement. What reason have you to suppose I would not increase your pay if you had asked for it?"

The man hesitated a little. He put on his coat, and stood changing his hat from one hand to the other.

"I don't feel under any obligations to give reasons, Mr. Douglas. I've no quarrel with you and wish you well. But I have had a better offer elsewhere, and I've promised to take it."

"But do you think it's the square thing to leave me in the hole this way? I can't get out the paper without help. Can't you stay with me until the presswork is off, and give me time to look for another man?"

The pressman shuffled his feet uneasily. He did not meet Douglas' look, and as Douglas faced him, for the first time the editor of the Beacon noticed the shifty, cunning eyes that avoided his own.

"I've promised to go on my new job to-day. Sorry to disappoint you, Mr. Douglas, but I can't stay with you."

"You ought to have given me due notice," exclaimed Douglas, with another burst of anger.

The man made no reply, and started towards the door. Douglas glared around the office at the uncompleted work, and hurriedly tried to make an estimate of the amount of time it would take one man to get the forms ready. He choked down a sudden desire to give the pressman a vigorous statement of what he thought of him, and said good-naturedly:

"Look here, Coleman, you know as well as I do that no living man can get out the paper between now and Friday night without help. If the papers don't get to the office by that time, they will miss the mail route Saturday morning. The people in the country want the paper Saturday. If they have to wait till Monday, it will make them mad, and give the paper a black eye just as I'm starting in. Everything counts just now one way or the other. If you'll stay with me till Friday night, I'll give you ten dollars for the two days. Isn't that fair? I've paid you up to to-night, but I'm willing to make this extra, on account of all that's depending on the Beacon just now."

Coleman looked undecided for a moment. Then he turned and walked slowly out of the office, saying as he went out, "I'm sorry, Mr. Douglas, but I've promised to begin on my other job to-day."

"Where are you going? What job is it?" Douglas called out after him, anger rising again at the sight of the man's cool, deliberate indifference to all thought of justice or fairness.

"You'll know in time, if you don't know now," Coleman turned about for a second and spoke with an exasperating grin on his sallow face.

Douglas walked over to his desk and sat down there, resting his elbows on it and going over the situation This was something he had not counted on. It was a complete surprise, and it found him unprepared with an answer.

He was casting about in his mind for relief, wondering if another pressman could be found in Colby, and he had just started up to go and ask Mr. Edwards if he knew any one, when he was startled with a crash out of the office. He looked in the direction of the noise in time to see the office-boy sprawling on the floor, with the type from the pied form lying strewed around him in little heaps.

Copyright, 1903, by Charles M. Sheldon.

Douglas threw up his hands in despair. He ran over to where the boy sat rubbing his head, which had come in contact with the press, and shook him by the shoulder until his teeth rattled.

"What did you want to do that for?"

"I didn't want to do it," the boy snarled, half whining and half scared. "I didn't see that old casting."

Douglas looked at the old casting, which he thought had been laid away under the trimmer. One end of it projected beyond the machine so as to be directly between the table where the forms lay and the press. He kicked it to relieve his feelings, and the boy got up, still rubbing his head, and looking at Douglas with a grieved air as if he thought the only proper thing for Douglas to do was to apologize.

"This means an all-night job for somebody," Douglas exclaimed sharply. "Well, don't stand gawping there like an idiot! Pick up those type and distribute them. I suppose you've got sense enough to shove that casting out of the way without my telling you to."

The boy muttered something that was not exactly of a devotional character, and Douglas turned to meet Edwards, who had just stepped in.

"Hello! What you doing? Breaking up housekeeping?"

"Going into housekeeping!" Douglas answered grimly. "At any rate we are prepared to serve unlimited pi."

Edwards whistled. Then he looked around the office.

"Never rains but it pours. Coleman's gone I see. Heard of the move just made by Bartlett? They're starting a campaign sheet to beat out the Beacon, and they've got Coleman to do their press-work. Just heard of the plan and ran in to tell you of it."

"If you can spare time to talk over the matter a few moments, I'll be grateful," Douglas said gravely. "I'll be with you directly."

TO BE CONTINUED

No Sabbath

It would be difficult to find a more striking picture of a land where the Sabbath had been forgotten, than this, written by a Scottish printer:

"Think how the abstraction of the Sabbath would hopelessly enslave the working classes with whom we are identified. Think of labor thus going on in one monotonous and continuous and eternal cycle—limbs forever on the rack, the finger forever playing, the eyeballs forever straining, the brow forever sweating, the feet forever plodding, and brain forever throbbing, the shoulder forever drooping, the loins forever aching, and the restless mind forever scheming. Think of the beauty it would efface, of the merry-heartedness it would extinguish, of the giant strength it would tame, of the resources of nature that it would exhaust, of the aspirations it would crush, of the sickness it would breed, of the projects it would wreck, of the groans it would extort, of the lives it would immolate, of the cheerless graves it would prematurely dig. See them toiling and moiling, sweating and fretting, grinding and hewing, weaving and spinning, sowing and gathering, mowing and reaping, raising and building, digging and planting, unloading and storing, striving and struggling—in the garden and in the field, in the granary and in the barn, in the factory and in the mill, in the warehouse and in the shop, on the mountain and in the ditch, on the roadside and in the wood, in the city and in the country, on the sea and on the shore, on the earth in days of brightness and of gloom. What a sad picture would the world present if we had no Sabbath!"

The Tent "Evangel" Campaign

Gospel work in the tent "Evangel," in New York, continues, and the daily meetings are largely attended. The sermons preached by Drs. MacArthur, Shaw, Henson and others were of a high order. Rev. G. Campbell Morgan's sermon on a recent Saturday night was a remarkable one. A strong man stood on the platform, and melted the audience by the story of his conversion to God. Evangelist McPherson welcomes all ministers who preach Christ. Rev. Charles S. Morris, the colored orator, thrilled the audience by a fifteen-minute Gospel address. Mr. Charles Elliot Warren, Cashier of the Lincoln National Bank, New York, is Treasurer for the tent fund, and all contributions sent to him will be acknowledged.

DAVID A TYPE OF CHRIST

In his Anointing and his Discipline and Spirit

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

THE choice and the anointing of David are wonderfully typical of Christ. God's King (Ps. 2: 6). David's name means "beloved." he was a shepherd; and Christ is now the unseen Shepherd-King of his hidden people, whom the world knoweth not, "because it knew him not" (I. John 3: 1). But Christ is rejected now by the world and the external church, and the prince of this world reigns, just as King Saul reigned for many years over Israel after David was chosen and anointed. But all the weary waiting and struggle against Saul ripened David all the more for his vocation, as Christ in our human nature was made "perfect through sufferings" (Heb. 2: 10). Christ was anointed for his life on earth even when announced by the angel: "Unto you is born . . . a Saviour, which is Christ" (the Anointed), "the Lord" (Luke 2: 11). But more especially was he anointed for his ministry at the time of his baptism (Luke 3: 21, 22), and after this anointing he met the devil in the wilderness (wonderfully typified by David's encounter with Goliath); and he returned in the power of the spirit into Galilee (Luke 4: 14), and there told of the fulnilment of Isa. 61: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me" (ver. 18), and David's anointing was a type of his.

Samuel sees difficulties. At the command of God he had anointed Saul; he was Saul's subject: how, then, could he do what was high treason? "How can I go?" he says. "If Saul hear it, he will kill me." God is responsible for the consequences of all which he commands. The Lord was not angry with Samuel: it was a very real difficulty, and he gave Samuel the most detailed directions. "Take an heifer with thee, and say, I am come to sacrifice unto the Lord. And call Jesse to the sacrifice, and I will show thee what thou shalt do: and thou shall anoint unto me him whom I name unto thee. And Samuel did that which the Lord spake, and came to Bethlehem." He knew it was safe to trust his God. The people of Bethlehem, remembering, perhaps, the thunder and rain on the day of the wheat harvest, God's witness to the sin of Israel in desiring a king, were afraid, and said, "Comest thou peaceably? And he said, Peaceably; I am come to sacrifice unto the Lord. Sanctify yourselves, and come with me to the sacrifice."

Jesse seems to have understood the purpose of the prophet's visit, and he made his eldest son to pass before him. Samuel thought this must be the future king: "Surely the Lord's anointed is before me." But the voice of the Lord to him was, "Look not on his countenance, or on the height of his stature; because I have refused him: for the Lord seeth not as man seeth: for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart." Then Abinadab, then Shammah, then five more of Jesse's sons, passed, one by one, before him. "And Samuel said, The Lord hath not chosen these. . . . Are here all thy children?" And Jesse said, "There remaineth yet the youngest, and, behold, he keepeth the sheep." The youngest who does the work of the family; not counted amongst those whom his father presents on a great occasion, and yet this one is the Lord's choice. The world loves that which strikes the eyes, something or somebody who is imposing in appearance, and who makes an impression. How far is this from the thought of God! He would not have a repetition of Saul.

It was just because Jesus had "no beauty"—according to the eyes of men—"that they should desire him," that the people of Israel despised and rejected him. They wanted one whose pomp would vie with the Court of Rome. They wanted one who should resist evil: one who should value earthly glory; another Solomon. And they saw a man coming from the carpenter's shop, meek and lowly in heart, associating with the very poorest, touching the leper, allowing the vilest of women to weep over his feet, eating with publicans and sinners. One whose only might was over sin, sickness, sorrow, and death. And they despised his meekness and poverty of spirit; there was nothing in him that the world could pride itself upon; so they cast him out and crucified him.

If you want pictures, perfume, paper lace and cardboard, you can get them with toilet soap; but they only add to the selling price and do not improve the soap. Sometimes an elaborate wrapper is used to sell a poor soap. Ivory Soap is put up in a plain, unpretentious wrapper, but is the purest soap manufactured.

IT FLOATS.

SAVE YOUR SIGHT

By using the ANGLE LAMP, the most natural light science has produced. It burns kerosene, but far surpasses gas or electricity. The lamp is ornamental, practical and economical. A postal card will bring facts how to save money and your eyes. Don't delay, get catalogue "J" at once.

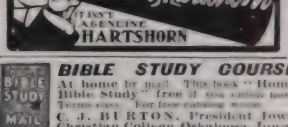
THE ANGLE LAMP CO.
NEW YORK

REAL ESTATE WANTED

For Hundreds of Cash Buyers.

The names and addresses of these Cash Buyers and many others in our monthly U. S. REAL ESTATE JOURNAL. These cash buyers are located throughout the United States and Canada. Send description and state lowest cash price, and your property advertised. If you have any real estate for sale or exchange you will find it to your interest to advertise in our Journal. Subscription price $1.00. The first Journal may call attention to many dollars in buying or selling. Sample Journal sent upon request.

U. S. Real Estate Journal, 55 House Block, Ilion, N.Y.



REDUCED TO $2.90
OHIO ROUND COOKERS
with extension trivet, copper bottom, four compartments, IX tinned tin plate. Former selling price $4.50. Fine for canning fruit; holds 10 quarts. Write for printed matter, giving full information, also 64-page Cook Book Free on receipt of 4 cts. to pay postage. Also makers of Ohio Blue Flame Wickless Oil Stoves. AGENTS WANTED.
OHIO ROUND COOKER CO.,
602 Jefferson Street, Toledo, Ohio

BIBLE STUDY COURSE
At home by mail. This book "Home Bible Study" free if you mention this Twenty years. For free catalogue write
C. J. BURTON, President Iowa Christian College, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

MAPLEWOOD
Near Cincinnati, Ohio.

Are You Deaf?
We have 25 KINDS OF INSTRUMENTS TO ASSIST HEARING
WM. V. WILLIS & CO. 124 East 14th Street, Chicago.

STARK TREES best by Test—78 Years
LARGEST NURSERY.
Fruit Book free. Want MORE SALESMEN PAY CASH Weekly
STARK BRO'S, Louisiana, Mo.; Dansville, N. Y.; Etc.

Agent's Outfit Free.—Delight Biscuit, Cake and Doughnut Cutter. Agent Outfit and Sample free. Large Catalog free. RICHARDSON M'F'G CO., Dept. 6, BATH, N.Y.

OUR HOME MUSIC CLASS

Sight-Singing in 12 Lessons

Prepared Especially for The Christian Herald

By B. C. UNSELD

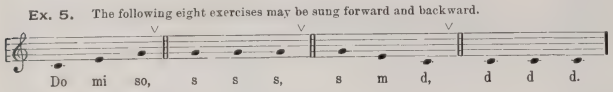
LESSON II.

The Tonic Chord.—The study of the foregoing explanations and the practice of the exercises are intended to make you intelligently familiar with the scale as a whole. Your next step is the study of each individual tone. The foundation tones of the scale, its three most important tones are those that form the tonic chord. A chord is a combination of tones that sound pleasantly together. Any three tones of the scale, taken in alternate order and sounding together make a chord. The most important chord in music is that built upon Do. It is called the chord of Do, or Tonic Chord.

2.—The tonic chord consists of the tones Do, Mi and So.

Careful practice of the following exercises will train you to know these tones. You must know them so well that you can sing them, without help, in any possible order in which they may be indicated. You do not really know them until you can do that. If you do not know enough about the piano or organ to play the exercises yourself you should get a friend to play or sing them for you until you learn them. Sing each group to the syllables printed under the notes, at first with the help of the instrument, or, if no instrument, then with the help of another person's voice; then sing them yourself without help. Repeat each exercise several times. Instead of printing the syllable in full, we let the letter d stand for Do, m for Mi and s for So.

Ex. 5. The following eight exercises may be sung forward and backward.



Ex. 6.

Ex. 7.

Ex. 8.

The above exercises are intended to be practiced with the instrument or other help; they are "patterns" which you are to imitate. The next exercises are to be sung without help of any kind; they are called reading exercises. If you sing them correctly you are reading music, singing at sight.

The terms "Key D," "Key F," and so on, tell you that the tone known on the instrument as D, F, and so on, is to be taken as the tone for Do.

Ex. 9. Key C.

Ex. 10. Key C.

Ex. 11. Key D.

Ex. 12. Key D.

For your next step, I would suggest that you try to "make-up" some exercises of your own, or get a friend to make them. For instance, taking number 12 as a model, draw on a sheet of paper a blank outline of the vertical lines, fill in the empty spaces with any arrangement of the tones Do, Mi and So, that you can think of; then sing what you have written.

Copyright, 1903, by B. C. Unseld

HINDRANCES*

Their Purpose and How They May be Overcome

ONE of the most notable features of the passage associated with the topic is Paul's conception of Satan engaged in useful work. This thorn in the flesh he regarded as a messenger from Satan, sent to buffet him, lest the privileges he had enjoyed should unduly exalt him. Whatsoever it was, it was a trial to him, so irksome that he prayed three times that it might be removed. Nevertheless, he recognized that it was sent with the definite purpose of checking the development of his most conspicuous fault. That Satan could have had any such purpose in view we cannot suppose. The apostle's meaning appears to be that Satan simply desired to vex and annoy him and curtail his usefulness. The useful purpose must be attributed to God, who perceived that the trial, sent with evil intent, might prove a benefit to his servant. He, therefore, instead of removing the trial, as Paul asked him to do, allowed it to continue, and gave him special grace to bear it.

This view of affliction is one that may prove consolatory to other afflicted souls. How frequently we are puzzled by just such a mystery as that in Paul's life. Some man might be so useful if he were not handicapped by poverty, or by some physical defect, such as poor eyesight, or lameness, or some recurrent sickness. We wonder that God does not remove the hindrance and let his servant do more effective work. The sufferer himself wonders, and is sometimes tempted to doubt whether God loves him, seeing that he permits him to be so hampered in his work. But the apostle's theory removes such doubts. It suggests that the trial is in fact a proof of love. It shows that God is perfecting character and is strengthening his servant to bear the perfecting process. Hindrances of that kind are better not overcome, but borne with cheerful submission and with a sincere desire to gain from them the benefit they were sent to confer. But there is a sense in which they may consistently be surmounted. If the sufferer accepts his lot, recognizing the wisdom of the discipline, not making it an excuse for idleness, but doing the best it is possible to do in the circumstances, he fulfils God's purpose, and proves the power of the grace that has been provided.

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society and Baptist Young People's Union for Aug. 2. II. Cor. 12:7-10; 10:10.

REMEMBERING CHRIST*

An Inspiration and an Invigoration in Conduct and Service

HOW much of strength, and patience, and beauty of character might be gained by following the apostle's advice to his young protegee. There is no crisis in life, in which we should not behave well, if, with sincere desire to imitate, we remembered the Lord Jesus. We should be helped, by remembering what he was. It is remarkable how he attracted men and how many-sided his character was. Nicodemus came to him, and heard truth appropriate for him; Zaccheus sat at his feet, and received truth that transformed his life; the woman of Samaria was overcome by his words; the woman that was a sinner, was melted into tenderness by his compassion, and the disciples, of character so diverse, forsook all to follow him. Yet, he never stooped to flatter or to cajole men into his Kingdom. He frankly told them that if they followed him, they would have to suffer poverty, persecution, and the loss of friends. It must have been a marvelous personality, even veiled as it was. Would it be possible for any man so to attract others, so to help the sufferer and the sinner? No man can do so much, but there is no man who could not do more than he does by following his example. The patience, the tenderness, the compassion he displayed, might be practised, and the results would be amazing. No mere man could exercise his power, but we do not yet know what power might be placed at the disposal of a man of strong faith. Christ himself said that it might remove mountains, and assuredly it might be given in such measure as to remove unbelief and overcome the world.

Then, too, how much might be gained by remembering what he is. We cannot believe that his character has changed. The repentant sinner can remember him still and take courage. The tried and the persecuted, remembering that he is still the observant and sympathetic Being, that he was upon earth, can gain fortitude. The timid and the weak, remembering him, can receive physical and moral courage. All power, he said, was given to him, and whatsoever his people asked, he would do. Therefore, to remember the Lord Jesus is to lose all cowardice, all selfishness, all bitterness, and to be changed into the same image.

*Topic of the Epworth League for August 2. II. Timothy 2:8 (R. V.).

Where Christian Workers Rest

The Elim Home, at Bell Island, South Norwalk, Conn., a favorite resting-place for returned missionaries, and Christian workers, is again open, under the superintendence of Rev. William James. In past years, many overworked Gospel workers who were poorly paid, have been received at the Elim, and nursed back to health and strength there. The delightful attractions of the place, and its health-giving sea breezes, are widely appreciated. Mr. James is arranging to give a number of excursions for working mothers and little children, from the New York tenements. The Elim is supported by voluntary contributions, which will be acknowledged by Mr. James, who may be addressed at Bell Island, South Norwalk, Conn.

"A Wonderful Book"

The Hall of Fame is a wonderful book, and we can't see how you can give it for so little money. "The Family Art Gallery" is a rich and valuable present. BENJ. M. PEARNE.

This book, with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, $2. The "Family Art Gallery" free to all subscribers.

MELLIN'S FOOD FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS

TRADE MARK

FOOD

Fretful babies become calm and peaceful babies when fed on Mellin's Food. Mellin's Food nourishes.

A sample of Mellin's Food costs you nothing but the asking. Will you not then ask for it for your baby's sake?

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

Reduced Prices on Suits, $6.67 to $20.

EVERYTHING MADE TO ORDER

THIS reduced price sale will last only four weeks longer, so act at once if you wish to take advantage of it. Suits and Skirts made to order (nothing ready-made) at one-third less than regular prices; perfect in fit, finish and workmanship. All of these goods are suitable for early Fall wear.

Handsome Suits and Etamine Costumes $6.67 former price $10

$12 Suits reduced to $8.
$15 Suits reduced to $10.
$20 Suits reduced to $13.34.
$25 Suits reduced to $16.67.
$30 Suits reduced to $20.

Rainy-Day and Dressy Skirts in new models, $3.34, former price $5.

$6 Skirts reduced to $4.
$7.50 Skirts reduced to $5.
$10 Skirts reduced to $6.67
$12 Skirts reduced to $8.

Reduced prices on Jackets, Traveling Dresses, etc.

Catalogue, Samples and Bargain List sent free by return mail. If the garment which we make for you does not prove satisfactory, send it back promptly and we will refund your money. Orders can be filled with the greatest promptness; very often in three days' time. Write to-day and don't fail to say you wish Summer Catalogue No. 63 and Reduced price samples.

Our NEW FALL CATALOGUE, ready August 24, will be the handsomest fashion publication of its kind ever issued. It will illustrate stylish Suits from $8 to $40, Jackets from $7 to $30, Church and Visiting Costumes, Separate Skirts, etc. Every well-dressed woman should have one. Write now and we will mail you a copy FREE, together with a full line of new Fall samples as soon as ready. Be sure to say you wish the NEW FALL CATALOGUE No. 64 and samples.

NATIONAL CLOAK AND SUIT COMPANY
119 and 121 West 23d St., New York.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO. 5% PER ANNUM

Safety First, Then Fair Returns. You Can Safely Get 5%

OUR patrons' funds are invested in such real estate securities as no individual small investor can get. They are guarded by the supervision of the New York State Banking Department—by a

Capital and Surplus of . $1,100,000
Assets of $1,600,000

Funds withdrawn at pleasure—earnings reckoned from date of receipt to date of withdrawal. Full particulars, with letters of endorsement and commendation from eminent men will be sent on request. Write us.

Industrial Savings & Loan Co.,
1131 Broadway, New York.

Dr. Lyon's
PERFECT
Tooth Powder

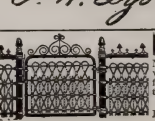
Used by people of refinement for over a quarter of a century

PREPARED BY

I. W. Lyon, D.D.S.

DISTINCTIVELY a S. S. Book 30c. postpaid. GEMS OF SONG
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

CHEAP RATES California, Washington, Oregon, Colorado. We secure reduced rates on household goods of intending settlers to the above States. Write for rates. Map of California, FREE.
TRANS-CONTINENTAL FREIGHT CO, M, 325 Dearborn St, Chicago.



LAWN FENCE

Many designs. Cheap as wood. 32 page Catalogue free. Special Prices to Cemeteries and Churches. Address COILED SPRING FENCE CO.
Box D. Winchester, Ind.

A Notable Service

OUR readers, who have done, and are doing so much for the people of India, will be glad to hear of a special achievement, which has in it the promise of far-reaching beneficence of a kind most urgently needed in that country. It is a well known fact that thousands of lives are lost every year in India which might be saved, if properly qualified physicians were called in to treat the cases. It is a pathetic fact that a large proportion of the unfortunate sufferers are women. In their cases, even when a white physician is accessible, social prejudice prevents his being allowed to visit and prescribe for the patient. So it has come about, that many a woman goes through life, suffering continual pain, and many die, who might be easily cured if they lived in this country, where they could be intelligently treated. The supreme need was for a native woman, trained in medical science. If such a female doctor were also a Christian, able to minister to the soul as well as the body, what magnificent opportunities of service would he hers!

MISS SONUBAI KESKAR

As is already known to some of our readers, just such a girl has been found in Miss Sonubai Keskar. She is the daughter of a Christian native physician of Sholapur, in the Bombay Presidency, and is not only an exceptionally bright, intelligent girl, but a sincere and devoted Christian. She came to this country, feeling sure that there was no place on earth where she would get so high and thorough a medical education as here. The girl made progress in her studies, and her teachers predicted for her a brilliant career, if she could only complete her course. She was, however, absolutely without funds for her college expenses, and even for her personal support.

It seemed inexpressibly sad that so fine an opportunity for Christian usefulness in India should be missed for lack of the small sum necessary to enable Miss Keskar to complete her studies, obtain her diploma, and go back to India to minister to the bodies and souls of her afflicted sisters. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD therefore explained the situation to some among its readers who had taken an interest in the people of India, and we are now happy to announce that a number of them have pledged themselves to provide the needed amount. They have agreed to furnish the money as it is required, some giving more than others, but the aggregate sufficient to cover the total sum needed. Following is the list of the names of the subscribers who have joined in this Christlike undertaking:

Rev. Chas. Philips	Harold H. Sayre,
S. O. Smith	Mrs. Herbert Du Puy
Dr. Talbot Jones	J. H. Gehr
E. P. Gates	Leola J. Little
C. M. Johnson,	John W. Sibley
Wm De Pree & Bro.	D. F. Easton
Leonard Hillis	Miss Jane Lowry
S. P. Kane	Miss K. L. Walburn
T. J. Armstrong	E. Glover Mansfield, Jr.
J. A. Glenn	Miss Huldah Anske
H. F. Musser	J. C. Hartwell
W. H. Woods	Miss Josephine W. Cole
J. D. Mark	Mrs. A. W. Parker
S. E. Finley	Miss Mary Rankin.
Miss S. M. Mills	Geo. R. Shaw
"Sisters"	Miss Edith M. Murray
H. W. Brinckerhoff	Mrs. Mame Boyd
Miss Emlie F. Barry	Miss J. B. Kingsley
Mrs. W. F. Davis	Mrs. J. C. Francis
Mrs. Jane Cosgrove	Miss F. Fischer
Geo. E. Gamble	R. Horley
P. B. Thomas	Mr. H. N. Niles

Contributions have also been received for the purpose from the following:

D. C. Converse	Lorina Smith Dempsey
Frances Garratt	Miss J. E. Baird
Mrs. Thomas Dunning	L. W. Felter
Nettie Ore	Joseph Taylor
H. B. Kellogg	Mrs. W. T. K.
Mrs. Joseph Dixon	Mrs. R. W. Williams
Samuel Clelland	R. Horley

DUNCAN CLARKE

Champion of Michigan

A "Money King" Among Boys

HE IS a "Captain of Industry"—a little "Money-King" among his playmates. In controlling trade he is as shrewd as the money-kings of the "grown-ups." And his profits are in proportion. Over $50.00 in Prize Money alone from The Saturday Evening Post within three months is his record.

He began by making a clean sweep of his block, getting everybody possible to sign an order directing him to deliver for four successive weeks. Street by street he canvassed his part of town with such success that all his boy friends were excited about it, and wrote to us clamoring to be agents. But Master Duncan had thought this problem all out for himself long before. He figured that we would not be apt to take chances on new boys to compete against him, if he could sell at the rate of 50 copies a week. So he wrote us a letter, requesting control of the whole town—knew he "could sell unassisted all the copies the people would buy"—wanted us to refuse all other boys; said he could "beat all of them put together, anyway," and wound up by inclosing a cash deposit to pay in advance for fifty copies a week for several months, just to show that he "meant business."

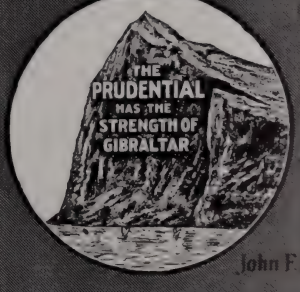
We complied with his request to refuse to sell to the other boys. Since then he has sold an average of 100 copies a week for almost a year. His town, lying in the copper country of the upper peninsula of Michigan, has been built four years and has just 750 inhabitants, and he is ten years old.

In a Dainty Little Booklet which we will send to any boy free, twenty-five out of more than six thousand bright boys tell in their own way just how they have made a success of selling THE SATURDAY EVENING POST. Pictures of the boys—letters telling how they built up a paying business outside of school hours—interesting stories of real business tact.

Some of these boys are making $10 to $15 a week. You can do the same. NO MONEY REQUIRED TO START. We will furnish ten copies the first week free of charge, to be sold at five cents a copy. You can then send us the wholesale price for as many as you find you can sell the next week. IF YOU WILL TRY IT WE WILL SEND THE COPIES AND EVERYTHING NECESSARY.

$225 in Extra Cash Prizes will be distributed Next Month among boys who sell FIVE or more copies weekly.

The Curtis Publishing Company, Boy Department, 403 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.



Life Insurance for Protection and Profit.

The Prudential

John F. Dryden, Pres't. Insurance Co., of America. Home Office Newark, N. J.

Write for Information, Dept. 76

WORSTED THE FLEISHER'S BEST YARNS

You will insure lasting satisfaction in your handiwork by using

Fleisher's Yarns

The spinning is exact; the thread even, lofty and elastic.

Anything you crochet or knit will be soft and elastic, yet hold its shape always.

And so even is the dyeing that you can match any shade any time. Absolutely fast color.

You can tell the genuine by the trade-mark ticket shown above.

Knitting Worsted,
Shetland Floss,
Spanish Floss,
Dresden Saxony,
Germantown Zephyr, etc.

New Knitting and Crocheting Manual, mailed for five tickets from Fleisher's Yarns and 2 cents for postage.

S. B. & B. W. FLEISHER,
Incorporated,
Department B, Philadelphia.

ZOBO
CORNETTO
The Musical Wonder
Solid metal (brass finish)
Sample sent prepaid for 25c.
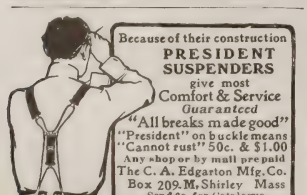
You Can Play it on Sight Without Being Taught
Entertains Everybody Everywhere
Free Zobo Entertainments for Home, Church and Sunday School sent on receipt of name and address.
Strauss Mfg. Co., 138 W. 14th St., Dept. 19, New York



Because of their construction
PRESIDENT SUSPENDERS
give most Comfort & Service
Guaranteed
"All breaks made good"
"President" on buckle means "Cannot rust" 50c. & $1.00
Any shop or by mail prepaid
The C. A. Edgarton Mfg. Co.
Box 209, M, Shirley Mass
Send 6c. for Catalogue

SALESMEN & AGENTS WANTED.
NEW INVENTION. Big Wages to men and women at home or traveling, selling and appointing agents. Wonderful seller. Everybody buys. No toys or novelties retails $3.50 up. Mr. Gleason made $1,777 first year. Mrs. Howard $59.00 one week. New plan and offer FREE.
WORLD MFG. CO.,
943 WORLD BLDG., CINCINNATI, O.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY	Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN	Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS	Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK	Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR, ECKSTEIN	Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC, BRADLEY, BROOKLYN, JEWETT, ULSTER, UNION	New York.
SOUTHERN, SHIPMAN	Chicago.
COLLIER, MISSOURI, RED SEAL, SOUTHERN	St. Louis.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO	Philadelphia.
MORLEY	Cleveland.
SALEM	Salem, Mass.
CORNELL	Buffalo.
KENTUCKY	Louisville.

IF there is an impression in the minds of any that Mixtures of White Lead and Zinc are better than Pure White Lead, it has been created by the manufacturers of the Mixtures, because a much larger profit can be made from the sale of these than by grinding and selling either White Lead or Zinc pure.

If interested in paint or painting, address

National Lead Co., 100 William Street, New York.

Colorado and return
$30

For first-class round-trip tickets from Chicago on sale daily. Correspondingly low rates from other points.

Only one night en route Chicago to Denver via the

Colorado Special

The Best of Everything.

Leaving Chicago 6.30 p. m. daily; with buffet-smoking cars, Booklovers library, drawing-room sleeping cars, dining cars and free chair cars through to Denver.

A second fast train leaves 11.30 p. m. daily and provides additional service of Pullman tourist sleeping cars with berth rate only $2.50.

Chicago, Union Pacific and North-Western Line

All agents sell tickets via the Chicago & North-Western and Union Pacific Rys.

W. B. KNISKERN, Chicago, Ill. E. L. LOMAX, Omaha, Neb.

CS30

Rider Agents Wanted
in each town to ride and exhibit sample bicycle
'03 Models high grade $9 to $15
1901 & '02 Models, best makes $7 to $10
500 2ND - HAND WHEELS
all makes and models good as new $3 to $8.
Great Factory Clearing Sale. We ship on approval and 10 day's trial without a cent in advance.
EARN A BICYCLE taking orders for us. Write at once for bargain list and our wonderful special offer to agents. Tires, equipment, sundries, half price.
AUTOMOBILES Bargains in new and second hand Autos and Motor Cycles. All makes and styles. If interested write for Automobile Catalogue.
MEAD CYCLE COMPANY, Dept. 64K CHICAGO, ILL.

NEWTON'S HEAVE, COUGH, DISTEMPER AND INDIGESTION REMEDY. A veterinary specific for wind throat and stomach troubles. Strong Recommends. $1.00 per can. Dealers. Mail or Express paid.
Newton Horse Remedy Co., Toledo, Ohio.

In a world where "Cleanliness is next to Godliness" no praise is too great for SAPOLIO

When Golfing, Shooting, Fishing use

HORLICK'S MALTED MILK

A delicious, satisfying food-drink—in powdered form instantly prepared with hot or cold water. Also in tablet form, either natural or chocolate flavor—ready to be eaten as a quick lunch. A compact, strength-giving, emergency ration for the sportsman, athlete, and traveler. Made of pure, rich milk from our own dairies, and the extract of selected grain, malted by our special process

Used and sold everywhere—all druggists.

SAMPLE If you are not using it now, let us send you our unique Shakespearean Booklet and a trial package, postpaid, FREE

Horlick's Food Co., Racine, Wis. U.S.A.
94 Farringdon Road, London, Eng. 25 St. Peter Street, Montreal, Can.

ALLEN'S FOOT-EASE

Shake Into Your Shoes Allen's Foot Ease, a powder for the feet. It relieves painful, swollen, smarting, nervous feet, and instantly takes the sting out of corns and bunions. It's the greatest comfort discovery of the age. Makes tight-fitting or new shoes feel easy. It is a certain relief for ingrowing nails, sweating, callous and hot, tired, aching feet. We have over 30,000 testimonials. "So Easy to Use." TRY IT TO-DAY. Sold by all Druggists and Shoe Stores, 25c. Do not accept an imitation. Sent by mail for 25c. in stamps.

FREE TRIAL PACKAGE sent by mail.

MOTHER GRAY'S SWEET POWDERS, the best remedy for Feverish, Sickly Children. Sold by Druggists everywhere. Trial Package FREE.
Address, ALLEN S. OLMSTED, Le Roy, N. Y.

A GRAND INVENTION!

Famous Puritan Water Still. Over 72,000 already sold. Placed over the kitchen stove, it purifies the foulest water. Removes every impurity. Furnishes delicious distilled Pure Water. Beats filters. Saves lives and Dr. bills. Prevents Typhoid Malaria, other fevers, sickness. Only safe water for children. Write for Booklet and testimonials free. Agents Wanted—Men and Women—Big Wages.

Harrison Mfg. Co., 667 Harrison Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

LOOKING FOR SAFE INVESTMENTS

Will remind you of the WILLIAM R. COMPTON 5 per cent. Mortgages. Recommended by financiers of national reputation. Book free.
Address, No. 5 WARDELL BUILDING, MACON, MO.

Water is Free!

But it won't take the pain out of a burn; it won't heal a wound; it won't take the ache out of rheumatism, neuralgia, etc. POND'S EXTRACT will. It will do it almost instantly. The claim that ordinary witch hazel is "just as good" or "just the same" as POND'S EXTRACT needs but a mite of consideration to prove its falsity. Ordinary witch hazel is nearly all water. That's why you can get so much for so little—because water is free.

POND'S EXTRACT is the pure extract of Hamamelis Virginica—that's why it costs more; that's why it's famous. If you want water, get it at the pump—it's cheaper and safer. If you want relief from pain—any pain, insist on getting POND'S EXTRACT. Always sold under original label.

Sold everywhere.

WANTED
a Man with a Memory

WANTED—A YOUNG MAN TO FILL A RESPONsible position at a liberal salary; must be neat in appearance and have a good memory; good chance for rapid advancement. Address C 41, Tribune.

WANTED—A MIDDLE-AGED MAN, ONE WHO has had some experience in book keeping with Every day, on every hand, employers are demanding that employes have good memories, to make sure that they are efficient, capable, and trustworthy.

A Failing Memory
is the first evidence of Mental Decay.

No matter what your position in life may be, a good memory cannot fail to be of inestimable value to you. It is absolutely necessary to success. The poorest memory may be developed and strengthened by proper training, just as the muscles are developed by a proper course of physical exercise.

The Pelman System of Memory Training

is taught in six languages. Requires only a few minutes daily and is so simple a child can master it. Mr. Pelman's book

"Memory Training: Its Laws and Their Application to Practical Life," and
"The Natural Way to Learn a Language."

Mailed FREE. Write right now—before you forget.

The Pelman School of Memory Training, 1670 Masonic Temple, Chicago.

LONDON, 4 Bloomsbury St., W. C.; PARIS, Ave de Neuilly, 9; MUNICH, Mozartstr., 9; MELBOURNE, P.O., Box 109; DURBAN, Natal, Lyon Bldg.

SCALES

FREIGHT PAID BEST QUALITY
LOWEST PRICE
ON TRIAL. ALL SIZES. FREE LIST.
JONES BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

The Natural Body Brace advertised in this paper in the first issue of this month, is a delightful, certain remedy for ailments peculiar to women and girls. It makes walking and work easy; gives good figure and light step. Write the Natural Body Brace Co., Box 171, Salina, Kan., for free illustrated book.

SUBSCRIPTION
$1.50 PER ANNUM

NEW YORK ≡ MAGAZINE NUMBER ≡ JULY 29, 1903

VOL. 26 NO. 30
PRICE 5 CENTS

CHRISTIAN HERALD

A July Afternoon by the Lake, in Central Park, New York

WE HAVE USED

ESKAY'S FOOD

and you can see the results

At three months these twins were put on Eskay's Food, when one was in a critical condition from lack of food that nourished. At fourteen months they are strong, healthy and perfectly developed and each has fourteen teeth, which came without the least trouble.

ESKAY'S FOOD—THE HOT WEATHER FOOD

Mrs. Sarah Weaver, Chelsea, Mass., writes: "My twin babies have received wonderful benefit from Eskay's Food. We tried nearly every other food but nothing else was satisfactory. We have used Eskay's Food for some months now—and during the hottest weather the babies are growing stronger and constantly increasing in size and weight."

ESKAY'S FOOD IN CHOLERA INFANTUM—A well-known Ohio physician writes: "I was hurriedly called to a case of Cholera Infantum not long ago, where I found the child cold and with a bluish pallor, profuse watery discharges and persistent vomiting, and, as I thought, dying. I prescribed ESKAY'S ALBUMENIZED FOOD exclusively, which it retained. At the end of three days it was dismissed greatly benefited, with directions to continue the Food. I consider Eskay's a very valuable Infant Food."

Our helpful book for mothers and all who have the care of children, "How to Care for the Baby"—free on request—with generous trial sample of ESKAY'S FOOD.

SMITH, KLINE & FRENCH CO. - - - - 427 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Oldsmobile

"Nothing to watch but the road."

"The Best Thing on Wheels."

All Over the World

Ten thousand drivers are using the Oldsmobile—the car with a record. You see it everywhere.

Price $650.00

The leading automobile dealers in every city sell the Oldsmobile. Our selling agent will gladly take you for a trial trip and show you how the Oldsmobile "goes."

Write for illustrated book to Dept. O.

Olds Motor Works, Detroit, Mich. Factories, Detroit and Lansing

Even Better than Announced

IN our issues of July 8th and 22d, respectively, we announced that The Twentieth Century World-Wide Encyclopedia contained about eight thousand pages. In that we were mistaken. We are now informed that the 12 large volumes constituting this superb work, contain, counting maps and inserts, about 9,500 pages. The sets not yet spoken for, are still offered at the following exceptionally low figures:

$13 if Paid by Cash accompanying Order.
$14 if Paid $2 Down and $2 a Month for Six Months.
$15 if Paid $1 Down and $1 a Month for 14 Months.

Everything Large and Clear

Remember that these are large volumes, that they are twelve in number, that they contain over 9,000 large pages, that the type used is large and clear, that the margins are wide, that they are beautifully and artistically bound, that they are safely and securely boxed, that they are put Free on board cars, and that the Purchaser Pays the Freight Charges.

The Greatest Opportunity Ever Offered

The set requires shelf-room thirty-three inches long, ten and a-half inches high, and weighs over forty pounds. This is your greatest opportunity. Embrace it to-day, for to-morrow may be too late. Money refunded if not entirely satisfied.

The Christian Herald Book Dept.

BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY

Send full shipping directions with order, and be sure to give your freight station

THE CREAM OF DR. TALMAGE'S SERMONS

ABOUT two years before the death of Dr. T. DeWitt Talmage he completed the work of revising the Best Sermons of His Life, and these were published in twenty generous volumes, each volume indexed and cross-indexed separately, and then the whole twenty indexed in its entirety. The price was $20 for the set, and the demand was instantaneous. About four months ago we advertised a number of slightly damaged sets at half price, namely, $10. At present we have still a few sets left, and we would like to close them out promptly in order to make room for new premium books. Every volume is absolutely perfect as far as contents are concerned, and nearly every volume is every whit whole.

At Only Half the Regular Price

Eight Thousand Pages of Dr. Talmage's best sermons, all thoroughly indexed according to persons, places, things and subjects, with a wealth of anecdote unequalled by the sermons of any other pulpit orator since the earthly ministry of the Great Preacher Himself, offer an exceptional opportunity which no Minister of the Gospel, no Sunday School Superintendent, no Sunday School Teacher, no Class Leader, no Exhorter, should fail to embrace.

Ten Dollars Cash, or Twelve Dollars in instalments of One Dollar Monthly, buy these twenty beautiful and serviceable volumes, delivered, securely boxed, free on board cars, New York City, freight charges payable by the purchaser. Money refunded if not entirely pleased. Only a few left.

The Christian Herald Book Dept.

BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY

NEW YORK, JULY 29, 1903

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

In the Land of the Tattooed Women

By MISS JESSIE ACKERMANN

A WIDE and interesting field for the ethnologist may be found on the North Island of Japan, where the small remnants of a once sturdy and numerous race are trying to resist the pressure of civilization, and live according to their own ideas and customs. Whether these people are descendants of the cave-dwellers of Southern Europe, as many are inclined to believe, or whether they were the first inhabitants of the Island of Japan, as the history of that country asserts, will probably never be known. But there they are, remote from the usual line of travel, little known to the outside world, but so full of interest, and withal so harmless, that even a hurrying American can afford the time required to visit Yego.

MISS JESSIE ACKERMANN

Small steamers connect the island with the mainland, and those engaged in coast trade are equipped for only native travel, which means sleeping on the floor and taking meals in a humble attitude not usually associated with feasting. The number of passengers is limited only by the space on the floor, which is allotted by right of size to each person.

Think of twenty-eight men and women in one room, each struggling for sufficient floor-space upon which to stretch at full length! Sleep was among the impossibilities, and as I was an object of intense interest to the passengers, they "whiled away the midnight hours" by looking at me, and I am certain talking about me. A very comfortable feeling for a lone woman!

Travel-stained and weather-beaten, I landed on the north shore ready for an inland trip, the difficulties of which increased as the coast-line receded. In the first place, there are only Japanese hotels. These are wholly destitute of furniture, and, worse still, there is no privacy or protection from invasion other than sliding paper doors. My interpreter had failed to meet me, and I was unable to speak a word of the language. By many signs and no end of grimaces, the proprietor indicated that I should remove my shoes and help myself to a seat on the floor. Being tall, I folded myself up, after the manner of a camel, sitting on my feet, with nothing to do but wait. There I was, hopelessly sitting, sitting, sitting! while the proprietor, his wife, all the servants, guests, and a few stragglers were looking, looking, looking!

When they seemed satisfied that I was quite harmless, and safe to allow in the house, they withdrew one by one, leaving me to wonder what would become of me during the night. Darkness crept over the place, and folded us in as with a mantle. Then one great watch-star after another, twinkled a faint light from out the heavens; the moon looked with pale face through a rift in the clouds. Suddenly, and all unannounced, the entire male staff of the establishment entered my room, and proceeded to make my bed. This was merely some heavy blankets, placed on the soft matting, and was really a comfortable resting place; but their concern in adjusting it, delayed the hour of sleep far into the night, for each man had an idea as to how the bed could be made to meet the demands of my unusual length. After a prolonged discussion, the proprietor suddenly darted from the room, and returning in a few moments with equal agility, motioned for me to rise. Towering above them all, and in constant dread, lest by some unlucky move I should fall over them, I awaited developments. The tallest man among them stood beside me on tiptoe, and reaching one end of a string to my head, held it in position, while a second carried it down the course of my spinal column to the floor. Having thus computed the desired length of the bed, it was soon arranged, and when the door was finally shut, I threw myself down upon the bed, limp and exhausted, six feet of nervous prostration, quivering in every fibre under the excitement of the strange scenes.

As is always the case, "joy came with the morning." My interpreter was at hand; and everything was ready to continue the journey. Before nightfall we had reached an Ainu village, and I was a welcome guest in the primitive, comfortless house of the chief of the tribe, who proceeded at once to array himself in all of the unearthly regalia that designated his high rank. Of course he had a crown! This was made of shavings of ordinary pine wood. The proverbial Yankee never so reveled in the wholesale destruction of young timber with his pet jack-knife, as do these people, when preparing head adornment for special occasions. In the centre of this curious arrangement nestled a small bronze bear, the emblem of power and strength. The chief's robe was girded with a fantastic belt, from which hung a decorated sword. This had been handed down by seven generations and was held as priceless. It was the only article of value I saw there.

A GROUP OF AINUS, SHOWING THE PECULIAR FACIAL DISFIGUREMENT CAUSED BY THE TATTOO

Primitive does not express the Ainu mode of life. All customs, habits, and the very architecture indicate that nature did not place these people in this cold, bleak clime, but that man's heartlessness to man has driven them there. The houses are all constructed after the same style. The sides are woven of heavy rice straw and placed together in sections, set up on the instalment plan. The roof is woven in like manner of water rushes, and placed upon the sides when completed. In the centre of the floor is the fireplace, from which the smoke escapes at will, very frequently finding its way to every corner of the room than passing out through the open space in the roof. Around all sides of the house is an elevated platform upon which the whole family range themselves in order for the night. Two inches seem for the night as well, and the only bedcover is a piece of [illegible] What merciful power saves them from freezing to death in winter no one can tell.

During the summer, a scanty garden yields some vegetable food, but crude methods and lack of knowledge of the soil, give the only possible results—a small crop. Fish in many varieties abound, and from

CONTINUED ON PAGE 631

[This is the first of a series of remarkably interesting articles of travel, by Miss Jessie Ackermann, the well known writer, who was for several years International Secretary of the W. C. T. U. She has circled the globe many times, and it has been said of her that she has visited more countries, and slept in more strange beds in the course of her journeyings, than any woman now living. These articles, contributed specially to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, are the outcome of her latest travels in distant lands.]

The American Pulpit

: : Sermon by : :

Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage, D.D.

Royal Domestics

TEXT—MATT. 20: 27: "Whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant"

STARTLING theme! Apparently a contradiction in terms; but really a profound truth proved by reason and experience. The men most honored in the world to-day, and the men of the past, whose names history will never forget, are the men who have rendered the world the best service. Eminence and lasting fame are won not by riches or titles, but by doing something that benefits others. That is a sound general principle, which applies, not only to the highest walks of life, but to the humblest. It may correct our views of a station which it is now the fashion to hold in small esteem, if we see how it is affected by this principle. I speak of the girls who, in performing the humble duties of domestic service, contribute so much to the happiness of a family.

The tremendous opportunities of usefulness open to a consecrated domestic is the subject. No position to-day accessible to a woman of ordinary mental and physical capabilities will bring greater returns, financially and spiritually, than that offered to the average servant girl. The gods were supposed to have allowed the beautiful queen of Cyprus to bless her little kingdom in a wonderful way. Every place of the rocky island which her foot might touch would instantly be covered with brilliantly-colored flora or with rich green verdure. Not so does God endow any human being; but in a better way does the fable come true. The humble domestic servant, be she cook in the kitchen, or a guardian in the nursery, or a waitress in the dining-room, may live a life which will carry fragrance wherever it goes.

Honorable Service

But this sermonic theme has its dark side as well as its bright. It is shadowed either by avoidance or by slothfulness. By avoidance, because in despising it and seeking other occupations, inconveniences and social difficulties are entailed on others; by slothfulness, because no one can do a duty badly or carelessly without deteriorating in character. The kitchen or the nursery may be a throne-room with a consecrated domestic servant as a queen; or it may be a den of miserable drudgery and the scene of constant bickering and discontent. In olden times there were two classes of servants, both male and female. The one was that consecrated band of workers who clearly realized that true service, no matter how humble, implied honor and usefulness. Thus Joshua, great man that he was, gladly and willingly became the servant of Moses, and Elisha was the servant of the great Elijah, and Eliezer was the servant of Abraham, and Samuel of Eli. These men knew that they, in their humble sphere, were working for the advancement of the world as truly as were their masters in their more conspicuous sphere.

The second class of servants was composed of the sullen slaves captured in war. They were, for the most part, disgruntled and rebellious servitors. They felt that the tyranny of fate had placed the captives' manacles upon their wrists, and, as soon as possible, they would flee, when chance for escape offered. So there are women to-day serving in the kitchen, and in the nursery, who act as if they believe that they are captured slaves. They are grumbling against their work and meagre pay. They are spending one half of their time in finding fault with their mistresses, and the other half in trying to find out a way of escape into some other occupation, where they can have more liberty, and increased emoluments. As we would praise the grand work of the consecrated domestic, so we would denounce the evil behavior of the "wicked and slothful servant." We would try to show that the servant-girl who buries her one talent in a napkin, and refuses to do her legitimate work, is just as reprehensible in God's sight, as the king or queen who deliberately squanders a life's capital of ten talents. Divine rewards and punishments are not dependent upon the amount of returns accomplished by God's children, but upon the faithfulness and consecration with which we perform the tasks he has given us to do.

Royalty in Duty

The word "royal" is not restricted to station. It is legitimately applied to any woman whose conduct in her own sphere is noble and faithful—conduct "which is becoming or fitting to a queen." Nor is the financial compensation for her service inadequate. Her remuneration is as large as any other wage-earner, in proportion to the physical labor and mental training which are required of her. Prove it? I will. Compare to-day the net financial returns of the average servant, and that of the unskilled worker in any other departments of life. In our large cities the nurse-girl receives at least $3.50 to $4.00 and $5.00 per week. The good cook from $4.00 to $7.00, even to $10.00 per week. The waitress $4.00 per week. The chambermaid $4.00 per week. That means that each one of the household servants receives, monthly, wages running anywhere from $17.00 to $25.00 per month. That is more than many of the well-dressed floor-walkers in the large city stores get. That is more than the average typewriter receives, for she has to pay rent and board, which the domestic servant gets free. That is as much as a farm hand or a private soldier in the United States Army receives. "Oh, no," someone answers, "that is not true. A floor-walker will get $12.00 per week. There is many a typewriter receiving $10.00 per week, or about $40.00 per month." But, my brother, when you estimate the salary of the downtown clerks, you must at the same time estimate their expenses. As I remarked, the servant-girl receives a greater net return, not gross, than any other class of labor requiring equal mental and physical equipment.

The Net Result

A merchant never considers the gross returns of his business, but the net. He says to himself, "These goods were sold for so much. Now I must find out my expenses. So much for store rent, so much for night watchman, so much for expressage, so much for commercial travelers, so much for advertising, so much for taxes, so much for this, and so much for that and the other thing." Then that merchant subtracts the expenses from the gross receipts, and he says, "I make so much net." No advantage in buying goods in a foreign market, if the tariff laws eat up all the profits, or in raising potatoes and apples in the Dakotas or Montana, if the railroad freight to bring the fruit to the market costs more than the goods are worth. No financial advantage in being a downtown clerk and receiving $8.00 or $10.00 per week, if the expenses of room-rent and car-fare, and the lunch-counter, and board, and laundry bill, and extra clothes, absorb all the salary. And so when you place the net income of an average servant-girl against that of an average clerk, you find her salary is mostly gain, while his, at the end of the week, after his legitimate expenses have been met, is absolutely nothing, or about nothing.

I am talking about the princely net income of an average servant-girl. But if you are going to judge the condition of each class of laborer by the standard of money, then the servant-girl is not only better paid, but she receives steadier service all the year round. She is not laid off, like the masons or carpenters, or the lake sailors, or like the many employees, who, though during the busy seasons they receive high wages, are idle during certain months of the year. The royal domestic can have perpetual employment. Thus from a financial standpoint, I would commend to our sisters and daughters this noble work of the kitchen and the nursery. I commend the occupation to you, because the financial returns are princely, in comparison to the mental equipment which many of you are able to consecrate to this service.

Benefactors of the Home

But there is still another advantageous aspect of the question, which should not be overlooked. Eliezer, the servant, was the chief man in Abraham's household. In how many American households, think you, is the cook the principal functionary, upon whose skill and proficiency the physical and, to a very large extent also, the moral condition of the family depends? There are, I will venture to affirm, hundreds of thousands of homes in our large cities, to say nothing of as many more in the towns and villages, where the defection or incapacity of the cook, or housekeeper, would mean confusion and misery. A good, honest, intelligent cook is a conservator of health and happiness. Brillat Savarin once said that he who invented a new sauce was a benefactor to mankind; so, the cook who brightens your table with a well-ordered dinner, and whose culinary skill gives zest to appetite, is a benefactor to the home. There are chefs, many of them, who by reason of their skill, command salaries reaching up into the thousands of dollars. They understand the chemistry of the kitchen; they have made a study of dietetics, and their experience is quite as valuable to their employers as that of the skilled physician. There is abundant scope for ambition in the kitchen.

Another advantage offered by domestic service is that its surroundings are purer. The royal domestic is subjected to less temptations than are her sisters who are earning their livelihood in other walks of life. Queen Victoria in Windsor Castle, for over fifty years refused knowingly to give audience to any man or woman of impure and wicked life. A royal servant-girl, if she enters a Christian home, can, as a queen, choose her own associates. She can go with good people, if she will. The choice rests with her, and with her alone.

This statement is not always true, in reference to women who have to work for their living outside of the four walls of a home. Without, they are often compelled, even against their wills, to inhale the vitiating atmosphere of sin. They are often compelled to stand shoulder to shoulder with moral lepers, whose sins, if not contagious, by too much association may become fatally infectious. Here, for instance, is a young girl just arrived from the country. She decides to enter a factory, and become a day wage-earner. That factory has scores of girls whom she would never dare introduce to her old Christian mother. That young girl, within four weeks' service in that factory, has seen and heard more wickedness than she has ever known before. Then this young girl goes from her factory to her boarding-house. Upon her small salary, she cannot afford to pay a very big board bill. The result is that she lives in a boarding-house near her daily work. That boarding-house, in all probability, has young girls in it whose lives are not what they ought to be. Seeing sin by day, and necessarily seeing and hearing about sin by night, has a hardening influence upon the young girl's soul. Of course, the Divine Protector can and will preserve that young country girl, true and pure and noble, if she keeps clinging to the Omnipotent arm; but without that superhuman aid, the moral tendency for the female worker in the factory is downward. The life there is, in some respects, the same as that upon the theatrical stage, about which a noted actor once wrote: "The saddest fact about my profession is that the constant seeing of what one ought not to see, has a tendency to blunt the moral sensitiveness, and blind one's eyes to his moral duty and to right."

Temptations Avoided

Then, consider the besetting temptations ready to greet the young girl who applies for a position as clerk in a large downtown store. Parents, it is high time that you fully realize that there are among the owners of large downtown drygoods stores some who do not expect their clerks to live upon their salaries. There are hundreds and thousands of those young girls whose costly dress proves that they are not living upon their weekly wages. Everywhere, in those downtown stores, sin stands around with outstretched arms, crying: "Come! Come, and wear fine clothes! Come, and be respected, as you cannot be in the kitchen or the nursery! Come, and have your nights to yourself! Come, and see the brightest part of city life, through the undimmed eyes of youth." And the young girls from the country, by the hundreds and thousands, are turning their backs upon the refined employment of a domestic life and flinging themselves into the whirling, brain-destroying, heart-crushing maelstrom of temptation, where so many have been destroyed forever.

The royal domestic should be among the most honored of all women. It largely depends on her readiness to perform her duties and her efficiency in her service whether or no this country is to be a nation of homes. "God setteth the solitary in families," or, as you could read it in the Bible margin: "God setteth the solitary in a house." What does that mean? Simply this. Every ideal unit of society should be a home. What is an ideal home? A father and a mother for the heads of the table, children for the nursery, servants to help provide for the domestic wants. While the husband is off to business, the wife must be doing her work in the house. But there is a limit to a wife's physical and mental capacities. No average mother can perform her domestic work without help. She cannot be nurse, and dressmaker, and cook, and chambermaid, and waitress, and marketer all in one. She must have female assistance. She must have a servant or servants to aid her, or else she must give up housekeeping. As a strange and unaccountable prejudice has gone abroad against our daughters and sisters going to work as servants in the kitchen, one by one the homes of America are being closed. The husbands and wives, with their children, are going to live in boarding-houses and hotels.

The Nation Menaced

If you ask the average wife why she gives up housekeeping, she will answer, "I could not longer endure the unreasonableness of servants. The 'servant-girl question' simply racked my nerves until I was in torture. One day, I would seem to be getting along all right. But if the washing was a little larger than usual, or I complained about my servant being out too late at night, or I had some extra company for dinner, suddenly I would find myself servantless, with all the work to do in the kitchen. I could not stand the strain." When the servant-girl goes out of the American home, then the front door of that American home is barred and locked.

"But," says some one to me, "is the responsibility of

REV. A. E. MYERS THE MEETING OF THE MORNING WATCH INTERIOR OF THE MOUNTAIN HOUSE [illegible]

A BROTHERHOOD CAMP

MEMBERS OF THE ORDER OF ANDREW AND PHILIP IN MOUNTAIN SESSION

THE Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip, the pioneer organization for work among men in the various denominations, has recently made a new departure. Last winter, the Federal Council, which is its executive committee, resolved to hold a camp conference in the Pocono Mountains, Monroe County, Pa., in place of the usual biennial convention. A large tract of land on the plateau, at the very top of the mountains, has been secured for a summer Chautauqua, and conferences of various kinds are being held throughout the summer season. The Rev. Rufus W. Miller, D.D., the founder and president of the Brotherhood, is also the chairman of the executive committee of the Pocono Pines Assembly, and he arranged that the Brotherhood should hold the first conference of the season, on the day after the formal opening of the grounds. The conference was so enthusiastic, helpful, and successful, that it will be repeated next year at the same time. While men came from many places, the larger number were from Philadelphia and New York. Each crowd of men and boys was full of animation, and gave life to the train. After the train passes through the Delaware Water Gap it begins to ascend the mountains, until in twenty miles it has reached the height of about 2,000 feet. As the train rounds the last summit, before passing out on the plateau, there is a beautiful view of the mountains, with the Water Gap twenty miles away. From the station, the parties traveled by stage (next season they are hoping for a railroad spur), across the plateau, until the grounds were reached, and all were filled with admiration at the location of the Assembly Inn, on about the highest ground.

President Miller greeted the guests upon their arrival, and they were soon ushered into the large hall, with its delightful fireplace and stairway, tastefully decorated with ferns and mountain laurel. The rooms are all comfortably furnished, and from the windows one may overlook the hills in the west, as far as Locust Range and the Wyoming Valley.

In the immediate foreground is a beautiful lake, about three miles in length and half a mile in breadth, which was turned to good account by the men, who rowed and fished and swam, as they felt inclination. At the lower end of the lake is the primitive village street, and down in this little valley the men of the Brotherhood put their rules into practice, organizing two new chapters among the mountaineers. Every morning shortly after sunrise the men walked down through the woods to the lake, and there they observed the morning watch, which was conducted in turn by one or another of the Brotherhood men. These meetings were very helpful, and the men went back to breakfast with an appetite for food and for the conferences that were to follow.

During the forenoon there were conferences on all of the problems and possibilities of work among boys and men. After a short opening address, all were permitted to take part. It was essentially a layman's convention, and there were no pauses in the meetings. One enthusiastic pastor brought along with him a number of his boys, who took a keen interest in the work for boys.

Afternoons were given over to outings of various kinds, some were hunting, some swimming, some fishing, some rowing, some picking huckleberries, and others resting under the shadows of the beautiful pines. After supper the services were held in the rustic auditorium, which can hold 1,200 people, but is so arranged with movable seats as to be always full. Quite a large number of the natives joined in these meetings, and in the Brotherhood Circle, with which all the various meetings were closed.

One evening, the Rev. A. E. Myers, of New York City, the Chairman of the Finance Committee, explained how the finances are managed. There are three sources of revenue. Each Chapter makes an annual offering on "Brotherhood Day," the first Sunday in May. Many of the individual members have enrolled themselves in the "Double Centurion Band," each one contributing fifty cents a month, and the entire band pledging and providing the support of the Field Secretary, the Rev. J. Garland Hanmer, Jr., whose office is at 180 Garside street, Newark, N. J. The third source of income is the "Forward Movement Fund," to which Brother Myers and others have interested many kind friends of the Brotherhood, both men and women. Until the other two are in full working order the chief dependence is upon the last, and Brother Myers has done indefatigable work.

Sunday was a delightful day, beginning with the Morning Watch, conducted by Brother Wardner, of Baltimore (President of that local union), and inspired by the sermon on "Obechenez," which was delivered by the Rev. Dr. J. Alexander Vinton, of Philadelphia. The men then went down to the local Methodist Church, holding a men's meeting, and organizing a local chapter. After dinner some went to each of the Sunday Schools. At four o'clock the Rev. G. E. Talmage, of Schenectady, taught the Model Bible Class. At eight in the evening, the Rev. Dr. Worden, of Philadelphia, gave an address on "The Elder Brother," and President Miller conducted the closing consecration service, citing many appropriate German proverbs about the mountains and their inspiration. Monday morning the guests departed. The emblem of the Order is a star, and the motto: "They that are wise shall shine as the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars forever and ever."

Royal Domestics

A Sermon by REV. FRANK DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D.

Continued

the American girl who will not become a domestic servant so great? Cannot men and women who live in boarding-houses and hotels, be just as good as those husbands and wives who have their own homes?" No, my brother, I do not think so. I believe the Christian home is the most vital institution for good in all America. I believe it is not only of morality, but also of the Temple of Neighborly Love, and also of our National Legislative Hall. The home is the foundation-stone of the Temple of Patriotism. It has been well said by a great writer: "The surest way to destroy anarchy, is to bring about a social condition where every man can own a home." When a man sits upon his own doorstep, he truly feels he is an American citizen. Oh, women of America, whom God is calling to the service of a domestic, I plead and beg of you to take up your noble work. I plead and beg of you, in the name of Christ, that you help save the homes, the Christian homes. No throne of usefulness, I care not how high it may be, can ever overtop that which makes it possible for the little children to gather around their own fireside.

The Foundation-Stone

The royal domestic is a queen. The kitchen and the nursery are the places where God expects a woman naturally to serve. I have no use for those masculine cynics who would debar women from the different vocations of life. Some men, no matter what the genius of a woman may be, would slam the door of all useful means of earning an honest livelihood in their sisters' faces. They say, "a woman should not be a lawyer, a doctor, a minister, a merchant, an artist, a writer, or anything else but a wife and a mother." But this is what I do affirm! All things being equal, a woman ought to seek those vocations which are naturally hers, and let the men fill those positions which naturally belong to them. It is not natural for a woman to be a soldier, a fireman, a teamster, a policeman. While, on the other hand, it is natural for her to be a nurse, a dressmaker, a cook, a chambermaid, a waitress, a school-teacher, and lady's companion, and hundreds of other positions we might easily mention.

Now, when a woman deserts the position for which God has specially equipped her, what is the inevitable result? Her work is not only left undone, but she becomes a competitor against her father and brothers for theirs. What is again the inevitable result? By the law of supply and demand, she not only underbids her brother for his position, but, by that bidding, the whole system of wages go down. She is the sufferer. He is the sufferer. The mischief is far-reaching. It is the result of her turning aside from her natural employment, in which there is pressing need of her service, and in which she could find constant occupation at remunerative wages. She leaves a place unfilled, and forces her way into a walk of life already overcrowded, and in which her competition is injurious to other workers.

Mischievous Competition

"Oh," some one says to me, "that is the old argument of a jealous man. You do not like to feel that your sister is just as smart as you are, and, perhaps, a little smarter, and can take away your job and do it better for less money." No, my friend. I can conscientiously say, I have not one jealous hair in my head. The more other people succeed, the more I glory in their success. And, to me, there is no more beautiful sight, than to see a young girl, whose father and brothers are dead, go forth and seek a position which her talent gives her a right to fill, and bring money home and throw it in the lap of her widowed mother. But this is the social condition against which I do protest: I protest against our daughters and sisters pushing their fathers and brothers out of work, so that the girls have to support the male members of the family, while the fathers and brothers are idle, because their places have been taken by women. I have known scores and hundreds of men, over fifty years of age, who were physically able to do work, but could not get work, merely because their daughters, who at that time should have been at school, were filling the positions which their fathers and brothers ought to have filled.

Now, women of America, whom God has called to be consecrated domestics, I plead with you to enter the kitchen, and the nursery, and the home, because that is one of your natural spheres—that is a place where God wants you to work.

The Christian Domestic

should be honored on earth, because she is not only able to do her own work, but also to impress her consecrated life indelibly upon others. Did she not do it with the Emperor of all the Russias? When the old nurse of Emperor Alexander died, did he not as well as all his brothers, who were Grand Dukes follow that sacred body to the family tomb? Did not an humble Christian nurse start forth Lord Shaftesbury upon his great mission of life? When the famous English philanthropist's hair had been silvered by the ravages of many winters, he testified in public meeting, "All that I have been able to do for Christ and my fellowmen, is due to the Gospel teachings of my old Christian nurse." As the little Jewish maiden, who was a servant girl, sent the warrior Naaman down to the River Jordan to be cured of leprosy, has there not been in our past lives, some consecrated Christian domestic who was able to help send us to the Waters of Life, to be cured of our leprosy of sin? Oh, my sister, never underestimate the opportunities or usefulness of the honorable position of serving Christ as a domestic.

Thus, in closing, I would speak as earnest word to those women who are about to consecrate their lives to this line of service. God has opened for you mighty possibilities for good. Fit yourself for that work as the Lord Jesus Christ would have you. Make the Bible the chief text book of your life. Pray, and unceasingly pray, that the Holy Spirit will inspire you to speak the right word in the right way. Above all, whatever your station in life may be, let me urge you to unite the service of Jesus Christ. Not even the subject of your life's occupation, can compare in importance with the crucial question, whether you are a servant of the Lord. Make that your first, your chief business, that you are accepted of him, and that you are obeying his commands. Look not for your rewards from man, but so live that in the great day of Judgment, you may hear the best of all encomiums, "Well done. Thou art one of my queens!"

By REV. THOMAS GRAY

Micronesian Heathen Coming to Christ

Missionary at Ponape

WHEN first I met Saikoi, there was nothing in her plain face, tall angular figure, and awkwark gait to attract my attention, but when she spoke, her features lighted up with intelligence and good sense. Her husband, Peter, was a large, good-looking man, but being tongue-tied, his speech was very peculiar. They had just arrived from Ruk, where they had been for a few months. They brought a letter from Mr. Stimpson, the missionary there, speaking highly of them, and suggesting we look after them, as they are Nukuorians; people from a small coral island southwest of us, which is now included in the Ponape Mission. Peter understood something of carpenter work, and we were glad to have his assistance in the building. We were also glad to take Saikoi's boy into the school.

. . .

Tenga is a slim, round-faced, energetic boy about fourteen. When he came, he did not know a word of Ponapem, but in two weeks could talk easily, and in three months read it well. He is a very bright, promising pupil. Saikoi's present husband is not his father. All the Nukuor people speak a little English, and so we will let Saikoi tell her own story to you, as she did to me.

"Oh, Nukuor used be very bad place. All the peoples, he wicked. Me all same like rest. I had many husbands; one he try kill me but I ran way. The girls live with any man until they get older, then sometimes they stay one man.

"One Queen in Nukuor, her boy die. The Queen very mad and no want any peoples to be happy, so she say all babies must be killed when they born. Oh, it was very bad time. Long time no children live. Then one man's wife, she had fine boy, they no mind the Queen, they no kill him. Then other peoples see the Queen no do anything, and they no kill any more babies. I one of the babies come that time. Then when I was little, another Queen's child die, and all babies killed again same as before. Now Nukuor people no plenty babies come. God punish them, cause when he gave them children, they kill them; now they want, and no can get.

"My father he build a house, all same heathen church; my father he heathen priest. One time, five years ago, we hear sailors on ship talk bout school in Kusaie. I tell my father I want go. He get very mad and say no, he will pray spirits kill me if I go. I no 'fraid. Peter and I go way on ship to Kusaie. Then I hear native teacher tell bout Jesus. I learn read and write little, but Peter get tired and want go back Nukuor in few months

"One day Peter come and say he want to go away from Nukuor and go Ruk. He no happy, and say he think I right 'bout God, for he see before, when we go Kusaie and do right, we happy, had plenty money, plenty food, but now, no. I had plenty husbands before, but no husband all same Peter to me, and when he ask me go, I say yes." (Her eyes sparkled.)

"Tenga's father, he bad man. I no like Tenga stay long him, so I take him long Ruk. We get Ruk, and don' know any peoples, and got no money and no food. Peter say he don' know 'bout God and don' know what to do, but for me to say, I pray God help us. Then I say, Peter, ask Mr. Stimpson, maybe he have work, and let us stay on Mission. I say, Peter, we no want money for work. Mr. Stimpson like, he can give what he want. We work all same for Jesus. I like help people who do work belong Jesus. Peter, he 'fraid, but he say yes.

"When Sunday come we go church along mission. Mr. Stimpson come speak to us, and ask if Peter know 'bout carpenter work. Peter say a little, and then he ask us to come mission and work. Then we all right—plenty food, plenty money, and I go school and learn 'bout work belong Jesus. By and by Mr. Stimpson say Mr. Gray going see 'bout people in Nukuor; more better we go Ponape long him, and so how we come, and I very glad be here—very glad. I want help people who do work belong Jesus, and I want learn more talk in Bible."

. . .

She often said to me in those first months here, "I want my husband be a good man. He no like all the same before, but I want him a Christian." It seemed a real burden on her heart. She was the most devoted of wives. Always had food ready for him, and of evenings they sat on the floor by themselves chatting and laughing like a pair of lovers.

Shortly after their arrival, a young Nukuor man and his wife (Benjamin and Hannah), came to see if we would take them also, and we were glad to do so. They had been among those whom Saikoi had taught to read and write, and about the Bible. She considered Benjamin the brightest man she knew. Said he soon learned all she knew, and now knows a great deal more. He is a tall, manly fellow, and Hannah is a chubby, gay little woman. She is quite young and full of girlish fun, but has a firm character like Saikoi for doing right. She and Benjamin had lived together four years, but were not formally married, because they had had no opportunity.

Shortly after they came we had a little wedding one Sunday evening. The house was decorated with ferns and flowers, and the bride and groom were as happy and as glad as if they were just starting life together. They laughed and said, "Now we are fast and can't go apart any more." Hannah had a neat new calico dress, and I gave her a pretty ribbon to tie her curly hair. Benjamin superintended the tying of the ribbon, and turned Hannah around several times to see if she looked all right. He was anxious she should look well on her wedding night. Their manner was very nice when they came into the room and during the ceremony, after which Mr. Gray and I, Peter and Saikoi congratulated them. The boys were too bashful, but when Tenga passed the song books for the regular evening prayer service which followed, he slyly gave each one a loving little hand-squeeze and whispered a few words in Nukuor.

After a time Peter talked to Mr. Gray and said he wanted to be a Christian. In November Peter and Saikoi, Benjamin and Hannah were baptized and taken into the church. It was a service which impressed all the natives, for they knew from what darkness these stalwart people came. Only five years before they knew nothing of the Bible. Now they are ready to suffer anything for the sake of right.

MISSION PREMISES ON PONAPE, MICRONESIA

There is included in the Ponape Mission the work of the four nearest coral islands: Mokil and Pingelap to the eastward, and Ngatic and Nukuor to the southwestward. We left Ponape February 17 to visit Ngatic and Nukuor. Prior to Sunday morning, February 22, no missionary had ever set foot on this circular fringe of coral rock. The lagoon is about three miles in diameter. The reef is narrow. There are but about one hundred and twenty-five people on the island. They are of Samoan descent. A Frenchman, trading for the Germans, is the only white man there. We were warmly welcomed to this place, where there had never been a Christian ceremony performed. No one there had ever been formally married. Saikoi and Peter had been married at Kusaie, Benjamin and Hannah who are in the Ponape school, had been baptized and married a little while before. Thirty-seven grown people and five children were baptized. Thirteen couples, young, middle-aged and old, marched into the church with arms locked, to be formally married. Most of them had lived together for years.

The church building is one of the best native churches in all Micronesia. The people are energetic, intelligent, and very large. There are but a few good houses. A Queen rules over them. Being too sick to attend any of our services, she was baptized and partook of communion at her home.

Nukuor is a very hard island to reach with a sailing vessel, because of the swift currents. We could only spend two days with these people, who have no Bible, but who are longing for the truth and life of Jesus with all their heart.

As a class, these people are very kind, good natured, generous and faithful. These five with us are a valuable addition to the school. Saikoi and Peter went back to Nukuor on the last ship, to remain and help the people until the next ship goes which will take us.

YOUNG METHODISTS IN CONFERENCE

....THE SIXTH INTERNATIONAL EPWORTH LEAGUE CONVENTION AT DETROIT, MICH.

NEW energy and renewed enthusiasm will undoubtedly be felt in the Epworth Leagues in every section of the country, as a result of the grand demonstration in Detroit, Mich. An assembly such as that gathered there, must have made a deep impression upon every one of the thousands of delegates. It is an inspiring thing to realize membership in an organization so enormous both in numbers and influence. It is one thing to read of a membership many thousands strong, and another thing to see the great masses of bright young faces, all glowing with spiritual zeal and all eager to obtain spiritual uplift. The common object, the common loyalty, and the common enthusiasm in the same great cause, produce a thrilling effect on the individual, like that produced on the soldier by a grand review.

BISHOP ISAAC W. JOYCE
President of the Epworth League

Detroit gave the Leaguers a most cordial welcome. On July 15, when the great detachments began to arrive from East, West, North, and South, they found the streets gaily decorated with flags, bearing the familiar emblem. Reception committees met the delegates, and conducted them to their quarters, and took care that there should be no confusion or embarrassment in the mighty host. Three huge preparatory meetings marked the beginning of the Convention. Tent Ontario, with a seating capacity of five thousand, the Detroit Opera House, and the Central Methodist Episcopal Church, were all crowded. On the following day there were added to these the Light Guard Armory, which, for the time being, assumed the name of the Epworth Auditorium. So much accommodation might have appeared unnecessary, but with past experience as a guide, it was not safe to reckon on less than twenty-five thousand guests, and the result showed that fully that number had come to take part in the proceedings. Probably no city on the Continent ever held so many Methodists at the same time. Those who attended the first Convention in 1889, at Cleveland, must have been amazed when they saw how the five thousand delegates of that year had multiplied.

Governor A. T. Bliss, himself an ardent Methodist, bade the Leaguers welcome to the State of Michigan, and Mayor William C. Maybury assured them of the cordiality of the city of Detroit. The large chorus, which has been drilling for several months, was divided into three companies, one of which was assigned to each meeting. The contingents were respectively under the leadership of Evangelists John Hillis, J. M. Black, and Charles D. Tillman. A detachment of Leaguers, the number of whom was a surprise to the Convention, came from Canada, under the leadership of the Rev. Albert Carman, D.D., of Toronto, who is so well known and so thoroughly respected on this side of the frontier, as to be claimed as a citizen of the United States. The Southern contingent was also a large and an influential one. Bishop Galloway, of Jackson, Miss., and other eminent Southerners took a prominent part. Five cities want the next convention—Denver, Baltimore, Ocean Grove, Philadelphia, and Minneapolis.

The programme was an exhaustive one, and care was taken that in the assignment of subjects and speakers each gathering would have strong attractions, so that although the meetings were simultaneous, none could feel that they had simply the overflow from a more important centre. It was wonderful that so many departments of the church's work were covered in so short a period. "Foreign Missions"; "The Needs of the Homefield"; "The Necessity and Best Methods of Bible Study"; "The Social Side of Church Life"; "The Training of the Children and Young People"; "The Organization of the Sunday School"; "The Consecration of the Money-Power"; "Total Abstinence and the Fight with the Liquor Traffic"; "The Labor Problem and the Effect of Trade Unionism." These were some among the questions discussed, and each was opened by a man specially qualified to deal with the subject. Bishops, Presiding Elders, editors of the Christian Advocates, heads of colleges, missionaries on furlough, and many eminent laymen were among the speakers. Four days of inspiration, and mental and spiritual stimulus, ending with the solemn consecration meetings of Sunday night, made their mark on many an earnest soul, and the impetus they gave to the movement, which has already done so much for the rising generation, will not soon be exhausted.

A MAT WEAVER VIEW OF A NATIVE VILLAGE AN AGED AINU

IN THE LAND OF TATTOOED WOMEN

Continued from page 627

the summer catch they are enabled to dry a sufficient quantity to keep the wolf from the door for later months. Men and women alike are given to hunting, the prize game being bear, especially a cub. All game is brought down with the bow and arrow, but the aim is sure and the prey certain.

The men have fine physiques. They are taller and more angular than the Japanese; their chief characteristic being a thick growth of hair over the body. In some individuals, it is frequently as heavy and as long as the hair of a monkey, with a tendency to curl slightly. In advanced years, the long, flowing, white beard, gives the old men a most venerable appearance. The Ainu are perfectly harmless, and travel among them is quite safe. All deference is paid to the men of the tribe, a woman, knowing no greater joy than that of outdoing her neighbor in the matter of bedecking her husband for some gala day.

The women have hard lives, full of heavy work, for the burden of everything falls to their lot. In many places, there are no stores of any kind. Everything used must be produced by the skilful hands of the women; from weaving the coarse cotton cloth with which the entire family is clad, to gathering the nuts in the forest and the fibre bark for matting. The house, with its one small window, is cheerless enough, but the crude efforts of the women to leave their impress upon the surroundings is pathetic.

A curious custom, born of superstition, disfigures their faces greatly. When a girl reaches the age of two years, her mother begins to brand her with the badge of the race. A sharp instrument is applied to her lips, and when the skin is slightly broken, a preparation composed of soot, bark solution and indigo, is rubbed with much vigor upon the surface operated upon. This is repeated until a diamond-shaped space, extending towards the ears is covered, and as the child increases in size, the blotch spreads into a huge blemish. No power can induce them to depart from this custom, more ancient than any knowledge of their race, and as meaningless as it is ugly.

Their religion is one of wild and angry spirits, which are ever crying aloud for some sacrifice. Unlike other peoples, the Ainu offer only worthless objects before the wrathful spirits. Money is a rare quantity. They are destitute and poverty-stricken, hence they have devised a cheap offering, which is put up in every conceivable place, both within and without the house. A small pine stick answers the purpose. Shavings are whittled from one end toward the centre, where they are left hanging in a small cluster. These find place at the well, the hearthstone and at other points, when they seek the favor and good-will of some special god. The eastwindow of the house is sacred. It is an insult to spirits and man alike to peer in from the outside or to thoughtlessly cast a glance outward, when in the hut

The condition of the women is similar to that which obtains in lands where the Bible is unknown. How true it is that the Nazarene was the first emancipator of womankind! In most non-Christian countries, the slavery of woman is not that of hard work only, but men look upon her as without a soul, or having no future existence, save only through her husband or son. Among the Ainu, the woman toils, of course, and the husband cheerfully aids her by free advice and fun connections, but as to the labor, he freely passes it over to her, and she becomes the "motive power" in all affairs. He does not even honor her by bestowing his name upon her, but she is known as "so and so's wife." When widowed, she takes the name of her child, if she has one, which is usually the case, for it is considered a great disgrace for a married couple not to have a family. In such an event, it is supposed that the gods are punishing the woman for some evil deed, and without judge or jury, the husband may declare her divorced.

WOMEN CLEANING AND POUNDING GRAIN

Like all native races, these women have learned to utilize every provision made by the bountiful hand of Mother Nature. Having no machinery, they depend entirely upon their hands. The thread from which the coarse cloth is woven, is made from the inner fibre of the bark of the elm tree, and is ingeniously twisted into fine thread, which is used also for sewing purposes. The heavy part is woven into matting, and frequently the designs and coloring are quite artistic. Much labor is expended on the "dress up" garment of the men. The men also wear earrings: long hooks of brass or other common metal, beaten into shape by some crude process, but perfectly well pleasing to them.

The first village I visited was one where the missionaries have been located for some years. The work is carried on under the direction of the Church of England, and in all the world or, at least, outside of the Fiji Islands, there could not be found a more striking illustration of the results of applied Christianity than in the villages where these natives have heard the Gospel story. For centuries they have been driven from place to place, hunted like wild animals, made victims of evil practices for gain, and now that they have reached the most northern ground and settled in these cold, bleak latitudes, at last the Gospel message comes to offer compensation for the abuses of the ages.

The Japanese Government has appointed a "Commissioner to the Ainu." In all Japan, one man, Mr. Oyabe, stands out alone as the sole friend of these people. He has founded a settlement on one of the islands and is now establishing a "Model Village." A style of architecture suited to the needs of the climate has been settled upon, a place of business opened, methods for properly cultivating the soil and extending industrial operations have been devised. If these people could be trained to scientific farming and fruit culture, and the principles of Christianity instilled into their lives, a whole race will be rescued from decay and final extinction, and the triumph of the Gospel will be read in the oncoming generation as they take place among the civilized nations of the world.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

MRS. H. G., Carlton Station, N. Y.: "I want to acknowledge God's goodness in answering prayer. He has answered my prayers many times, for which I thank him."

Reader, Deedsville, Ind.: "A few nights ago, during a terrible storm, God saved us from harm in answer to prayer."

M. M. I., A. A., Mich.: "I bear testimony to God's gracious answers to prayer. I know he hears and answers prayer. I still have many blessings I desire, which I am still asking him to bestow."

Reader, Greencastle, Ind. "Just one year ago our family was overshadowed by affliction, and poverty was staring us in the face. I earnestly prayed to God to help us. A relative came to our relief, and to-day we are praising God for it."

Reader, N. Y. City. "Not long ago I asked the Lord for a blessing. I received it, and now give Him the glory."

Miss L., Wrightsville, Pa. "God has heard and answered my prayers. I am so glad that we can take all our troubles to God in prayer. 'He that cometh unto me by faith I will in no wise cast out.'"

Mrs. James M., Miss Myrtle S. and Miss Cora S., Midland City. "We wish to acknowledge God's goodness in hearing and answering our prayers."

E. P., Moorefield, Ind.: "I know that God is a prayer-hearing and a prayer-answering God. Praise to his holy name."

M. A. T., Alabama: "Self and family were passing through a great affliction. He delivered us from our trouble in answer to prayer."

M. M., Grand Rapids, Mich.: "In acknowledgment to God for his great mercy, I want to say, for the benefit of those who are struggling under business troubles, that I positively know from personal experiences that God answers prayers."

Constant Reader, Saratoga, N. Y. "I have been greatly comforted in reading the answers to prayer. I have received answers."

H. A. Lexington, Mich. "I prayed that God in his mercy would spare one who was very dear to me. She is now completely restored. Praise his holy name!"

Reader, Elk Garden, W. Va. "I wish to acknowledge God's answer to my prayer for a blessing I greatly desired."

M. E. B., Shawhan, Ky. "God hears and answers prayer always. God always hears and answers my prayers in his own good time. I often have to wait long, but that is to teach me patience; but the answer always comes, and is satisfactory."

Mrs. M., Five Corners, N. Y. "I wish to acknowledge a special answer to prayer."

Reader, Milwaukee, Wis. "Though I am only a young girl, I, too, know that God answers prayer. By his help I was enabled to do what I am certain would have failed had I not implored his aid."

Letters acknowledging answers to prayer have been received from A Mother, Newport, R. I.

CALLED HIGHER

MY precious mother, who has been a subscriber to your paper for a number of years, has gone to her heavenly home. As long as she was able she read with delight her beloved CHRISTIAN HERALD. When no longer able to read I read it to her. She prized it next to her Bible. For many months she was unable to attend church, but enjoyed her CHRISTIAN HERALD sermon. I trust the paper may be as great a blessing to other shut-ins as it was to her. FLORENCE CHRISTOPHER.

Beaver View, Ky.

Mrs. Frances Dunant, of Fullarton, Ont., who passed away lately, had been a "shut-in" for over fifteen years. Although a great sufferer, her faith in God never wavered and her life was one of patience and cheerfulness. The brightness of her sick-room has often been a blessing to others. In her death, the lonely and poor have lost a kind friend, and her family a loving and devoted wife and mother.

Mrs. Louisa Ely Caplen, widow of Chas. Caplen, passed away recently at Red Bluff, Texas. She was born on Long Island, N. Y., near Sag Harbor, in 1810, and had a strange and eventful life, coming to Texas in the early days. Her great uncle was Major Robert A. Anderson, who was on the staff of General Washington in the Revolution. She could remember sitting on the knee of Major Anderson, when she was a little girl, and playing with his long queue and noticing the silver buckles on his shoes. Mrs. Caplen was a woman of rare gifts, having a remarkable memory. She was a lifelong Christian, and was one of the original members at the organization of the First Presbyterian Church of Galveston, Texas.

Mrs. E. A. Bradley, an aged Christian of 84, recently passed away at North Westerne, Me. She had been a devoted reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for many years.

Christine N. Hemingway and Mary D. of Mooreville, O., having declined those pleasures and a father to mourn her departure. She was born in Sweden, was converted early in life, and leaves behind her a beautiful example of Christian [illegible] hood.

Three times in the present year death has entered the home of Mr. Maggard, Jackson, La. W. C. On Tuesday, Miss Isabella [illegible] on Thursday, the son was called home, and on May 11 the [illegible] Avery L. Bradley was [illegible] These successive bereavements [illegible] have awakened a [illegible] to the [illegible]

Mrs. Mary A. Spicer, of Long Creek, Oregon, one of the most [illegible] of our [illegible] Mrs. Joanna Lowe, [illegible] Spicer, [illegible] born in Springfield, Ill., in 1811. She [illegible] fought on the [illegible] side in the Civil War. In [illegible] the world, was [illegible] and cheerless to Hooper. The [illegible] and [illegible] example were worthy [illegible] a large [illegible] of acquaintances among whom she was greatly loved.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, ASSOCIATE EDITOR — LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor — G. H. SANDISON, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscriptions.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.
Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Preaching Under Canvas

TESTED by experience, the tent evangelistic campaign is abundantly justifying itself. In New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Chicago, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and other cities, the experiment is being tried with the most encouraging results. Many of the churches are closed, and, perhaps, if they were open, very few persons would be found in them. But the cities are by no means depopulated. The fashionable ladies and gentlemen gravely declare that there is no one in town; but the business men and the clerks and the mechanics, who cannot afford to lay down their work and go to Europe, or to the American summer resort, do not find the streets deserted, or the cars empty.

No matter how high the mercury climbs in the thermometer, no matter how humid the atmosphere, there are hundreds of thousands who must continue the daily round of toil and remain at their post of duty. They do not grudge the people who can afford to go away, their annual holiday; indeed, many of them are glad to work to provide the means wherewith their wives and families may go; but they sometimes feel—and who can blame them?—that their lot is hard and monotonous. Among them, there are many who sadly miss the encouragement and invigoration of public worship. Like water to the thirsty deer, would be, in these weary, torrid days, the words of life and Gospel hope. But the doors of the sanctuary are closed, and there is silence within the walls, instead of the sound of prayer and praise. To all such, how welcome is the tent, dedicated to the service of God.

To others, too, who unhappily do not find in the Gospel the source of fortitude, the tent is a benefit. It has not the formality and the oppressing decorum which repels many of them from the church. It is cool, and the music is lively, and the preacher is more lucid and interesting than he generally is in the pulpit of his church. They would not go to a church, if one were open—but the tent, that is different. An hour there is a welcome change from the hot pavement. So, the non-church-goer finds himself within sound of the Gospel invitation.

That is the opportunity that the Christian worker has been longing for. He can correct the mistaken views of Christianity that are prevalent. He can show his hearers that so far from making life dull and adding to its burdens, the Gospel brings light and good cheer into it. He can tell them of Him who said, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." That is an invitation that the man who toils through the summer in the city is not likely to disregard. It appeals to him, and is precisely what he most needs. Thus the tent becomes a place of enlightenment and as was said of old, "This and that man has been born there." In every city in which it has been tried, God has blessed the effort. The fact should be widely known, so that other cities which have not made the experiment, may be encouraged to do so without loss of time.

A Lesson in Hard Work

SOME of our Eastern clerks and some college students are having an interesting experience in the West, this year. It is very difficult to get employment in the cities in the summer, and therefore the announcement that thousands of men were needed on the farms of Kansas, and would be well paid for their work, attracted a large number of the unemployed, to whom the dollars that they might earn were a consideration. It appears from the reports that have come to hand, that these dollars were by no means regarded, either by the payer or the receiver, as a gratuity. The strong, muscular young men who accepted the invitation to go to Kansas, say that they have well earned every dollar they have received. The working-day in that State is no eight or nine hour affair, but a real day, beginning at sunrise and continuing, with short intermissions for refreshment, until sunset. We can well imagine how tired and exhausted the Eastern man must be by such toil. It may be a useful lesson for him in many ways. It will show him, as nothing else could, how laborious is the life of the Western farmer, and how much our country owes to the stalwart men whose untiring industry and vigorous effort are building up those young States. It may also be of advantage from an educational standpoint. Carlyle sympathized somewhat humorously with an English duke, who had been making a speech in the House of Lords on the problem of poverty. The poor fellow's education had been neglected, the Scottish philosopher said, "If the noble duke had ever worked on a farm and brought up a family on two or three dollars a week, it would have shed a light on many subjects for him." Perhaps this experience in Kansas may do this for some of the college students who have passed through it. They will understand the conditions of working men better than they could have done by years of the study of books; and when they speak or write about them, as they may have occasion to do, they will know—as apparently many who speak or write on the subject do not—what they are talking about.

A Moral Victory

ALTHOUGH the Russian Government has declined to receive the petition of the United Hebrew Congregations, which our State Department consented to forward to St. Petersburg, the declination loses much of its force from the fact that our attitude in the matter has already produced the desired results. Russia has been stirred up to vigorous action against the Jew-baiters, and is conducting an energetic prosecution of those who were foremost in fomenting the Kishineff riots. At least one leading Anti-Semite paper has been suppressed and its edition confiscated. Prince Usuroff, the newly-appointed Governor of Bessarabia, has assured the Jews of protection in the future. In other ways, the Czar's government has displayed a change of attitude, if not of heart, toward the Jews.

It remains to be seen whether this transformation is to be genuine or lasting. Such as it is, it is wholly due to the generous course pursued by this government in consenting to become the channel for the transmission of the Jewish petition. It was not a step without a precedent. We interposed in behalf of the Russian Jews in 1891 and again in 1892, and only a year ago we performed a similar friendly office for the persecuted Hebrews of Roumania. In these instances the protests were received, and were at least temporarily effective. In the present case also, although the protest, being that of private citizens only, and not of the national government, was not received, the end has been satisfactorily achieved. As a humane Christian nation, we have done our duty in the case—no more and no less—and the incident is ended. The rest lies with Russia. Upon its future attitude toward the Jews will depend the verdict of civilization as to the genuineness of its present humane professions in their behalf.

The Service of Gratitude

TO us it is given to feel one joy, to cherish one noble emotion, which even Jesus never felt. He never knew by experience what it is to serve God under the impulse of gratitude. He does not know what it is to love second because another loved him first. He never had any one to pay the penalty of sin for him, to die in agony and blood that he might not perish. And so there may be one element in the spirit of our work which never had a place in his own heart and life. But, none the less, he understands it, and eagerly looks for it always as the true source and spring of every stream of Christian usefulness.

A man who was saved from a wrecked vessel had the unspeakable horror of seeing the very sailor who had dragged him ashore, swept, worn and spent as he was, back into the waves, and drowned before his eyes. His reason shook a little under the strain. After long months of careful nursing he was so far restored that he was able to resume his place among men. But he never forgot his obligation. He could say but little, but it was noticed that he always closed every conversation, whether of business or of friendliness, with stranger or acquantance, with the pathetic words, "A man died for me once!" He would come back after he had closed the door, with a soft, gentle, wistful look in his eyes, and say: "A man died for me once!"

No, Jesus can never say that, but we who can—oh, shall it not be ever in our hearts, and ready on our tongues when it can be spoken to his glory? Shall we no take by the hand our children and our neighbors, wh seem not to care or to know, and softly, lovingly, te them of Him who died once, not for us only, but fo them, and for all mankind?

Following to Heal

WITH such an experience of faults and failure and sins as all of us have in painful memor how precious is the assurance that God is following u not as the savage Indian follows upon the trail of h enemy, not as the avenger of blood follows in his ho rible vendetta upon the track of the murderer, but wit goodness and mercy. He follows us, if humbly an penitently we make him our trust, to heal the wounc we have inflicted, to redress the wrongs we have con mitted, to neutralize the consequences of our folly, ignorance, or sin. And so he gives to us a sense of r covered freedom and enlargement of heart, and enable us to begin each day without the disabling consequence of former days clinging like fetters about our feet an hindering our steps. His goodness and mercy follov ing on our heels, can transmute the very results an effects of our sins into divine forms of beauty and joy.

Sometime ago, on board a receiving-ship at Brooklyn the sailors gave the visitor a glass of water taken fro a tank that was filled for a cruise fifty years previousl and had never since been emptied. There was a tim when the water was foul and bad-smelling, but now was sweet as if brought from the well an hour befor So, through the gracious chemistry of God's goodnes and mercy, our memories of the past lose their bitte ness; all their impurities disappear, and they are mad clear and sweet. Even the weaknesses and sins of ou dead selves become stepping-stones to higher thing and, like the repented sin of Peter, fit us the better t strengthen our brethren.

Among the Workers

—UNION REVIVAL SERVICES at Centreville, Ia., lately have been largely attended. Revs. A. E. Clemens, A. V Kendrick and F. L. Moffett conducted the meetings.

—DURING THE Christian Endeavor meetings at Denve Col., July 14, the great tent near the City Park on Capito Hill was blown down by a furious windstorm. Service were in progress, and six thousand persons were in the ten at the time. Fortunately no one was seriously hurt, thoug many were bruised.

—THE AFRICAN INLAND MISSION has now seventee missionaries in the field. A new series of stations in the in terior will shortly be opened.

CENTRAL PARK IN MIDSUMMER

SEE ILLUSTRATION ON FIRST PAGE

In these torrid July days, when the great metropolis is lik an oven, the "breathing-spots," as its little parks are called are crowded with people, glad even in these hot precincts t get a breath of purer air than that afforded in the tenement and lodging-houses. Central Park—that spacious and beau tiful public resort—with its picturesque cottages, its ampl lawns, and its pretty lake forever lapping green banks, is th resort of thousands. But there are still other thousands t whom the splendid park is like a story in a fable. They are tie down by force of circumstances—it may be by poverty, by th demands of hard, poorly-paid work, or by sickness—and s they never get near the beautiful pleasure-ground. Ther are hundreds, we might say thousands, of children who neve get near the park. Some of these little sons and daughters c poverty have come to our Children's Home at Mont-Lawn where they have made their first acquaintance with nature.

KWANGSI'S VICEROY GRATEFUL

The following cablegram from U. S. Consul-General McWade has been received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

"CANTON, CHINA, July 11.

"Viceroy Tien asks me to express his deep and last ing gratitude and profound appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S contributions in behalf of starvin Kwangsi. (Signed) McWADE."

"A SURPRISE"

The "Family Art Gallery" pictures are lovely. My book, entitle The Speaking Oak, I read with great interest; am surprised that s fine a book can be given for so little money.

Lowville, N.Y. MRS. A. E. HULIN.

This book, with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD one year, $2; th "Family Art Gallery" free to all subscribers.

THE BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

Pope Leo Dead

HOW many homes in every land on earth were shadowed by the news that came on July 20, that Pope Leo XIII. was dead! Many people there were, who, having followed the reports that came from the Vatican, while the aged man lay ill, believed that he would recover, and live to round out his century of life. His power of recuperation was so great, his will force so strong, his self-control so sublime, that it seemed to defy death. He did apparently overcome his disease. The physicians declared that the pneumonia which had prostrated him had practically disappeared. But at ninety-three years of age the physical frame was exhausted, and the vital organs were worn out. Again and again after he was thought to be dying, the aged Pontiff rallied, rose from his couch, sat in his easy chair, and attended to business. But on July 19 it was noticed that his pulse had become feeble, and the beating of his heart more rapid. The mind, too, all along so clear and alert, was becoming clouded. It was not delirium, but there were strange fancies, as of the presence of invisible beings, which distressed him. Finally he sank into insensibility, from which, with increasing difficulty, he roused himself to reply to questions, and at last there was no response. The venerable Pontiff was beyond the sound of the human voice, and at last the physicians pronounced him dead. The pontificate of twenty-five years was ended, and the long career, so distinguished and so honored, even by Protestants, was closed.

Like nearly all famous men, Pope Leo had a devoted mother. It is said of her that, when her infant was placed in her arms on March 2, 1810, she predicted he would be raised to the Pontifical chair. His father, however, desired that he should follow his own profession of arms. From the school to which he and a brother were sent, he wrote his mother, saying that his teacher wished him to enter the Church, but he was delaying until the will of God should be made clear, and he begged his mother to join her prayers with him, that they might know what that will was. In July, 1824, the mother's heart was rejoiced by hearing that the decision was made. At the age of fourteen, Gioacchino Vincenzo Raffaelo Aloys Pecci took the first step to becoming a priest. After that, his studies were prosecuted with great vigor. In 1830, when he passed his examination, it was with so much distinction, that the head of his college made the marginal note on the record, "He is destined for higher things." It was remarkable that he was not immersed in theology, but took a keen interest in public affairs, and was an eager reader of the newspapers.

Leo was ordained a priest in 1837, and one of his first appointments was a test of his courage and devotion. During a fatal epidemic of cholera, he was made ecclesiastical superintendent of the hospitals, and day after day he was exposed to the infection of the disease. But he never wavered, and kept to his duty till the scourge passed. His promotion in the church was rapid. In 1846, he became Archbishop of Perugia, and in 1853 he was created a Cardinal. After the death of Pius IX., in 1878, he was elected Pope on the third ballot. He was then sixty-eight years old, and it was thought that owing to his frail constitution his reign would be short. To the surprise of all, however, it proved one of the longest pontificates on record. Contrary to expectation, Pope Leo proved a singularly astute diplomatist. He succeeded in settling the conflict with Russia, which was waging at his accession, and in defeating Bismarck in his attempt to enforce the May laws. Other difficult problems were also solved by the tact of the Pope, and he leaves the church much stronger in its power and influence in all lands, than it was at the beginning of his reign.

Speculation is rife as to the personality of Pope Leo's successor. Though shorn of the temporal power, the Papal influence is felt in every land. In France, in Germany, in Spain, and especially in Italy it is a matter of intense interest what kind of a man is chosen for the Papal chair. The choice rests with the Cardinals, who vote in secret conclave, and will assemble for the purpose ten days after the death. The most prominent candidates are Cardinal Rampolla, who was the Cardinal most trusted by the late Pope; Cardinal Gotti, who is the candidate desired by Germany, and is a man greatly resembling Leo in character; Cardinal Oreglia who is disposed to be reconciled with the King of Italy, and Cardinal Satolli, a diplomatist and vigorous ruler. There are sixty-four cardinals, and forty-three votes are necessary to a choice. Thus with Popes as with less conspicuous men, the words of the inspired preacher prove true:

One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh, but the earth abideth (Eccles. 1 4).

A Convict Inventor

Wealth to a large extent has come to a convict in the New Jersey State Prison, at Trenton. He was convicted of burglary some years ago, and as it was his fourth conviction for the offence he received a heavy sentence. He was already no stranger to the bars, for nearly twenty years of his life had been passed behind them.

A RECENT PHOTOGRAPH OF THE LATE POPE

He was set to work in the prison tailor-shop, where he proved himself a good workman, when he had once mastered the details of the trade. He had been an ingenious mechanic, and had applied his skill with no little success in burglarious enterprises. Now he set himself to devise an improvement in the sewing machine. The result was a blind lock-stitch arrangement, which was at once recognized as a valuable device. Local capitalists heard of it, and furnished the funds to patent the invention. It was introduced here with marvelous success, and arrangements were made to patent it in other countries. Thirty-four governments have now granted patent rights upon it, and large sums have been given by manufacturers for the right to use it. By one deal alone, the inventor gained fifty thousand dollars, besides royalties. He has now been released on parole, and has accepted an appointment, at a large salary, to superintend the construction of machines embodying his invention. It is a pity he did not learn before his painful and disgraceful experience that it would be better for himself as well as for the world, that he should turn his talents to a good instead of an evil purpose.

He that smiteth against his wrongeth his own soul (Prov. 8 36).

To Save a Baby's Life

A journey of four hundred miles on a special train was made a few days ago to save the life of a child. A family from New Jersey recently leased a camping ground on the Upper St. Regis Lake for the summer. The pet of the family is a baby, about seven months old. In some way the child obtained possession of a safety pin, which, child-like, it put in its mouth. Before it could be taken away, the child swallowed it, and as it was unclasped, it caught in its throat, and could not be dislodged by the nurse. The mother also did her utmost, but without avail. Almost frantic with fear, she hurried with the child to the nearest doctor, who also failed to extract the pin. He advised her to lose no time in taking the child to a New York hospital. Trains were not running at that hour, but the mother ordered a special train at a cost of a thousand dollars. In this she speeded to New York, where she arrived in eight hours. She went immediately to Roosevelt Hospital, where the house surgeon extracted the pin in two minutes. Except for some soreness in the lining of the throat where the pin stuck, the baby is unhurt. It would probably have died, if the mother had not been so loving and so rich as she was. We may hope that the life thus saved will be a happy and useful one. When, in the years to come, the story is told of that great sacrifice of money and the hurried journey, the glorious revelation should also be described of that infinitely greater love and sacrifice by which eternal life may be secured.

For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life (John 3: 16).

Seeking a Pirate's Hoard

Excavations are being made in the cellar of a building in Brooklyn, N. Y., in the hope of discovering treasures hidden by the notorious pirate, Captain Kidd. The men who are working have undertaken to give the owner of the building one half of all the booty they may find, and on that understanding he has given them permission to dig. The leader of the excavators asserts that he has definite information that gold coin, jewelry, precious stones, and silver in bars of the value of several million dollars, are contained in iron-bound chests and hogsheads buried at that place. Work is going on day and night, but hitherto no trace of the buried treasure has been found. It is not unlikely that at some place on Long Island treasures were buried by Kidd. He was sent out by the Government in 1696 to suppress piracy, but temptation was too strong for him and he turned pirate on his own account and plundered an enormous number of vessels. He returned in 1699 with a vast hoard of wealth and spent some time on Long Island. He doubtless hoped that his misdeeds were not known at home, but news of them had reached the Government and he was seized, tried and executed in the year 1701. His treasure was never traced, and he died without disclosing its hiding place. Many attempts have since been made to locate it, and it would appear from the excavations now going on that the seekers are not yet hopeless. It is a significant fact that this vast hoard of plunder should be still undiscovered, after being hidden for two hundred years. It proved useless to the thief who was hanged, and useless to the world.

As the partridge sitteth on eggs and hatcheth them not, so he that getteth riches and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days, and at his end shall be a fool (Jer. 17 11).

THE LATERAN, THE BURIAL PLACE IN ROME OF THE POPES

BRIEF NOTES

Rev. M. H. Lyon is conducting [illegible] a tent on the corner of Halsted [illegible] avenues, Chicago. Some remarkable conversions of street boys have occurred.

The birth rate in Massachusetts has fallen to thirty-four in the thousand, [illegible] from twenty-three to seventeen. The number of divorces to marriages is now one to [illegible] teen.

The high rate of immigration to this country was [illegible] by last year, being [illegible] meeting the [illegible] which is [illegible] which the largest previous number came.

ENCOURAGED IN GOD

DAVID, BEARING THE HEAD OF THE PHILISTINE CHAMPION, GREETED IN JERUSALEM

GOLDEN TEXT:

"If God be for us, who can be against us?"

ROMANS 8: 31

International S. S. Lesson for August 9
I. SAMUEL 17: 38-49

By. . .
Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

IN a former generation, every child knew the story of David and Goliath by heart, but now it is quite possible that an incident may be repeated in other than mission classes, which is told of a teacher who asked a class of rough boys, "Who killed Goliath?" only to get the answer, "I did not know he was dead." The child is to be pitied who does not know all about Goliath, especially what the story means for us to-day. There is danger, however, that the thrilling story, with its picture of the giant, will overshadow the higher spiritual truths it is intended to illustrate, as in the case of the boy that was asked whom he would wish to see first in heaven, and answered promptly, "Gerliah." Let us not so teach the lesson as to repeat Goliath's mistake of leaving God out, but like David, make God the chief actor. And when the lesson is over, let the uppermost thought in all minds be, not what David did, but what we must do. Let the lesson be the means of conversion, as it has been in the past. For example, when this story was read in a street sermon in London, a passing prizefighter was attracted by it, as "something in his line." The bragging on both sides he heard impatiently, characterizing it as "only blowing," but at the end he was "glad the little one won." He lingered to hear what the speaker would say about it, and was led to see that the greatest fights for him would be to conquer, with God's help, his own bad habits. And so he became a Christian and a street preacher, conquering many Philistines in the Name of Christ.

There is little to be added to the Bible story, which may be pictured in a few lines. The place was the Valley of Elah, about fifteen miles southwest of Jerusalem, in the midst of which was the pebbly bed of a dried up brook, from which the writer of these notes, a few years ago, gathered four pebbles which David did not use. On either hand were the hostile camps of Israelites and Philistines. Saul had proved himself to be a mighty man of valor in many battles, but this time he and his soldiers were terrified by a giant, nine feet eight inches high, clad in armor of shining brass, who daily defied any one of the Israelites to meet him in single combat. At length David came from his shepherding to bring food to his soldier brothers, and at once offered to accept the challenge, counting Goliath as but another wild beast, like those he had often conquered in defending his flocks. Let us note here the Bible portrait of David, taken about this time: "Ruddy, and withal of a beautiful countenance, and goodly to look to. Cunning as a player, and a mighty valiant man, and a man of war, and prudent in matters, and a comely person, and the Lord was with him." (I. Sam. 16: 18). Taunts failed to turn him from his purpose. He tried Saul's armor only to cast it aside. Then he went forth with his own weapon, a shepherd's sling, and conquered his mighty foe, so scattering his country's enemies. His wonderful courage is no hidden mystery. It is explained in that word, spoken when all was dark about him: "He encouraged himself in God." (1 Sam. 30: 6). He said in substance, what we have often quoted from George MacDonald: "Why should we fear anything with Him looking at us?" Faith casts out fear. No one can be afraid who really believes he is always in sight of God.

Illustration and Application

The heart of this lesson is, Youth entering bravely upon some dangerous or difficult task, in spite of the dissuasion of friends and the disdain of enemies. The courage to which this lesson should prompt to-day is not the courage of personal encounters or of war, which are seldom if ever necessary in our times, but the rarer courage needed for the battles of peace and especially of privacy—the moral courage that enables us to act instantly and persistently with reference to the eyes of God, rather than those of men. The giants we most need to fight are evils in us and about us, the Goliath of Greed and the Philistines of Passion. The courage to which we are called is not a momentary act but a state of mind, a habit of seeing the Invisible and Invincible, and so fearing nothing in his constant presence.

> Not to the ensanguined field of death alone
> Is valor limited; she sits serene
> In the deliberative councils, sagely scans
> The source of action, weighs, prevents, provides
> And scorns to count her glories, from the feats
> Of brutal force alone. —TOBIAS SMOLLETT.

What is it Like in the Bible?

Even in our use of the Bible illustrations let us exalt the instances of moral courage, the kind of courage we most need, rather than give an undue prominence to what has always been exaggerated, the courage of killing and of physical encounter. David himself was a greater conqueror than at Elah, when he overcame hatred and revenge, and spared Saul's life when he found him asleep, and might have killed his bitter foe. "Greater is he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city." Prophets and apostles hurling rebukes at wicked but mighty kings as did Elijah and Nathan and Jeremiah and Daniel and John the Baptist and Paul, were not one whit less courageous than David hurling his pebble at Goliath. The brave word is to be honored no less than the sword, and the Book is as good an armory as the brook. When Nathan later rebuked the sins of David, the king, with the words, "Thou art the man," it was as straight, as brave a shot as David's own in his battle with the giant. John and Peter standing up before the Sanhedrin in Jerusalem and refusing to be still when God bade them speak, were as brave as if they had marched against the Philistines and faced their giant leader undismayed. They said, "We ought to obey God rather than man." There is the secret of their courage—they were "ever in the great Taskmaster's eye." Individual Christians and the Church in general need to cultivate what lies back of Bible courage, a sense of the presence of God. The close relation of the presence of faith to the absence of fear is suggested in the command, "Add to your faith, valor," that is, "See God and you will never fear the face of man."

What is it like in Nature?

The beasts and birds that are most to be feared are mothers guarding their young, not idle dogs, who fight just for the sake of fighting.

> Let dogs delight to bark and bite,
> And dog-like boys consent to fight.

So, if fighting is ever justifiable in nations or individuals, it is that which is done in defence of the weak, as was David's battle in our lesson. For a boy to fight a bully, for "fear of being called a coward," is manifestly not courage. There is almost sure to come a time when the defence of the weak against the strong will give opportunity to show our mettle, but even in such cases, we should remember that "a soft answer breaketh the bone" that a word, even to the unwise, is often sufficient.

Instead of covering the walls of our art galleries, and even of our homes, with pictures of battles, that give the impression to young and old, that there is no other courage worth picturing and praising save the courage that is used for killing; let artists picture the railroad engineer who stands in a blazing cab, which has suddenly caught fire from the furnace, with his hand on the throttle bringing his train to a standstill, instead of jumping to save his life, sacrificing himself to save his train-load of people. Or, let them picture the steamboat pilot, while the flames eat up his hands, holding his helm to beach his river boat, that the passengers may escape, though he shall die of his burns. Let them picture the fireman, facing the flames at an open window, to seize a child and bring him back to his mother, who is wringing her hands below. Let them picture the doctors and the nurses in a plague-stricken city, the policeman stopping a runaway horse, the woman bringing out of the surf a drowning man, or holding a highway robber till the police arrive. Most of all, the mother keeping up her courage in a home of poverty, where sickness or sin has cast a lingering shadow. Under or over such a group, the motto might well be painted in gold, "Peace hath her victories, not less renowned than war."

DAVID SLAYING GOLIATH WITH HIS OWN SWORD

In such a group might well be included the statue of Robert Ross, the tall Endeavorer, who died defending the ballot-box at Troy; and Anthony Comstock, with his scar—more glorious than any medal—made by the dagger of one he had sent to prison for corrupting youth with foul literature. Central of all these heroes of peace, should be "the bravest of the brave," who never fought, but is conquering the world. Even when we draw illustrations from war, let us exalt those most heroic acts of Christian soldiers who have dared to "show their colors" at the hour of prayer in the barracks, and to refuse any share in the foul stories and fouler deeds of their comrades. When Hedley Vicars was converted in the Crimea, the first thing he did was to lay an open Bible on a little table in his tent. Those who hated religion soon left him, and that tent became the meeting-place for those who loved God. In the time of our Civil War, a soldier said: "To kneel down and pray here in camp before going to bed, requires more courage than to face the flying bullets and the cannon-balls on the battle-field." Acts of moral courage are hard to those whose supreme desire is to win favor, or, at least, escape disfavor in the eyes of men, but he who lives as in God's sight, cannot fear while doing what God approves.

It is in the humdrum of daily life that most of us must show our courage if we are to show it at all. And it is harder to be brave in private with no applause, no approval but that of God, than to be brave in the swing of music and movement and multitude.

Our Household Circle

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

ON THE ROAD

MANNERS on the road, reveal character almost unerringly. In our American life, people are a good deal on the road, traveling here and there by train, flitting about on excursions by waterway or land, with equal joy and ease; and it is no uncommon thing for any of us, to spend days in going from one point to another.

As a rule, strangers do not hurry to pick up new acquaintances on a journey; nor is it wise to become confidential on short notice, with people whom we have never seen before and may never see again. Yet, opportunities for courtesy are never lacking, if there is the spirit of true courtesy. For example: on a delayed train some weeks ago, the food supplies gave out, and a number of hungry passengers who had been late in securing their supper, were told that they must go without refreshments until the next morning. The menu was there, with a tempting array of soups, cold meats, sandwiches and delicacies, but the larder was absolutely as bare as old Mother Hubbard's cupboard, of nursery renown. People settled back in their luxurious velvet chairs, and began to think how it might feel to face real famine on a desert island, or a derelict ship. Then, two or three thrifty persons, provident as the wise virgins of old, produced from bags and baskets, remnants of luncheon, hard-boiled eggs, fruit, candy, sweet-chocolate, and biscuits, and generously distributed them to their fellows on the road. This was an act of the most winning politeness and kindness, and was duly appreciated, the car becoming quite social in this sharing of the loaf with strangers.

. . .

In sleeping cars, the toilet accommodations, for women at least, are seldom adequate to the demand upon them. A fastidious woman, accustomed at home to her leisurely, daily bath and careful hair-dressing, must either rise very early or sleep very late, if she insists on being as well groomed for the day's journey when on the road, as she is for the day's work or pleasure when at home. To monopolize the dressing-room for any length of time, while others are awaiting their turn, is selfish and unamiable. Nobody should do this. Many women suffer acutely from car-sickness, a malady as intolerable as sea-sickness, and less easily mitigated, for on deck one may always find fresh air, and, to keep a sister woman swinging desperately from side to side as the train swings around curves, while you take your time, is a thoughtless offence against propriety.

. . .

On the road in a great city where cars rush to and fro, all day long, one often sees fine manners exhibited; and, too, one often sees the very reverse. At the terminal, where the ferries discharge their crowds of hurrying passengers, a man or woman, lame, infirm or old, stands little chance against the multitudes who fight for the places in the first cars. One would fancy that every person's life depended on being first, so eager is the rush, and so headlong the crush. He or she who is possessed of really gentle breeding, looks out for the timid elderly woman, or for the cripple encumbered with his crutches, yields his or her time to the mother in whose tired arms are two or three bundles and a baby, no uncommon sight, and is generally disposed to be kind and considerate.

Of our blessed Master, no truer or sweeter word was ever written, than that he pleased not himself. We can take for our model no other pattern so beautiful. If we try to imitate Christ on the road of life, we shall go about doing good. Our words will be well-timed, our acts will be kind, and our whole character will be full of unselfish love.

Scrap-Books

Large manilla envelopes, properly labelled, take the place of scrap books with many studious people. Their custom is to keep interesting clippings on any theme that attracts their attention, in appropriate envelopes. If, for example, you want to keep pace with new inventions or applications of electricity, you will find in the daily papers continual items worth preservation. Cut out these paragraphs and put them in their separate envelope. Should you wish to keep anecdotes of children's sayings and doings, of dogs or horses, of shipwrecks or hairbreadth escapes, of any other subject under the star-lit canopy, keep them in this easy way.

A scrap-book less methodically arranged than the notes of the envelope-keeper appeals to me. I like to have a large book with stiff paper leaves, a paste-pot and brush and a pair of big scissors, somewhere close to my hand, and here I like to slip in, just as they happen to come, poems, stories, jests, inspiring tales of heroism, apt critiques of books, and whatever happens to please me. Glimpses of well-known personalities, with their photographs, go into this scrap-book, which, though not systematic, is surprising, and is a pleasure on the rainy day.

For children's use and amusement, a pictorial scrap-book, pasted on linen, is a never-ending source of joy. Let the older children make the book for the younger, or for the little ones in the hospital. There are hospitals and orphanages where scrap-books of this kind are welcome gifts. Find out if there be one near your home, and set the children who are well and happy, at work for those who are ill and lonely.

"Cherries are ripe. You can't have mine, I'll keep them all myself."

"I fear you are too stingy,
You pretty little elf."

Doing Her Own Work

A good many readers of this page must sympathize with a lady who was talking not long ago about doing her own work. "I have kept help," she said, "and I have done without it. I enjoy my independence when I do my work myself. I keep things in order with real ease. When I have done with a pan or a spoon I put it in its place. The work goes on very quietly; the family take their share in it. We have good times over our cooking and mending, and I know no greater triumph than when I put away a basket of fragrant, freshly ironed linen, that no hired hand has touched or torn."

OUT OF SCHOOL

Out of school these summer days,
We can fish or we can climb,
We can find a dozen ways
Just to pass the merry time.

The Love of the Carlyles for One Another

ON the wall in the room where I sit to write, hangs a new prized photograph picture, combining the rugged face of Thomas Carlyle, and the more delicate face of Jane Welsh Carlyle, his devoted and idolized wife. After the death of Carlyle, it was his hard fate to be traduced and misunderstood by a host of good people, who accepted the strange view of his friend Froude, and saw in the deep grief of a lonely old man, remorse for unkindness shown to the partner of his life during their long years together.

A good man once boasted that his wife and he had spent forty years of wedded life without a single difference of opinion. "I are jeasty worthy," was the comment of a friend, "but vare monotonous." Few married lovers fail to have their little disputes on occasion, and it is impossible that two persons of strong character, decided opinions, and copious vocabulary, should dwell under the same roof and invariably agree. In the case of the Carlyles, both were quick of temper, and high-strung of nerves, and both were Scotch, inheritors therefore of the dourness which is an ingredient of the Scottish temperament. Two goodly volumes, recently published, called New Letters and Memorials of Jane Welsh Carlyle, show how tenderly and faithfully this wife loved her husband, and how completely and unselfishly he loved her. It is gratifying to see the cloud of calumny dispersed, and pleasant to know that new attention is turned to the writings of Carlyle. Among the books which every young man should read, and every young woman, too, are Heroes and Hero-Worship, The Life of John Sterling, and Carlyle's masterpiece of historical biography, Oliver Cromwell. No one can be cultured who reads only the daily newspapers and only current literature. We must read Emerson, Carlyle, Ruskin, Whittier, Macaulay, Longfellow, Motley, Dickens, Tennyson, Browning, Thackeray, Hardy, and many more, if we would be cultivated and broad-minded people.

Sophy's Puzzle

"You kissed that lady, mother?" asked Sophy.

"Yes, child, what of that?" was mother's reply.

"I heard you tell Sister Nell that you didn't like her, and wished you needn't see her again this summer."

In the child's clear eyes that was a Judas kiss.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—JULIETTE. Beware of jealousy and envy, they are twin friends.

—HELENE. I earn some delicate work. Devote six months or a year to learning, and then seek employment.

—BRIDESMAIDS. The pretty things you make are bought by summer visitors, but it would not pay you to send them to the city for sale.

—LOUISE. Gray hair is very beautiful around a young face and gives an air of distinction. Don't distress yourself about your hair.

—CAROLINE. Yours is a personal question which only you can settle. No outsider can arbitrate in delicate matters that concern the home.

—MARIE. Think of the laundress before you put so many elaborate petticoats in the wash. Your mother is right. You should assist in the mending.

—MISS M. A. If you will send me the Swedish term you wish to speak of, I will have a metrical translation made for the benefit of use in English.

—DORA E. Apologize to the lady you have offended. You should not have left her to go home alone, leaving essential for the evening entertainment.

—EDITH. It is usual to eat most things with a fork. The thin fried potatoes, known as Saratoga chips, may be eaten in the fingers. If you use your own judgment you will find all things.

—A COUNTRY MAID. If you received a printed or engraved visiting card by mail or by hand it is given. Write nothing on the card. Answer a dinner invitation as soon as you receive it.

MIDSUMMER JOYS AT MONT-LAWN

Happy Tenement Waifs at our Fresh-Air Home --- Some Children's Letters

LIKE a little world of boys and girls, set all alone by itself in the heart of the beautiful Rockland County hills, overlooking the Hudson River, Mont-Lawn is now in the heyday of its midsummer beauty. From early morning till after sunset, its woods and grassy lawns are scenes of endless frolic and amusement. Never were days so filled with innocent pleasure as those golden days that are spent by the wee tenement lads and lasses there. Nor is their delight surprising, when it is remembered that all of them come from the hot lanes and alleys of the city, where there is never a tree nor a flower, nor the song of bird to rouse them in the morning.

That the little folks fully appreciate their surroundings, is made evident in innumerable simple, child-like ways. Those of the boys and girls who can write, are supplied with materials at the Home, so that they may send an occasional letter to their parents or friends in the city, to inform them how they are getting along. Some of these letters are queer productions. Written with much squirming of tongue and squaring of elbows and with infinite pains to avoid upsetting the ink-bottle, they are full of expressions of love for the beautiful country, of enjoyment in the delights of Mont-Lawn, and of gratitude for the good-hearted people whose generosity made such a holiday possible. We give a few extracts, just as the little writers penned them, and without alteration:

"Dear Father (writes E. H. a wee, dark-eyed maid), we are having a fine time and we have good things to eat we go out with our teacher for blackberries and we go out gathering birch and we go for flowers the girls are very kind to us. We get all we want to eat, and our teacher tells ous storys every night and we go gathering apples. Every night we go to chapel and pray and sing and the teacher tells us storys. Your loving little girl."

Another little maid (A. P.) writes to her mother: "I wish you would please come over and see how it is out here. I like it out here I am having a very good time out here Are you sick our not And are you working our not. Our are you washing up town, our are you working in the bakering. I am coming home Monday and I wish you would Send me a pair of shoesis We go in bathing And we go to chapel."

John S. writes to his mother:

"I got here safe enough and its fine. Mr. Klopsch had a bean hunt and I found one and got a cent for it. then he had a race but I lost in that and last he had a Kain game and I won a chane and linnie and all the rest are well. how is Flora and all at home?"

Mary M. sends this letter to her mother:

"I have as much as I want to eat and drink and all we want. We had as good a dinner as we would want. We had Roast beef beans, gravy Bread-pudding and Bread Sat. We dont have a thing but fun. O what fun! We went up into the woods and we had a lovely time.

We are not allowed to go down the road. But in the woods and around."

Francis F. writes:

"I came up in the ship Crystenah and enjoided the sail up the Hudson. I seen the palaceades and the scenery. I like the country very much and know all the teachers. I have a nice little bed for myself. I went to bed at 7 o'clock and got up at 30 minutes to five. We have a great big swimming pool fenst in and play-grounds."

To those who have helped us in the Fresh-Air work, these simple utterances of childhood will be more eloquent of appreciation than the finest language. We are glad to have so many co-operators in the Mont-Lawn work, which is a blessed boon to thousands of the children in city homes of poverty.

Even in distant States, our readers are interested in the welfare of our colony of tenement boys and girls at Mont-Lawn. From Kansas comes this letter, which shows a beautiful Christian spirit of benevolence toward the Fresh-Air Fund waifs:

Dear Editor: I am interested in the little children of the slums, and would like to do something to help some of them to an outing during the hot months. I have been thinking of forming a sewing society here, open to the young girls of all denominations, to make clothes to be sent to Mont-Lawn; and I think we might have entertainments of some kind occasionally, and contribute the proceeds to the Fresh-Air Fund. If you think this plan practicable, will you kindly send information as to the conditions existing among the poorest classes in the city to the people whose addresses I shall give you, in order to bring the matter to the attention of the most influential church people, and get them interested when they hear of the project to help the little ones?

EVANGELINE WILLIAMSON.
Geneseo, Kans.

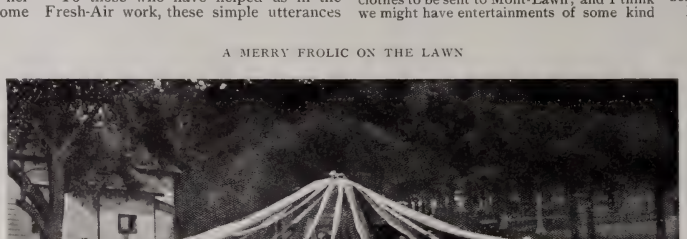
Miss Williamson's aid for our Mont-Lawn work will be most welcome. We would ask her to remember that our little girls are between the ages of four and twelve and the boys between four and ten. Gifts of clothing, underclothing, boots, shoes, and stockings should be sent, express prepaid, to the Matron, Miss Collins, Mont-Lawn, Nyack, New York.

This week we have to acknowledge many very cheering letters from patrons of the Children's Home. The King's Daughters' "Labor of Love Circle" of Mechanicville, N. Y. (through Miss Minnie E. Gorsline, treasurer,) sends $21 "for the Fresh-Air Children." S. S., Kearney, Neb. ($3), "that one child may enjoy the pleasures of fresh air. It is with interest that I read of your good Christian work. May good be done not only to the body, but to the souls of many." Mrs. J. N. R., East Liverpool, O., sends $3 to "give an outing to some poor child, in memory of my father and mother, who have gone to their reward." "Our prayers (write Mrs. M. A. L. and daughter, of Woodbine, $1.) are that you may receive much help in the good work." Mr. Charles V., of Eastonville, Col., sends $3, a Children's Day collection. A mother, Washingtonville, N. Y., sends $3 "in memory of an only daughter." Miss J. M. C., Norwich, Conn., sends $6 to provide an outing for two needy children, and so also do Mr. and Mrs. W. H. S., of Lind, Wash., the latter adding in their letter, "May God send his richest blessing on your work."

Mrs. H. S., Watertown, Conn., $3, says: "I wish it were more, for I think of the poor in the city these hot days and nights." "God bless the dear workers (write Mrs. J. R. and daughter Eunice, Bowdle, S. Dak.), and send them abundant means to carry on this grand work in behalf of His little ones, is our earnest prayer." "This is to send a poor little girl to the country who has never been there before. I hope to be able to help a little each year," writes Mrs. A. S. L. D., Mt. Holly, N. J. ($3). A most touching letter is that from a lady in Bethlehem, Pa. (Miss A. L. W.), who, in sending her gift, invokes the Heavenly Father's blessing upon her little beneficiary whom she has never seen.

All contributions in aid of the Children's Home should be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, New York. Every contribution will be duly acknowledged.

A GALA TIME OUTSIDE THE BIG DINING-TENT



A MERRY FROLIC ON THE LAWN

CONTRIBUTIONS IN AID OF OUR FRESH-AIR HOME

In mem of brother Lee, Waterloo .. 21 00
In mem of Bessie, Worcester 3 00
In remembrance, Mrs E J Treadway 1 00
Reader, Wakeman. 2 00
A Reader, Leland. 3 00
C H Reader, Bucyrus 9 00
A Reader of C H, Dorchester 2 00
Reader of C H, Myerstown 3 00
Reader of C H, Sand Creek 5 00
A Subr, Elmhurst. 50 00
Subr, Kinsley 3 00
Subr, Somonauk ... 1 00
Subr to C H, Taunton 5 00
Old Subr, Hannibal 3 00
An old subr, Highland Park Sta ... 1 00
A Thank Offering, Blacksville 3 00
Insomuch, Concord. 9 00
Daughter, Campbell 1 15
Kearney 3 00
A Shut-in, Corinna. 3 00
Member of C H, Unnamed, Monroe.. 6 00
Swallow, Nashua.. 10 00
Repentence, Sauk Centre 2 50
Mother & Daughters, Daugherty 5 00
From Mother, Morris 12 00
From Sad Mother, Rumford Falls .. 1 00
Friend & Well-wisher, Ketteby 1 00
Well-Wisher, Westphalia 6 00
Two Little Boys, Moosup 1 00
A lover of children, Taunton 3 00
One of the least, Dayton 50
One who loves children, Marlboro.. 5 00
One who lives in the country, Pawnee City 3 00
Boys in S S, Chipman 3 00
Girls S S Cl, Erwinna 1 00
Prim children, Haddonfield 6 00
A Class of Girls, 1st Cong Ch S S, Lawrence 3 00
S Sch Class, Xenia 3 00
Members of Hickmans S Sch 5 00
Inf Cl S S, Kidder 1 50
M E Ch S Sch So, Kirkwood 5 39
S S, Liberty Grove 1 00
Beth Ref S S, N Y City 50 00
Prim Cl Beth Un S Sch, Poland 2 00
S S, Rockwell City 4 64
S S, Walkerton ... 2 00
Mission Band, Charlemont 6 00
Jr C E, Concord.. 1 75
Jr C E Soc, Hartleton 3 01
Jr C E Soc, Los Angeles 3 00
Pleasant Grove Cir of K D..... 6 00
Missy & Relief Soc of Carroll st Chapel, St Paul 3 00
Ep Lea, Trenton.. 3 00
Willing Workers, Waterford 3 00
Young Girls, Sunshine Cir, M E Ch 9 50
Ashhurst, Alice.... 10 00
Dell, Mrs W A & child'n 5 71
Head, C A..... 1 00
Igon, John 6 00
Kaucher, J H 21 00
Mastick Bertha ... 3 00
Moore, Mr & Mrs M V 6 00
Wilson, M L..... 5 00
Happy Hour S S Overlook, Grangeville... 8 00
Friend in June.... 6 00
Friend of children, Ardsley 2 00
Friend to children, Grangeville 5 00
In Jesus Name, Springfield 6 00
I H N, Clear Lake. 3 00
Fre- Ellwood City. 5 00
I H N, Middletown 1 00
I H N, New Castle 3 00
I H N, Palmetto.. 6 00
I H N, Sabina 15 00
I H N, Saunderst'n 3 00
I H N, York 6 00
In mem of mother, Wauseon 1 00
In mem of Julia, Harrison 10 00
In mem Marion E Deems 3 00
In mem of Lizzie. 3 00
In mem Effie V & V E. Roanoke... 6 00
In mem of Mrs E E Hayes..... 3 00
Kansas Reader, Pala 3 00
Readers of C H & little boy, Lapps. 1 10
A subr, Ventura.. 3 00
A Subr, Wakefield 3 00
Subr, Essex 5 00
Subr, Medford ... 3 00
Subr, Morrison.... 1 00
Subr, New Haven. 3 00
Sympathizer, Donaldsonville 1 00
Sister & I, Canonsburg 6 00
Young Girl, Aurora 75
Tithe Givers, Corsica 3 00
Faith, Janesville. 1 00
Mite Box, Kirkw'd 3 00
Spinster, Marion.... 1 00
Norse Maid, Phila 1 00
Granda, Pittsburg. 3 00
No. 8408, Rusk.. 3 00
Farmers Daughter, W Middletown.. 50
Five S Sch boys, Marlboro 1 65
A Thank Offering, New Bedford 3 00
Mother & two dans, Daugherty 6 00
Mother & daughter, Lowell 6 00
Mother & daughter, Newark 5 00
One who loves the Master, Ayers Flat 5 00
One who loves the Master, Quarkertown 6 00
One who loves little children, Camden 1 00
Lover of Children, Des Moines 3 00
Lover of Children, Orlando 10 00
One of Christs weakest ones, Landisburg 4 00
Prim Class, Fulton Ave S Sch, M E Ch, Balto 3 00
Prim S S Class, W Concord 3 00
S S Cl, Westfield. 3 00
Childrens Day Offering, Un S Sch, Cullison 5 20
Philethea Bib Cl of Bapt S S, Rockland 3 00
Un S S, Blooming Prairie 5 00
S Sch, Leon..... 1 72
1st Congl S Sch, Peoria 21 00
Bissell House S S, Grand Rapids.. 6 00
Parnassus Ref P C E Soc..... 10 55
Jr End Soc, Ashley 3 00
Ladies Soc, B Ch of Red'mer, Bklyn 6 00
Christian Endvrs, Franklin 5 00
Missy Soc, Pres Ch, Fairton 3 00
Missy Soc, Harrington Park 3 00
Jr C E Soc, Morv Ch, Lake Mills.. 1 26
Y P S C E, Pleasant Hill 6 00
J C E Soc, Sag Harbor 3 00
Sunbeam Soc, Pres Ch, Sag Harbor. 15 00
Willings Helpers of Pres Ch, Johnstown 6 00
Young Ladies Club, Lamont 3 00
Pansy Club, Marion 3 00
Kings Dau Soc, Pres Pawtucket 6 00
The Daisy Band, Rutherford 28 00
Cheerful Workers of Hope Church, Springfield 9 00

THE NARROW GATE

by REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON, D.D.

Author of "In His Steps."

CHAPTER III—Continued

EDWARDS went over to the desk and sat down, while Douglas got down by the boy, who was sitting on the floor picking up the type with one hand and rubbing an ink-daubed fist into his eyes.

"Everybody jabs it into me!" the boy sobbed.

Douglas had repented of his loss of temper the moment he spoke sharply. The sight of the disconsolate, ink-spattered figure on the floor recalled his own apprenticeship, when the seniors had made life a burden to him in the college printing office in his freshman year.

"I'm sorry I spoke as I did, George. I lost my temper. If you'll call it quits, the next time your grandmother dies I'll close up the office and we'll go to the ball game together."

"No! Will you?" asked the boy, a grin instantly irradiating his mottled features. "That's all right Mr. Douglas. You're a trump. That Coleman never was sorry for nothing. Lucky he quit. I was getting ready to run him through the press and make a special edition of him. I'll help you get the paper out in time."

The boy began clawing up the type with ludicrous haste, and Douglas, with a smile on his face, got up. He laid a hand on the boy's head.

"That's all right. We'll manage it somehow."

"I'll stay by the Beacon, Mr. Douglas. If you want me to work all night, I don't care; I can live without sleep if you furnish coffee and grub."

"All right, George. I'll be glad to furnish both," said Douglas with a laugh, as he walked over to his desk.

Edwards explained in a few words the plan of the Mayor and his friends, as far as he knew it.

The whole affair had been kept very quiet, and it had evidently been a part of the plan to call Coleman out of the Beacon office, at a time when his going would embarrass Douglas the most.

"It is the talk on the street that Coleman has been offered twice what the Beacon paid, to work on the new paper. I don't know how true it is. But in any case they are evidently ready to use their slush fund liberally."

Douglas was thoughtfully silent. He was quite calm now, and master of himself. The situation was growing decidedly interesting.

"The question for me of course, is, where to get a pressman. Coleman was an unusually good hand for a county newspaper. Do you know where I can get any one? I ought by rights to have two helpers."

"I don't know any one in Colby," Edwards replied, slowly. "I'll wire over to Clinton and see if we can find any one there."

"The Beacon has got to be out on time, if George and I have to do it all alone," said Douglas doggedly. He began to feel as he sometimes used to, during his college course, when he faced some particularly difficult problem in the matter of pulling through financially. Edwards cheerfully nodded encouragement.

"Good for you. Don't let the gang beat you. I'll wire right over to Clinton. Meanwhile, if my clerks can help in any way, you're welcome to any one of them. I don't see how you can manage the thing, but if you think you can—"

"I think so, Mr. Edwards. Much obliged for your offer. I'll accept help for running the press to-night. George has promised to stand by." He quoted the boy's statement about "coffee and grub."

"Mrs. Edwards will have something to say as to that," Edwards shouted, as he darted out of the office. "I'll let you know at once, as soon as I hear from Clinton."

Douglas went back to the little desk and sat down a moment. The little clock on top of the desk said half past nine. This was Thursday. If he worked all day and all night, used some extra plate matter that he had saved up for the next week, and left out some of the local items he had planned to run in, he reckoned he could get the paper off to the press and into the mailing sacks by Friday afternoon. The letter from the mother to Mr. Vernon, together with the editorials alluding to the sermon, had been in the form pied by the boy. Douglas was determined not to leave these out. He went over to the case and began to work at once, giving directions at the same time to George. A nervous excitement made his whole body tingle at first. After a few moments this feeling passed away, leaving his muscles firm, hard, and enduring. His eye glowed with the fire of his inward purpose, and his mind was clear, strong, and active.

He had never felt more capable of sustained and continuous effort. At ten o'clock Edwards came in a moment to say with evident disappointment, "I wired over to Clinton, but no chance for any one there. What do you think? Can you make it?"

"Have to."

"Bartlett is boasting that he will have the Beacon broken up in two weeks. That's the talk on the streets."

"We go to press as usual to-morrow morning." Douglas never paused in the steady click, click of type, and there was a light in his eye that the Mayor had once seen there.

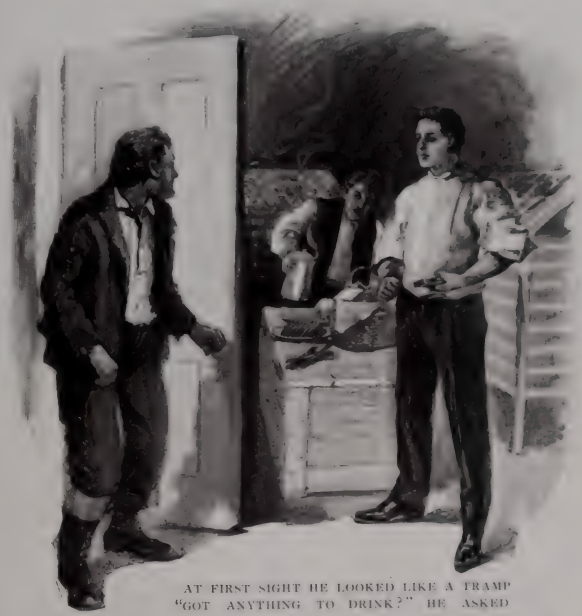
"Better lock your door. The crowd will be coming round to bother you if you don't," Edwards suggested. Two or three curious idlers had already stopped in. Douglas nodded to Edwards.

"All right. I'll have to do that, I guess."

"You'll need some lunch at noon and to night. I'll send word to Julia and have some doughnuts and coffee sent over. When you hear two loud raps followed by three soft ones open the door. Two raps for coffee and three for doughnuts."

"But I don't feel as if Mrs. Edwards ought to be—"

"You let us run the commissary department, young man, and don't say a word," Edwards shouted as he went out. At the door he turned and called out so that the loafers in the office took the hint, "Better lock up, Douglas. You haven't time to discuss crops or politics this morning."



AT FIRST SIGHT HE LOOKED LIKE A TRAMP
"GOT ANYTHING TO DRINK?" HE ASKED

The men went out and Douglas shut the door, locked it, drew the shade down over the windows that opened on the street and then worked as he never had worked in all his life before. It was hot, and the little office soon became almost unbearable; but he kept on steadily, smiling occasionally at the sight of the boy, who entered into the contest of the Beacon against time with a perspiring enthusiasm that got in the way as much as it helped, but was so unmistakably genuine that Douglas had not a word to say by way of criticism or rebuke.

Just before twelve there came two loud raps on the door, followed by three soft ones.

"Lunch time," said Douglas.

George darted to the door, unlocked it, spoke a word to somebody there, shut and locked the door, and came staggering back into the office with a big basket.

"Who brought the basket?" asked Douglas, as the boy set it down on the desk and began to open it.

"Some kid! Hi! This is fine! Look here! Cold chicken, sandwiches, doughnuts, apple pie!" His last with a whoop that might have been heard out on the sidewalk.

"Say, Mr. Douglas, do you board at Mr. Edwards?"

"No," said Douglas, as he and the boy spread out the generous lunch and began to eat.

"Why don't you?"

"I haven't been asked to," replied Douglas, smiling.

"I wouldn't wait for an invitation," said the boy, as he swallowed his third glass of lemonade.

"Better be careful. I can't afford to employ a doctor until after we've got the Beacon out, my way."

"Huh!" The boy paused with a chicken leg between his teeth. "Do you think Mr Edwards sent this lunch over for us to look at?"

"Hardly," said Douglas, laughing. He remembered his own boyhood, and divided the apple pie in two parts, and gave George the larger section.

"Do you think we're going to get her out on time, Mr. Douglas?" asked the boy, between mouthfuls.

"I think so, but it will be an all-night stand. Are you good for it?"

"Am I? Mr Douglas, when Cleary run the Beacon, he was so lazy he spent the first part of the week out on the sidewalk, or in the saloons, giving the President of the United States pointers on how to run the country. Then 'bout Thursday night, he'd get in here and raise Jericho 'cause the paper wa'n't being got out. I've turned that press many a time till the roosters crowed, and I was so sleepy I couldn't eat."

"You must have been pretty sleepy."

"I was the next door to an Egyptian mummy, Mr. Douglas! But I'd give any thing to beat that Coleman. Say, Mr Douglas! Do you suppose we'll get any supper?"

"Are you thinking about supper already?" asked Douglas, speaking severely.

"We ought not to put off thinking of a good thing until it's too late, Mr Douglas," quoth George, as he washed down the pie with another glass of lemonade.

Douglas laughed, as he gathered up the dishes and put them back into the basket. Then back to the work with renewed energy.

The hot afternoon wore away rapidly. Several times persons tried the door, and finding it locked, thumped on it, but Douglas paid no attention. Once some one came and called out to him. He stopped long enough to go to the door.

"Getting on all right, eh?" it was the encouraging voice of Edwards.

"Yes. I think we'll have it all right. That was a fine lunch Mrs. Edwards sent over. We're very thankful for it."

"All right. Supper will be ready on the dining car at six o'clock. Is the boy's appetite good?"

"It's in good repair."

"All right. We'll try to keep him from fainting away. Good-bye and success to you. I'll send Banks over after supper to help on the presswork."

Douglas expressed his grateful thanks and went back to the case. Without any resting he kept on making up the forms and using George as every possible gap. At six a second lunch arrived even more tempting than the first. A short note from Mrs Edwards lay on the top of the dishes.

"I'm sorry I couldn't get you some ice cream, but I confess I was unable to. It has been in the refrigerator all day. I hope you will succeed in getting the paper out on time, as you are trying to do. Mr.

CONTINUED ON NEXT PAGE

Copyright, 1908, by Charles M Sheldon.

Edwards and myself are very much interested in your plans, and we believe in you thoroughly."

Douglas felt a choking as he read the friendly note.

"Well, this is what I call a Waldorf-Astoria sort of a time," said the boy, as he set out the various good things on the desk. When the watermelon was reached he uttered a yell of delight.

"Say, Mr. Douglas! Let's fix to have a run on the Beacon every week. My! Look at that! Lemon pie this time! Coleman didn't know what he missed. I'll tell him all right next time I see him!"

When the supper was disposed of, back to the case again, and then as the forms were ready, the presswork began. At eight o'clock Banks came from Edwards' store. The three perspiring figures were hard at it when, at ten o'clock, something went wrong with the press, and everything had to stop while Douglas hunted for the cause of the trouble.

It took him over an hour to make repairs on a broken pinion. It was so far along in the night by that time, and so hot and close in the office, that he unlocked the door and threw it open, together with all the windows.

The refreshing night air put new energy into the little force that was running a race against time and the Bartlett organ, but as Douglas contemplated the work that yet remained unfinished, he had his grave misgivings. There were still several columns to set up. His press was an old Gordon Simplex and printed one page on the reverse of the patent inside. He could use the regular page for the fourth side; but he was ambitious, if it couldpossibly be done, to use his own composition, and especially all the local matter he had prepared before Coleman went out.

At half past eleven a man came in with another lunch from Mrs. Edwards.

"Suppose there is enough for three?" asked the boy, glancing somewhat jealously at Mr. Banks.

"If there isn't, of course you'll have to wait until morning," said Mr. Banks, winking hard at Douglas.

"You don't belong on the Beacon; Mr. Douglas and I are running it," said George, as he opened up the basket.

"You and Mr. Douglas you mean."

"There's plenty," said George, as he emptied the basket. "Mr. Edwards is a brick hotel. I know now why he is so everlastingly good-natured. Any man that gets such grub as this all the time, hasn't got no kick ready. If I had such grub as this, my disposition would be different."

"Yes, you would have a disposition to dyspepsia," said Banks.

The lunch had been set out on the desk, and the three tired workers were about to begin, when there came abruptly into the office a most remarkable figure, so remarkable in appearance, that Douglas and Banks, and even the boy, stared in silent astonishment at him.

At first sight he looked like a tramp who had been sitting for one of Mr. Opper's pictures. He was covered with dust, his clothes were in rags, he had no hat, and there was a streak across one cheek that might have been dried blood. On one foot he wore a tennis shoe, and on the other a part of a riding boot with a yellow legging, held on with two buttons.

He stood silently returning the look of astonishment that greeted him, and Douglas finally said, "What do you want?"

"Got anything to drink?" the man asked with some hesitation, in sharp contrast to his entrance; but Douglas noted the hungry look the man gave the food on the desk.

"Won't you join us, brother?" Douglas gave the invitation simply but heartily. One of the things the president of Lincoln College had taught him was a belief in the human brotherhood.

TO BE CONTINUED NEXT WEEK

"The Ancient People"

In the current issue of The People, the Land and the Book, Rev. Robert Cameron, D.D., contributes a leading article of special timeliness on, "Eastern Problems and the Jews." Students of prophecy and observers of world-politics will read it with interest. Other contributions discuss, "The Difficulties of Scripture," "Israel in Russia" (poem), "Selections from the Talmud," "Palestine and her Jewish Colonies," "Objections against Jewish Evangelization," "What Shall be Done with the Russian Jews?" "Hebrew Tales," etc. Subscription $1; B. A. M. Schapiro, publisher, 345-347 East Third street, New York.

OUR SERVICE OF SONG—EDITED BY IRA D. SANKEY

I Will Sing of Thy Redemption

"I will sing of the mercies of the Lord."—Psa. 89: 1.

Victoria Stewart. Victor H. Benke.

1. O Thou Rock of my sal-va-tion, Hope and ref-uge of my soul,
2. Thou who didst so kindly watch me, Ere my heart to Thee I gave,
3. Thou who art my staff and comfort, While this fleet-ing life shall last,
Thou wilt hide me when the tempest, And the storm-y bil-lows roll.
Thou whose love has paid my ran-som, Can I doubt Thy pow'r to save.
I will trust Thee for the fu-ture, And a-dore Thee for the past.
Chorus.
I will sing..... of Thy re-demp-tion,..... And pro-
I will sing of Thy re-demption, claim..... the wondrous grace..... That be-yond..... the vale and
And proclaim the wondrous grace That beyond shad-ow Has pre-pared..... for me a place.....
the vale and shadow Has prepared for me a place.

Copyright, 1902, by The Biglow & Main Co.
From "Young People's Songs of Praise," by permission of the Biglow & Main Co.

PASSION FOR SOULS*

The Two Elements that Combine to Produce Apostolic Energy

CHIEF among the incentives to Christian work is the profound conviction, which Paul had, of the power of the Gospel. "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ," he said, "for it is the power of God unto salvation." When a man is once convinced that the secret he holds is effective for its purpose, he goes forward with confidence. He believed firmly that the Gospel was the remedy for sin, and, since sin was universal, it was a remedy of which every man had need. Combined with this conviction, there was an unselfish desire for the good of others. Both elements are necessary to produce the passion for souls. A man who does not care for the welfare of his fellows, is likely to be as idle as the man who does not feel confidence in the means at his disposal. But, given a desire to help and the possession of the means of helping, and there are the elements of useful service.

That there is now a dearth of apostolic lives, may be due to the absence of either of these elements. The tendency of our time is toward selfishness. We praise the boy at school who gets ahead of his competitors, even though his achievement would be just the same whether one passed or twenty. In business, a man is esteemed for getting a monopoly of a district or a trade by which he gets rich and keeps others from sharing with him. But how far is that course from the spirit of Christianity which enjoins the bearing of another's burdens, the concern for another's welfare! The spirit of Cain has entered modern life and repudiates the duty of being another man's keeper. Happily, a few have realized how unchristian that attitude is, and so we get the Social Settlement and the aids that the Institutional Church is giving to the poor. But the spirit needs further extension, and in no way more than in the endeavor to win souls for Christ.

The second element is equally indispensable. We need to believe in the Gospel as a mighty power as effective now as it has ever been. There are abundant proofs on all hands that should convince us of the fact. No power has yet been discovered by philosophy that approaches the Gospel in its effect on the human being. The power to arrest the soul on its downward path, to keep it in the path of life, to energize it for spiritual reproduction, is in the Gospel still and its trophies are to be found everywhere. That power is the hope of the world.

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society and Baptist Young People's Union for August 9. Romans 1: 1-17.

THE STIRRED GIFT*

Every One Responsible for the Employment of the Ability God Has Given

CAN it be possible that a gift of God to any man should lie dormant and unused? Paul's admonition to his young disciple would imply that it might be so. The Parable of the talents suggests the same warning. The man of one talent, who was so afraid of losing it, that he hid it, instead of trading with it, was a specimen of this kind of danger. Not much is known of the young man to whom the apostle wrote, but if we may judge from the tone of the two Epistles, we should infer that he was modest, unassuming, needing the spur rather than the curb. We all know such men, and while the character has its beauties and its merits, it has its dangers, too.

Every man ought to be convinced that he has a gift. Some of us are too much given to comparing ourselves with others, and to thinking how much we could do if we had their powers of eloquence, or their money, or position of influence; but as we have so little capital to work with, it does not seem worth making any effort. Of course, that is the easiest way to regard our position, but it is distinctly and explicitly condemned. God does not expect from one talent men, the achievements of those to whom he has entrusted five talents, but he does expect that we shall do all that we can. It has sometimes happened, too, that the man who thought he had but one talent has discovered, when he came to use it, that it was not the only talent he possessed, and that he was really able to do more than he had believed was possible to him. Even if he makes no such discovery, he may find that his one talent exactly fits him for a service that his more richly endowed brother has overlooked. Besides this, he may have the privilege of beginning work of infinite value. The poor Methodist preacher under whose sermon Spurgeon was converted, could have had no idea of the far-reaching effect of that sermon. The Sunday School teacher whose work seems so humble, and often so fruitless, does not know how much he may be doing for the future of the church. The one gift we have, though it be but one, needs to be stirred, to be used, to be actively employed, and when that is done the results may be left with God. "He that does the best his circumstance allows, does well; angels could do no more."

*Topic of the Epworth League for Aug. 9. II. Timothy 1:6-8.

DON'T REPINE

CHILD of a Saviour's love,
Oh, do not e'er repine
Because the flowers have faded,
Or the fruit dropped from the vine.

Again will smile the springtime,
Again will bloom the flowers,
And carpet green again be seen,
Washed by refreshing showers.

And clouds that darkly gather
To-day above the head,
May break away to-morrow,
By radiant sunbeams sped.

When dearest friends have left us,
And earthly joys have flown,
Look up and claim the promises,
And feel you're not alone.

Mrs. Susan B. Roberts.

Elmira, N. Y.

The Summer Girl

loses half the pleasure of her outing when her skin tans "brown as a berry." To retain a pink-and-white complexion the summer long, use

Pozzoni's Complexion Powder

Made of purest materials. A delicate, healing, refreshing preparation that imparts an added touch of beauty, prevents tan, freckles and that unwelcome "shininess" and is invisible when rightly used.

Sold everywhere. Full sized box on receipt of 50 cents.

J. A. POZZONI CO., Chicago, Ill.

A Record of 30 Years

1873 1903

THIRTY YEARS AGO the advent of the

REMINGTON

created the typewriter industry.

EVER SINCE the Remington has been the recognized leader among writing machines.

TODAY its supremacy is unquestioned.

SOLID MERIT is the foundation of its enduring rule.

REMINGTON TYPEWRITER COMPANY
327 Broadway, New York

INCOME OF

6% per annum on sums of $100 or more, withdrawable after one year . . . . . .

5% per annum on any amount deposited, withdrawable at any time . . . . . .

SECURED by mortgages on New York City improved real estate, and by a guarantee fund of 10 per cent. of the face value of all mortgages in force.

This corporation is subject to examination by the Supt. of Banks of the State of New York.

KNICKERBOCKER BUILDING-LOAN CO.
(Established 1883)
38 Park Row, New York City
Depositories.—City Trust Co., of New York, and United National Bank.

BE A WRITER.

Learn Journalism and Story-Writing by mail. Send for free booklet "Writing for Profit;" tells how to succeed as writer, and how we sell and syndicate MSS. on commission.

NATIONAL PRESS ASSOCIATION, 47 The Baldwin, Indianapolis

LEARN PROOFREADING

If you possess a fair education, why not utilize it at a genteel and uncrowded profession paying $15 to $25 weekly. Situations always obtainable. We are the original instructors by mail.

HOME CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL, PHILADELPHIA

LOOKING FOR SAFE INVESTMENTS

Will remind you of the WILLIAM R. COMPTON 5 per cent. Mortgages. Recommended by financiers of national reputation. Book free. Address, No. 5 WARDELL BUILDING, MACON, MO.

Boyhood Days of Famous Divines

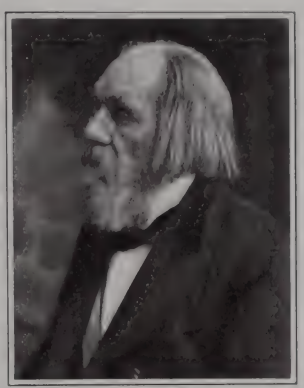
No. II. EDWARD EVERETT HALE

By REV. LOUIS ALBERT BANKS

EDWARD EVERETT HALE first saw the light in Boston, April 3, 1822, and the first memory that still abides with him, is his sight of "the green feathers on the Rifle Rangers," which those proud soldiers sported on their parade of the 17th of June, 1825.

Mr. Hale cannot remember when he could not read. He has no recollection of learning to read, nor who taught him. He supposes it must have been Miss Susan Whitney, to whose school he was sent, before he was three years old. There were four of the little Hales at that time, who were of a proper age for this primary school—two boys and two girls. The Hales lived in the very heart of what is now Old Boston. Their house stood on the very spot where Parker's Hotel is now, and twice a day, excepting Thursdays and Saturdays, when they went but once, a servant piloted the four children to a private school. In his Memories of a Hundred Years, Mr. Hale speaks of these journeys:

"The other three were my playmates; they were older than I; and when they went to school daily, I used, naturally enough, to cry and beg to go with them. Ah me! since that time I have known many another hapless child who has stumbled into the like pitfall. Miss Susan Whitney did not hesitate to receive me, though I suppose I was one of the youngest of her flock. She attended to her part of the business well. I suppose I had learned my letters at home. I have no recollection of anything in the process. I cannot recollect any moment of my life when I could not read as well as I can now."



EDWARD EVERETT HALE

Describing the conditions of that early school, Mr. Hale continues:

"What I remember is this: That the schoolroom was one of two chambers on the first floor of a pre-Revolutionary house in a little private courtyard, next west of the Trinity Church of that day. The room was fifteen feet square, with a sanded floor, and with benches and chairs enough for twenty scholars or more."

These descriptions of Mr. Hale are so fine that it is too bad to lose any of the little touches that throw light on his boyhood, or to fail to let him paint them in his own language. After numerous digressions in his Memories, he says:

"Let us return to Fullum (the servant) and his little flock of four, of the united ages, as the newspapers say, of twenty-three years. Nathan and Sarah, aged eight and seven, could have gone to school alone, but could hardly have taken care of me, and my other sister, at the ages of three and five. We were to go down School street—then a paved lane without sidewalk, regular curbstone or sidewalk—to turn to our right, and go through the main street not yet familiarly called Washington street. When we came to Summer's crockery shop, at the corner of Summer street, with its fascinating shepherdesses and lambs in the window, we would stop a moment to admire them, and then, to make up for the lost time, would hurry down to the courtyard which led into Miss Whitney's door. There Fullum took us upstairs and left us in the northern room; the southern room was occupied by another school under the care of Miss Ayres. There was a vague impression that their scholarship was more advanced than ours. For all that, however, we had the serene and proper childish confidence that ours was the best school in the world, and that we, as individuals, probably had no superior. The only blemish on this bright mirror of self-consciousness was the fact that Miss Ayres had a watch, and that in our establishment we had none. So we had to send in to her, if we needed to know the time.

"At twelve o'clock Fullum came for us and we went home. At three in the afternoon, we went through the same streets again, and at five went back again. Joy for us when winter came. For the purposes of winter, Fullum had contrived a box sled, which was painted green. Into this box sled all four were packed, and thus we enjoyed, on the snow, four triumphant sleigh rides daily, dragged by our faithful friend. How many policemen would there need to be to escort such a company through that part of Washington street to-day!"

On the third day of November, 1828, Edward Everett Hale, then six years old, led by the hand of this same Fullum, was returning with his brother and sisters from a children's-seen party. It was the night following the Presidential election. Even then the crowds gathered in the streets at such a time, and he heard his first political hurrah in the cry of a man who shouted, "Hurrah for Jackson!" Two years later, in 1830, the eight-year old boy saw General Andrew Jackson, who had come to Boston as President.

The father of Edward Everett Hale was an editor all his life. He published the Daily Advertiser in Boston for fifty years, and the Hale boys were brought up to work. They were taught the practical art of printing, and had it impressed upon them from the earliest childhood that there was no greater folly and disgrace than idleness. Once, when Hale was still a young boy, another young fellow about his age, asked him to go with him for a stroll to one of the wharves. Hale inquired, "What to do?" The other was rather astonished at this question, and replied, after a momentary perplexed silence, "Oh, nothing." Young Hale was shocked. He had never in his life, up to that time, thought of going anywhere to do nothing. The whole spirit of the Hale household was that everybody had something to do, and each one was expected to do it in the very best manner possible.

Edward Everett Hale was associated in his boyhood with many of the great historic names of American history. The Hale family and the Webster family were very intimate, and when young Edward Everett was four years old, his father and mother went with Daniel Webster and his wife, and little Edward Webster, their son, who was five years old, for a week's visit to Sandwich, Massachusetts. The little boys were always together, and it was on this occasion that Edward Hale fired his first gun. The great Daniel Webster came home from shooting, with a barrel of the gun unemptied. The little boy was permitted to rest it over a rail and fire it at a shingle. He did this with awful terror, but was greatly pleased when he had succeeded and was not killed.

One of Hale's earliest recollections is of sitting at a large table at Daniel Webster's house in Summer street, Boston, when they were all playing "commerce" together. The boy said, "I have not a counter left. I wonder if there is any friend who will lend me some?" Mr. Webster was sitting next him; with characteristic tenderness and lavishness he said, "Edward, so long as I live you shall never say you have not a friend," and pushed over as many of the red and white counters as he needed.

Mr. Hale tells a very pretty story about his little friend Edward Webster. Daniel Webster was to deliver one of his great addresses in a certain church. Mrs. Webster was in the gallery of the church, where she had taken Edward, in order that he might remember hearing his father on what would be a historic occasion. In the course of the address, Mr. Webster, in his most vigorous way, cried out, "Will any man dare say"—so that the child was himself impressed with the folly of any person contradicting his father, and in a clear, shrill voice, heard by everybody in the building, he replied from the gallery, "No, pa!"

The boy who loves literature, who has a certain tenderness at the mention of the names of Whittier, and Holmes, and Lowell, and Bancroft, is conscious of a noble kind of envy as he reads the story of a man still living, whose boyish days were given spice and inspiration by coming into touch with these, and many other men whose names have since become great and glorious. When Edward Everett Hale was only twelve years old, and was sitting in the parlor of his father's house, reading aloud to his mother, his father came into the room smiling, and said: "Here's Mr. Bancroft. The first volume of his history is finished, and it is to be put to the press." And so there began for the twelve-year old boy, a beautiful friendship with that "tall, black-haired young man," who was to become the famous historian; a friendship which lasted for more than fifty years.

FREE
"FROZEN DAINTIES"

Send your name for a copy of the new edition of this guide to making ice creams, sherbets and frozen dainties of all kinds. It is elaborately illustrated, and every recipe can be relied upon. We send it free because it recommends the Triple Motion

WHITE MOUNTAIN ICE CREAM FREEZER

THE WHITE MOUNTAIN FREEZER CO.,
Dept. A, Nashua, N. H.

Good Leads

Smooth as Silk Strong and Sound

DIXON'S AMERICAN GRAPHITE
PENCILS

Pure Graphite No Grit

Illustrated booklet "Y" free.
Joseph Dixon Crucible Co., Jersey City, N. J.

INDUSTRIAL 5% PER ANNUM SAVINGS & LOAN

SMALL SAVINGS, ACTIVELY AND SAFELY EMPLOYED, EARN 5%

OPERATING under supervision of the New York Banking Department. Endorsed by our women and eminent men of affairs employing a

Capital and Surplus of $1,100,000
Assets of $4,600,000

Funds withdrawn at pleasure, earnings to date of removal. Dividends January 1st and July 1st. Full particulars, with additional endorsements and testimonials from eminent men will be sent on request. Write us.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO.,
1131 Broadway, New York.

The "Best" Light

[illegible] portable [illegible] power [illegible] Lighted [illegible] Agents Wanted Everywhere

THE "BEST" LIGHT CO
3—70 E. 5th Street, CANTON, OHIO.

I Print My Own Cards

[illegible] Press $6. Larger [illegible] $15. Money [illegible] Rules for [illegible] press. Write factory for [illegible] catalog, type, cards, etc.

THE PRESS CO., Meriden, Conn.

Little tots' teeth are more care than big ones', because there are some dentifrices they do not like.

RUBIFOAM

is so pleasant to the taste that children like to clean their teeth with it. It encourages a good habit. 25 cents at all Druggists'.

E. W. HOYT & COMPANY, Lowell, Mass.

BABIES FED ON

IMPERIAL GRANUM

have firm hard flesh good bone and muscle. Send a postal for FREE sample.

John Carle & Sons, Dep. F 153 Water St. N. Y.

You can't afford to buy any other kind when

KNOX'S GELATINE

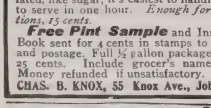
Saves You 55 Cents

on every gallon of dessert you make.

All the sweetened 10-cent gelatine packages make only one pint of jelly. It takes eight, cost 80 cents, to make a gallon. Two packages of Knox's Gelatine, cost 25 cents, make one gallon of decidedly better dessert and save 55 cents. Only Knox's is made of absolutely pure calves' stock. Granulated, like sugar, it's easiest to handle and is ready to serve in one hour. Enough for 10 large portions, 15 cents.

Free Pint Sample and Instructive Cook Book sent for 4 cents in stamps to cover packing and postage. Full ½ gallon package 15 cents, 2 for 25 cents. Include grocer's name and address. Money refunded if unsatisfactory.

CHAS. B. KNOX, 55 Knox Ave., Johnstown, N. Y.



MINUET

Skirt and Waist Holder

A Friend Behind Your Back. Just four thin plates of aluminum—cannot rust or soil—two to sew on waist, two on skirt—have round, smooth edges—slip skirt pieces behind waist pieces and it is on. No teeth, hooks or projections—can be washed, passed through wringer and ironed over freely. Invisible, takes up no room; holds waist smooth—works as well with waist over skirt.

Enough For All Your Garments FREE.

Send us 10c. for a sample set and then you can take advantage of this offer. Hundreds of ladies are doing this. Why not you? Send 10c. to-day.

WHEELER & BALDWIN, 610 Garden City Bldg., Chicago.

BIBLE STUDY COURSE

At home by mail. This book "Home Bible Study" free if you enroll now. Terms easy. For free catalog write

C. J. BURTON, President Iowa Christian College, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SONGS OF PRAISE

Best the Price & Songs Suit all the People.

25 cents per copy. 270 songs, new and familiar.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

Individual Communion Cups

Send for FREE catalogue and list of 2,000 churches now using our cups.

Sanitary Communion Outfit Co., Dept. 7 Rochester, N.Y.

CHURCH FURNITURE. Pews, Assembly Chairs, Pulpits, S. S. Seating. Largest Line, Latest Styles. Free Catalogue. Mfd. at GRAND RAPIDS SCHOOL FURNITURE WORKS. Salesroom, 22 West 19th Street, New York.

Our Mail-Bag

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Reader, Ogden, Utah. In what manner is Germany demonstrating its opposition to the Mormons?

The German police authorities, according to recent advices, expelled Mormon elders from Hamburg, Mecklenburg, Breslau, Frankfort, Munich, Stuttgart, and other localities. There was no violence; they were merely notified to depart as "troublesome foreigners."

C. W. C., Perry, Okla. There is indisputable evidence that the first local Christian church of which there is any record, was known as the church at Jerusalem, for eight or ten years before Antioch was mentioned as the location of a church.

What C. W. C. states is unquestionably correct. Nevertheless, the fact stands that the church at Antioch was the first to admit Gentiles to equal privileges with Jews. In Acts 11: 26 we are explicitly informed that the disciples were first called Christians in the Antioch church. There is no question as to the priority of church organization, indeed, both at Jerusalem and Samaria, the churches preceded that at Antioch.

Mrs. S. B. F., Franktown, Va. 1. Who was Timothy's father? I know who his mother and grandmother were. 2. Where did Cain get his wife from and who was she, or what was her name?

1. Timothy's mother was a Jewess, and his father (whose name is nowhere given) was a Greek (or Gentile) by descent. Such mixed marriages were regarded unfavorably. 2. The Land of Nod to which Cain fled after killing his brother, means simply the "Land of Flights" or of "Exile." The name affords no clue to its location. At the time this deed was committed the population of the earth may have considerably increased, although none of the children of Adam are mentioned by name up to that point in the sacred narrative. The neighbors who dwelt in the "land of flight" must have been relatives of Cain. Many commentators hold that his wife must have been his sister (see Gen. 5: 4). Tradition calls her Saxe and Azura.

L. E. S., Indianapolis, Ind. It is claimed here that the first Sunday School was not founded by Robert Raikes, as is frequently asserted, but much earlier. Can you supply the facts?

Mr. Henry Blackwell, of New York City, sometime ago, in looking over the records of Newtown, Long Island, found that on February 26, 1684, it was entered on the town records that the Rev. Morgan Jones, the pastor, was engaged as "schoolmaster of our town, and will teach on the Sabbath day those that will come to hear him, allowing him for exercising on the Sabbath day what every man will please." It is not stated on the record whether the teaching was secular or religious, but it is to be inferred from the fact that Mr. Jones was a pastor that the studies were on Bible topics. Robert Raikes originated the Sunday School movement in 1780-84, in Gloucester, England. Thirty years prior to Raikes' experiment the Rev. John Wesley had been in the habit of assembling children in various parts of England, for religious instruction, and in his journals (July 18, 1784), he records the fact that Sunday Schools were springing up wherever he went. "Who knows," he wrote, "but some of these schools may become nurseries for Christians?" It is probable that up to the time of Raikes' experiment, there was no regular or systematic Sunday teaching of the young.

M. A. C. P., Carbondale, Pa. At the suggestion of one of the deacons, a long-time subscriber of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, the pastor of the Berean Baptist Church of Carbondale, Pa. (Rev. Dr. Whalen), gave a powerful temperance address, using the illustration, copied from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, upon a large blackboard. The next day the Carbondale Leader had the following:

"Last evening at the Berean Baptist Church, the Rev. Dr. Whalen, the pastor, delivered an earnest, practical, common-sense discourse on 'The Rumsellers' Idol, or Liberty to Do Wrong.' The theme was illustrated with a finely drawn picture upon the blackboard, executed by the Sunday School artist, Leon Bly, assisted by one of his pupils, Charles Estabrook. The scene was a Goddess of Liberty, a reproduction of a painting of Bartholdi's monument on Bedloe's Island in New York harbor, with barrels of liquor as a foundation, and instead of a torch in her right hand to light the entrance to the harbor of the metropolis of the great western continent she held a glass of wine, pouring it out for the condemnation of liberty-seeking men. In the left hand was a bottle of the same material. At the base were lying drunken men, unable to stand on account of the personal liberty they had taken at the bar, senseless as to the welfare of their wives and children at home. Nearby at the rear were the hospital, the jail, the asylum, the morgue, and at a short distance a well filled cemetery, with well beaten paths to each from the saloon."

For the information of inquiring readers, we repeat the following, which appeared in the MAIL BAG last week: The quickest way to reach our Children's Home, at Mont-Lawn, is to take train on the Northern R. R. of N. J., foot of Chambers or West Twenty-third streets, New York, or at the Erie Depot, Jersey City (trains run frequently), to Nyack, and there take stage to Mont-Lawn, two and a-half miles distant. Or if boat be preferred, take the S. S. Chrystenah at foot of North Tenth street, New York, 3.45 P. M. Stages can be taken at the boat dock Nyack to Mont-Lawn. Boat runs daily except Sundays. On Saturday the boat leaves at 2.30 P. M., foot West Twenty-second street, New York.

Inquirer, Toledo, O. In a recent sermon on the Fall, the preacher contended that we were involved in it, and that our present sinful condition is the result of it. Has not that theory been abandoned by the best theologians?

Calvinists still adhere to it, and preachers who limit their reading to the old doctrinal writers often preach it; but it is not so frequently presented as formerly. The more practical view is that every man has fallen by his own sin, and needs to be redeemed from that, as well as to gain pardon for it. The old question of the origin of evil is not nearly so important as the personal one. Whether you adopt the theory that man was once innocent and fell through transgression; or whether he was once bestial and has been gradually developing and improving; you have the same practical condition to deal with, that there is evil within us that needs to be eradicated and you have the divine promise that help will be given to all who desire to eradicate it. How or whence that evil came may wisely be left for further enlightenment.

F. E. D., Los Angeles, Cal. Can you tell me why the Salvation Army uses the drum? The history of the drum clearly shows it to have been one of the greatest idols the world has ever known. Is it right to introduce such things into houses dedicated to the service of God?

The drum is essentially a warlike musical instrument, loud, dominant and far-reaching, and for this reason, probably, it was adopted by the Salvation Army, as specially suited to the military form of that organization. The ancient Jewish toph was a sort of drum. All the drums of the ancients—the Hebrews, Egyptians and Assyrians, seem to have been chiefly used in war, with the exception of the magrephah, a drum in the court of the Jewish temple, which was used to call the priests to prayer, the Levites to singing and the lepers to purification. It was said by some writers that the sound of this drum could be heard from Jerusalem to Jericho.

A. C., Oakland, Kans. How is it that Matthew and Luke differ so radically in the genealogy they give of our Lord?

No wholly satisfactory explanation has yet been given, though many have tried to solve the problem. The most ingenious suggestion, and one that has been adopted by several learned students, is that Luke gives the genealogy of Mary, while Matthew gives the genealogy of Joseph. If that is the true solution, Luke 3: 23 should read, "Joseph, who was the son-in-law of Heli." You will notice that the words, "the son," are in italics, indicating that they are not in the original, but have been supplied by the translators to make sense.

B. B., Paterson, N. J. What precedent, if any, exists for the proposed action of our Government in sending a protest to Russia concerning the Kishineff massacre?

In 1882 (during President Arthur's administration), after a massacre of Jews in Russia, our State Department forwarded a communication to the Russian government, expressing a hope that that government would take steps to prevent further attacks on the Jews, on ac-

CONTINUED ON NEXT PAGE

MELLIN'S FOOD

FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS

Fretful babies become calm and peaceful babies when fed on Mellin's Food. Mellin's Food nourishes.

A sample of Mellin's Food costs you nothing but the asking. Will you not then ask for it for your baby's sake?

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

CHEESE PUFFS WITH Green Salads

Corn Starch Talk

By MRS. HELEN ARMSTRONG.

In many receipts Kingsford's Oswego Corn Starch may be substituted for flour, by using half the quantity, and a more delicate dish is the result. This Corn Starch may be relied upon for uniformity, and will always suit the most critical taste. A fair trial will convince the most skeptical that Kingsford's Oswego Corn Starch is a valuable and economical article of food, while the simplicity with which it may be prepared appeals alike to the unskilled cook and the experienced chef.

With a little thought given to the subject quite a variety of salads may be served from day to day. Wafers are sometimes served with these salads, but a more acceptable accompaniment is suggested below. These puffs are easy to make, and are more delicate than most, owing to the substitution of Kingsford's Oswego Corn Starch for a part of the flour.

CHEESE PUFFS.

Place half a cup of water and one fourth cup of butter in a granite sauce pan over the fire and when this is boiling add two rounding tablespoons of flour and one of Kingsford's Oswego Corn Starch, which have been sifted together. Beat thoroughly while cooking for several minutes, remove from the fire and stir in half a cup of fresh grated cheese. Season with salt and paprika and beat in two eggs, singly. Press the mixture through pastry bag on a well greased baking sheet, making balls less than two inches across. Bake in very moderate oven about twenty-five minutes, until light and firm. These may be served warm or split open when cold and filled with whipped cream to which has been added salt, pepper and a little Parmesan cheese.

(CORN STARCH TALKS TO BE CONTINUED.)

ALLEN'S FOOT-EASE

"So Easy to Use." Shake Into Your Shoes Allen's Foot-Ease, a powder for the feet. It relieves painful, swollen, smarting, nervous feet, and instantly takes the sting out of corns and bunions. It's the greatest comfort discovery of the age. Makes tight-fitting or new shoes feel easy. It is a certain relief for ingrowing nails, sweating, callous and hot, tired, aching feet. We have over 30,000 testimonials. TRY IT TO-DAY. Sold by all Druggists and Shoe Stores, 25c. Do not accept an imitation. Sent by mail for 25c. in stamps.

FREE TRIAL PACKAGE sent by mail.

MOTHER GRAY'S SWEET POWDERS, the best remedy for Feverish, Sickly Children. Sold by Druggists everywhere. Trial Package FREE.

Address, ALLEN S. OLMSTED, Le Roy, N. Y.

FAY STOCKINGS for Women, Boys and Girls.

The Ideal Stocking, summer or winter. Weights suitable for all seasons and climates. Best for health and wear. No supporters. Button to waist. Do not wrinkle or come down. Fine stockings for dress, strong ones for play. Prices reasonable. Try a pair at once. We pay postage. Money refunded if not satisfactory. Ask dealer for them. If he says no, write for circulars.

THE FAY STOCKING COMPANY, 31 T Street, Elyria, Ohio.

MAPLEWOOD

Near Cincinnati, Ohio.

A Sanatorium established in 1875 for the private care and treatment of Drug and Alcoholic Addictions. Thousands having failed elsewhere have been successfully treated by us. Home treatment if desired. Address The Dr. J. L. Stephens Co., Dept. H 5, Lebanon, O.

Our Mail-Bag

CONTINUED FROM PRECEDING PAGE

count of religion or race antagonism. In 1891 (during President Harrison's administration), we protested to Russia against the hardships imposed on the Hebrews by the recently-passed restrictive laws. Recently, our State Department protested to Roumania against the persecution of the Roumanian Jews, which was driving them to the United States in large numbers. Turkey's cruelties toward her Christian subjects have repeatedly been made a ground of protest by European governments. There is a valid and legitimate reason for protest in the Kishineff affair, especially in view of the fact that the United States is more directly affected than Spain. He was again arrested, sent to Rome, and again imprisoned with more rigor. At his trial he was condemned to death, and was beheaded with a sword. He was about sixty-eight years old when he died.

Miscellaneous Questions

Mrs. Etta S., Starkstoro, Vt. 1. Our highest mountain is Mount McKinley in Alaska, altitude 20,464 feet. 2. Don't know the poem.

Rev. H. A. C., Independence, Pa. It is not in the regular collections of religious poems.

Several Readers. For all particulars regarding child redemption in Africa, write to Rev. E. H. Richards, Norwalk, O.

THE ARMY OF THE SULTAN OF MOROCCO ON THE MARCH

The warlike situation in Morocco is still very much complicated. Conflicting rumors are received. Sometimes the Sultan's forces are in the ascendant, and again the rebels. This picture gives a very good idea of the character of the Sultan's army, which accounts for the prolongation of the campaign. The illustration is reproduced from the London Sphere.

any other country save Russia, the Jewish exodus from Bessarabia naturally tending to drift toward this country.

C. V. V., Mooresville, S. C. Are we to understand from I. Thess. 5: 23, that only those will be saved who are absolutely free from sin?

All Scripture is opposed to such a supposition. It is sinners that Christ invites to come to him, and it is sinners whom he saves. After they have come to him and have been saved, he proceeds to eliminate sin from their nature. That is the process of sanctification, which is often a long and difficult work. It depends on the resistance of the sinful nature to the operations of the Holy Spirit. Where a man yields himself fully to Christ and submits to him, the conditions are those described in the passage you quote. Unhappily, Christians who will surely be saved often have to deplore sins they have committed subsequent to their conversion. There is, however, this difference between the sins of the Christian and those of the unconverted man, that the Christian mourns over them, seeks forgiveness for them and avoids their repetition, the unconverted man is usually indifferent to them.

R. F. D., No. 19, Dayton, Va. How many judges were there in Israel and what were their names?

Othniel, Ehud, Shamgar, Deborah and Barak, Gideon, Abimelech, Tola, Jair, Jephthah, Ibzan, Elon, Abdon, Samson, Eli and Samuel.

Reader, Ramona, Ia. What was the end of Paul's imprisonment? The Book of Acts does not tell us.

Tradition has it that he was acquitted at his trial, and immediately started on another missionary journey which took him as far as The Sunday School of Sweet Springs, W. Va. (Mrs. Bell Superintendent), would welcome any gift of discarded hymn books (with music), lesson leaflets, or other good literature.

Constant Reader (A. E. R.), Gloucester, Va. What you ask would occupy more space than we could devote to that purpose. Any good American encyclopedia will furnish the information.

Ida M., Pueblo, Col. Congress has nothing to do with the suppression of the cigarette evil; it is properly a matter for State legislation. The scheme you mention is probably one to collect names for advertising purposes.

M. C. Rennie, 289 W. Eighth street, Oswego, N. Y., asks some reader to send her a copy of the poem beginning, "A poor, wayfaring man of grief."

B. M. O., East Saugus, Mass. See editorial articles in our issue of June 10 and July 22, on the subject of prayers.

Bookkeeper, Norristown, Pa. You were not justified in withholding the letter from your employer. He is entitled to know every detail of his own business, if he wishes to do so.

Quot., Amboy, W. Va. It is the first line of a very old romantic song, never sung nowadays. You will find it in some collections dated about 1825-50. The closing line of each verse is:

"Thou hast been the cause of this anguish, my mother."

Mrs. O. H. H., Barrington, N. H. The poem, "Sometime," which begins, "Sometime when all life's lessons have been learned," is by Max Riley Smith. See Funk & Wagnall's Library of Religious Poetry.

Country, N. Y. Write to Civil Service Commission, Cooper Union, N. Y., for all information on the subject.

The Infant

takes first to human milk: that failing, the mother turns at once to cow's milk as the best substitute. Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk is a cow's milk scientifically adapted to the human infant. Stood first for forty-five years.

TRACK 12 TRAIN LEAVES 6.58

The Railroads run on

ELGIN TIME

The Elgin Watch is the watch for those who use railroads as well as for those who run them.

Every Elgin Watch is fully guaranteed. All jewelers have Elgin Watches. "Timemakers and Timekeepers," an illustrated history of the watch, sent free upon request to

ELGIN NATIONAL WATCH CO., ELGIN, ILL.

A HOT WEATHER PROPOSITION. Washing comes just as often, more of it, and harder in hot weather. Women wash beyond their strength the old way. A new and easy way has come to pass. The lifts the burden, removes the drudgery, brings washing within her strength and saves the clothes. Why do without it and sweat, swelter and suffer, if washing can be done easily and with less expense? Don't take our word for it—try the EASY for 30 days. If it won't save its price before hot weather is over, send it back. We pay charges both ways.

Syracuse Easy Washer

Our book, full of up-to-date formulas for domestic laundry work, free.

DODGE & ZUILL, 540 S. Clinton Street, Syracuse, N. Y.

A BOOK ON STEAM COOKERS FREE

We issue a 32 page book giving facts about steam cookers you should know before buying any cooker. Gives cuts, factory prices, full details of high quality the kind that will cook a complete meal over one burner gas, gasoline, oil or cook stove, reducing fuel bills one-half; that whistle when water is needed. Hold 12 to 18 qt. jars in canning fruit. We make cookers, round or square, single and double doors. Write now for the free book. AGENTS WANTED.

IDEAL STEAM COOKERS

The Toledo Cooker Co., 2318 Albion St., Toledo, O.

MUSIC LESSONS FREE at your home. For a limited time we will give, free, 48 music lessons on either Piano, Organ, Banjo, Guitar, Cornet, Violin or Mandolin (your expense will only be the cost of postage and the music you use, which is small). We teach by mail only, and guarantee success. Hundreds write: "Wish I had known of your school before." For booklet and testimonials address U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC, Dept. X, 19 Union Square, New York, N. Y.

Colorado

and return

$30

For first-class round-trip tickets from Chicago on sale daily. Correspondingly low rates from other points.

Only one night en route Chicago to Denver via the

Colorado Special

The Best of Everything.

Leaving Chicago 6.30 p. m. daily; with buffet-smoking cars, Booklovers library, drawing-room sleeping cars, dining cars and free chair cars through to Denver.

A second fast train leaves 11.30 p. m. daily and provides additional service of Pullman tourist sleeping cars with berth rate only $2.50.

Chicago, Union Pacific and North-Western Line

All agents sell tickets via the Chicago & North-Western and Union Pacific Rys.

W. B. KNISKERN, Chicago, Ill. E. L. LOMAX, Omaha, Neb.

C530

RHEUMATISM

Relieved by Magic Foot Drafts

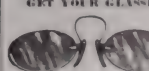
Don't delay. This is the best time of the year to get rid of rheumatic poisons.

Try the Drafts—FREE

Don't take medicine for rheumatism, but send your name and address to the Magic Foot Draft Company, R A 20 Oliver Building, Jackson, Mich., and they will send you, on approval, without a cent in advance, a pair of the wonderful Magic Foot Drafts. These Drafts have been worn by hundreds of thousands of people all over the world, relieving more pain last year perhaps than all other remedies combined. It is the only remedy ever sent successfully on approval, because it is the only remedy that permanently relieves a large proportion of cases.

The Drafts absorb through the great pores of the feet the acid poisons of the blood as it passes through the capillaries, relieving rheumatism in every part of the body at once by removing the cause. Soothing medicinal agents are at the same time taken up into the blood from the Drafts, by these large pores, hastening the cure. After the Drafts quickly cease. If you are satisfied with the benefit received, the Drafts cost only One Dollar. If not, they cost you nothing. We never make offer because we know what the Drafts are. A valuable booklet on rheumatism sent free with the drafts. Write.

GET YOUR GLASSES AT WHOLESALE



LARGEST ... SENT FREE, with our ... MAIL ORDER OUTFIT. Send today.

GRAND RAPIDS WHOLESALE OPTICIANS, Dept. ... 40-48 Houseman Bldg., Grand Rapids, Mich.

THERE is just one make of writing machine built upon lines which all experts and inventors agree are mechanically correct. It is

The

Smith Premier

Typewriter

There is just one which all operators agree does beautiful, speedy and practical work of all kinds all the time for all business purposes. It is

The

Smith Premier

There is just one so strongly made, and almost frictionless in operation, that it will far outwear any writing machine of any other make. It is

The

Smith Premier

We can prove these facts to your complete satisfaction. If you want the proof, send today for our little book, "The Typewriter Question," or better, 'phone our nearest branch office for a salesman, or the machine itself on trial in your office without cost to you if you do not keep it.

THE SMITH PREMIER TYPEWRITER CO.,
Executive Offices, 287 Broadway, New York FACTORY IN SYRACUSE, N. Y.

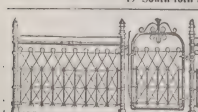
DEAFNESS

The Morley Ear-Drum

is the most recent and most effective invisible device for the relief of DEAFNESS. It is easily adjusted, comfortable and safe. Send for descriptive booklet.

The Morley Company,
Dept. E,
19 South 16th Street, Philadelphia.



Dwiggins
Weather Proof

Retains its poise and rigidity a lifetime. The correct fence for lawns, parks, cemeteries, etc. Woven throughout of double galvanized steel wire. Catalog (free) shows many other styles at 10c. to 50c. a foot.

Dwiggins Wire Fence Co., 12 Dwiggins Ave., Anderson, Ind.

BE A PROOFREADER

Women receive same salaries as men, $15 to $35 a week. Proofreaders always in demand. Send for free booklet, it tells how. NATIONAL PRESS ASSOCIATION, 47 The Baldwin, Indianapolis.

CLEAN CUT CAKE TIN

FREE TO AGENTS

Flat tin knife cuts honeycomb perfect cake. $2 Outfit free Exp. prepaid. Dept. T.

HOUSEHOLD NOVELTY WORKS, Chicago, Ill., or Buffalo, N.Y.

STARK TREES best by Test—78 Years LARGEST NURSERY. FRUIT BOOK free. We PAY CASH WANT MORE SALESMEN Weekly STARK BRO'S, Louisiana, Mo.; Dansville, N. Y.; Etc

WHERE IS THE "HOUSE OF ISRAEL"?

THE prophecies relating to the House of Israel are, in the main, quite distinct from those concerning the House of Judah, and whatever may be the ultimate result of movements on the part of the Jews (the House of Judah), these movements will be found connected with the House of Israel, and are recorded in the Word of God, under an inclusive title, descriptive of their common destiny. As when we are told that "Jerusalem shall dwell safely," these long separated peoples are seen to be together under designations; such as "all Israel," "the whole House of Israel," "the house of Jacob," etc.

The nation of Israel, takes its rise from the covenant made by the Lord with Abram (Gen. 12: 1-3). The words of the covenant, verses 2 and 3 are: "I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and be thou a blessing: and I will bless them that bless thee, and him that curseth thee will I curse: and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed."

The promises, unconditional in their nature, were afterwards confirmed to Isaac and Jacob. The reason why the covenant was repeated to Isaac and Jacob, was owing to the fact that they formed the chosen posterity, to the exclusion of all others, in the Abrahamic line, and with Jacob that exclusion ceased; for, as an old writer has said, "now at length the way of grace entirely coincided with that of nature." In other words, all the descendants of Jacob were called, and the blessing offered to each one of them.

From the going down into Egypt to the rending of the Kingdom, a period of nearly 800 years, the history of the Israelites was one history, and from that time, the kingdom of Israel under nineteen kings, existed as a nation for 274 years, when they were taken into captivity by Assyria. One hundred and thirty-three years afterwards the kingdom of Judah experienced the same fate, being led into captivity to Babylon. After seventy years, there was a partial return of the two tribes constituting the House of Judah. The ten tribes never came back.

It has often been asked, are there any historic evidences as to where the lost tribes (so-called) are to-day. As history never advances beyond the present, we can see at once that the domain of prophecy concerns not only all history, but all that could ever become history on prophetic lines. So it is also seen that prophecy has no limits, except that expressed in its own terms, and while it can be understood in advance, so far as its general scope is concerned, yet specifically, we understand it only as expressed in the terms of the prophecies themselves. For example, the covenant made with Abraham is an everlasting covenant (Gen. 17: 7). His posterity was to be multiplied "as the stars of the heaven," and "as the sand which is upon the seashore" (Gen. 22: 17). When the covenant was confirmed to Jacob, in blessing the sons of Joseph (as the birthright was in the line of Joseph), Ephraim was to become "a multitude of nations," and Manasseh a "great" people (Gen. 48: 19). These birthright blessings, and that which should befall the other sons of Jacob would occur in the line of their descendants "in the latter days." As we are living in the latter days, it will only be necessary to identify, in the conditions now existing, the statements made in the prophecies, to prove their truth.

It may be asked as to these prophecies concerning Israel, is there a people on the earth at this time, who have become a mother of nations; and is there at the same time, another nation of the same origin, who have become a great people? The answer to these questions will make it apparent that prophecy is being fulfilled, and that these great peoples have the elements within themselves of becoming a blessing to "all the families of the earth."

As it is a matter of identity, take another illustration concerning a single tribe, and from the historic standpoint. The tribe of Dan, always noted for its boldness and commercial enterprise, in its travels through Europe has left its name upon rivers, such as the Don, the Danube, the Daniester, the Rhidan (the Rhine), the Rhodan (the Rhone); upon towns, as Dantzig, Danenburg, and Danitz. On an ancient map of Ireland such names appear as Danslough, Dansowar, and Dansobairse. Denmark, or Dansmark, is another form in the name of a country. In the "Annals of Ireland, by the Four Masters," it is stated that "the colony called Tuatha de Dannan conquered the Firbolgs, and became masters of Ireland. It appears that the Dannans were a highly civilized people, far more skilled in arts and sciences than any of the other colonies that settled in Ireland. They ruled in Ireland about two centuries, or about 197 years, according to the Psalter of Cashel, and were highly skilled in architecture and other arts, from their long residence in Greece and intercourse with the Phœnicians."

The above allusion to their "long residence in Greece," is also proven by the following record in 1 Maccabees, 12 chapter, where it is stated, the King of the Lacedæmonians sent the following letter to the Jews in Jerusalem:

"Areus, King of the Lacedæmonians, to Onias, the High Priest, sendeth greeting. It is found in writing that the Lacedæmonians and Jews are brethren, and that they are of the stock of Abraham. Now, therefore, since this is come to our knowledge, ye shall do well to write unto us of your prosperity."

The reply of the Jews, according to Josephus, was as follows: "We joyfully received the epistle, and were well pleased with Demoteles and Areus, although we did not need such a demonstration, because we were well satisfied about it from the sacred writings." A. WADHAMS.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

A Christian Bridge-Builder

CHARLES CYRIL MARTIN, well known in New York and throughout the country, as the Chief Engineer of the Brooklyn Bridge, passed away last week, at his summer home, Far Rockaway, L. I. Mr. Martin was born in Springfield, Pa., in 1831, educated at Rensselaer Polytechnic, Troy, N. Y., as a civil engineer. Soon after beginning his professional career, he began to be widely known for his thoroughness and skill. He has at different times been associated in responsible positions with various engineering concerns, in different parts of the country, building bridges, docks and water works. He had to a very great extent, the personal charge of the construction of the great East River Bridge, and when it was finished he became its chief engineer, a position he held up to the time of his death. Mr. Martin was a sincere and devout Christian, and was one of the principal organizers and an active member of the Church of Christ, in Brooklyn. To the Sunday School work, he gave the warmest support and the most zealous personal effort. Personally a total abstainer, he was a consistent advocate of the temperance cause. His whole life and character were those of an honorable, conscientious, and sincere Christian gentleman. He was an ardent friend of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and its various benevolent enterprises; and our little tenement waifs at Mont-Lawn, remember with pleasure the kindly face, and pleasant, genial greeting of their old friend, the great bridge-builder, whom they will see no more hereafter on earth.

❧

Read The Christian Herald Twenty-seven Years

The following letter, from one of the earliest subscribers of this journal, will be read with interest by other subscribers, old and new. It proves that our friends love to remain in the great CHRISTIAN HERALD family:

BOWERSVILLE, O.

Dear Editor: We commenced taking your valuable journal soon after it was first published, a short time after we were married, in 1876. We could not live without the enlightening, cheering companionship of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and we have induced many others to subscribe. Your premiums are always superb, and a great factor in rightly moulding the youth and the homes of our great nation. Only eternity can reveal all the good you have done by your Bible offers.

MRS. W. A. SHAEFFE.

❧

"Delighted"

I am delighted with the premium book, The Speaking Oak, and also with the "Family Art Gallery," which is a fine collection of pictures.

Fairmount, W. Va. MRS. E. J. VANCE.

This book, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD $2. The "Family Art Gallery" free to subscribers.

Winter is Coming.

The joy of winter is in the heightened pleasure of indoor life, when the family health and comfort is protected by genial, even warmth throughout the home.

IDEAL Boilers and AMERICAN Radiators guarantee everything that can be desired in the right warming of the home by ensuring pure, freshly warmed indoor temperature in all weather.

Hot Water or Steam

They produce the truest home comfort and convenience, relieve the household of dirt and drudgery and pay for themselves in fuel economy and absence of repairs.

Made in sizes to fit 3-room cottages to 90-room public buildings, etc. Send for valuable booklet.

Buy now at Summer prices. Let us tell you how to heat YOUR home.

AMERICAN RADIATOR COMPANY
Makers of IDEAL Boilers and AMERICAN Radiators
Dept. 29 CHICAGO

IDEAL IDEAL IDEAL IDEAL IDEAL IDEAL

ARTISTIC MONUMENTS

Cost No More than Plain Ones in

White Bronze

Marble is entirely out of date. Granite soon gets moss-grown, discolored, requires constant expense and care, and eventually crumbles back to Mother Earth. Besides it is very expensive.

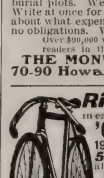
White Bronze is strictly everlasting. It action of frost. Moss-growth is an impossibility. It is more artistic than any stone. Then why not investigate it? It has been adopted for more than a hundred public monuments and by thousands of delighted customers in all parts of the country. Many granite dealers have used White Bronze in preference to granite for their own burial plots. We have designs from $4.00 to $4,000.00 Write at once for free designs and information, stating about what expense you anticipate. It puts you under no obligations. We deal direct and deliver everywhere. Over $90,000 worth of work sold to Christian Herald readers in the last few years. Agents Wanted.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.
70-90 Howard Ave., Bridgeport, Conn.



Rider Agents Wanted

in each town to ride and exhibit sample bicycle

'03 Models high grade $9 to $15

1901 & '02 Models, best makes $7 to $10

500 2ND - HAND WHEELS

all makes and models good as new $3 to $8.

Great Factory Clearing Sale. We ship on approval and 10 day's trial without a cent in advance.

EARN A BICYCLE taking orders for us. Write at once for our main list and our wonderful special offer to agents. Tires, equipment, sundries, half price.

AUTOMOBILES Bargains in new and second-hand Autos and Motor Cycles. All makes and styles. If interested write for Automobile Catalogue.

MEAD CYCLE COMPANY, Dept. 64R CHICAGO, ILL.

SCALES FREIGHT PAID BEST QUALITY LOWEST PRICE ON TRIAL. ALL SIZES. FREE LIST. JONES BINGHAMTON, N. Y

Israel's Champion

God's Chosen King Appears in a Crisis

By Mrs. M. Baxter

GOD had rejected Saul; he still sat on the throne, but was no longer trusted by God to carry out his purposes; the kingly spirit which was upon him for a little time, had departed, and henceforth his reign was a sham; a mere outside semblance. When God had any special work to be done, he trusted it to David, not to Saul. What a type this is of the external thing which men call Christianity, and which has its seat in all the external churches. God has his hidden, anointed church, composed of the living members of Christ, and through these, whether in the outward churches, or outside of them, he carries out his work.

It is significant that with the anointing of David the enemies began again to be on the alert. "The Philistines gathered together their armies to battle." When the Lord moves forward, the enemy also begins to move. The forces of Israel, and those of the enemy were stationed, each on a mountain, with a valley between. In the Philistine army there was a giant, over nine feet in height, who challenged any man of Israel to single combat. His weight, his armor, etc., are all minutely told, showing his enormous strength and proportions. Earth's great one!

The people had asked for a king that he might go out before them, and fight their battles (1 Sam. 8: 19, 20); but now, in a crucial moment, "when Saul and all Israel heard these words of the Philistines, they were dismayed together, and greatly afraid;" Saul as much as the people. Saul was, from his shoulders upward, taller than all the men of Israel; and yet he dared not face the giant! Since he was anointed king, instead of being more courageous than before, we constantly read of the people trembling and being afraid. Now God would put the king of his choice to a test of his fitness for the appointment which awaited him in the future. David had returned from Saul to keep his father's sheep at Bethlehem; he was at home wherever he was; his court life had not uplifted or spoiled him, he was just as ready to minister to the sheep as to exercise his exquisite gift in music and song, or to perform any of the functions which devolved upon him at court: this is true kingliness, to be unchanged by circumstances.

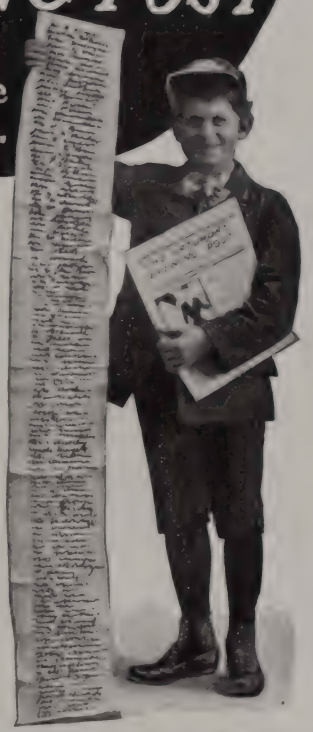
For forty days the challenge of the boasting Goliath had met with no response, when David was sent by his father into the battlefield with a present for his three elder brothers, who were in Saul's army. Things were coming to a crisis; the troops on either side were put in array, and action seemed imminent for "the host was going forth to the fight, and shouted for the battle." But once again, just as David saluted his brethren, the giant just once more uttered his challenge, and David saw the men of Israel in their fear fleeing before him. Some of them told David of the reward offered to him who should kill this champion, and, with the cause of his God at heart, he said, "What shall be done to the man that killeth this Philistine and taketh away the reproach from Israel?"—this was what appealed to David.

David had been exercised in the school of faith; he had put his God to the proof: "Thy servant slew both the lion and the bear, and this uncircumcised Philistine shall be as one of them, seeing he hath defied the armies of the living God." Saul clothed David in his armor; and David essayed to go. But the man of God had not proved this way of fighting; he knew the way of faith. "I cannot go in these; for I have not proved them." Let us never meet the enemy of souls with unproved weapons! David was in God's school to serve God's purpose. Under his direction, he chose five smooth stones from the brook, and, unarmed, without so much as a sword, he drew nigh to the Philistine. But, unseen of man, the Lord of hosts was with him. David was not alone.

How came it that David could speak with such assurance? He must have had it from the Lord, in answer to prayer. Fearlessly, David ran to meet the Philistine, slang a stone, and smote the Philistine in his forehead; it sank into the skull, and the Philistine fell upon his face to the earth, and David, with his antagonist's own sword, cut off his head. So Goliath died, and the victory was gained.

This Boy won a $25.00 Prize selling THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

YOU can do the same.



HE IS the "Champion Boy" of the State of Washington. His name is Harry Ireland. The smile on his face is due to the fact that he had in his pocket a check for $25 from THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

THIS $25 is in addition to the regular commission he receives week after week for selling THE POST.

HARRY is a hustler. The long strip of paper he holds in his hand is covered with closely written signatures of people who have instructed him to deliver THE POST for four consecutive weeks.

HE PERSUADED several prominent business men to sign at the top of the sheet and their names influenced others to sign until the list became longer than he is tall.

THIS is one of the many ways we have suggested to help boys to sell THE POST. It makes the work so easy that thousands of boys have taken it up. Some are making $10 to $15 a week after school hours.

YOU can start in this business, at once, without capital. Send us your name and we will forward 10 free copies, which you can sell at five cents each. This will supply capital for the next week's order.

$225 in Extra Cash Prizes Next Month

FOR BOYS WHO SELL FIVE OR MORE COPIES WEEKLY

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY, 403 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Would YOU Consider It a GOOD Proposition?

Would You Consider It a Good Proposition?

If we made you a partner in our business no matter how small your capital?
If we showed you a way to secure your supplies at a saving of 25 per cent?
If we paid you liberally for all business secured from your neighborhood through your influence?

Would You Consider It a Good Proposition?

That's just what we propose to do and it won't cost you one cent to find out.

Cut This Ad Out and Write for Full Particulars To-day. DO IT NOW!

Sign Your Full Name, ...

P. O. .....

County, ... State .....

Cash Buyers' Union, First National Co-Operative Society,
DEPT. C 18, 158-168 W. VAN BUREN STREET, CHICAGO.

"The Nation's pleasure ground and sanita rium."

THE ADIRONDACK MOUNTAINS

The lakes and streams in the Adirondack Mountains are full of fish, the woods are inviting, the air is filled with health, and the nights are cool and restful. If you want this region once, you will go there again. An answer to almost any question to be sent to the Advertising Agent of the New York Central Lines, Room 1, Grand Central Station, New York City, will bring you "The Adirondacks and How to Reach Them," issued by the

NEW YORK CENTRAL

92.8%
ENERGY
GOVERNMENT ANALYSIS

IT'S GENUINE IF THE SACK BEARS THESE TWO WORDS:-WASHBURN-CROSBY. OTHERWISE NOT.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

COPYRIGHT 1903 BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
Published 52 Times a Year

NEW YORK, AUGUST 5, 1903

VOL. 26 NO. 31. PRICE 5 CENTS
Offices: Bible House, New York

OUR INDIA ORPHANS—A Group of Native Teachers at the Ahmednagar Mission

1. WALI NAGU, A GIRL ORPHAN. 2. GANGUANO THAKOBA, A BOY ORPHAN. 3. A STREET IN JUBBULPUR. SEE PAGE 651

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Christian, Milford, Pa. If a child born of unconverted parents dies in infancy, what ground is there for supposing that it will go to heaven? Is it not more probable that, being sinful by nature, it will go to perdition?

We cannot conceive of God punishing a child for sins that it did not commit. He is a just God, and will not hold a soul responsible for a sinful nature. We do not know in what way the soul of a child can be regenerated and made fit for heaven. God may do that, by the infinite power of the Holy Spirit, but in any case, you may be quite sure that no infant will be consigned to the place of punishment.

J. J., Straight Creek, Ky. Were the twelve tribes in existence in the time of Christ? If not, when were they lost?

The twelve tribes formed one kingdom under Saul, David and Solomon. When Rehoboam succeeded to the throne on the death of Solomon, his father, ten tribes revolted (See I. Kings 12), and formed the Kingdom of Israel under Jeroboam. They were a separate kingdom until the year B. C. 721, when they were carried captive to Assyria. The tribes of Judah and Benjamin remained faithful to the dynasty of David. That kingdom survived until B. C. 586. Cyrus permitted all who wished to return, and there was a partial restoration in B. C. 536, and a further one in B. C. 516. It is possible that some descendants of the ten tribes may have returned with the descendants of the other two tribes, but it is probable that the majority intermarried with the people among whom they lived, and were thus absorbed into other races. There are some people who believe that they maintained their separation and that they became the ancestors of the Anglo-Saxons.

C.R.P., Jonesboro, N.C. What is the origin of the name "Blind Tiger," which we so often hear applied to a place where whiskey is sold unlawfully? Does this name apply to anything else except a place like that mentioned above?

It seems to have been applied exclusively to illicit stills and "shebeens." The origin of the phrase is obscure, but it probably related to some incident of a purely local character.

F. T. H., South Boston, Va. Why did Jesus always give an evasive answer to the question, Who art thou?

When the question was prompted by mere curiosity, or when it was asked with the object of getting evidence from his own lips for the purpose of prosecuting him, it would have been unwise to satisfy the questioner. When, however, he was speaking to the woman of Samaria (John 4: 26), there was no ambiguity: "I that speak unto thee am he." Under the adjuration of the High Priest, too, he answered plainly (Mark 14: 62): "Art thou the Christ the Son of the Blessed? And Jesus said, I am."

W. H. A., Salmon, Idaho. Can you give me the date of the commencement of work on the Erie Canal, and when first boat ran through?

Erie Canal begun at Rome, N. Y., July 4, 1817. Completed October 26, 1825. First boat, Seneca Chief, with Governor aboard, passed through and reached New York, November 4, 1825.

Inquirer, Duluth. 1. Catholics hold the worship of Mary, the intercession of saints, prayers for the dead, purgatory, transubstantiation, etc. 2. Such marriages usually bring trouble, when there are children, each parent claiming the right to train them according to his or her own creed.

Subscriber, Wellston, O. Can a man without good education, and without plenty of money go to the Holy Land without a guide?

He could do so, but he would be very foolish to undertake it. Unless he were a very extraordinary person, he would find himself greatly handicapped by the absence of a guide, and he would derive very little, if any, benefit from his journey. We would not advise anybody to undertake a Holy Land tour under such conditions.

New Subscriber, Brooklyn. Are a man's thoughts, words, and deeds, always under the direct influence of right or wrong? In other words—can a man think, speak, or act, without doing the Lord's will, or the will of the devil?

There are many operations of the mind that are involuntary, but of those that are voluntary, it may be said, generally, that all are under the dominion of the will, and subject to the approval or disapproval of conscience, which indicates whether they are right or wrong. A wicked person, therefore, sins knowingly, in thought, word, or deed. Divine grace in the heart quickens the conscience and impels the individual to choose the right, even at a sacrifice.

S. A. S., Bloomington, Ind. Will you please give your advice to one wanting to become a missionary, as to what course of training one must take?

You should consult the missionary board of your church and make formal application, where you can get all needed information as to requirements, training, etc. If you are not connected with a denomination, write to Mr. Fitt, Superintendent Moody Institute, Chicago, or to Missionary Training Institute, Nyack, N. Y.

Martha E. J., Bellaire, O., writes:

I see in last week's issue, that some one wished to know if such a snake as the hoop-snake really existed. A few years ago, while living in Clark county, Mo., my husband, myself and children were taking a walk on the prairie. We found some fine strawberries, and while picking them I became separated from the others. I heard a swishing in the tall grass. On looking up, I saw a snake coming toward me like a hoop. I sprang to one side, and it passed by swiftly. It seemed a slender snake, of a light-green color. I had no opportunity to know how it carried its tail; only I know it rolled over the ground like a perfect hoop.

Subscriber, Zeeland, Mich. If a person is convinced that by committing a certain sin he will forfeit all hope of salvation, and nevertheless, under strong temptation, he does commit it, realizing at the time that he thereby loses his soul—Is it not useless to pray for forgiveness?

It is never useless to pray for forgiveness. God is more willing to pardon than we are to seek pardon. A person such as you have described, ought certainly to ask forgiveness. His sin was so bold, so defiant, so reckless that it is exceptionally heinous. All the more reason, therefore, that he should plead for pardon before it is too late. His own conviction that by sinning in that particular way he was forfeiting all hope, does not prove the fact. It does prove that in committing the sin while he held such a belief, he was very wicked, and therefore in more need of the pardon that God will give on his repentance.

Ida A. H., Bremen, Ind., writes:

"In your July 15 issue, J. A. T., Scenery Hill, Pa., writes: 'I submit the following lines, wishing to know who is the author':

'No endeavor is in vain,
The reward is in the doing;
And the rapture of pursuing,
Is the prize of vanquished gain.'

"These lines are taken from the last stanza of the poem, 'The Wind Over the Chimney,' written by Longfellow."

F. B., Marathon, Tex. 1. What difference can there be between a bribe and paying a man for his services? 2. Do Roman Catholics believe that their priests have the power to forgive sins?

1. A bribe is a payment for an act which should be done voluntarily and without payment, or not done at all. Thus a man may be bribed to vote the right ticket; he may be bribed to go to church. Usually the word is used to indicate payment for a wrong act, as when a judge receives pay to give an unjust decision; or an official is paid to give a contract to a certain bidder, or to overlook defects in a contract. This, as you will see, is a very different thing from remuneration for services legitimately rendered. A workman is entitled to his wages, he is not entitled to payment for working for another person in his employer's time. 2. Technically, the priest having heard a confession, assures the confessing person that God has forgiven him. Practically, however, the priest's absolution is regarded as his own, which God will endorse. That is, that by virtue of his office he is empowered to forgive sins.

Miscellaneous Questions

Mrs. J. B., Latta, S. C. Write to Winston & Co., Philadelphia, publishers of McKinley's life.

B. S., Beaumont, Kan., is requested to send address to Anton Rejsa, 1721 D Street West, Cedar Rapids, Ia.

L. M. K., Caro, Mich. Physical death occurs when the spirit leaves the body; in that sense, therefore, the man was dead.

Subscriber, Pleasantville, Pa. Write to Matron, Babies' Hospital of City of New York, Lexington avenue and Fifty-fifth street, or to Foundling Hospital, Sixty-eighth street near Lexington avenue, New York.

SCENES OF DESTRUCTION CAUSED BY THE GREAT TORNADO IN PATERSON, N. J.

ON the afternoon of July 22, Paterson, N. J., was swept by a tornado, which left behind it a mass of wrecked buildings, three human victims killed outright, and scores of others more or less seriously injured. The storm came from the low hills on the southwest, and assuming the form of a black twisting cloud, like a huge drawn-out spinning-top, whirled through the city in a northeasterly direction, leveling dwellings and filling the air with debris. Fifty buildings were blown off their foundations and wrecked, some of them being a mere mass of broken timbers after the tornado passed. Many families are homeless. Some of the freaks of the storm were peculiar. One woman was blown out of a window. Another, was carried twenty feet through the air, and only slightly injured. Among the damaged buildings, are silk mills, hospitals, churches, schools. A boy was almost decapitated by flying wreckage. There were many narrow escapes. The path of the funnel-shaped cloud was about four hundred feet wide and three miles in length, through the centre of the city. The total damage to property is estimated at $500,000. Our photographer has shown some of the demolished buildings on Clay and Dover streets.

J. L. K., Clarion, Pa. To discuss the question you ask would simply open up an endless and unprofitable controversy, a thing we never do in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Reader, Zanesville, O., is requested, if agreeable, to address Postmaster, Sutton, Vt., who will give him information concerning his question in the MAIL-BAG: "How can a man recently converted do service for Christ in a benevolent and humanitarian way?"

Inquirer, Philadelphia. Write to Mr. Anthony Comstock, of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, 142 Nassau street, N. Y., for all information relative to the war against the circulators of immoral literature. Mr. Comstock's work in the defence of the purity of American homes and American children, entitle him to the most cordial support of every right thinking person, and more especially of fathers and mothers.

Her Premiums Make a Library

Mrs. S. E. D., Reserve Kan., has forty-one books, two Bibles, and a Red Letter Testament from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Forty-four books in all. Also the Art Portfolio, Art Gallery, Concert Roller Organ, and Souvenir Spoons. I don't know how many years she has been a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. She sends many thanks for all premiums, and best wishes for the success of the grand old paper. J.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 5, 1903

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

A MEETING OF THE CITY COUNCIL OF SCHOOL NO. 12, HAVANA

A SCHOOL CITY ELECTION, HAVANA

Training Young Cuba to Citizenship

The AMERICAN SYSTEM INTRODUCED in HAVANA with EXCELLENT RESULTS

AN interesting series of photographs, just received from Cuba by Wilson L. Gill, founder of the "School City" method of teaching the juvenile mind to understand municipal government, discloses the fact that Cuban children have made vast strides since the time when the Pearl of the Antilles was declared free. To the American, who knows little of the conditions of life in Cuba, the pictures are a revelation, for apart from the difference in complexion of the school children and the tropical clothing they wear, the pupils are so similar in appearance to the average American school boy and girl, that the photographs might well depict a school city session in any American town.

To make the pictures intelligible to those who do not understand the School City method of civic training, it is well to explain that the plan is to organize the children of each school, under a charter given by the school authorities, as citizens of a municipality. These citizens elect a city council, which, in one phase of the plan, in turn elects a mayor, judge and other administrative and judicial officers. The mayor appoints his cabinet and subordinates, and has power to remove at will. Nomination by petition, proportional representation, and the initiative and referendum enable the citizens to express and enforce their will at any time, either with or independent of their representatives. Elections occur once in ten weeks, and experience has shown that it is desirable to make the term of the police officers short. A high ideal of gentility, kindness, and tact is usually required in a candidate for the position of police officer, for the boy who takes this place can abuse the position, if he is not fitted for its duties.

The children are guided by the school-teachers. The idea is to coach them thoroughly in the duties of civic office. It has been found an admirable way of making boys and girls familiar with the municipal machinery of their town. The charges upon which a police officer of the School City may hale a boy or girl before the bench, include lack of cleanliness, unruly conduct in or out of school, the destruction of school property, or the use of profane language. The most extreme punishment is the withdrawal of the rights of citizenship, subject to the approval of the school principal.

One of the photographs received by Mr. Gill from Cuba shows a session of the court, the police officer detailing the charges against a boy, who stands with head bowed with shame as the catalogue is gone over.

THE CITY COUNCIL OF SCHOOL NO. 15, HAVANA

Another shows a meeting of the City Council of School No. 15, Havana. The city clerk, a colored boy, who has to be elevated on two cigar-boxes in order to enable him to reach the minute book comfortably, is gravely chronicling the doings of the council, and a Cuban boy, in a white sailor suit, is addressing the august assemblage, each member of which listens with an air of intelligent attention.

Perhaps the most interesting picture is that showing the girls voting at a School City election. One little Cuban girl is depositing her ballot in the basket, while another scores her vote on the blackboard. From the figures, it seems to be about an even thing between Elvira Cachuiro and Yeabel Rodriquez.

In the ward of San Leopoldo, in which the school is situated, the number of children who were found running about the streets molesting quiet citizens and using bad language has greatly diminished. When the system was established, the choice of the eleven councilmen, made by children without any experience in a work of this kind, was made with a great sense of justice and impartiality. The council, without receiving suggestions of any kind, acted with excellent judgment and discrimination, and selected the very best element in the school for their appointees. The order and system have greatly improved. The system is a means of making children learn and practice sentiments of morality and of justice, as well as a method for teaching them to-day the great duties which, as citizens, they will have to fulfil on the morrow.

The maxims contained in the first paragraph of the first chapter of the School City Charter, "Do unto others as thou wouldst have them do unto thee," and "Love others as thou wouldst have others love thee," are in my opinion the greatest pillars which serve as a foundation to morality and to all religion. They implant in the childish mind an idea of justice, generosity, magnanimity, and gentleness such as could be derived from no other source and help to develop the best quality of citizenship.

The School City method of training is rapidly finding favor in American schools. It is also to be introduced into the Philippines. In time the system is to be extended, so that groups of schools can be formed into miniature State legislative bodies. It will be the fault of the American boy and girl of the present generation if he or she does not know more about municipal government than the average adult.

The American Pulpit

The SHIP of LIFE

By PASTOR THOMAS SPURGEON

TEXT—JAMES 3: 4, 5: "Behold also the ships, which though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet are they turned about with a very small helm"

I CANNOT say positively that James, the author of this Epistle, is identical with James the brother of John, the Galilean fisherman whom Jesus called from his boats and his nets. Certain it is that he had much of the fisherman or sailor disposition. Of all the writers in the New Testament — for you must notice that though each was inspired of God, the special disposition and characteristic of each comes very plainly out—James is perhaps the most practical, the most outspoken, the most plain-spoken, and these are characteristic, surely, of those who do business in great waters and see the works of the Lord in the deep. If you want an honest, frank, straightforward answer to a question you will get it, as a rule, from Jack; you will get it at least from James, whether he was a sailor or not, for he did not know how to mince matters, or to smooth over things that ought to appear in their naked, rugged condition.

Moreover, I have been pleased to notice that James makes more than one reference to the sea and to ships. This is not proof positive, but it does incline me to fancy that perhaps he had had to do with sailing over the sea and with the handling of ships. In the sixth verse of the first chapter of his letter, he says: "He that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed." And in this striking word that forms our text he gives evidence of at least some little knowledge of matters nautical. It reads in the original, at all events, more intelligibly than it does in this verse, and with a better idea of things connected with vessels. "Behold also the ships,which though they be so great,and are driven with fierce winds, yet are they turned about with a small helm"—the word should be "rudder," properly—"whithersoever the steersman willeth." I bless God that Jesus and many of his disciples had practical acquaintance with ships and with the sea, and that James, for one, has drawn some of his illustrations from seafaring life. Now, may the Lord bless to us a word from this text, which must be solemn, but which will, I hope, lead to much of gladness.

Assailed by Winds

I want you to notice, first, that the ship has to contend with fierce winds. This, indeed, is not the subject matter of the text—it comes in incidentally—but it is important to the full understanding of the metaphor. Are there not some here who know from sad and bitter experience what it is to be driven of fierce winds? The winds upon the ocean come from all points of the compass, north, south, east, and west. Some blow milder than the others; but in the spiritual realm there are at least three sorts of wind which we must be on our guard against. These are the points of the compass from which they blow—the world, the flesh, and the devil. Oh, what fierce winds come rushing out from the quarter of the world, so that the desire for pleasure, the thirst for fame or gain, or, perhaps, a desire for the gratification of natural pride, are sufficient to throw upon her beam-ends the strongest and staunchest of our craft. And oh, what terrible winds come out of the quarter named the flesh—blasts of lust which it is hard indeed to beat up against, winds of unholy appetite and tornadoes of anger, which, unless God's hand is on the helm, will drive us straight before them and hurry us to doom. While the devil, the prince of the power of the air, tempts us to disobedience and to doubt, to unbelief, and perchance to blasphemy.

Oh, man alive, it is a wonder you are alive! Oh, child of God, the greatest marvel is that you are a child of God! Oh, seeking sinner, I am almost surprised that you are seeking Jesus, for there have been arrayed against you, as against all mankind in turn, these buffeting blasts, these head winds, each and all of which have combined to prevent you from every holy purpose, and to destroy you everlastingly, if that be possible. I have sometimes looked at vessels, stoutly built, yet wondered, despite their strength, that they survived such perils as all of us have read about. If you are on board one of them in the surging sea the wonder grows. If you have any idea of the power of a single billow, you marvel that anything man can make can stand against such stress. The contest seems terribly unequal, and yet through many a storm even frail barks come, not without the marks upon them of the struggle, but still buoyant, or at least still living, despite the gale. And you, dear friend, whatever your position in life, whatever your daily vocation or occupation, are bound to meet with tempests.

There is not a ship that is launched upon the river but what is bound to sail out upon the sea, and sailing out upon the sea means encountering storms. So is it with every man of woman born. The world, the flesh, the devil are all arrayed against us, and unless there be found some appliance that can control the ship, and so in a sense control the seas that seek to sink her, sink she must with all who try to man her. Sailors talk sometimes about a ship behaving herself. You talk of vessels almost as if they were human beings. "She behaved herself well," you sometimes say. Well, try to think of human beings as ships now, as you sometimes speak of ships as if they were real living persons. And oh, the marvel is that with so much to tempt us, with so many influences calculated to wreck us, we are enabled by some controlling power, of which I must speak presently, to behave ourselves well and wisely; not but what we all stumble in many things, but we are still living, still on praying ground and pleading terms with God, still hopeful of entering the ever peaceful port. Put this down, I pray you, in your mind and heart and memory, as the first important point; every ship has to contend with fierce winds. It will sometimes even be driven of them, having found it impossible to bear up against them by reason of their terrible power.

Under Guidance

The second point is this, that the rudder rules the ship. "Yet are they turned about with a very small helm." I have seen four men lashed to the wheel and two standing by in case of emergency. I suppose that if you could imagine a person who knew nothing whatever about a ship, and came for the first time to a dock and saw one lying there, and was asked which part of all that to him strange and somewhat cumbrous structure was most important, which part of it could turn the ship which way the steersman pleased—I say, I suppose you would get some strange answers from those who knew absolutely nothing about the construction of the ship and the uses of its several parts. Some, I doubt not, would point to this mast or to the other, some might give the credit to the sails, or to the ropes, or rigging, and, in utter ignorance of the whole affair, would scarcely be likely to walk about the vessel and peer at the stern of her, and conclude that that comparatively small piece of timber or of steel, as the case might be, that hangs upon the sternpost, is the all-important part of the ship so far as progress and steering are concerned.

PASTOR THOMAS SPURGEON

And I suppose that there are some who, if they were asked, would not imagine that the tongue—one of the tiniest and most obscure of all our members—is responsible for so much that, according to God's Word, it can set on fire the whole revolving wheel of life and is itself "set on fire of hell." So that according to the metaphors of James, the tongue affects our characters and careers, even as the bridle in the horse's mouth turns the whole body of the animal, or as the rudder of the ship puts the huge vessel about. Is there not a striking lesson here on the power of little things?

How many a strong, big man has been turned to God by the holy example of every day that his wife sets him! She was a little woman, it would take two of her to make so big a person as the husband, but by her gentle demeanor and Christlike behavior she turned the ship. She was the governor, after all, though she did not lord it over him, but by sweet simplicity and Christlike disposition turned him into a better course. Sometimes a solitary word, a single tract, the lisping of a little child, or an apparently trivial circumstance, will be to a man's career and character what the little rudder is to the leviathan vessel, turning it into the ways of God whereas previously it had been sailing towards all unholiness.

The Power of the Tongue

Here it is a tongue, according to the writer of this Epistle, which, though small, boasts such great things and exerts such immense influence. Oh, I would that I could get some of you to understand that what the rudder is to the ship so your tongue is to your heart, and life, and nature. You do not need to be told the importance of the rudder to the vessel. Do you need to be told the importance of the speech with regard to the life? I have heard of one good woman who, understanding that something had gone wrong with the ship on which she sailed, cross-questioned the captain about it; and oh, it is wonderful the number of questions the captains and the officers are asked in the course of a voyage, wonderful, also, sometimes the answers that they give, by the way. Said she, "Is it the rudder that has gone wrong?" "Well," he said, "Yes, there is something amiss with the rudder, it's true." "Oh, well, captain," she said, "I am glad it is nothing worse than that. You know, the rudder is such a very small thing and it is out of sight, scarce anybody will notice it." That was her idea of the rudder, and that is just some people's idea of the unimportance, as they think, of the tongue, or rather of the part it plays in the life and career of mortals. God thinks not so. As the tongue to the physician is the index of the health of the whole body, so the tongue, or rather the words it utters, are the index, the outcome, the proof, of the state of the heart and life and soul within. Death and life are in the power of the tongue.

An old Latin author long years ago was wise to say that "A bad tongue is the organ of the devil." Oh, think of what mischief an unclean tongue does! I pray you soil not that sacred member, for should not every member be sacred unto God who made it? Soil not that sacred member with words unwholesome, defiling, and depraving. Speak good words and pure, and bright and clean. God save everybody from having dirty tongues, befouled with filthy talk.

And then I do not want to have, and I am sure you do not, an unkind tongue. It is bad enough to have an unclean one; I am not sure but what it is worse, though not so disreputable in the eyes of everybody, to have a bitter tongue—a tongue that rails and backbites, and says nasty things. May the Lord save us from this, because if we have an unkind tongue it turns all our life. It is a proof that we are unkind at heart. It will make a wonderful difference to our future career. You cannot expect people to love you if you do not love them, nor that they shall speak well of you if you speak always ill of them; and according to that tongue of yours you will be steered into calm waters or into stormy seas, for the tongue is as the helm that guideth all the ship.

Thoughtless Mischief

Also would I fain be delivered from a tongue untrue. Oh, brothers and sisters, speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. "What shall be done unto thee, thou false tongue?" says the Psalmist. I had as lief have no rudder to my ship as one that does not answer to the compass of absolute accuracy and veritable fact. Speak always the truth one with another, for if you steer with a false rudder you will steer a false course. I want my tongue also to be saved from thoughtlessness, for evil is wrought far more by want of thought than want of heart. Perhaps I should do well to commend to you the old saying:

> If you your lips would keep from slips,
> Five things observe with care:
> Of whom you speak, to whom you speak,
> And how, and when, and where.

For the tongue, though it be a little member, exerts an awful influence. Speak truly, and purely, and carefully, and kindly, whenever you speak. Should I speak a word to-day about the blasphemy that is, alas! too often on some tongues? I wonder if such a one is here who does not mean to swear, perhaps, but the oath slips out. Oh, I pray you, curb that habit; conquer that

CONTINUED ON NEXT PAGE

The DAWN of the WORLD'S PEACE — M. Toché's Great Painting

IT IS THE LARGEST WATER-COLOR IN THE WORLD, AND REPRESENTS THE PEACE CONGRESS AT THE HAGUE, ALLEGORICALLY TREATED

NEAR the Bois de Boulogne, in Paris, is exposed in an immense hall specially constructed for the purpose, the greatest water-color painting in the world. It measures thirty-four by sixty-eight feet, in height and breadth, and forms, consequently, a picture of more than two thousand square feet. It contains one hundred and three life-size portraits, and a number of allegorical figures executed on a similar grand scale.

This work of such surprising dimensions is executed entirely in water colors. The artist is M. Charles Toche, whose style is that of the great pre-Raphaelite fresco painters, and of the modern realistic school. In the present remarkable work, he has given a representation of the numerous plenipotentiaries sent by twenty-six different nations, to the Peace Conference at the Hague.

The painting recalls the great event of four years ago; the Czar, inviting by his manifesto, all civilized nations to send delegates to a Congress of Peace. The great thought of universal peace has been expressed with felicity and fidelity, by M. Toche, in his painting. Under the gray-blue sky of Holland, he represents in the background, the historic summer palace, with the immense trees that overshadow it. To the right and left are seen glimpses of the peace-meadows of Holland, crossed by canals, and in the distance a landscape with windmills, extending to Amsterdam. On the steps of the great marble staircase are grouped the envoys of the nations. Every face is an admirable portrait. Side by side are the great ambassadors: Judge White, from the United States; Lord Pauncefote, from England: M Leon Bourgeois, from France; President De Staal, M de Beaufort, Hoils, Seth Low, Mahan, Asser, d'Estournelles de Constant, Odier, and others of their colleagues. In another place may be seen a group of generals, come to study the question of disarmament, and a group of admirals. Further on are the jurisconsults, and finally the numerous secretaries, and numbers of great personages. Below these eminent personages are a number of allegorical figures, whose effect is very striking. The sower of the good seed of international peace is seen in the centre. To the left are scenes of peace and felicity, as in the golden age; figures in flowing gowns cover with garlands the former instruments of war, that are being led away. To the right are the figures of Justice and Peace, staying the advance of the soldiers and war-horses.

It is a work which will recall to the world the idea of universal peace, cherished by the people of all nations.

The Ship of Life — Sermon by Pastor Thomas Spurgeon — Continued

disposition, I beseech you, and if anyone is here to whom it has become a habit ingrained, and not a slip merely, but who loves the sin of it, let me say most solemnly, Beware, good friend, lest God take you at your word, lest he curse you as you ask him, lest he condemn you when you pray him so to do. Cases have been known—one came beneath my notice only a week ago—of prayers of this sort being terribly and speedily answered. A poor girl going out of an evangelistic service, proud and haughty, but angry because she had been taken there, declared it was a shame to take her to such a place, and that she would never enter such doors again. She never did, for God struck her dead next day, and if she would have gone she could not.

Oh, that our tongues may be controlled by heaven, lest they speak against heaven. Lo! they are as a fire, set on fire of hell by nature, are these tongues of ours. But we have read of tongues of fire that came from heaven, that sat upon the heads of the disciples! Oh, for tongues of fire, not lit in Gehenna, but kindled in gloryland!

The Ruler of the Rudder

The rudder rules the ship; but, then, what rules the rudder? The pilot controls the helm. The rudder turns the ship, but the governor turns the rudder. He is master of the situation, because he holds in his hand the helm. The rudder is not automatic, it only moves as it is moved; it controls the vessel when it itself is controlled. Ah, there are some men who think that they are built upon a principle, quite unknown to me and unbelieved in too, they boast of natural religion, that they can steer themselves, that their steering apparatus is automatic, and that they need no hand upon the helm, but that they know when to stop, when they have gone a certain length, and can bring themselves up even when they have been steering an evil course. But some of us have learned that just as upon the rudder, pressure and power and persistence in the exercise of it are necessary, so, though the tongue controls the life, we must control the tongue, for the Lord has made us responsible for what we speak. Ah, my friend, you can find no good excuse for speaking falsely, or unkindly, or uncleanly, or blasphemously. Do not blame the tongue.

It is folly for the shipmaster to blame the rudder if the ship steers a serpentine course. He is to blame, not the rudder; and you are to exercise control over that tongue of yours, for God has placed you in that responsible position. And, oh, we have God's word for it, that if we control the speech we can control all. What are the man's words like? What is his language? His speech bewrayeth him. This is the crucial test—what is his conversation like? Hear him talk, and you can tell the nature of the heart within. "If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, he deceiveth his heart." That man's religion is vain.

Well, now, we have seen that the rudder controls the ship, that the steersman controls the rudder, but what controls the steersman? The text says, "withersoever the governor listeth," or, as the Revised Version reads, "Whither the impulse of the steersman willeth." Ah, behind the steersman is an impulse, within the steersman is a will. His will is the rudder, and the steersman, even as the helm, is the guiding principle of the ship. Mind, if you speak falsely or unholily, it is because you will to do it; it is the depraved heart acting upon the tongue. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." That which is in the well of the heart cometh up in the bucket of the lips, and it is because the heart, the well, the impulse that lies hidden within is depraved and sinful that the tongue speaks falsely, or blasphemously, or unholily. Well, then, what controls the will!

We seem to have a ship within a ship, as we sometimes have a wheel within a wheel, in this case. What is it that controls the wheel? A steersman has orders from his owners. The captain is master of the ship, but his employers are master of him. So he controls the rudder, having himself been controlled from headquarters. This brings us back to God. We are ships, and we can control both wind and wave, or at least outride them and outlive their anger, but we must be ourselves controlled by God, lest we cannot control the speech that controls our lives. Oh, see you not that it is not so much a matter of the tongue, after all, as of the inmost will and of the heart, and that for this we need new hearts and right spirits, surrendered wills, obedient dispositions, in a word, we want Christ on board to put his hand upon the helm and to guide us in all our course. We are to believe in our hearts, and then to confess with our mouths or tongues the Lord Jesus, and so shall we be saved. "Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my Redeemer."

Take my lips, and let them move
At the impulse of Thy love.

"I cannot believe," says one. It is possible to get into such a position that it is impossible to believe. In a sense it is true of all men till the quickening Spirit comes upon them. We cannot trust until He inclines us, or repent until He breaks the heart. Salvation is of the Lord from first to last. It is only as we perceive our own absolute nothingness, our helplessness, and strengthlessness, as Paul called it in his letter to the Romans, that we are likely to call upon the Spirit for strength, and to lift up that despairing cry which virtually says, "Save me! I perish! I am already doomed unless Thou runnest to my help!" We were without strength. There were ceaseless strivings after peace and joy. We were seeking the living amongst the dead. Some of you are doing this same thing just now.

So strengthlessness really amounts to, first, guilty inability to meet the sinless claim of God's law, and then a guilty inability even to cry for God's mercy. Well, now, I do not think we can get lower down than that; it is about as deep as deep can be. We have no power to be good or to do good, and no strength to save ourselves or to serve our God. Our righteousness is as filthy rags. Ah! but a brighter day is dawning when we are led by His Spirit to cry, "I have sinned. There is nothing in me to merit esteem, yet save me—I perish!"

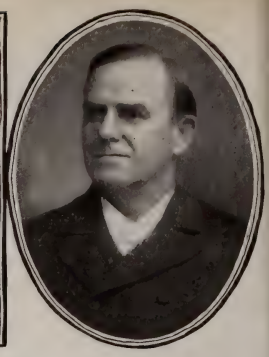
The Means of Salvation

Well, now, it is for such Christ died. He died for those who were in such a case. God has laid help upon One that is mighty. I fancy someone says to me, "What does this mean—'Christ died for the ungodly?'" Well, let me tell you. It means that Christ died for the sake of the ungodly, or, if you prefer it, for the benefit of the ungodly. "Oh, but," says my hearer, "That is a Gospel of substitution." Well that is precisely the Gospel we are given to preach. Read what Paul says in the letter to which I have already referred. "For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly. For scarcely for a righteous man will one die: yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die. But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." Do you not see? One man dying for the sake of, for the benefit of, another: that involves dying instead of him. Christ gave his life a ransom, not merely for the benefit of, not only for the sake of, but instead of many. And you may be one of the many if you do this moment look and live. Faith in Jesus makes the strengthless strong, the sinner sinless, the godless godly, the enemy an everlasting friend.

May I take my orders all from Calvary, and with the pierced hand upon my heart's helm, may I be guided past all rocks and shoals of quicksands, over all the restless currents of the raging main and through all the storms that seek to strand me, right into the peaceful haven, where all is peace and joy and rest. Lord, I am not undertake this task myself. Well, quartermaster, can you steer a course through life without Divine assistance? I, for one, give up the helpless task. I ask the Lord to come aboard my bark. I yield my powers obedient to his will. His word shall be the rudder of my life, and though my nature must still play its part, it shall be so exercised by the Spirit of the living God that it shall not be able to lead us from the course that heaven designs. God grant to each of you this same great favor, for His name's sake. Amen.

REV. D. W. POTTER

THE AUDITORIUM AT OCEAN CITY, N. J.



REV. S. WESLEY LAKE, D.D.

WORSHIPPING BY THE SEA

Camp-Meetings and Other Services at Ocean City, N. J.

MANY sermons have been preached on the dangers of the summer vacation. Sad experience proves that there is only too cogent reason for the warnings they contain. People have returned from it recuperated physically, but so depleted morally and spiritually, that it has taken a long time to recover lost ground. Unhappily, only too many common resorts provide for amusement and worldly pleasure, with a glaring lack of the means of grace. Temptations abound, not only of the coarser kind, such as drinking and gambling, but of the more insidious kind, beginning with disregard of the sanctity of the Lord's Day. Warnings against these temptations are useful and necessary; but the most practical way of protecting the Christian holiday-maker, is to provide him with the physical recuperation that he needs, and at the same time to afford means for spiritual help. In all parts of the country such resorts are now being organized. The famous gatherings at Ocean Grove, N. J., already described in this journal, have proved that the vacation may be made a time of spiritual uplift, as effectual as the physical benefit.

Another resort of a similar character is that at Ocean City, N. J., situated about six miles south of Atlantic City. It is on an island seven miles long, which is an ideal site for such a settlement. About twenty-four years ago, an association was organized to secure and develop the place. It was composed mainly of Methodist ministers, of whom the Lake brothers were the leaders. The Association purchased the whole island, and in the terms of incorporation the religious character of the resort was explicitly defined. There were to be no saloons upon it, nor any gambling places. This prohibition has been strictly enforced, so that the resort is clean and morally salubrious. The conveniences of visitors have been carefully considered. Trolley lines, facilities for boating, fishing, bathing, etc., are there in abundance, and $75,000 have been spent in the paving and grading of its streets. A fine school-house has been erected, and there are about twenty-five commodious boarding-houses, many smaller ones, and about twelve hundred cottages. Though its managers are Methodists, provision is made for visitors of other denominations. Besides the three Methodist Episcopal churches, the Presbyterians have a house of worship, as have the Baptists, the Protestant Episcopalians and other bodies. In addition, there is a large auditorium for general services.

On August 21, there is to be a Camp-meeting at Ocean City, which will doubtless bring visitors from all sections. It will continue for ten days, and promises to be one of the most enthusiastic in the city's history. Rev. Thomas Harrison, Rev. D. W. Potter, of Chicago, and other Evangelists, have promised to take part. Dr. J. F. Shaw of New Brunswick, N. J., has charge of the Young People's meetings, and Rev. George B. Burnwood, of Philadelphia, of the Children's meetings. Dr. B. W. Bartine, of Philadelphia, has undertaken to superintend the Sunday School, and lead the Surf meetings. A Temperance Camp-meeting is also a feature of Ocean City's season. It commenced July 30 and continues to Aug. 10. It was enlivened by stereopticon lectures by Dr. H. W. Tracey, the well-known Temperance advocate. This season, so far, has been one of the most prosperous in the history of the resort. Preparations are already being made for next year, when the organization will celebrate its twenty-fifth anniversary.

FOR THE LITTLE ONES WHO ARE PASSED BY

"PLEASE, oh, please, can't I go?"

He was such a little fellow, leaning against the garbage-box to talk and to cough, for he could hardly stand alone. He was ragged, as to shirt and pants, and thin as to face; but his bright eyes were full of an anxious eagerness that brought Sister Dorcas to a sudden halt. She had been rushing along the narrow street, from her mission meeting to the Deaconess Home. It was nearly ten o'clock at night.

"Why, my boy," said she, kindly, "I am afraid they don't take sick children among the Fresh Airs."

"Oh, I ain't sick"—cough! cough! "The 'spensary doctor says I ain't got no consumption. Grammy took me to him yesterday"—cough! cough!—"and he says if I can go to the country a little while"—the words died away in coughing, and in something else that sounded suspiciously like sobbing.

The boy had rightly recognized her as one of the deaconesses who send many well children to the country; but this lad was not well, and the rule was inexorable. Sister Dorcas hesitated.

"What is your name?" she asked, to gain a moment's time.

"Mark."

"I will come and see about it to-morrow. Where do you live?"

The child gave his street and number.

"Now run home to bed. You ought to be sound asleep this minute—a little lad like you. And coughing, too!"

"I can't, not till Grammy comes home. She scrubs."

There is a small army of women who earn their living by scrubbing stores and offices down town, after their occupants leave for the day. This work often extends far into the night. The deaconess understood at once that the boy's grandmother belonged to this class.

"What time does your grandmother get home?"

"Oh, some time," was the vague reply. "Not yet, though. Not for a long time."

Sister Dorcas laid her hand on the boy's shoulder. The night was chilly, though it was June, and the boy's dark-colored shirt was but a poor protection, especially as she could feel that there was no other covering over his thin frame. "Are you cold?" she asked.

THE DE PEYSTER HOME FOR INVALID CHILDREN

"No, not much. I used to be cold in the winter, at night, after the other boys went home and were so nice and warm. But say, can't I go? I ain't sick."

What could she do? It was out of the question to take the lad home with her—the grandmother would be anxious. Neither could she see a way to promise the "Fresh Air" so eagerly asked for. She could only, with a pitying heart, leave the little fellow to his hours of painful watching and waiting, only promising him that she would surely come and see him the next day.

But the next day—who can doubt that the Good Shepherd of his little wanderers brought it about?—that very day, and before Sister Dorcas had started out to visit little Mark, the Deaconess in Charge of the Home for Invalid Children, ninety miles up the country, came down on a business trip to the Deaconess Home in New York. As Sister Dorcas saw her, there flashed into her perplexity over Mark, a great light. Why couldn't he go to the Invalid Children's Home? But alas, there was no money for his support.

However, the two women went together to find the boy! The grandmother was home now, a bent, ignorant old creature, who, with the lad, lived in a small, dark tenement basement room. Yes, she went out scrubbing nights. And yes, she had to lock Mark out till she got home—she couldn't have him "settin' the house afire" with matches while she was gone. Well, mebbe he was sick, but she guessed he'd get over it all right. The doctor said it wasn't consumption. Not much could be gained from her. But Mark! Never was anxiety keener than in the little fellow's heart as he smothered his coughing and listened with painful attention to every word. His eyes were bright with eagerness, and his face was drawn with fear. The hearts of the good women were very full of pity, for they saw plainly that, though the child did not know it, he was pleading for his very life

But how could this new boy be taken into the Home, which was already carrying the heavy burden of three-fourths absolutely "free" children, and not a dollar of endowment! How could the walls be stretched another inch, even to take in this little stray? Mark had on a thin, old coat this morning—the basement room was damp.

The deaconesses racked their brains, and

CONTINUED ON PAGE 663

FROM THE HOT CITY STREETS

THE EVENING PRAYER

THE SUNNY SOUTH PORCH—INVALIDS' HOME

Our India Orphans

Midsummer Report 1903

The GREATEST and MOST IMPORTANT MISSIONARY WORK of MODERN TIMES

TO the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, through whose generosity Five Thousand Famine Orphans are now being sheltered, supported and trained in the Christian missions of India, we take pleasure in presenting a report, direct from the field, which cannot fail to interest all who have had a share in this noble and self-sacrificing labor of love.

This report will, in many respects, be a revelation to our readers, showing as it does, that they have "builded better than they knew," and that in rescuing these perishing little waifs, they have set in motion the most tremendous agency for the redemption of heathen India that has ever been known. Our orphan work is producing spiritual results that have astounded even the missionaries themselves—results so vast and so far-reaching as to far exceed anything they had ever hoped for.

OKA VALA, DHOLKA MISSION

But we prefer to let the missionaries tell their own story in simple, straightforward language, leaving it to our readers to place the proper estimate upon what has been accomplished and what the future promises. We share with them a feeling of deep thankfulness that this journal and its circle of readers all over the land, should have been chosen as the instrumentality through which so much good has come to the people of India. We feel, moreover, that as we have gone on successfully thus far, by the Divine blessing, no energy should be relaxed and no effort spared to make the work complete, by sustaining it to the end.

A "Mighty and Far-reaching" Work

One of the missionaries, Rev. A. E. Ayers, of Baroda, recently wrote:

I want to say that as a missionary, and responsible to heaven for the very best investment of my life on earth, I covet no higher opportunity than the privilege of co-operating as I am, in this work which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is so nobly pushing and sustaining. My thought is that if it is projected into the future. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its readers will have done, when the final account is rendered, one of the mightiest and most far-reaching tasks to be found in the whole missionary history of the world.

This most wonderful multiplication of Gospel agents is perhaps the greatest of all the many blessings that have come from the Orphan Work. It was a result wholly unforeseen, and it shows how the Divine Father sends the most unexpected and delightful surprises to those who serve him faithfully. Already, in many of the missions, many of those who, three years ago, were famished waifs, apparently dying with disease when they were rescued, have become teachers and students for the ministry. Think of it! The little parentless, friendless child, raised through your self-denying love and care, to be a valiant worker in the Lord's cause. An astonishingly large proportion of our 5,000 orphans is developing the desire and the talent for Gospel labor, and many hundreds, when their training is ended, will go out from the mission stations and become earnest teachers to their own people. It would seem that God, in his wonderful providence, has turned the calamity of the famine into a rich means of spiritual blessing. From that dark experience of suffering he is bringing forth an army of consecrated native youth for the spiritual regeneration of India.

God's Love Over India

When we reached out hands of help and prayer to India's perishing orphans three years ago, we little knew the scope and grandeur of the mighty enterprise reserved by the Father for his believing children in America. Now, we are beginning to realize it, and to feel more than ever that,

> He prayeth best who loveth best
> All things, both great and small;
> And the great Lord, who loveth us,
> He loveth best of all.

Truly, God's love is encompassing India, and winning its people to himself by means of the poor and despised orphans who, only a few years ago, were forsaken and cast out to die.

The letters of the missionaries to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD abound in expressions of gratitude for the grand opportunity given them by our generous patrons of training these thousands of orphan children. The American Marathi Mission report voices the general sentiment: "All who care for famine orphans feel a great indebtedness to those friends who generously provide funds for this philanthropy. Again the foremost place belongs to Dr. Louis Klopsch and those patrons who, through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of New York, have continued the support of hundreds of our famine children. Every four months, for about three years, Dr. Klopsch has promptly remitted the amount promised for all children on THE CHRISTIAN HERALD list."

We give below extracts from a number of the letters received from the missionaries:

Training as Bible Women

Our one-time famine waifs, diseased, ignorant and filthy, are now a merry, intelligent and obedient company of most lovable girls, and some of the best and brightest of them are being supported by the patrons of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. If the patrons could but see them as they now are, and contrast them with what they were but two short years ago, how much more than repaid they would feel for all the interest and help they have so kindly given! I am sending you a picture of one child, Huyali Rioji, a fair sample of the rest, so that friends may realize better how much has been done. The girls are at present all in school, getting the best vernacular education that can be given them. Special efforts are being made in this respect, as our great hope for these girls is, that one day the majority of them may go forth well equipped as teachers and Bible women to give the knowledge of the love of their Saviour to their Hindoo sisters. There are one hundred and twenty-five girls in our Orphanage, twenty-five of whom are supported by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and we do trust that this support will be continued until the girls are fully equipped for their life work.

MISS HARRIS.

Manmar, Zenana Bible and Medical Mission.

FIVE LITTLE WAIFS AT CAWNPORE ORPHANAGE

They are Laiki, Lalita, Champeli, Murchi and Habori

Two Hundred Little Converts

Their education is threefold, viz.: Spiritual, literary and industrial. The Word of God is the foundation upon which we build. We are happy to say, that with but few exceptions, all our children (nearly two hundred), have been baptized on their own profession of faith. They are in a very pleasing manner daily growing in grace and in the knowledge of their Saviour Jesus Christ. They are daily systematically taught God's Word. In our schools, we use the government curriculum. Our annual examination is now on, and our children are doing splendidly. It is pleasing to see these children, book in hand, walking to and fro on the playground reading for the examination. Even in the workshop, they work with the open book before them. Some of our children, notwithstanding they are from the depressed classes, are exceptionally bright. Our principal industry is leather working, and we, shortly, God willing, will introduce printing. REV. D. F. VAS HORST.

Lalitpur, Ker Epis Mission

Trained as Evangelists

When the boys enter their teens they are treated as follows: The most intelligent are trained as school teachers. Every year five or six are sent out to teach in some mission school. From among these, after they have gained experience and their characters are more developed, we chose our evangelists. The Orphanage is thus the nursery from which our staff of mission workers is obtained. Those who are not particularly intelligent, or who come to us when almost grown up without having had any schooling, are put to learn a trade during the day and attend a night school in the evening. In India, where the domestic servants are men and boys, not women, there is no reason why some of these orphans should not be trained for housework. They take to it kindly. I sent out one such boy last year and one since. The first of them, by the by, was a CHRISTIAN HERALD boy named Vishvas (supported by Mrs. M. C. Newbold, Philadelphia, Pa., who took another younger boy). He became a smart, clean boy, and is getting on capitally. Then we have a large kitchen-garden (orphanage), where three or four boys learn gardening, and two others learn in the church compound garden. Our last plan for their employment is a printing press. All these occupations are educational. The boys must be fed and clothed apart from the occupation. I mean that we must depend upon friends to keep these boys, while they are learning their trade. I do earnestly trust that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD supporters will stand by us.

Nasik, P. E. Mission. REV. A. MANWARING.

DHARMU AND MUKTA

Once waifs, now teachers

Little Sanjivani

Sanjivani, another CHRISTIAN HERALD child, had a long illness after she came to us, and is now slightly deaf. She came to us in this way. An old catechist, who lived in Nasik, came to know Sanjivani's father during the famine. The father was suffering from fever, and said one day to the catechist, "I am dying, do you take my child and care for her." This the old man did, and for six months she lived with his children. She was then six years old. I remember how proud the old man was, when he brought her and made her repeat some verses of Scripture that he had taught her.

We took the little girl into the Orphanage, for the catechist's course was run, and he died soon after we took her. She is a dear little girl. REV. A. MANWARING.

Nasik, P. E. Mission.

"The Most Christ-like Work in India"

For several years I have over and over again said that the saving of the famine children in the last great India famine was the most unique and the most promising feature of Christian missionary work in India, and that which struck everyone here as the most Christ-like. The way in which the famine children have developed in intelligence and in Christian character is confirming the above opinion. Almost all of the more than three hundred children in my charge are developing admirably in body, mind and soul. Already the larger part have been admitted to the church. Since my last report was sent, twenty-six girls and six boys have been received into church fellowship as full members. All are receiving some ordinary education, a good many are receiving an industrial education, and some are worthy of being trained to become spiritual workers.

Khirana Tulsiram, one of our girls, had been to her village for a short vacation. When she returned she brought with her a hunchbacked girl named Bhagu Bapuji, a relative, and begged that Bhagu might be received into the Alice House with herself and the other girls. It was a real Christian and missionary spirit which led Khirana to bring Bhagu. There stood Bhagu, shy and shrinking, and here was sweet Khirana pleading for her admission. So, of course, I said "Yes," and now Bhagu is an inmate of our Alice Home, and is the first fruits of Khirana's missionary spirit. REV. R. A. HUME.

Ahmednagar, Cong'l Mission.

The Death of Little David

"We must not forget the ministry of those little ones who left us to continue the service of Jesus before the throne in heaven," writes Missionary Thomssen, Bapatla. "While some slipped away in the silence of the night to be with Jesus, others left a message that we can never forget. Little David — an adopted orphan — very, very weak, said to our servant: 'It is enough.' Then turning to his weeping, widowed mother, whose only child he was, said, 'Ammah, don't weep. I am going to Jesus. He is my Father. Rejoice, Ammah, rejoice! There, there is no hunger, nor cold, nor fever. Don't weep!' Turning his gaze heavenward, he exclaimed, 'Salam, Father, I am coming, salam, salam, salam!' Thrice he raised his hands in worship. Then he was not, for God, his Father took him. Will little David ever be forgotten in our mission? Will he ever be forgotten by that kind patron in America whose foster-child he was? Such love lasts beyond death."

Good-Hearted Little Orphans

I do not expect that there will be many of our orphan boys who will go on and take a college course, but I do hope that there will be some of our CHRISTIAN HERALD boys who may some day be able to add B.A. after their names. Why not? The girl's school is doing what it can for the girls. In industrial training we are doing what we can. At the farm near here of some four hundred acres, there are twenty-two boys, and in Ahmednagar, in the Industrial Department of the high school, thirty-five boys, who are learning the hammering of metal, and also the tracing of artistic designs on the vessels which they have made. These boys and girls go regularly to church and Sunday School, and have a Christian Endeavor Society in which they are thoroughly interested. Our services on Sunday are helped by the hymns, which selected singers learn and sing.

HENRY FAIRBANK.

Rahuri, American Marathi Mission.

They Will Repay

The orphans are truly developing in a wonderful way, and we look for many useful men and women from their ranks. Oh, they will repay, by their earnest lives, the great assistance rendered to them. Yes, a hundredfold, to the generous givers and donors.

Sirur, Congl. Mission. MR. AND MRS. WINSOR.

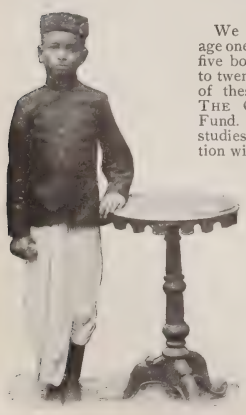
A BLACKSMITH CLASS AT SIRUR ORPHANAGE

his time. After he had been with us some time, he was so ignorant that I felt he would never amount to anything, so I gave him all his time for his studies. He was converted, and then a change took place. He began to push ahead in his studies and soon outstripped all the boys in his class. He now stands first in a class of fifty Brahmin boys, and has stood first for over a year in every department of his studies. He is the secretary of the Sunday School, and goes out every Sunday and holds a Sunday School in one of the surrounding villages. He has had a definite call to the ministry.

The second boy, Shantwan, came to us about three years ago. He was then a poor skeleton. He applied himself very hard to his studies and he is now in the fourth standard and stands first in his class. He also has had a definite call to the ministry and is fitting himself for the work. This boy is one of the best speakers we have in our church, and he has a very good way of dealing with the people when he goes out preaching with me in the town or some near-by village. If the supporters of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD orphans could see some of these boys, how it would cheer and gladden their hearts to see young men, who only a few years ago were worshiping gods of wood and stone, now lifting up Jesus, the living Saviour. WM. MOYSER.

Akola, Berea, India.

THE COMPOUND OF THE GIRLS' ORPHANAGE, KHANDWA



A HIGH CASTE ORPHAN

Two Famine Waifs Now Preachers

We have in our Orphanage one hundred and twenty-five boys, ranging from two to twenty years of age. Fifty of these are supported by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund. Besides their secular studies, we have in connection with our school a large Industrial workshop, where our boys are taught carpentry, blacksmithing, carriage-building, fitting, engineering, etc.

Shaoo came to us at the beginning of the famine, rather a stupid boy of nine years; he was at once put into the school to study and help around the house part of his time. After he had been with us some time, he was so ignorant that I felt he would never amount to anything, so I gave him all his time for his studies. He was converted, and then a change took place. He began to push ahead in his studies and soon outstripped all the boys in his class. He now stands first in a class of fifty Brahmin boys, and has stood first for over a year in every department of his studies. He is the secretary of the Sunday School, and goes out every Sunday and holds a Sunday School in one of the surrounding villages. He has had a definite call to the ministry.

The second boy, Shantwan, came to us about three years ago. He was then a poor skeleton. He applied himself very hard to his studies and he is now in the fourth standard and stands first in his class. He also has had a definite call to the ministry and is fitting himself for the work. This boy is one of the best speakers we have in our church, and he has a very good way of dealing with the people when he goes out preaching with me in the town or some near-by village. If the supporters of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD orphans could see some of these boys, how it would cheer and gladden their hearts to see young men, who only a few years ago were worshiping gods of wood and stone, now lifting up Jesus, the living Saviour. WM. MOYSER.

Akola, Berea, India.

An Object Lesson to the Heathen

The Orphanage at Kavali has grown like a young banyan tree from a little plant, to cover with its happy influence many hearts and homes, in many villages and towns. It is a standing object lesson to the entire heathen community, illustrating those principles of Christianity of which neither Hindooism nor Mohammedanism know; bringing life, health, joy and salvation to many children.

Kavali, Bapt. Mission. REV. E. BULLARD.

Famine Boys as Soul-Winners

We are deeply grateful to every one of you for your faithful co-operation in saving and educating the famine children with us. Our motive in going in the famine work was not only to help save life, although that was strong enough, but we thought it might be God's will for us to save some famine women, lead them to Christ, and let them carry the Gospel to their own people here in Calcutta, whose language we do not know. That this was God's purpose was shown in the fact that three of these women who have been converted are now going to the bathing place of the Mawaree women, singing to them and selling Scripture portions; and also to their homes, teaching them of Jesus, and doing a blessed work. Two of our famine boys are also engaged in the same work.

It would make your hearts rejoice, as it does ours, to hear them pray. One sentence frequently heard is, "We thank thee, O God, for saving us from starving and for bringing us here where we have heard of Jesus. If any of our friends are still living after the famine, back in our native country, bring them to know the true God, and save them as thou hast us."

Calcutta, Methodist. MRS. ADA LEE.

Training a Little Family of Thirty-Three

We greatly appreciate the help given us by your readers in the care of our famine orphans. Our family is not large, only thirty-three children, but we think it is the nicest Orphanage family we have yet seen. We are endeavoring to give our children a good common education, and also to train them in thrifty habits and useful trades, so that they may be able to support themselves when grown. Some seem quite capable of taking a higher education, which we hope to give them. They live very simply, as we do not want to lift them away from their own people, among whom, we trust, they will live after a few years, not to show forth Western ideas and customs, but rather the transforming power of Christ in their lives. Our ambition is not only to send out preachers and evangelists from this Orphanage in the coming years, but to send forth also Christian merchants, Christian laborers, Christian farmers, Christian servants, Christian wives—men and women who will shine for God in any sphere. Some of our boys go out into the near villages occasionally, to spread the message of Salvation among their people, and God's Spirit often rests upon them very wonderfully, as they witness to the Truth in Christ.

MISS DELIA FISTLER.

Nowgang, Friends' Mis'n.

An Influence on India's Destiny

I believe that these children, saved and educated, will have a great deal to do in the destiny of India. We hope to see them by and by scattered out in the villages, teaching the people, caring for the sick, and leading them by precept and example to trust in the one true God about whom they now have such a faint conception. Our girls are learning the Bible rapidly, and one has already gone out as the wife of one of our pastors, and both are working in a large town where a few have already become Christians. I have just been out on a tour among the villages, and was pleased to see the respect in which our workers are held by all classes of people. I believe we have many coming evangelists among our boys and girls. MISS A. E. LAWSON.

Phulera, Methodist Mission.

The Story of Little Mouri

We want to thank each and all of you for your prayers, your support, and sympathy, for our orphans during the past years. At present writing we have three hundred and ninety-six girls and women in the Orphanage. One hundred and thirty-three of these are supported through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Had it not been that the dear home friends had taken up the support of these dear children, tongue cannot tell to what depths they may have sunken. To illustrate: A beautiful girl named Mouri (supported by Miss A. Kirkpatrick, Haynesville, La.), with her little sister, Herki, were the very first to come to us. Today Mouri is in the fifth standard in school, the very brightest in her class. She spends a few hours a day in the weaving shed, and although only twelve years old, and very small for her age, she does her work best of all the fifty girls in the workshop. Had she remained in her village, she probably would have died; or had she chanced to live, she would to-day have been living with a coarse heathen man, much older than herself, as his wife, his little slave. We want to praise God that his Word is having its effect in the lives of the girls. MISS EUNICE WELLS.

JAGU, THE JUNGLE BOY

FIBRE SPINNERS AT THE INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL, SIRUR

Kaira Camp, C. & M. A. Mission.

Industrial Occupations

I have three hundred and thirty-eight boys in this institution. These boys have all been baptized at their own request. Most of them are from a caste of Hindoos who have hardly been touched by Christian effort. Of these three hundred and thirty-eight, no less than two hundred and thirty-one are being supported by readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, nearly all the others by friends in America and Canada. What a change the past three years have wrought! Then these healthy, happy boys were bags of bones and festering famine sores. Children were sent to me by Government officials in baskets on men's heads. Children too weak to stand up. Many were too far gone to save, and it has only been by hard, disagreeable work on the part of Mrs. Park, that the others are well and happy to-day. For the first year, our only thought was to save their lives, and nothing was done in the way of schooling. At the end of the first year school was started, and now nearly all the boys can read, and many of them are doing exceedingly well. One hundred and twenty-five of the boys are already at work at carpentry, mechanical engineering, weaving, etc. These boys go to school half the time and work in the shops the other half. REV. G. W. PARK.

Nadiad, Methodist Mission.

Orphans as Teachers

From among the older famine girls taken into our Orphanage during the famine of 1896-'97, I have several very faithful and competent teachers for my lower classes, and little elementary city schools, although at the time these girls were admitted into the Orphanage, not one was able to read even their letters, and some, coming from small villages, had scarcely so much as even seen a book of any kind. One needs to see them in school, at work and at play, to fully appreciate them, and realize the change in life and character that has taken place since first they came under Christian care and teaching. The children taken in from the 1900 famine are also, many of them, very bright girls; although having been with us a shorter period of time. But while all the above things are pleasing and encouraging to us, by far more pleasing and encouraging has been their progress in the spiritual life. We have at this time scarcely a child in the Orphanage, old enough to understand such things, who is not a Christian.

MISS L. E. DIETRICH.

Cawnpore, Mary A. Merrian Orphanage.

For Zenana Missionaries

When first Miss Porter and then Miss Miller were ill, and obliged to leave their work, the Talegaom M.E. orphans were sent to the school of Soonderbai H.Powar, in Poona, to be trained. There are twenty-four CHRISTIAN HERALD girls. The chief object of this school is to train the girls for zenana work. Bible women, teachers and matrons. The workers are needed, and the missionaries are short of them. All the girls get Bible training. Eight girls belong to the Bible women's class. I teach them Marathi tunes and how to preach to the Hindoos. They go with a Bible woman to preach the Gospel. They will have good practice for two years before they go to help any missionaries who will need them. Then another class I have is called Teachers' Class. They learn themselves, and also are taught how to teach the little ones. Twelve girls are going to learn industry—promising girls. I am glad to tell you that many of them are converted. They have given their hearts to Jesus and are rejoicing in the Lord. They take great delight in studying the Bible. Some of them are teachers in Sunday School. I can say this from my heart, that those who gave money toward the support of these famine orphans have done a grand thing for the Lord. The money thus spent is not given in vain. The Lord will reward the donors. SOONDERBAI H. POWAR

Poona, Zenana Training Home.

The Orphans the Hope of India

I regard the training of these children as one of the most important works of our mission. It is too soon to say how many of them will be future preachers and teachers, medical missionaries and Bible women, but many a boy and girl have told me of their desire to take up one of these lines of work. Some of our girls go voluntarily with the Christian women or a Bible woman to the houses of Hindoos and read the Bible and sing, thus showing that they have the first requisite for the work—a genuine love for telling the story. And the boys who used to gather on my veranda Sunday mornings for a Junior Endeavor prayer meeting and Bible study—how often, as I heard one reverent voice after another in prayer, did I thank God that we have been able to gather these little ones into the fold and care for them. In future years we shall point to our most faithful helpers, and to upright Christian men and mothers, who are faithfully training their children in the nurture of the Lord and say, "These were famine waifs in 1900." Then shall you who have had a hand in the support of these little ones thank God for the opportunity of helping them on.

THE DAY SCHOOL AT THE NASIK ORPHANAGE

MRS. E. S. WILSON.

Kodoli, Presby'n Mission.

Bright Orphans at Khandwa

A large number of the boys in the Khandwa Orphanage, are supported through the kind offices of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Generally speaking, the boys live in simple, native style, although even the smallest of them are required to wear clothes. They have not been taught to use chairs, tables, and bedsteads, but sit on the ground, eat with their fingers, and sleep on the floor. They are taught habits of cleanliness, order, promptness, self-reliance and industry. They spend four and one-half hours daily in the mission school (graded government standard), two hours at their study, and two hours at their industrial work.

The aim of their Christian training is to make practical, well-grounded and thoroughgoing Christians. A motherly Christian matron lives in the Orphanage compound, and a majority of the teachers in the school are Christians. Most of the boys have learned the Lord's Prayer; the Ten Commandments; the Apostle's Creed, and much of the Catechism, as well as many passages of Scripture and a number of Christian songs.

Some of these boys will choose trades, some will be teachers, and some perhaps will be preachers, and it is our hope that their education and Christian work will make them more efficient wherever they go.

Of the three boys, Bhaya, the smart, passed the upper primary examination last year, and received 300 hundred per cent in arithmetic. He is now studying English. Bhawa does table work one hour each day, and recently, during prayers, has been filling outside orders. REV. D. C. ABBOTT Baroda, Methodist Mission.

Will Become Preachers and Teachers

I wish you could come and see with your own eyes, what our eyes see here, especially when our little ones gather in the Sunday School. You would then see about one thousand bright boys and girls, with happy, smiling faces, many of whom are Jesus' little lambs, gathered together in this fold. Of this large number of children, more than half are orphans. Two hundred and forty-six of these are in our CHRISTIAN HERALD Orphanage. They are all well and happy, because they have plenty to eat, a comfortable place to sleep in, good schools and kind teachers, and these they are being fitted physically and spiritually to do their life-work. If it had not been for your generosity, these boys and girls would still be away from the tender Shepherd's care. Many of them would have died ere now; others would be thieves, and still others leading a life of sorrow and shame. Now, almost all love Jesus. Some of them will become preachers and teachers, and all will, we trust, become useful men and women. Having been blessed by you, they will be a blessing to their own and coming generations. DR J. E. CLOUGH

Ongole, Baptist Mission

Industrial Work at Vadala

The famine children for whom this station is responsible number 250. Of these, five have been studying agriculture, under Mr. J. B. Knight, at Ahmednagar. Thirty-six have been receiving instruction in drawing, designing, copper-work and rug-weaving, under Rev. James Smith, at the Sir. D. M. Petit School of Art, Ahmednagar. In addition to this industrial training, these children have also been regularly taught the lines followed out by a vernacular school of Government standards. At Vadala itself, we care for the large majority of our famine children. The girls are in the Station school for girls. Some of the boys are connected with the Boys' Station school, and some of them are at the farm especially managed for these famine children. These thirty boys at the farm do regular work in connection with the fields, but they also have school work for four hours each day. At Kharwandi and at Chinchore, two villages within two miles of Vadala, we have twenty-four children in mission schools. Our two lines of industrial work here at Vadala, are weaving and agriculture. A new loom has been invented by our mechanical expert, Mr. D. C. Churchill. This loom is a hand-loom, but it trebles the work of the ordinary country loom. It is our hope in time to do much more along the weaving line with this improved loom. The girls do their own grinding, learn to make their bread and curries, bring their water from the riverbed — in fact do everything that is necessary about their dormitories.

WESLEYAN METHODIST ORPHANAGE, BOMBAY

HUYALI, MANMAR ORPHANAGE

We have every reason to expect that these children will grow up with high ideals of life. Many are now entirely changed from what they were when they came to us during the famine.

REV. E. FAIRBANK.
Vadala, Congregl Mission.

Wonderful Child Preachers

There are ninety-eight orphans under my care, and the same are divided into two departments—educational and agricultural. All of our orphans are trained and moulded to the fundamental characteristics of Christ, and therefore we expect many solid things from them for the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ. Our watchwords are: "Walk in the spirit and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh." A little more than two years ago they were all skeletons, quite ignorant, useless, idol worshipers and far away from the true light, but their present life is remarkable and wonderful; perfect health, cheerful spirits, making good progress in educational lines, getting acquainted with the true light and increasing in the pure love of our Saviour. Many of them go with our preachers in the market, and sing well and preach a little to the Hindoos. The non-Christians are astonished to see and hear such new and wonderful life of Christ in them (orphans) and praise the Lord and frankly confess that the true and best religion is the Christian religion. All of them are very fond of singing and attending prayer meetings and other divine services, etc. Some of them expect to be fine preachers, some teachers, doctors, professors, and some may become common clerk compounders, etc. Two orphans have already been promised higher education by a patron in Canada and a few more by others in the United States.

One of our orphans is named Jagu. His former caste was Ghond. This class of people were never educated. They are called jungle people, living among the hills and forests. They are of a very dark color and very simple. The Hindoos say they were born for the forests and jungles. The boy Jagu belongs to this caste. He is now in the third standard, can read and write well, and writes good letters to his patron in America; a good singer; just passed the Bible examination creditably; will soon be promoted to the fourth standard, and after a year or so will be sent for higher education; his Christian character is altogether satisfactory.

We hope he will develop into a good preacher, and be an instrument in the Lord's hands for doing much good among his own people, who are many thousands around us, walking in the darkest path of ancient Hindooism. REV. S. BENJAMIN.
Burhapur, Methodist Mission.

A "Stars and Stripes" School

We began the year with a spirit of revival, and when, in March, Mrs. Calkins came among us, the Lord graciously answered our many prayers by pouring out a great blessing upon the school. Many of the girls were soundly converted, while all were made to feel the Spirit's presence. The day of fasting and prayer, reported elsewhere, was a day never to be forgotten, and whose influence is still to be seen in the lives of the girls.

In the educational department, Miss David and all the teachers have given faithful work, and the result shown at the annual examination in May was satisfactory. Out of eighty girls in the third standard, seventy-nine passed, and most of the remaining classes did well. In July, we were visited by the Director of Public Instruction for Central Provinces, and in November, by the Director General of Education for India. Both gave encouraging reports, one of whom said, "This is not the first school having the Stars and Stripes for its flag that I have visited, and I consider it one of the best."
Jubbulpur, Meth. Mission. MISS NETTIE M. HYDE.

The Story of Oka Vala

Some day the Light of Truth is going to shine out of the darkness of superstition and error that now reigns, and these orphans, backed by the support and prayers of God's earnest children in the homeland, will be instruments used of God, for this great transformation. Oka Vala (supported by the Folke-Vennen, Chicago, Ill.) came to Dholka during the famine two years ago, from a village quite a distance away to the north of Ahmedabad.

Oka Vala's father, mother, and sister, all had died, and afterwards, during the famine, his brother also died, so that he was entirely alone, as far as earthly ties are concerned. But after he had been in the school a while, he learned about the Friend that sticketh closer than a brother, and he sought and found forgiveness and peace, and left his burden at the Cross. He was baptized soon after, and ever since has had a bright, Christian experience. He is very faithful in prayer and reading his Bible. He is not sure yet what work the Lord is calling him to, but it will doubtless be that of either a teacher or a catechist. He is truly a conscientious and faithful Christian boy, and one whom the Lord can use.

This is, however, merely the beginning of the results that will come through the investment of a few dollars for the support of this once heathen lad. But who, except God, will know the end, as the influence of the one life is multiplied into that of many, as time goes on. MRS. ARTHUR DUCKWORTH.
Dholka, C. &. M. A. Mission.

A Little Convert's Testimony

Three years of orphan work have passed and we now, in a measure, can view the results of this great work. Only eternity will show, to our everlasting wonder, what God has wrought through these little ones in our Telugu Mission. We have orphanages in Kavali, Kanigiri, Ramapatnam, Ongole (two), Bapatla, Nursaravapetta, Vinukonda, Gurzalla, Cumbum, and Palmur. In these eleven centres, God has wrought great things and all the missionaries are very grateful for the great help given the children. When our church recently was examining candidates for baptism, one of our little orphan girls came and said: "I want to be baptized." When asked for a profession of her faith, seeing the large number of people, the hot blood rushed to her face, and she nearly cried. Then clasping her little hands, with a divine smile illuminating her beautiful face, she said, tremblingly, but joyfully: "I believe in God, the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth, and in Jesus Christ, his Son, etc.," repeating the whole Apostle's Creed. Never was a more beautiful testimony given in a more pathetic manner than by this little one from the Orphanage. Many eyes were moist when she finished her beautiful profession of faith.
Bapatla, Bapt. Mission. REV. G. N. THOMSSEN.

TEACHING BLIND ORPHANS TO MAKE BASKETS, BOMBAY

Underneath all this orphan work, and in a large measure responsible for its success, is the story of much self-sacrifice and earnest prayer. An old man of ninety-four thought that he could still do something for the cause, and wanted to be "found in the harness" at the last. A very little girl, in a part of the country where money is not plentiful, saw her pet lamb led off by the butcher. A sob ran through her little letter at the thought of her pet being eaten, but a jubilant note came at the end, where she said, "But my papa made the man give five dollars for my little orphan girl in India." Between these two extremes of age, are numberless cases of loving sacrifice, earnest prayer, and unbounding faith.

Training Self-Supporting Christians

How far-reaching the effects of this educational work will be, only those who know India well can realize. That some of the orphans will become preachers, and evangelists, and Bible women, is a fact over which we have good reason to rejoice. They will be better able even than a foreigner to present the Gospel attractively to the native mind; but over and above that beneficent work, there is another result which will be peculiarly effective. These boys and girls have been so well trained in industrial pursuits, that when they go out into the towns and villages all over India, they will take a position of prominence and influence in the community. The best carpenter, the best smith, the best weaver, the most intelligent cultivator in a district, will be one of these Christians, trained in a missionary school. They will have the respect of their neighbors, and what they say and do will have the weight that attaches to the leading man in his trade or occupation. He sets a fashion, and he makes his principles respected. What then will be the effect of its being known that these leaders are Christians? When the natives see that these foremost men do not worship idols, that they keep the Christian Sabbath, that their children are not married in their infancy, people will begin to follow their example. Thus the society of India will be permeated, leavened with Christianity, as it has never been before. Hindoo journals and Hindoo teachers have tried to cast a stigma on the native who becomes a Christian preacher. They try to undermine his influence by saying that he is a "rice Christian," that is, a man who has been bribed by a salary to preach Christianity. But this slander will lose its effect in the case of these Christian mechanics and cultivators. When the Hindoo sees his brother earning a livelihood by good, honest work, and gaining the respect of the community by his efficiency and skill, yet voluntarily leading a Christian life, he will be inspired with a respect for Christianity that the native preacher cannot always command. They cannot fling at him the sneer that he is bribed. If such a man as that, they will say, so intelligent, so clever, as he evidently is, holds the Christian faith, and leads a Christian life, there must be something in Christianity after all. And so, as the Apostle advised, "by well doing, they may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men," and what in this case is still more important, they may remove the prejudices which have cursed India for centuries.

MISSIONARY AND ORPHAN, GUNTUR

Three Orphans' Letters to Their Patrons

My dear patron: Your little daughter Mithi, sends you her loving salams. May the Lord preserve you. I am learning the third standard in school; my teacher is called Sara. We get up at six in the morning. At seven, we go to church every morning for a short service. At nine, we have breakfast; from ten to four we go to school. After school hours we play and do our housework. At seven, we have our evening meal and then prepare our lessons till nine, when we go to bed. Now I have written enough. Forgive all mistakes. Your loving little daughter, MITHI NARSINGH.

My beloved lady: Your poor little girl Ruth writes in this way to you: Two years ago, before I came to this school, I had never seen a book, and not one letter of the alphabet came to me. My books I am reading with care, and I am learning Indian embroidery, after I have finished my days in school. I want to teach other little girls. By God's love and your prayers, I am very well, and in that way I pray you are. Our ladies teach us much work and many stories. I want to be a teacher. The ladies show much love to me. I am now learning the lives of Jonah and Gideon. These are all the subjects that your little Ruth writes about. RUTH.

My dear father: Because of the help you sent us in the great famine, we are alive. I am going to serve God, and am going to be grateful and to pray; and to do this well, I am learning to read the Bible well. Every evening in our village, they teach about Christ, and every day I go to the houses and call the people to come to prayers, that I may serve God well. He has given me strength, and I hope to call many to serve my God. When I was better from my illness, my relatives were astonished, and I want them to know about Jesus Christ, and once in ten days I go to them and tell them. With this I send my love. BUSHUMU.

The Cost of Supporting an Orphan

Frequent inquiries are received at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD office, concerning the cost of supporting an orphan, and as to what the term "supporting" represents. By arrangement with the International Committee at Bombay, the support of any one orphan of your own choice as to age, sex and denomination, is fixed at $15.00 per year. "Support" includes food, shelter, clothing, mental, spiritual, and industrial instruction, and such other care as parents bestow on their own children.

On your application, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will assign to you an orphan, complying with such conditions as you may impose. We send you the name of the child, the location of the orphanage, the name of the missionary in charge, and we instruct the missionary to have the child write you a letter occasionally, while the missionary, also, regularly reports to you as to the progress of your protege.

Address all communications to India Orphan Work, The Christian Herald, 92 Bible House, New York.

Quaint Little Waifs at Mont-Lawn

SOME OF THE ODD SAYINGS AND DOINGS OF OUR TENEMENT CHILDREN

A TENEMENT WAIF

IT is a strange and complex family that fills the group of cottages at our Fresh-Air Home at Mont-Lawn. Busy from early morning till dark; ceaseless in its juvenile activities; incessant, too, in its demands upon the attention of the Housemother and her staff of teachers, our colony of waifs is like a little bustling world in itself, with its own interests and pursuits, and its own joys and sorrows.

One of the most enjoyable features of the average day, both for teachers and children, is the ramble over the surrounding valleys and hills. Each teacher starts out with a merry group, carrying baskets and utensils, in search of ferns and foliage for decorating the little chapel. Or you will see the ramblers go berrying with tin pails. The morning before they are to leave Mont-Lawn, they fill the meadows gathering flowers to take away. The Home wagons are loaded with daisies as the little folks say good-by.

Among the little ones received at the Home, there are frequently the children of people who have once been prominent, but have fallen under misfortune. Lately, there came to Mont-Lawn, two sons of a former Cuban judge. Both parents having died, the children were sent to this country, and entered a benevolent institution in New York.

It is remarkable for the home surroundings of the waifs, that so little slang is heard. One little boy said: "Say, teacher, that little boy was cursing me." On being asked what he had said, the wee complainant replied: "Why, he called me a spring chicken"—a name given by some of the city waifs to a child who comes to Mont-Lawn for the first time.

A little girl, desiring to express to a teacher the pleasure she was having, said: "Oh, teacher, I'm having a fierce time!" Speaking of Sunday, one small boy asked if he could go into the bath, another child replied: "Naw, not to-day; that would be heathish."

The flower garden, newly laid out this year for the children, is now at its best. Each child who is old enough to care for a little flower-bed, has one allotted to it, and under the teacher's instructions the wee gardener weeds and prunes and tends the growing plants, waters them on dry days, and expends a great deal of love and attention upon them.

Some of our little folks, if they were not watched, would pull the plants up bodily by the roots to see how they grew; but they soon learn how to treat them. They are faithful little gardeners and their posy-beds are beautiful to behold.

Weeding in the miniature garden at Mont-Lawn, a child asked her teacher if she could not take the weeds home. She was told they were worthless. She replied: "O, let me have them. I want a nice flower-bed around my fence at home."

It is a picture to be remembered when you see the children gathered about a teacher, and bending over the beautiful flower-beds in this little garden, pulling the weeds early in the morning or at twilight.

Sitting on the grass, little Willie says, "Teacher, I got to go home to-morrow—but if I am good will Miss Collins let me stay over my time?" The teacher is sorry, but he had better let some other little tenement boy come for a good time. Willie then asks, "If I'm living next year, can I come?" "Yes, indeed," answers teacher. Then Willie joyfully exclaims, "I hope I'll be 'er living 'cause it's a heap better."

One little girl wrote home after a berrying party: "Dear Mamma, I ate ten han'fulls of berries and ain't full yet."

It is not uncommon for teacher, on her last round at night to tuck the children comfortably in bed, to find some poor little tot hugging close a bundle, which, when examined, proves to be a can of berries tied up in a soiled apron or petticoat.

The quaint sayings and odd little notions of the children are a source of frequent amusement to the teachers. Everything is so new and wonderful to them; the flowers, the trees, the rides, the bathing pool, the swings, and the fine open freedom of the whole surroundings, are a perpetual source of wonder and delight.

On rainy days the children are taken to the upper part of the large barn, which is used for a temporary rainy day playroom. It is hoped, however, to have another place soon built especially for many days. In the barn the children clamber up the flight of stairs and reach the shelter as soon as possible. Some rush for the swings, and others perch upon the cross-beams, remaining there ladies at a cage of chattering monkeys grinning and balancing around. Soon the teachers have various games started, while others have groups around them, and are telling the children stories. This run goes on until dinner is announced, when the covered wagons are driven up, and the children are carried safely and dry to the dining tent, where nothing dampens their appetites. After they are all served they are carried to the chapel, where they join heartily in singing some of the many songs they learned at Mont-Lawn, such as "Jesus Loves Me," "Step By Step," and various patriotic school songs.

It would thrill one to hear these waifs singing with a vehemence that does not characterize an ordinary assembly. They sing with all the voice and strength they possess. The teachers then entertain them with recitations and stories. Miss Coles, a trainer of kindergarten teachers, amuses them with stories told in a most pleasing manner. Then the children's eyes sparkle as Dr. Klopsch takes the floor, for he has a faculty of entertaining the children such as few possess.

On rainy days, the children take most of their pleasures indoors. Some enjoy the extra game in a dormitory; others gather in little groups and recite; some draw on the blackboard, the best artist in the shortest time winning a prize. Usually the day, despite the rain, passes pleasantly and quickly, and all the more so if it happens to be one of Dr. Klopsch's visiting days. On leaving, after giving the children a "good time," he usually leaves a penny for each child, to be distributed by the teachers, afterward.

On these stormy days, the evening meal is sometimes served in the chapel, and the little folks are afterward taken to their several dormitories. This season there have been only three or four rainy days since the opening of Mont-Lawn.

Contributions to our Fresh-Air Fund should be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, New York. All contributions are acknowledged in these columns.

GETTING READY FOR AN OUTING IN THE SHADY WOODS AT MONT-LAWN

CONTRIBUTIONS IN AID OF OUR FRESH-AIR HOME

Ackley, Miss A... 3 00
Adams, Mrs L E K 6 00
Adams, Mary E... 6 00
Adair, Miss E C.. 6 00
Addison, Mrs Geo. 50
Aldrich, Miss M.. 3 00
Akey, Mrs D H.. 3 00
Alger, Harry 9 00
Ames, L D 1 00
Ames, Mrs W A.. 3 00
Anderson, Mary... 3 00
Anderson, Mrs ... 2 00
Anderson, W W.. 3 00
Andrews, Mrs C A & Miss B Edwards 3 00
Angell, W S..... 6 00
Babcock, Mr & Mrs E C 6 00
Bogle, Mr and Mrs J. 10 00
Bailey, H M..... 3 00
Bailey, Eliz 21 00
Bailey, Mrs F C.. 5 00
Baker, H E..... 3 00
Baldwin, Mr & Mrs F H E.....12 00
Ball, Mrs 1 00
Ball, Fanny 50
Barker, Julia A... 3 00
Barker, Mrs L B.. 3 00
Barker, Susie M.. 3 00
Barr, Miss Mary.. 21 00
Bartling, Rachel E. 10 00
Bell, Mrs Lida.... 1 00
Benedict, M P.... 3 00
Benham, A B & wf 3 00
Benson, Mrs A... 3 00
Bert, D & Mary.. 2 00
Bice, Edw 6 00
Bickenbach, Mrs P 1 00
Bignall, Jos..... 3 00
Bingham, Mrs L F. 21 00
Blackford, Ard ...21 00
Blackmar, C P & wife 6 00
Blume, Mrs H W 1 50
Boggan, Lulu C... 3 00
Borts, Mrs M..... 6 00
Bower, Amand ... 3 00
Bowman, Alice F. 3 00
Bradley, Mrs A... 3 00
Bradner, Mrs Jane 6 00
Brandt, Mr & Mrs A D 2 00
Brayton, Abigail .. 3 00
Brinkerhoff, Mrs C A 10 00
Brinkley, Sterling. 1 00
Brookaway, Mr & Mrs J T..... 5 00
Brown, Emily 1 00
Brown, Mrs G. Sr 3 00
Brown, Mrs G C.. 3 00
Bull, Miss E..... 3 00
Bulmer, Anita L.. 6 00
Buntin, Mrs Zula. 3 00
Butler, Mrs A.... 3 00
Cain, C E..... 3 00
Callahan, Mrs M A 3 00
Case, Mrs A L.... 3 00
Chapin, Myra 3 00
Chapman, A M... 6 00
Chase, Mrs E C.. 1 00
Christensen, Mr & Mrs M 3 00
Christy, Annie ... 3 00
Church, Mrs J L.. 3 00
Clark, Mrs A G.. 6 00
Clarke, Mrs E B. 6 00
Clement, Viola P. 3 00
Conant, Mrs F H. 1 00
Conklin, Nick 1 00
Coon, Mrs S G....21 00
Copeland, Mr & Mrs P M 2 00
Couch, Mrs H A.. 12 00
Countryman, Miss Martha 1 00
Cowdrey, Irene A. 21 00
Cram, Mrs A A.... 1 00
Crane, Mrs A C...15 00
Crawford, F A.... 3 00
Croxall, Miss C... 3 00
Darling, Mrs J....50 00
Davis, Jas 1 25
Dean, Mrs D..... 1 02
Deidrich, F E..... 6 00
Dennis, Mrs A M.. 1 00
Detweiler, Mrs AM 3 00
Devereaux, Eugene 6 00
Dewey, Miss E... 3 00
Dietrick, Miss S.. 1 00
Dimon, Theo D...42 00
Docherty, Mrs C... 50
Draper, H O.....10 00
Eastman, Mrs W P 12 50
Eke, Charley 3 00
Elliott, Mrs F.... 1 00
Elliott, Leland ... 3 00
Emory, Mrs T G.. 3 00
Ensign, Mrs A.... 3 00
Evans, Mrs H..... 3 00
Fedler, Mrs M E.. 6 00
Ferguson, Mrs H J 1 00
Ferry, W A..... 3 00
Finch, Miss F..... 3 00
Finn, Miss Elsie.. 3 00
Fisher, Mrs John.. 3 00
Fisher, Mrs P C.. 2 00
Ford, Mrs O A.... 5 00
Fosner, Dr E A & wife 2 00
Foucar, Mrs L.... 6 00
Francis, J S.....10 00
Frazier, Mrs E E.. 3 00
Frick, Miss E H.. 2 00
Fuller, Wayne V.. 2 00
Gaines, Mrs Julia. 1 00
Gallup, M E..... 3 00
Gilman, Georgia.. 3 00
Gough, Mrs C B... 3 00
Grabs, Mrs J..... 2 00
Gray, Mrs 1 00
Gray, G 1 00
Green, Geo R..... 1 00
Grogg, Mrs G E.. 1 00
Grey, Mrs L..... 1 00
Griffin, S J..... 5 00
Haddon, Isabel ... 1 00
Hagaman, C A.... 1 02
Hagen, Mr & Mrs Dan 5 00
Hall, Louise N.... 1 00
Hall, Mrs M..... 1 00
Hanes, Elmer 2 00
Harmon, Carrie R. 3 02
Harris, H 3 00
Hart, E Frank.... 3 00
Hart, Mr & Mrs H T..... 3 00
Harton, Mrs D S.. 3 00
Hatfield, Alice.... 6 00
Hayes, L E..... 2 00
Hayward, Nina M 6 00
Hearne, Miss A... 3 00
Heilman, Mrs H... 3 00
Heiskell, Mrs F... 7 00
Helmer, Miss J A. 3 00
Henderson, Mrs W 1 00
Henry, Floyd 50
Herr, M Lizzie.... 3 00
Hill, Mrs E..... 1 00
Hill, Mrs F P..... 3 00
Hitchcock, Mrs E L 1 00
Holbrook, Maud.... 1 00
Holmes, Chas B...21 00
Hopkins, J 3 00
Hoover, A A & S A. 6 00
Horr, Mrs Lue F.. 6 00
Horton, Maude 1 50
Hoshe, Mrs Eliz.. 3 00
Houston, Vena M.. 6 00
Hubbard, Jennie R 3 00
Hubbell, Mrs S R. 6 00
Hughes, Alma 1 00
Hughes, Carrie K.. 3 00
Hulsman, Mr & Mrs 3 00
Hunt, Miss Edna.. 3 00
Jamison, Mrs Jas. 3 00
Jennings, Mrs G E. 3 00
Jones, Saml 3 00
Jones, Mrs W D .. 4 00
Joslin, L 2 00
Joy, Mrs A M..... 5 00
Kellogg, Edw 5 00
Kemp, Mrs Anna .. 1 00
Kempson, Carolyne. 3 00
Keyes, Lucy A 3 00
Kidwell, Mrs C H. 1 00
Kindermann, H ...15 00
Koerber, Henry ... 3 00
Lankton, F M.....21 00
Lansing, F C..... 3 00
Lasselle, Augusta. 3 00
Laughton, R D....25 00
Lautman, Mrs E G 6 00
Lawrence, Miss I and Miss A..... 6 00
Lawton, Mrs H.... 3 00
Lease, Mrs Eliza .. 1 00
Lee, Mrs J B..... 3 00
Leonard, Mrs L A.. 3 00
Leonard, Mrs L A.. 6 00
Leonard, T F..... 3 00
Lindsay, Wm 10 00
Line, Chas A..... 1 00
Little, Geo & F.... 3 00
Loesch, Charlotte.. 3 00
Loesch, Mrs Fanny 3 00
Loeb, Mrs L..... 3 00
Lowe, Mrs A E....13 50
Lunt, A F..... 10 00
Lyons, Wm 25 00
Macmillan, Mary E21 00
MacVaugh, M J..... 3 00
McClure, W L.....10 00
McConnell, Victoria 1 00
McCoy, Mrs M.....56 00
McCoy, Mrs R J.... 3 00
McGillivray, Nellie 2 00
McGown, Jos E.... 5 00
McIntosh, Mrs J M 3 00
McMeehan, Mrs R.21 00
Martin, A W..... 2 00
Martin, Mrs E J.. 1 00
Martin, Mrs L M.. 6 00
Madison, M C.... 2 00
Millan, Miss J 25
Miller, Mr & Mrs C T..... 3 00
Miller, Miss F.... 5 00
Miller, J J 3 00
Miller, Mrs J J.... 6 00
Miller, Mrs Julia 10 00
Morgan, Mrs C L.. 6 00
Morr, Mrs Mary .. 1 00
Morrison, Mrs C K 6 00
Mums, Miss Jennie 2 00
Myers, Mrs L S.... 5 00
Near, Mrs C A.... 6 00
Neer, Mrs H C.... 3 00
Neff, Mrs M 3 00
Newcomb, Mary 6 00
Newkirk, Mrs K.... 3 00
Nibbecker, Mrs E.. 10 00
Nichols, Mrs C.... 50
O Hair, Miss L.... 1 00
Osgood, Glen W.... 1 00
Osgood, W R..... 1 00
Osgood, Mrs W R.. 5 00
Owatt, H L & wf.... 6 00
Parmelee, Mrs F W 3 00
Peath, Mrs A E &
Mrs J H Fess W 6 00
Peebles, Mary E.... 6 00
Pendellegan, Mrs P Jr..... 50
Pond, Miss Clara .. 3 00
Pour, Mrs Frances 5 00
Pour, T D 2 00
Price, Mrs E E.... 3 00
Purdy, Mrs S C.... 3 00
Putnam & Mrs W 3 00
Randolph, Mrs J .. 2 00
Ramsey, Miss Mary & Mrs 6 00
Rankin, Mrs A 3 00
Read, Geo E..... 1 00
Reed, Miss J S.... 2 00
Reed, Julia A..... 6 00
Reimers, Mrs P H.. 3 00
Rhodes, C 2 00
Richards, Mrs W.. 2 00
Richard, Mary S.... 3 00
Robinson, Dr & Mrs 21 00
Ritzman, A S..... 3 00
Rittman, S R..... 5 00
Robinson, Mrs A.. 1 00
Robinson, Irma A.. 25
Rodman, Mrs R L.. 3 00
Roe, Mrs F E..... 3 00
Rogers, Mrs A N.... 6 00
Rogers, Mrs A 1 00
Rooy, F L..... 3 00
Root, W F..... 3 00
Ross, Mrs F E & 3 00
Rowland, Mary 6 00
Rupert, Mrs 2 00
Rupert, Rev H 1 00
Rupert, Mrs R.... 6 00
Sassaman, C Jr.... 6 00
Sawyer, H A N..... 3 00
Saxton, Caroline .. 3 00
Scott, Mrs G R.... 3 00
Schlegel, Henry ... 2 50
Schmucker, I B..... 50
Scott, Mrs W F.... 3 00
Selden, Mrs R E.... 6 00
Sellet, Master E P Jr..... 3 00
Sharp, Ida L..... 3 00
Sheldon, Evan M.... 3 00
Shipe, Mrs J C..... 3 00
Simrell, F E..... 1 00
Skinner, A H..... 1 00
Smith, Cynthia 1 00
Smith, Mrs H P.... 2 00
Smith, Lyle T..... 5 00
Smith, Mrs Thos.... 1 00
Smurr, L J..... 2 00
Snedeker, Maud E.... 1 00
Stearns, Mrs A..... 2 00
Stearns, Mrs M E.... 2 00
Stewart, Miss H.... 1 00
Stewart, Mrs Benj.... 3 00
Stryker, Mrs D H.... 6 00
Sullivan, Thos 3 00
Strong, Harriet 21 00
Strong, Mrs D C.... 6 00
Summers, J W..... 3 00
Sunderland, Mrs W.... 1 00
Sweetser, Almeda 3 00
Sweetser, Mrs M J.... 3 00
Tanner, Mrs A..... 2 00
Taylor, Mrs E M.... 6 00
Taylor, Miss L A.... 1 00
Tarr, Lydia 1 00
Thornton, Mrs M.... 1 00
Thurnell, I 2 00
Tibbetts, Mrs C.... 2 00
Tibbetts, Mrs 2 00
Tom, Mrs 50
Trapp, E F 3 00
Truax, Mrs D R.... 3 00
Tucker, Mrs C I.... 6 00
Turner, Mrs Jane 1 00
Turner, Mrs Jane R.... 3 00
Tuttle, Mrs A M.... 3 00
Underhill, Mrs A M.... 3 00
Van Arsdale, Mrs 1 00
Van Cleve, Mrs 1 00
Van Dyke, Mrs 1 00
Van Ness, Mrs 1 00
Van Nest, Mrs 1 00
Van Sant, Mrs 1 00
Van Wagenen, Mrs 1 00
Van Wyck, Mrs 1 00
Vanderbilt, Mrs 1 00
Vanderpool, Mrs 1 00
Vanderveer, Mrs 1 00
Vanderwerker, Mrs 1 00
Vanderwerker, Mrs 1 00
Vanderwerker

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, ASSOCIATE EDITOR — LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor — G. H. SANDISON, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscriptions.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter

The Dead Pope

NOT so very long ago, it was the fashion to use opprobrious epithets in speaking of the Pope, and to denounce him "in good set terms." Happily men have learned, in these later years, more clearly the spirit of Christ, and are practising that charity which thinketh no evil. No less stalwart is the opposition to the claims and pretensions of the Papacy; no less resolute is the attitude of resistance to its authority, but we have ceased to use vulgar abuse in speaking of the Pope. Nearly one-half of all the people on earth calling themselves Christians, recognize the Pope as the supreme authority in all matters of faith and doctrine and reverence him as the living representative of Christ in the world. How they can do so, is a mystery to Protestants, but the fact is there, and it ill-becomes one Christian to assail, or denounce, the faith and reverence of another. It is, therefore, an event of no little import when one who has worn the tiara for a quarter of a century, is laid in the grave.

Without discussing the question whether it is well for the world that any man should be able to exert so powerful an influence on the minds of so many people as did the Pope, we may well ask, now that his long career has closed, what the effect of that influence was. He occupied a position of enormous responsibility, how did he use his opportunities? It was a significant statement that he made during his last days, that he was not sure that he had always taken the right course, but he could honestly say that he had done the thing that at the time he believed to be right. It must have been a great satisfaction to him at the end of his life that he could make such an avowal.

It has been an eventful period that has passed since Leo XIII. was elected to the Papal chair. At its beginning, the Roman Catholic Church was in difficulties in Russia, in France, in Germany, and it seemed as if a conflict was impending in the United States. If Leo had been a man like his predecessor, we should have witnessed, the world over, a sharp antagonism between the civil and the spiritual allegiance of two hundred million persons. But he had a clearer view of the spirit of the times, and realized that no influence could survive which attempted to arrest that spirit. At the best, the existence of the Papacy had, to enlightened minds, the semblance of an anachronism. It was difficult for any man to believe that an aged priest, immured in a palace on the banks of the Tiber, could tell him with infallible authority, what he ought to believe, and how he ought to act. If that authoritative voice uttered obsolete doctrines and impracticable commands, the people would be in a dilemma, which the large majority would be likely to solve in a way that the Roman Catholic Church would deplore. Leo's problem, therefore, was to avoid forcing the dilemma on his followers.

The existence of that problem accounts for many of the apparent inconsistencies in his utterances. It was complicated by the fact that his predecessor had been declared infallible, so that Leo could not admit that Pius had been mistaken, or unwise, in the attitude he had assumed. The attitude of protest against the deprivation of the Papacy of the temporal power, had been so marked and emphatic, that Leo had no alternative to maintaining it. He considered himself a prisoner in the Vatican, and refused to hold friendly relations with the Italian government; but it may be doubted whether so clear-sighted a man really regarded the loss of the temporal power as a misfortune. The evidence on all hands must have proved to him that the spiritual headship of his church was far higher, when it was relieved of the reproach of civil misgovernment. That question apart, Leo set himself to the reconciliation of difficulties in other lands. He gave wise counsel, urged Roman Catholics everywhere to be loyal to the civil government under which they lived, and to show justice and consideration for the rights of their fellowmen. In this office of disinterested adviser, he was really greater and more influential than if he had been the ruler of an Italian principality. Even Protestants applauded the wisdom of his utterances. The long list of sympathetic messages from the rulers of all nations during his illness, proved that he had won the confidence and respect of the whole world.

He is dead, and now the cardinals must choose his successor from among themselves. It rests with them to decide whether he shall be a man who will revive antiquated antagonisms, and set all Europe by the ears with internal strife, or whether he shall be a man who, by sound common sense and tact, and a recognition of human progress, shall become a leader instead of an obstacle to the development of society.

A Double Harvest

OUR readers will rejoice in the glorious news from India, which we print in another part of this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD—news that fills the heart with the rare joy known only to those who are suddenly made aware that a labor of love, done in secret, has been blessed openly before the whole world.

It is truly a season of double harvest in India. In the fields, the seed sown is yielding bountifully. In the orphanages, where the good people of Christian America have been sowing their benefactions these last three years, the spiritual harvest is beyond all expectation. Even the disinterested reader, scanning these missionary letters, must feel that an Omnipotent hand has guided this work among the orphan waifs. Of the five thousand under our special care, almost all are coming into the Kingdom—the greater part already in. From these little orphan waifs, God is raising up an army of workers, thousands strong, for the conversion of heathen India. Hundreds of them are even now sufficiently trained to do effective service. In another year or two, the phalanx will be multiplied tenfold. As evangelists, Bible-women, zenana workers, teachers, native pastors, they will be able to do such service in the native field as has never been paralleled in the history of religious effort in any land. Truly, as one of the missionaries writes, "It is one of the mightiest and most far-reaching tasks to be found in the whole missionary history of the world."

We urge all our readers to examine these letters from India. They will be found the most inspiring correspondence they have perused in many a long day. And we cordially invite all who have been personally identified with the Orphan work, to continue their interest in it to the end. We shall be glad to welcome others, too, who may desire to have a share in the reaping of this remarkable spiritual harvest in India. Consecrated gifts for the Lord's work are the best possible investment, and bring their returns in a joy and peace which the world cannot give or take away.

A Dead Hand on the Throttle

DOES any one of us need to be reminded that in the very make of a man's soul, it is clear that unless there be exercised rigid self-control, he will go all to pieces? A firm, directing hand must be laid on the desires and instinctive impulses of his nature. The man who lets passion and inclination guide, is like a train with engine going full speed, throttle wide open, and no living being in the cab.

One day in the fall of '98, the papers reported a horrible thing on an eastern railroad. It happened between two cities, distant from each other twenty-three miles, and the run was made in twenty-six minutes. The locomotive was of the "Mother Hubbard" class, with the fireman's cab in the rear. The fireman was in his place at the furnace, and wondered at the awful speed of the train. It stopped nowhere, and did not slacken as it approached the city. He became alarmed and shouted to the engineer, but received no reply. Then he climbed out on the running board, made his way around to the engineer's side, kicked open the window, and entered the cab. There was the engineer, his hand grasping the throttle—but he was dead. An accidental blow, it was supposed, from a mail crane at some country station, had crushed his skull. The fireman loosened his stiffened fingers, reversed the machinery, applied the brakes, and averted a terrible disaster.

Alas, how many life-engines are rushing along the perilous crowded tracks of the world—tracks of ambition and gain and pleasure—with no better than a dead hand upon the throttle; no strong, clear, determined will applied to control and direct the mighty forces which, left to themselves, must drive on to destruction. Self-restraint, self-mastery—that is the only hope for any man. There is no Christian life possible, there is no noble life possible, on any other terms.

My Sister's Keeper

AM I my brother's keeper, is a question that appeals to young women with great force, but they think very little all the while of a question nearer home. Am I my sister's keeper?

Where is your sister and who is she? Perhaps she is a lonely, disheartened girl, toiling for a livelihood among strangers, watching you with feelings akin to envy as she sees you with parents, home and friends, the centre of attraction and love. Or, she may be a rich girl who has plenty of money and much leisure, and yet has few interests, and is leading a self-absorbed and narrow life, out of which you might persuade her into ways of quiet usefulness, if you only would understand and take the trouble. She may be a tempted girl, hard beset, and in great and pressing want of a helping hand. Perhaps she is at work in your kitchen, scrubbing, cooking, making fires, doing little and big things for the comfort of the household. She is no older than you. Yet you seldom try to brighten her lot. She is a girl straining every nerve to support herself through college, and having a fearfully hard struggle to make ends meet. While not seeking pecuniary aid, sympathy will be precious to her.

Look for your sister, and give her your smile of good cheer, your loving word, your timely presence now and then. Be sisterly, not distant, nor heedless, nor in any way indifferent to the young girl, wherever she is, whoever she is, who is in sore need of love to-day. Many a girl needs sympathy more than money.

When Families are Scattered

THE summer scattering incidental to city life has its much more mournful parallel in the family scattering, which belongs all the year round to remote neighborhoods in the country. As soon as the young people grow up, and particularly the young men, they leave the home roof, and go in search of employment in places where business offers good positions. No one complains of the inevitable. The old folk do not ask their sons to remain on the farm, knowing full well that a larger life beckons them beyond its cramping limitations; but they do desire to keep in touch with the absent. They may do this, if the children away from the old roof will write home regularly.

We often think with pity of the disappointment which comes cruelly cold and hard to bear, when the postman passes and no letter is left at the farmhouse door. The system of rural free delivery brings the letters daily—but no postman's bag has a magic to produce letters that have not been written. The girl who has been at the typewriter all day, or standing at the counter, is no doubt tired. Nevertheless, she can write a few loving lines home, on one evening kept for the purpose. The man, after a hard day's work, wants relaxation; but if only he will take the time, he will not miss the half hour spent in a love-letter to his mother. Nothing keeps up the bond of union when families are scattered, as does frequent letter-writing from one to another.

Among the Workers

—WALKER B. WILLIAMS, Ogilvie, Minn., writes: "Kindly pray for a revival at this city, which is godless and careless."

—SEVERAL WEEKS ago a band of eight Christian crusaders came to Mooresville, N. C., and began holding services. A number of conversions have taken place. On a recent Sunday evening 215 rose for special prayers, and thirty-nine made profession of faith.

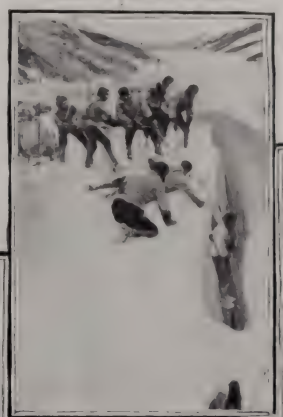
—LETTERS FROM Japan intimate that war between that country and Russia is not improbable, the immediate provocation being the forest concession on the Valu river, granted to Russia by Corea, and which Japan now declares is being used by Russia as a pretext for permanent occupation. A war between these two nations would probably be a protracted one, and might ultimately involve both France and Great Britain.

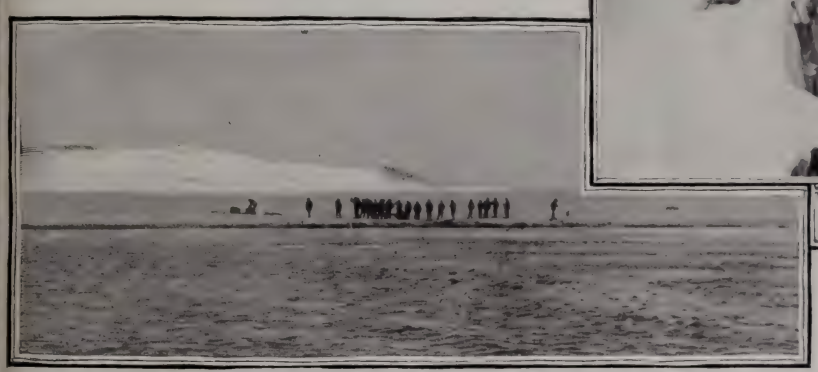
THE BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

Perils of the Antarctic

DETAILS of the famous expedition to the Antarctic, which have been communicated to the Illustrated London News by Lieut. Shackleton, one of the three officers who penetrated farthest south, show that the expedition was one of extraordinary peril. The Discovery, the vessel chosen for the purpose, left New Zealand for the unknown south on December 22, 1901. On January 20 the huge volcano, to which the name of Mount Erebus has been given, was sighted. A column of smoke, constantly rising from its crater, tells of the glowing fires within, and presents a weird spectacle in that region of eternal ice. A balloon was sent up at this point, in the hope that land might be seen somewhere to the southward that would be available for winter quarters. But there was no break in the field of ice, and it was, therefore, decided to remain at the foot of Mount Erebus. The ice gradually closed, and on March 24 the Discovery was frozen in. Preparations were at once made for the scientific observations which were to occupy the long night of 121 days. Early in September, which is the spring in those latitudes, sledge journeys were begun. These were extremely dangerous, owing to the blizzards that came without any warning, and made treacherous drifts. Even then the thermometer occasionally showed a record of 62 degrees below zero. On November 2 the summer was so far advanced that the great sledge journey southward, which had been so long in preparation, was commenced. It proceeded successfully for two weeks, but then soft snow was encountered and the dogs were unable to pull the sledge.

RESCUE FROM A CREVASSE





LAST SIGHT OF THE EXPLORERS LEFT BEHIND BY THE RELIEF SHIP

AT THE FOOT OF MOUNT EREBUS

They were attacked by some disease, from which eventually all died. The sledge was dragged some distance further by the men, but the work was hard and exhausting. On Dec. 30, the record stage of 82 degrees, 17 minutes was reached, the farthest distance south ever reached by man. The party then, realizing that there would be great danger in proceeding farther, they being then one hundred and seventy miles from the ship, turned about for the return journey. It was not until Feb. 3 that they were gladdened by the sight of the vessel, and were met by the companions from whom they had been separated for three months. As has already been told, the relief ship, the Morning, had arrived, bringing fresh supplies and news from home. She remained until March 2, when to avoid being frozen in, she sailed away, leaving the intrepid explorers to face the hardships of another Antarctic winter. Any of them might have returned on the Morning, but they preferred to remain in spite of the hardships that are inevitable, that they may share in the glory that will come from discovery and achievement. So is it with some Christians who continue a life of service on earth, content to wait until they are called to their reward.

Having a desire to depart and to be with Christ, which is far better; nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you. (Phil. 1: 23).

Mangled by a Pet

An owner of trained animals in New York is lying in a critical condition, as the result of an encounter with one of his own beasts. At the close of last season's exhibitions, he made arrangements for the board and care of his bears, monkeys and other animals, and appointed a trainer to visit them regularly and see that they did not forget their tricks. Then, he started on his annual trip to Europe, to purchase more animals. On his return, after an absence of nearly three months, he saw to the housing of the new animals, and then inspected those he had left here. Among the latter, was a large black Himalayan bear, six years old, which he regarded as the gem of his collection. He had owned the animal ever since it was a cub, and had made a pet of it, and trained it himself. One of his last acts before starting on his European trip, had been to punish the bear for some act of insubordination. The animal was sulky when his owner went into the cage on his return, but its owner thought he could soon renew friendship with it, and fondled it as usual. He turned his back on it for a moment, and instantly the bear reared on his hind feet and fell upon him. The man fell and the bear held him down, tearing him with its giant claws, and biting him. His cries soon brought assistance, and the bear was driven off; but not until the man had sustained injuries so severe that his life is in danger. He paid the penalty of the mistake too often made in other matters, as well as in dealing with animals, of supposing that a change of habits implies a change of nature. That mistake has cost many a man his life, and there are some who in dealing with sin on the same principle, have thereby lost their souls. It is not safe to go into temptation under the impression that long abstinence has made us immune.

If after they have escaped the pollution of the world, through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning (II. Peter 2: 20).

Discoveries in Egypt

News comes from the excavators under Prof. Flinders Petrie, who are working near Abydos, that an ivory statuette of Cheops the Pharaoh who built the great Pyramid, has been found. It shows a square face, heavy features, and a coarse, determined expression. So exquisite is the workmanship that it is a fair presumption of its being a good likeness. Prof. Petrie has uncovered several temples, which were built one above the ruins of an earlier one. The lowest temple has inscriptions which indicate that it was built five thousand years before our era. It contained a large vase of clay with a green glaze, on which, in a purple glaze, appears the name Menes—Aha in Egyptian. Thus nearly seven thousand years ago the Egyptians knew how to make finely glazed pottery. Another statuette shows a royal personage in old age wearing the crown of Upper Egypt, which shows a delicacy and truth of work, says the report, that equals anything of later time. "On his head is the crown of Upper Egypt; a thick, quilted robe is wrapped about his body. The head declines forward; the expression of the face is at once rather senile and distinctly crafty." Scientists are astonished to find how advanced the arts were in that early time. The specimens of polychrome glazing are especially remarkable because they prove that it was understood centuries or years before it had been supposed to exist. The Bible discovered, however, proves that with all their learning and their civilization, the people were ignorant of the true God. That knowledge came by revelation, yet we who enjoy the privilege that they did not have, too often fail to appreciate it.

Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip. (Heb. 2: 1).

An Adoption Claim

A remarkable suit which will be strenuously contested has been brought in the New York courts. It is sought to establish a claim on the entire estate of a millionaire who died recently. The millionaire, about fifteen years ago, married a widow who had one daughter by a former husband. He became tenderly attached to his stepdaughter, treated her in all respects as his own child, and took a deep interest in her education. Finally, it is alleged, he told her that if she would take his name, he would make her heiress to his whole property. She consented, and was afterwards regarded as the future owner. When he died, however, an old will was found which he had not cancelled, by which the property was divided among twenty-five persons. The step-daughter contends that he had intended to destroy the will, but had forgotten to do so, and that his promise to her, which was only verbal, but was made on conditions which she fulfilled, constitutes her sole heiress to the estate. There is small probability of her getting the estate, as the courts are always reluctant to set aside a document in favor of a verbal arrangement. Happily the Christian can never be disappointed in that way. The inheritance is assured to him if he has taken the name of Christ, and received the adoption of a son.

An inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you (I. Peter 1: 4).

BRIEF NOTES

Members of English Christian Endeavor Societies to the number of 11,052 became members of churches last year.

Mr. Robert J. Burdette, the famous humorist, has become pastor of a Baptist Church at Los Angeles, California.

The Church Missionary Society proposes to send out 50 more missionaries this year. Its income is now $2,600,000.

Recent statistics show that Egypt is the most densely populated country in the world, with an average of 292 persons to the square mile.

An expert physician, after a wide survey of opium habits, concludes that this country is most prevalent in districts where anti-opium agitation is at its height.

The number of Chinese converts baptized at the various stations of the China Inland Mission last year was 1,000, against at least 4,000 [illegible].

The oldest recorded minister of the Society of Friends in the world, Mrs. Phebe Ann Collins, who celebrated her one hundredth anniversary at her home in Lansdowne, Pa.

The Brotherhood of the Kingdom will hold its annual conference at Maplewood, near the Belmont from Wednesday, August 5 to Friday, August 7. All persons [illegible] Rev. Edgar Whitaker, 20 West 11th Street, New York.

Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall, who has resigned the presidency of Union Theological Seminary, New York, to accept the pastorate of Madison Square Presbyterian Church, will be further known as the preacher of the opening sermons of the coming [illegible]. Yet I must say that my admiration is [illegible] their own names and upon their own merits and heard him [illegible] with emotions of respect and admiration.

MODEST WORTH AND ENVIOUS PRIDE ✳ Saul Tries to Kill David

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR AUG. 16
I. SAMUEL 18: 5-16

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

GOLDEN TEXT -- PSALM 46: 1:
GOD IS OUR REFUGE AND STRENGTH, A VERY PRESENT HELP IN TROUBLE

SAUL made David one of the commanders in his army for his bravery in overcoming the giant Goliath. And a very youthful commander he was, not more than twenty years of age, but he had done a deed that no old and tried warrior in all Israel had dared to do. What wonder that his praises were sung in the streets and that the people danced for joy! It is said of the hero that he "behaved himself wisely." He was not elated by his advancement, nor by the adulation which was showered upon him. He probably did not under-estimate the deed he had done, for not only Goliath, but the whole army of the Philistines had been vanquished. He was saved from pride by his own heartfelt thankfulness to God for the victory. David laid his trophies at God's feet. The louder the chorus rang as the women danced and sang, the higher his soul mounted to praise God.

The one unfortunate strain in the singing of the women was the odious comparison, "Saul hath slain his thousands and David his ten thousands." Saul was indeed a great warrior, for almost at the beginning of his kingship an army of 330,000 warriors had assembled under his leadership, and he had led them forth to a great victory against the Ammonites (I. Sam., chap. 11.) It was that occasion King Saul had shown himself familiar with military tactics, for he divided his forces into three companies, and so great was the victory that two of the enemy were not left together. So great had been popular enthusiasm that it was remembered that some "sons of Belial" had dared at his coronation to express disloyalty, and they were now called for that they might be put to death. But King Saul gave command that it should not be done. Again and again had King Saul led the armies of Israel forth to victory, so that the nations round about began to fear him greatly. So much must be said for King Saul as a military hero in order to measure the praise given to David, "Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands." But Saul was not conqueror of himself. His heart was stung with envy at the praises of David. That was the evil spirit which came into his heart. God did not really send, but only permitted that evil spirit to dwell in Saul. (See Acts 16: 16-18; Mark 1: 23-26; II. Cor. 2: 17; Matt. 4: 1; II. Thess. 2: 10-12).

Saul was already a murderer in his heart (Matt. 27: 18), for he envied David from that day. He became gloomy, and it was suggested that music might cheer him, and so David was brought in to play on his harp. It was a most unfortunate plan, for the feelings of Saul were thereby harrowed instead of soothed, and he had the best possible opportunity to kill David by throwing his javelin at him, which he did on three different occasions. But David was alert and agile, and escaped being wounded "No one need fear whom God doth keep." The demon in Saul's heart urged him on to attempt the life of David in another way. He sent him again and again to battle, hoping he would thus be slain. But ever and anon David returned with trophies of victory, and his praises were sung again and again in the streets. He still behaved himself wisely in all his ways, for the Lord was with him, while Saul, because God had been driven from his heart, grew more and more jealous, but dared not dishonor David in a public way, so great was his popularity. Indeed, Saul seemed to honor David by proposing to have him for his son-in-law, on condition, however, that David should slay one hundred Philistines, by which Saul knew that David's life would be in jeopardy. David could go forward at the command of his king, and he accomplished twice as much as had been demanded, in that he slew two hundred Philistines. The enthusiasm of the people for David grew greater and greater, and the jealousy of Saul grew consequently deeper and deeper.

"THE EVIL SPIRIT CAME UPON SAUL, AND DAVID PLAYED AS AT OTHER TIMES"

Illustration and Application

In this lesson, side by side, are modest worth and envious pride. Let us study the two things here pictured for us to avoid, pride and envy; and the two things pictured for us to seek, humility, and communion with God.

I. PRIDE and ENVY. Saul envied David from that day. Pride and envy, which abounded in Saul, are parent and child, and so can hardly be separated. The word pride is sometimes used in a good sense, and in that usage is defined as "generous elation of heart, lofty self-respect." But self-respect itself is a better word, and pride, strictly speaking, is "inordinate self-esteem." That is impossible in a heart which does not exalt self above God and ones's neighbor. Pride is the vice of all small souls, for only rarely does self-respect pass over into undue self-esteem in the truly great. Bunyan was wrong when he said:

He that is down need fear no fall,
He that is low no pride.

The "low" are the very ones most liable to have pride.

The late Chief-Justice Marshall, the first biographer of Washington, was once in a market in Washington, when an insurance agent, with a waxed mustache, was pricing a turkey. "I'd buy it," he said, "but I've no way of carrying it home." "How much will you give?" asked the Chief-Justice. "Twenty-five cents," was the reply. "Give me an order to your wife, then, for the money," replied the Chief-Justice, whom the agent did not know. The man holding one of the highest positions in the United States carried home the turkey, and got the twenty-five cents from the agent's wife, who knew the Chief-Justice, and was horrified at the lesson her airy husband had received.

In social circles, one may often find "poverty on stilts," families that are really poor, struggling to keep pace in display with rich neighbors; the father making himself almost a beast of burden, so that his family may outshine, or at least equal, some social rival in extravagance. Pride begins its temptations in childhood with the first pants, the girl's first frock, and some people never get it knocked out of them, even to old age. To a man of eighty-two, even more than usually wrinkled with age, his grandchild said solemnly, "Grandpa, when I am as old as you, will I look as you do?" Grandpa beamed with pride as he answered, "O yes, Tommy, you may, if you take care of yourself all your life." Men are even tempted to be proud of their religion, as if even as Christians, they were "self-made men" and might worship their Creator. The Pharisee went up to the temple to bray, not to pray, and he is not the last one who has done it.

. . .

"A Harvard Professor has made the calculation that if men were really as big as they sometimes feel, there would be room in the United States for only two professors, three lawyers, two doctors, and a reporter on a Philadelphia paper. The rest of us would be crowded into the sea, and have to swim for it." A petty African prince who was visited in his cell by an English traveler, folded his arms with an air of imperial consequence as he sat upon the floor, and demanded of his guest, "What do you think of me in Europe?" A picture of human pride. How insignificant must earth's proudest and greatest men appear, as God and his angels look down upon them! Charles V., before he invaded France, ordered the court historian to obtain a large quantity of paper, to record the victories which he was going to obtain. But he lost his general and a large part of his army by disease, and returned baffled, defeated, and mortified.

. . .

This calls up some good advice on the prevention of pride. "Think as little as possible about any good in yourself; turn your eyes resolutely from any view of your acquirements, your influence, your plan, your success, your following—above all, speak as little as possible about yourself. The inordinateness of our self-love, makes speech about ourselves like the putting of a lighted torch to the dry wood, which has been laid in order for burning. Nothing but duty should open our lips upon this dangerous theme, except it be in humble confession of our sinfulness before God." Here it will be appropriate to repeat the story of a persecuted woman in an Oriental mission, to whom friends were speaking many words of sympathy. Presently she said, "We have no time to talk of ourselves—let us talk about Him."

We see the God's-eye view of pride at its worst in Herod, smitten with a deadly disease, while clad in his shining robes, "because he gave not God the glory." We ought to be thankful, rather than proud, whenever honorable opportunities come to us. "The green-eyed monster" Pride, a sin in itself, brings forth those twin sons, envy and jealousy. Jealousy is where two desire to win the personal love of one person. But envy is the displeasure of low natures at the goodness, or greatness, or popularity of others. The first instance of it is Cain, which also reminds us that as pride begets envy, envy begets murder. It has been said that "no one envies what he can equal." This is true in the intellectual sphere but not the moral. Cain might have equaled Abel in goodness if he would. He preferred to kill goodness rather than aspire to it. So in the second notable Bible illustration of envy, Joseph's brothers. They envied his favor with his father, but were not willing to be as pure and so become equally beloved. Saul is another case. If he, like David, had "walked humbly with God," he might have continued in favor with God and man. Here again envy brought forth murder. Earthly courts may use a different word when an assassin misses his mark, but God "takes the will for the deed."

. . .

There is a great deal of envy among otherwise good men, who cannot bear to hear the applause they covet going to others, who are not great enough for those great words, "in honor preferring one another," "rejoicing in the truth." It has been well said that whatever we try to do it is probable we shall find some one else who can do it better, and unless we conquer envy, and rejoice in others' successes, we shall indeed find that envy is "a hidden viper, gnawing a file to its own constant misery." Let us save ourselves by noting the folly as well as the wickedness of envy. There is a proverb that "the frogs seeing the horses shod, held up their feet also." Dr. C. S. Robinson, urging that those attacked by "envious tongues" should give them no heed and no answer, notes that poison stings are most harmful when there is undue heat in the victim's blood. He says: "Perhaps just the indifference of Paul had something to do with saving him, when his hand shook off the viper at Melita."

. . .

Not only pride, but even envy creeps into the church, as pictured in the elder brother of the prodigal (Luke 15). Christ's own spirit-photograph of the church leaders of that time, whose envy grew into the murder of the Son of God. And by envy in the church to-day, Christ is "crucified afresh and put to an open shame." Here is Dr. Duffield's picture of envy:

A glowworm sat in the grass;
As I passed through the wood I found it;
Bright as a diamond it shone,
With a halo of light around it.

A toad came up from the fen;
It was ugly in every feature;
Like a thief, it crept to the worm,
And spat on the shining creature.

"What have I done," said the worm,
"As I sat here in silence nightly?"
"Nothing," replied the toad;
"But why do you shine so brightly?"

. . .

II. HUMILITY AND COMMUNION WITH GOD. David behaved himself wisely and the Lord was with him. Let us first illustrate the humility that Saul should have shown by accepting David's greater successes as from God. A father of the Scottish church, Dr. Durham, was walking to the church in which he was to preach, along with a much admired young minister, who was to officiate in one adjoining. Multitudes were thronging into one, and only a few entering the other. "Brother," said he to his young friend, "you will have a crowded church to-day." "Truly," said the other, "they are greatly to blame who leave you and come to me." "Not so, dear brother," replied Dr. Durham, "for a minister can receive no such honor and success in his ministry, except it be given him from heaven. I rejoice that Christ is preached, and that his kingdom and interests are gaining ground, though my estimation in people's hearts should decrease; for I am content to be anything, so that Christ may be all in all." If Saul had so accepted David's greater popularity he would have been held in everlasting honor. His envy has sentenced him, in the estimation of every generation of Bible readers since his time, to perpetual shame.

As to David's humility, after his victory over Goliath, it is seen in his own song of praise (Psalm 8), supposed to have been written at this time—in any case representing his sentiments at this time: "O Jehovah, our Lord, how excellent is Thy Name in all the earth, who hath set Thy Glory above the heavens! Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings hast thou established strength, because of thine adversaries."

. . .

The Bible is full of such cases of humility. At another time, when David was yet older and greater, he said, "My soul is even as a weaned child." Solomon, entering on Kingship at nineteen, when pride would have been natural, said in his prayer to God for wisdom, "I am but a little child." The humility of the New Testament writers, mostly belonging to the world's highest twelve of Christ's appointment, is so constant that it is regarded as one of the surest proofs that a certain apostle wrote a certain book that he is spoken of in it with less honor than others of his associates, and with a franker exposure of his faults.

. . .

Walking with God. The secret of David's humility and his otherwise wise behavior is in the words, "The Lord was with him." The great God being ever near, he was in no danger of overestimating himself or of fearing the detractions of others. Not alone with kings does God walk in daily fellowship.

THE NARROW GATE

by REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON, D.D.

Author of "In His Steps."

CHAPTER III—Continued

THE man stared, and did not even move when Douglas got up and put another chair near the desk. George muttered "This ain't no reception;" but Douglas frowned and repeated his invitation.

"Sit down and join us. We'll be glad to have you."

The man slowly moistened his lips.

"I will, if you'll give me something to do to pay for it."

"All right. I don't know that I've got anything to do."

"Might shovel the snow off the sidewalk," George suggested, as he mopped the perspiration on his face with an inky sleeve.

"I'm a printer," said the man, briefly.

"You are!" Douglas looked at him closely. The man gave him a shrewd glance in return, and smiled slightly.

"I don't look it much, but I'll prove it." He stepped up to the case, and began setting type with great rapidity.

"Hadn't we better begin now, Mr. Douglas?" whispered the boy anxiously. "There won't be no show for us if that old guy comes in. These tramp printers is regular giraffs to eat."

"Keep still," said Douglas. There was something almost uncanny the way the man looked as he stood at the case. When his stickful was finished, he brought it to Douglas and said:

"Read it out loud if you want to."

"Douglas read slowly:

I've tramped it east, and I've tramped it west;
I've gone to worst from better and best;
I haven't a friend beneath the sun,
And I don't know where I can get me one;
I've lost my home, and I've lost my way,
And I don't care whether it's night or day;
I've lost my soul along with my hat,
But a man's a man for all of that.

"A tramp poet!" muttered George. "I pity the grub now."

Douglas did not know whether to laugh or to do something else. The type-setting was perfect. It had been done with a swiftness he had never seen in any office.

"Can you give me a job?" asked the man, and his look again traveled hurriedly towards the food.

"Yes," said Douglas.

The word was scarcely uttered before the stranger was seated, and eating.

"I say!" exclaimed George, "deal fair!"

"If you had been without anything to eat as long as I have you wouldn't be too particular about etiquette," said the man grimly.

"There's plenty for all of us," replied Douglas, looking severely at the boy. But he was fascinated with the stranger's looks, and even when his hunger was appeased and he sat back, because he could eat no more, he presented such a starved, disreputable appearance, that the others eyed him with something of the same astonishment they felt at his sudden entrance.

"Are you ready to begin work now?" Douglas asked, with a brief word of explanation concerning the need of getting out the paper before to-morrow morning.

"Now or never," answered the stranger.

"Your name?"

"You can call me 'Quits.' It ain't my name, but it's what I go by."

Douglas had no time to ask questions. The man was evidently familiar with the work in a newspaper office, and he had appeared at a time of need. Douglas gave him copy, and the man, without a word, went to work. His rapidity astonished even the boy.

"He's a regular machine. He looks like the devil's own picture, Mr. Douglas. Don't you think the thermometer's gone up since he came in?"

"He knows his business all right," Douglas muttered in astonishment. "We'll go to press on time now."

When morning dawned the Beacon was ready for mailing. Before noon the entire edition was ready for the mail delivery. Colby people received their papers just as it nothing had happened to disturb the regular routine of the office, and there was astonished chagrin in the ranks of the Mayor's following.

Edwards came in just as Douglas was preparing to close up and go over to his boarding-house for a nap.

"The Beacon is a hummer! The best we ever had. How you did it beats me. Colby is wild over it."

Douglas nodded at Quits.

"I've engaged his services indefinitely. I'm going to take him over to Mrs. Wycoff's now and get him dressed up a little. He's all right as a printer. I don't know him in any other capacity."

He introduced Mr. Edwards. That gentleman had never heard of him, but he greeted him cordially and congratulated Douglas.

"Those lunches pulled us through, tell Mrs. Edwards. We're tempted to get caught again."

"All right. You know where to go for your commissariat if you do."

Douglas took Quits to the boarding-house, and when he came out of the little room late in the afternoon, washed and shaved, and clothed in a cast-off suit of the late Mr. Wycoff, he was so changed that Douglas did not know him, and passed him without a word in the little hall.

"Hope you had a good nap," said Quits, respectfully.

Douglas stared. Then he recognized him.

"O yes. And you?"

"All right," Quits answered briefly.

He was a very silent person, was Quits, and during the next few days, during which Douglas discovered that he had secured a remarkable pressman for the Beacon, Quits was so taciturn that Douglas barely learned a few facts about him. Moreover, it was a very busy week for the Beacon, and Douglas was so occupied that he had little thought to give to anything but the paper.

Subscriptions were coming in encouragingly. But in a growing measure he began to feel the strength of the opposition. Two of the largest merchants refused to renew their advertisements. After praying over the matter, Douglas had finally decided to drop the patent medicine ads, or at least all of them that were evidently disreputable. Reckoning up the value of these discarded ads to the Beacon, he was astonished to find that unless he could make good their absence by local advertisements, he would have to print the paper at a loss with his present subscription list. It was another entrance through "The Narrow Gate," but once having decided, he did not hesitate. The new campaign sheet sent out by the machine boldly challenged the policy of the Beacon, and appealed to the voters to stand by the organization. It also appealed to all the selfish interests of the merchants to license the saloons in Colby, and put the finances of the town on a "business basis."

Thursday night Douglas came down to the office after supper to see that matters were in shape for going to press. Everything this week so far had been ideal. Quits and George had struck up a friendship that promised to be remarkable.

"That Coleman was a snail on a hearse by the side of Quits, Mr. Douglas. And he ain't all the time jabbing slugs at me, neither, like Coleman used to do. Nor talking me to death. Quits is a double leaded leader by the side of Coleman."

When Douglas went in, Quits was not there. George was busy getting the press ready.

"Where's Quits?" asked Douglas.

"I dunno. He ain't been here this evening."

"I'm going over to the church meeting to-night, George. Mr. Vernon is going to organize an independent voters club at the prayer meeting. I'll be back about half past nine."

"All right. You needn't come back. Quits and I can get her out."

"I'll be here at nine thirty," Douglas answered with a smile.

George strolled to the door a moment to look up the street and see if Quits was coming. He stood there a moment, and suddenly Douglas heard him exclaim:

"Did you know that Quits drank, Mr. Douglas?"

"No," Douglas replied, somewhat startled. "Does he?"

"Regular fish."

"I never saw him go near a saloon."

"He's going into one now."

"Where?" Douglas seized his hat and went to the door.

"There; at Jake's place." George pointed up the street to a figure just going into the saloon opposite the little hotel.

Without a word Douglas went out and up the street to the saloon. As he entered it there was a prayer in his heart that he might save this life from the curse that lay on it. Yet, will you tell us, Christian voter, how to save tempted souls if we pray, but do not act? If Douglas had foreseen all that was to befall him that eventful night, he would not have dared enter. As he went in only a few minutes behind his pressman, the night was deepening for them both.

CHAPTER IV.

WHEN Douglas pushed aside the swinging screen door of "Jake's Place" and went in, there were a dozen men in front of the bar. He looked hurriedly along the line, but Quits was not there.

Without hesitation he went right up to the bar and inquired of the bartender: "Have you seen the pressman of the Beacon office here this evening?"

"No, I haven't," the man answered instantly.

Douglas knew he was lying and his blood boiled. Back of all his intense hatred of the saloon and everything it stood for, was a never-dying memory of a ruined home and a tortured mother. Is it any wonder, O you cool-blooded voters who believe in "regulating" the liquor business, that the young editor of the Beacon was and is a "fanatic" on the subject of the extermination of Hell's best paying business on earth?

"I saw him come in here a few minutes ago. You say he has not been in here?" Douglas looked the barkeeper in the face, and the man turned angrily around and called out to Jake, the proprietor, who was at the other end of the bar.

"Say, Jake, has the Beacon's pressman been in here to-night?"

Jake came up to the end of the bar where Douglas stood. The men in the saloon turned from their places and stared in various degrees of interest at Douglas.

"Your pressman ain't in here," said Jake, a heavy-faced man, regarding Douglas insolently.

"I didn't ask if he was here now. I asked if he had been in here this evening."

"And what if he has? Is it any of your business?"

Douglas turned to the men who were ranged alongside of the bar.

"Have any of you men seen the pressman of the Beacon here this evening?"

"I saw him go out, never saw him come in," answered an old man, standing at the farther end of the bar. Douglas instantly walked over to where he stood. Jake and his barkeeper walked down to that end of the bar at the same time.

"When did he go out?" asked Douglas.

The man hesitated, but his eyes looked towards a door at the rear of the saloon, just outside the bar, leading into a back room.

Jake broke in: "It's none of your business where he went."

"Did he go out through there?" Douglas asked the man who had volunteered to give the information about the pressman.

The man hesitated and then nodded. Douglas stepped around the end of the bar, and was about to push open the door, but Jake went out through a door just behind the bar which opened into the back room, and opened the door leading into the saloon, and thereby confronted Douglas.

"Keep out of here! This is a private room!"

Douglas stopped and calmly said, "Is the pressman in there? If he is, I want to see him."

The saloon-keeper paused. Douglas heard a door open and shut.

"This is a private room. You can't come in here," the man said, still blocking up the doorway.

"Will you tell the pressman I want to see him?"

The man hesitated, then suddenly stepped back and said with a sneer, "Look in if you want to. He isn't here."

Douglas instantly went in, and not pausing in the room, which was empty, he went over to the outside door and threw it open. He looked up and down the alley, but it had grown dark rapidly and he could see nothing.

Without a word to the saloon-keeper he went through the saloon and out on the street. After a moment's indecision he went quickly back to the office.

George was there alone.

"Has Quits been here yet?"

"Hasn't been around."

Douglas waited a few moments and then made his decision.

"I'm going out to hunt him up. I don't know how long I'll be gone. But I'm going to find Quits if the Beacon never goes to press at all this week."

"If I only could set up copy, Mr. Douglas, I'd yell 'thirty' on the Beacon before midnight."

"I want you to stay right here, George, and if Quits turns up drunk before I get back, send me word if possible. I'm going to every saloon in town, beginning with the Wayside Inn, and coming down through Main street."

"All right, Mr. Douglas, I'll do any thing I can. But what will I do with him if he's primed?"

"Keep him here if possible. But I don't think he'll come back here if he has been the rounds."

Douglas began his search by going into the Wayside Inn, a notorious place, where for years a gambling annex had flourished. Colby, being the county seat of a rich farming section, furnished more material for saloons and gambling establishments than might at first sight have seemed possible. Douglas was simply appalled as he went into the saloons and gambling establishments that night, to note the swarms of young men, not only from the town, but from the country. In one place on the main street, not three blocks from the Methodist Church, he counted no less than thirty-five young men and boys, the oldest of whom was not more than twenty years of age.

TO BE CONTINUED

Copyright, 1903, by Charles M. Sheldon

A Convention a Mile High

A Recent Gathering of Christian Endeavorers at Denver

By JOHN F. COWAN, D.D.

IN physical altitude, the recent International Christian Endeavor Convention at Denver, was loftier than any previous one, but the intellectual and spiritual altitudes were even higher.

The attendance was between 8,000 and 10,000, just enough to fill comfortably Tent Endeavor, which was splendidly located adjacent to the beautiful city park, with its 320 acres of artistic landscape gardening, and grateful shade. The local attendance swelled the audience at night, to 15,000.

Tent Endeavor was the centre and citadel of a White City of Endeavor. Everything was under canvas—auditorium, information tent, press, rest, hospital, literature, and a host of refreshment tents, and booths for selling souvenirs and what-nots. It was a picturesque and inviting city, cool, clean, convenient. The suburbs of this Endeavor White City, were the sixty churches in which were the registering bureaus, information and rest rooms, and general headquarters of the various States, territories, provinces, and foreign lands.

These sixty church headquarters were open the five days of the Convention, from morning until bedtime, and were kept supplied with ice-water, toilet conveniences, stationery, etc., and attended by white-capped Endeavorers, to register, give information and act as guides or porters.

The opening meeting had the usual addresses of welcome, from Gov. Peabody, Dr. Coyle, Moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly, and Chairman Sweet, of the Denver Committee.

All the world responded: the North, South, East and West, Canada, England, India, Africa, Japan. It was an unconventional, cheery, homelike, family affair; humor bubbled, good-nature beamed on every face, and all the ice of strangeness to one-another was broken. It is better to picture phases of the Convention, than to attempt to make panoramas of the sessions seriatim.

The Denver Convention was like all other Christian Endeavor Conventions, in that it had Quiet Hour meetings, earlier than lazy people like to get up. It had schools of methods, conferences on every important religious work, evangelistic meetings on street, court-house square, and in car shops; inspirational addresses, missionary and temperance speeches, and Junior rallies. Let all that go with the saying.

Mr. Von Ogden Vogt, the successor of John Willis Baer, was inducted into his office in the presence of 10,000 of his 4,000,000 constituents. Dr. Clark introduced him. Dr. Tennis S. Hamlin, of Washington, made the installation prayer. William Shaw gave the right hand of fellowship. Mr. Vogt in his response, dedicated himself to the organization that, through its Junior work had helped him as a ten-year-old boy in Dakota, to know his Bible, and had set him to work, as a young man, in the Evangelistic Campaign of the World's Fair, Chicago. He hopes to help Christian Endeavorers to minister to the spiritual need of other young men, as it had ministered to his.

Two thousand four hundred new societies were organized in America last year as the result of the entension campaign. Indianna made the largest total gain—more than three hundred new societies. Ohio comes next. About twenty States, territories, and provinces gained more than ten per cent. To each of these was awarded a beautiful banner, made by Endeavorers in China, Japan, India, South Africa, Germany, France, or some foreign land.

Perhaps the most distinguished note of this Convention, was the announcement that this extension campaign would be continued for ten years. Indiana Endeavorers say that they have only got into good fighting trim.

Ex-Chaplain Steele, Ex-Chaplain Edmonson, and other strong men took part in the conference on Floating Work, and plans were set on foot to organize societies on all ships and in all ports. Prison Endeavor is to be unified and expanded. One of the twenty-five societies in State prisons reported a membership of eight hundred, an increase of one hundred per cent.

Every morning, from 8.30 to 9.30, eight schools of training were in operation, led by such skilled workers as Dr. James M. Gray, Harlan Beach, Rev. H. W. Pope, Dr. E. E. Chivers, Dr. J. F. Carson, F. H. Jacobs and other specialists.

One of the most electric sessions of the Convention was the patriotic meeting. Dr. Ira Landrith, of Nashville, told how possible it is to oust the saloon-keeper and gambler, even in Tennessee. A few years ago saloons snuggled up close to churches and schoolhouses, and refused to budge an inch anywhere. "Now there are but eleven counties in the State," he said, "that are not dry."

The statement that Joseph W. Folk of St. Louis, like the Tennessee leader in reform, was an Endeavorer, gratified the audience. There are other Endeavorers in training for similar work. Such examples are contagious.

Three other forward movements besides the ten-years' extension campaign characterized the Denver Convention:

1. The inauguration of the Clarence E. Eberman memorial fund, for extending Christian Endeavor in foreign lands. About $4,000 was subscribed at one meeting.

2. The initiation of the International Junior Superintendents' Union, for the extension of Junior work, and for the mutual interchange of ideas.

3. The petition for larger fellowship among young people, which pleads for liberty for all Protestant young people to enter the larger fellowship for which Christ's last prayer petitioned, unhampered by sectarian restrictions.

You probably read of the blowing down of Tent Endeavor. It was not nearly so sensational as some of the reports made it. There were no cries, no hysterics, no stampede. The curtains of the tent had been lifted to give us air. A sudden gust of wind lifted the roof of the tent bodily, tearing loose all the pins. The heavy poles began to careen but strong arms caught them, and gently guided them to the backs of the seats. The real danger was from the electric wires, but a telephone order quickly sent caused the current to be shut off. It was surprising that there was no panic, but God's protecting care was over us. In ten minutes after the accident the audience of 8,000 persons was singing "Praise God From Whom all Blessings Flow," and Dr. Clark was announcing that the concluding meetings would be transferred to the four central churches. These meetings were solemnized by the great deliverance of the afternoon, and were among the most tender and impressive of the whole Convention.

* * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

Christian Tact*

The Apostle's Example in His Own Life of the Best Way to Win Souls

TACT, it would appear, was as necessary in Apostolic times as it is in our own. When the great object of winning souls is made the chief object of life, a man learns to adapt himself to circumstances. The Apostle's admission of his changing attitude is not the sign of a vacillatory disposition, but an avowal of his readiness to use any means to accomplish his purpose. In arguing with a Jew, he would show that in Jesus the prophecies of the Old Testament were fulfilled; in preaching to the Greeks, he quoted from their own poets, and showed that the reproof he was uttering had been given before his time by the authorities whom they respected; in dealing with the Galatian barbarians, he cited neither the one authority nor the other, but told them that in Christianity they would find a working power which would elevate and purify their lives.

His example is of inestimable value in our time. There are so many men with crotchets, with theories which it is impossible to respect, yet men of conscience whom it would be triumph to win. To denounce their beliefs at the outset is only to arouse antagonism, and the wise course is to see how far it is possible to go with them, and induce them to accept higher truth. The story is told of a physician who was brought in contact with Christian Scientists, and succeeded in winning their confidence. When asked how he had induced one of them to submit to an operation, he said he had not opposed the patient's doctrines. "You cut your nails, do you not?" he asked, "Well, then, go farther and let me remove this diseased limb," and it was done. So if we will only look for it, there is in every man some quality which will afford vantage ground for a Christian appeal. Especially in dealing with Christian people who differ from us in their doctrines is this tact necessary. To find out in how many things we agree, and to dwell on those before proceeding to argue on points of difference would often avert that saddest of all spectacles, a quarrel between Christians. The charity that hopeth all things is the mother of tact.

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society and Baptist Young People's Union for August 16. I. Cor. 9: 19-23.

The Care of Blankets.

Never let blankets remain in service after they are soiled; dirt rots the fiber and invites moths. Because of the peculiar saw-tooth formation of wool hair it is necessary that a pure soap, made of the best materials, be used; a cheap soap, especially one which contains rosin, will cause the blanket to become hard by matting the fiber.

To Wash Blankets and Retain their Softness.

Dissolve shavings of Ivory Soap in boiling water, add cold water until nearly lukewarm. Immerse a blanket and knead with the hands; rinse in clean warm water in which also some Ivory Soap has been dissolved. Dry in a place that is neither very warm nor very cold.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO. 5% PER ANNUM

The Savings of a Thrifty Man Will Pay Him 5%

THE INSTITUTION PAYING 3½ PER CENT. cannot present better evidence of soundness or a cleaner record than this Company, operating for 10 years under New York Banking Dept. supervision. Now employing a

CAPITAL AND SURPLUS OF $1,100,000
ASSETS OF $1,600,000

We have never paid less than 5 per cent. Business free from speculative features. Funds are withdrawable at pleasure; earnings reckoned for every day we hold them. Write us.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO.,
1131 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

"REVERSIBLE" "Linene" Collars & Cuffs.

MANY ADVANTAGES.

Perfect in fit, never ragged or uncomfortable. Very convenient, stylish, economical. Made of fine cloth and exactly resemble linen goods. Turn down collars are reversible and give double service.

NO LAUNDRY WORK

When soiled, discard. Ten collars or five pairs of cuffs, 25c. By mail, 30c. Send 6c. in U. S. stamps for sample collar or pair of cuffs. Name size and style.

REVERSIBLE COLLAR CO., Dept. P, Boston

STUDY LAW At Home

Our way of teaching law by mail has prepared our students for practice in every State, for success in business and public life. The original school, established 13 years. Write for catalogue

SPRAGUE CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF LAW,
270 Majestic Bldg, Detroit, Mich.

HOME BIBLE STUDY BY MAIL

This Book, "Home Bible Study," FREE if you write and enroll at once. Course covers the whole Bible and leads to diploma and degree. You can take this course at home by mail. Terms easy. Best testimonials. For free catalog write

C. J. BURTON,
Pres. Iowa Chris. College, Oskaloosa, Iowa

DISTINCTIVELY a S. S. Book GEMS OF SONG 30c. postpaid.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

How a University Rose From its Ashes

THIS is the story, briefly told, of the re-birth of the University of Wooster. Consumed by fire, it has risen, Phœnix-like, from its ashes, a new and greater university. How this was accomplished through the faith and the indomitable energy of its faculty and students and the liberality of the generous friends of Christian education, is related by one of the college professors: The main building of the University of Wooster, located at Wooster, Ohio, and in use since 1870, was burned to the ground one morning, two years ago, causing a loss of $250,000, with only $60,000 insurance. The news of the calamity was wired to President Holden, who was absent from home, and he immediately set to work to obtain means with which to rebuild. Before the ashes of the ruins had cooled off, he had received a conditional pledge of $50,000 from Mr. L. H. Severance, of Cleveland, Ohio. Then he called on Mr. Andrew Carnegie, in New York, and received the munificent offer of $100,000 more, conditioned upon the raising of $40,000 in Wooster and Wayne County in addition to the insurance money, and $100,000 outside of Wayne County, within a fixed time. The donor's name was not to be made known unless the conditions were met.

THE WOOSTER UNIVERSITY BUILDINGS

The sum of $350,000 was considered a prize worth working for. All went at it with a will. A committee of fifteen was appointed to act for the city of Wooster. The Presbyterian Church of Ohio was importuned for help. Alumni and friends everywhere were solicited by mail, college classes visited neighboring towns, and gave concerts, and members of the faculty left their classrooms, to go forth, in the severe winter weather, to seek aid for the rebuilding of the institution. Help came from all directions, and from members of various churches, a handsome contribution being made even by the pastor of the Wooster Catholic Church. Recitations were held in temporary quarters, and only a few students failed to return at the opening of the second term.

In the due course of time, a mass meeting was held in the Wooster City Hall to hear the final report. The conditions had been fully met, and the names of the donors were announced amid thunders of applause. A jubilee meeting then followed, and a torchlight procession took place in the evening.

Mr. Severance added to his splendid gift the inspiration of his presence in Wooster, and the encouragement of his words in several addresses. Wooster thus enters upon a new era of educational usefulness.

Mr. H. C. Frick contributed a beautiful building for a library, which was occupied shortly afterward. He will make a $30,000 addition. A new Gothic chapel, costing $40,000, has received its $5,000 pipe-organ. Work on a Main Building, costing $100,000; on a building for Chemistry, and a building for Biology, each costing $50,000; on an Academy building costing $40,000, and one for a heating plant, costing $15,000, was begun as soon as possible, and they were rapidly pushed to completion.

The cost to the church for the instruction of each student is $98 per year, of which the student pays $60. Free tuition is granted to the sons and daughters of missionaries actively engaged on the foreign field. A considerable number have this privilege at Wooster. The Board of Foreign Missions has provided two comfortable and commodious homes for such as desire this privilege. These homes are owned and controlled by that Board. The Christian atmosphere of the college life at Wooster is of a very high order. One cause of this is to be found in the fact that God's Word is a required study in the curriculum of the college. Sixty-three per cent. of the students are taking voluntary Bible study in the Y. M. C. A. Ninety-seven per cent. of the students are professing Christians.

J. C. B.

* * * * * * * * * * * * * *

They Knew the Bowery Mission

Superintendent Hallimond, of the Bowery Mission, who is now in England, writes from Maidstone, Kent, as follows:

"On Tuesday evening I had a great honor conferred upon me. Our friend, Mr. Baker, with whom we stayed, is a very influential man, an ex-mayor and a magistrate. He had secured for me a special invitation to the King's Dinner, a dinner given by the Mayor in honor of the King's birthday. To my great consternation, I found I had been placed amongst distinguished visitors, and had to respond to the toast of the 'Archbishop of Canterbury and Ministers of Other Denominations.' They gave me a magnificent reception. I spoke only about ten minutes, but they cheered me so much when I finished that I was completely taken by surprise. They wanted me to go on speaking, but, of course, I declined. All the leading magnates were there, including Sir Francis Evans, Member of Parliament for the borough. So that the Bowery Mission is now well known in that part of the country."

It must be pleasing to our readers to know that in thus welcoming the Mission Superintendent abroad, those British friends showed their appreciation of the Bowery Mission and its saving work among the homeless men and boys. The old Bowery Mission has friends and converts in all parts of the globe.

Answered Prayers

Marie C., Casino, Minn. "Recently we were in fear of a great calamity overtaking us, but God in his mercy heard and answered prayer, and delivered us."

L., Virginia. "I was in deep trouble, and prayed to God, and he delivered me. I am still looking unto him for a special blessing that will affect my whole life, and I believe if I continue steadfastly in prayer, that in his own time and way, God will give me what I ask."

Constant Reader, Point Pleasant. I wish to acknowledge God's wondrous love and tenderness in answering prayer for a loved sister's recovery. Also for a dear one about to die, whose spiritual skies were clouded, and to whom God sent assurance.

H. A. T., Denver, Colo. "I was in great financial strain and embarrassment. I sought my Lord's help; he heard me and answered. Blessed be his name, for an infinite helper."

Letters concerning answers to prayer have also been received from Mrs. A. E. S., Morgan City, La.; M. M. B., The Oaks, S. C.; Reader, Baltimore; M. D., Chesterfield; Reader, Morristown, N. J.; W. H., Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Reader, Holyoke, Mass.; B. F., Lexington, Ky.

ARMSTRONG & McELVY, Pittsburgh
REYMER-BAUMAN, Pittsburgh
DAVIS-CHAMBERS, Pittsburgh
FAHNESTOCK, Pittsburgh
ANCHOR, Cincinnati
ECKSTEIN, Cincinnati
ATLANTIC, BRADLEY, BROOKLYN, JEWETT, PIONEER, UNION — New York.
SOUTHERN, SHIPMAN — Chicago.
COLLIER, MISSOURI, RED SEAL, SOUTHERN — St. Louis.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO, Philadelphia
MORLEY, Cleveland
SALEM, Salem, Mass
CORNELL, Buffalo
KENTUCKY, Louisville.

CONSIDERING the cost of labor, of applying it, and its great covering capacity, Pure White Lead is not only the cheapest Paint in the first cost, but because of its extreme durability is by far the cheapest in the end.

Furthermore, no scraping or burning will be required when repainting becomes necessary.

If interested in paint or painting, address,

National Lead Co., 100 William Street, New York.

Reduced Prices on Suits, $6.67 to $20.

EVERYTHING MADE TO ORDER

THIS is the last announcement of our Redmest Price Sale, so write today for catalogue and samples if you wish to take advantage of it. Suits and skirts made to order clothing ready-made at one-third to three-quarter prices. All of our styles and materials are suitable for Fall wear. Remember that your order must reach us this month if you wish to take advantage of our Redmest Prices.

Handsome Tailored Suits, $6.67, former price, $10.

$12 Suits reduced to $8.
$15 Suits reduced to $10.
$20 Suits reduced to $13.34.
$25 Suits reduced to $16.67.
$30 Suits reduced to $20.

Rainy-Day and Dressy Skirts in the newest models, $3.34, former price $5.

$6 Skirts reduced to $4.
$7.50 Skirts reduced to $5.
$10 Skirts reduced to $6.67.
$12 Skirts reduced to $8.

Reduced prices on Jackets, Traveling Dresses, etc.

Catalogue, Samples and Bargain List sent free by return mail. If the garment which we make for you does not prove satisfactory, send it back promptly and we will refund your money. Orders can be filled with the greatest promptness, very often in three days' time. Write today and don't fail to say you wish Summer Catalogue No. 63 and Redmest Price samples.

Our NEW FALL CATALOGUE, ready August 24, will be the handsomest fashion publication of its kind ever issued. It will illustrate stylish Suits from $8 to $40, Jackets from $7 to $30, Church and Visiting Costumes, Separate Skirts, etc. Every well-dressed woman should have one. Write now and we will mail you a copy FREE, together with a full line of new Fall samples as soon as ready. Be sure to say you wish the NEW FALL CATALOGUE No. 64 and samples.

NATIONAL CLOAK AND SUIT COMPANY
119 and 121 West 23d St., New York.

There's Money in the Right Kind of Hogs

Get a pair of the famous O. I. C.'s for breeders and you can raise hogs that pay.

O. I. C. HOGS

are in demand both for breeding stock and fattening for market. 39 years devoted to the perfection of this breed without the loss of a single hog through disease. We will ship a sample pair on time, giving full pedigree and allow agency to first applicant. Two O. I. C.'s weighed 2,806 lbs. Write to day.

L. B. SILVER CO.,
347 Hog Building, Cleveland, O.

CHAIRS FOR INVALIDS

TRICYCLES FOR CRIPPLES

Invalids enjoy the supreme comfort and restfulness of our Steel and Rubber Chairs. Simple, strong and thoroughly constructed. Easily adjusted, light running, noiseless. Our catalogue shows the most

Improved Models

in tricycles and chairs especially designed for the comfort and benefit of cripples and invalids however afflicted. Sent free on request. Address

THE WORTHINGTON MFG. CO., Dept. A, Elyria, O.
Successor to Fay Tricycle and Invalid Chair Co.

PRAYERS For Public Worship, Private Devotion and Personal Ministry.

By Arthur C. Morrow. A New and Practical Help to Spiritual Life. Invaluable to Christians everywhere. Gems set in garments of all Ages wishing to take part in prayer in public and Private Meetings, Special Occasions, Family Prayers, Prayers at Sick Bed, in Sunday Schools, and for the Prayers of Invalid Christians. A Complete Guide to Devotion. Send postpaid to any address. Fine cloth binding, gilt top and dark covers, $1.00. Royal Purple cloth, silver back and side stamps, silver edges, $1.50. Beautifully bound in leather, gold edges, $2.00.

M. E. Munson, Pub., 77 Bible House, New York

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

MAPLEWOOD
Near Cincinnati, Ohio.

A Sanitarium for the treatment of Drug and Alcoholic Addictions. Thousands of cases treated. Home treatment if desired. Address The Dr. J. L. Stephens Co., Dept. H 2, Lebanon, O.

A Growing Rock
THE PRUDENTIAL

ENORMOUS GAINS IN AMOUNT OF LIFE INSURANCE IN FORCE

THE PRUDENTIAL INSURANCE COMPANY OF AMERICA

JOHN F. DRYDEN, President

Write for Particulars of Policies. Dept. 70

HOME OFFICE: NEWARK, N. J.

OUR HOME MUSIC CLASS

Sight-Singing in 12 Lessons

Prepared Especially for The Christian Herald

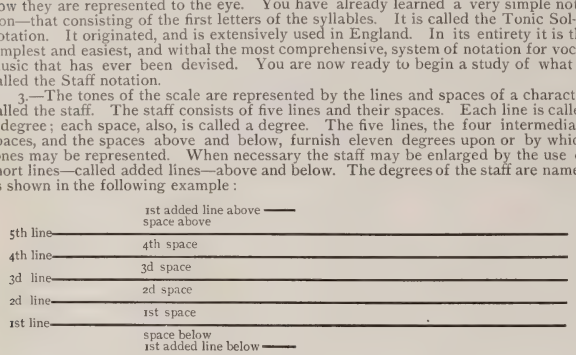
By B. C. UNSELD

LESSON III.

The Staff.—Having gained some knowledge of tones, your next step is to learn how they are represented to the eye. You have already learned a very simple notation—that consisting of the first letters of the syllables. It is called the Tonic Sol-fa notation. It originated, and is extensively used in England. In its entirety it is the simplest and easiest, and withal the most comprehensive, system of notation for vocal music that has ever been devised. You are now ready to begin a study of what is called the Staff notation.

3.—The tones of the scale are represented by the lines and spaces of a character called the staff. The staff consists of five lines and their spaces. Each line is called a degree; each space, also, is called a degree. The five lines, the four intermediate spaces, and the spaces above and below, furnish eleven degrees upon or by which tones may be represented. When necessary the staff may be enlarged by the use of short lines—called added lines—above and below. The degrees of the staff are named as shown in the following example:



4.—The degrees of the staff represent the tones of the scale. Any degree may be taken to represent Do, and the other tones will take places in relation to that. Thus, if Do is represented by the first line, Re will come on the first space, Mi on the second line, and so on, as shown in Ex. 13. If Do is represented by the first space, Re will be on the second line, Mi on the second space, and so on, as shown in Ex. 14.

Ex. 13.

Ex. 14.

I wish you to notice particularly the degrees that represent Do, Mi and So. Observe that with Do on a line, Mi and So are also on lines; with Do on a space, Mi and So are on spaces. From this fact we derive a helpful rule for reading: Do, Mi and So are similarly placed—all on lines or all on spaces. With Do on a line, Mi and So are on the next two lines above; with Do on a space, Mi and So are on the next two spaces above.

Observe, the degrees merely stand for or represent the tones, they do not indicate which tones are to be sung nor the order in which they are to occur; that is done by notes. Thus, in Ex. 15 the first note on the first line calls for Do, a note on the second line calls for Mi, another note coming on the first line calls for Do again, and so on.

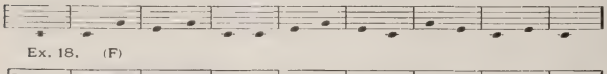
You are now ready to practice the exercises that follow. Before attempting to sing an exercise, it will be a help to some pupils to read the exercise through, merely naming the syllables in speaking voice. When this can be done fluently it should be sung to the syllables, and when that can be done easily, it should be sung to the syllable la.

The square character at the beginning is used (temporarily) to mark the degree that represent Do. The capital letter in the ( ) tells you what tone on the instrument to take for Do. The lines across the staff in these exercises are used only to help the eye to keep the place in reading.

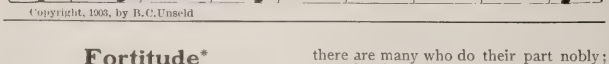
Ex. 15. (E)

Ex. 16. (G)

Ex. 17. (C)



Ex. 18. (F)



Copyright, 1903, by B. C. Unseld

Fortitude*

Men Who Can Endure Hardship Needed in the Christian Church at all Times

ONE of the severest tests of a soldier's mettle, is that of endurance. Many a soldier who is bold and undaunted in a charge, is dispirited if he has simply to stand still under fire. At the battle of Waterloo, Napoleon was amazed at the steadiness of the British hollow squares, against which his cavalry charged in vain. In civil life the quality of endurance, or fortitude, is also rare. At an election or in a legal contest when there is excitement and conflict, there are many who do their part nobly; yet who fret and waver when they are merely required to go quietly about their duty in spite of sneers, ridicule, or obloquy. It does not seem much for a Sunday School teacher to be at his post without fail, whatever the weather, however few the pupils may be, or however severely they may try his patience and temper. Yet he is displaying the finest quality of human nature—the staying quality which cannot be driven from the post of duty. There are families in some parts of our land who are similarly heroic. In some settlements there is but one Christian family, surrounded by families who make Sunday a day of pleasure, and whose social amusements are such as to shock the followers of Christ. Little is known of such Christian families, but we may be sure God sees them, and in the last great day of account, they will be honored by his commendation.

The Apostle had the right to urge this quality of fortitude on his young disciple. His own life had been a conspicuous example of it. Imprisoned, beaten, stoned, vilified, deserted by friends, traduced even in the churches he had founded, disparaged by men who should have been his warmest supporters, he kept right on, unmoved by all that he had to suffer. How much easier to rest! How much safer to have remained with the one church in which he was loved and honored! Yet his own ease and comfort were never considered by him. "None of these things move me," he said and he was steadfast to the end.

*Topic of the Epworth League for Aug. 16. II. Timothy 2: 3-4.

The New York Gospel Tent

Remarkable success is attending the revival movement in the Gospel tent, Evangel, on Fifty-sixth street, New York, under the direction of Rev. G. W. McPherson. The Metropolis is feeling the power of this work, in many parts. Three open-air services are conducted daily, in connection with the tent services, and evangelists are engaged to preach at all services. Not in years has the attendance at the tent services been so large. Orchestra music once a week, and the best singing talent are striking features of the services. The impartial testimony of the people who live in the neighborhood of the tent is that great good is being done in the revival centering in the big tent.

Her Forefathers Were Patriots

I wish to thank you many times for the souvenir that we received from you last week. The Declaration of Independence we shall have framed. My great-grandmother was the daughter of Stephen Hopkins, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and my grandmother was a Lee. My mother had an uncle, Richard Lee, named for the same Richard Henry Lee, of whom they were descendants. I am truly very grateful to you for the Story of the Declaration of Independence and History of our Flag. Your paper, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, is a welcome visitor to me. May God prosper you in your good work.

MRS. CULLEN S. RICHARDSON.

Middletown Springs, Vt.

MELLIN'S FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS
TRADE MARK
FOOD

Fretful babies become calm and peaceful babies when fed on Mellin's Food. Mellin's Food nourishes.

A sample of Mellin's Food costs you nothing but the asking. Will you not then ask for it for your baby's sake?

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

LABLACHE FACE POWDER

BURNING, BLISTERING sunshine of August days is trying to the complexion unless fortified by the delightful

LABLACHE

Face Powder, that exquisite toilet luxury which has been a necessity to beautiful women for over thirty years, and which is so refreshing and cooling to the skin. It freshens, clears and softens the skin, preserves a fine complexion, restores a faded one. Flesh, White, Pink, Cream Tints. 50c. a box. Druggists or by mail. Beware of dangerous substitutes.

BEN LEVY & CO. French Perfumers, 125 Kingston St. Boston

CORNS taken out by the roots, without pain or risk or trouble. No knife, no poison. Just A-CORN SALVE—15 cts. at your dealer's or by mail.

Giant Chemical Co., Philadelphia

NEW YORK UNIVERSITY LAW SCHOOL — Sixty-ninth year opens Oct. 1, 1903. Day Classes with sessions from 3.30 to 6 P. M. Evening Classes, sessions 8 to 10 P. M. Graduate classes lead to LL.M. and J.D. Tuition $100. For circulars address L. J. TOMPKINS, Registrar, WASHINGTON SQ., NEW YORK.

A Pennsylvania boy earned $45.00 in a month selling

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

He was delighted with his success.

AS SOON as you have sold a total of 250 copies of THE SATURDAY EVENING POST we will send to you, entirely without charge, a fine stem-winding and stem-setting watch. The watch is IN ADDITION to all other prizes offered and in no way interferes with them. In working for a watch you will at the same time be increasing your chances for the cash prizes.

Making Money After School Hours

FIVE thousand boys are making money in spare time by selling THE SATURDAY EVENING POST to their neighbors and friends. Some of them are making $10.00 to $15.00 a week. We will furnish you with Ten Copies the first week Free of Charge, to be sold at Five Cents a Copy; you can then send us the wholesale price for as many as you find you can sell the next week.

$225 in Extra Prizes will be distributed next month among boys who sell Five or more copies weekly.

Send for booklet, showing photographs and describing methods of some of our most successful boy agents.

The Curtis Publishing Company
403 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

A MASTER PASSION

ENVY TRANSFORMING A FRIEND TO A MURDERER

By Mrs. M. Baxter

TRUE children of God can stand to each other in closer and more abiding union than can be possible in those who do not possess the same spirit, and do not share the same life from above. It was just when Saul, who had loved David greatly (I. Sam. 16:21) had nevertheless quite forgotten him, that a tie, which was never to be dissolved, began to be formed between David and Jonathan, who was in the position of crown prince. Saul's love went just as far as his purpose was served; this is human love. Jonathan's was of another kind; it was like the love which the Lord Jesus has to us, and like the love which he creates within us wherewith we may love him. "The soul of Jonathan was knit with the soul of David, and Jonathan loved him as his own soul." The life purpose of the two was to serve God, and thus they could be of one mind. And "Jonathan and David made a covenant, because he loved him as his own soul."

It must have been that Jonathan knew of the Lord's choice of David to be king; and in heart, and by faith in God, he abdicated his rights, stripped himself of the robe which was upon him, and gave it to David, and his apparel, even to his sword and his bow, and to his girdle. How like this is the deep love of Him who emptied himself, taking the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men, and being found in fashion as a man, He humbled himself, becoming obedient unto death, yea, the death of the cross" (Phil. 2:7, 8, R.V.)! And it is this love to which the Spirit of God is conforming us when he teaches us by Paul's example to count all things but loss for Christ, and by his precepts to live no longer unto ourselves, but unto Him who died for us, and rose again. Our Lord renounced his rights for us; we have the inestimable privilege of renouncing our supposed rights for Him. This is love; mutual self-sacrifice.

From this time David lived at court, but very soon such a life became impossible, and God had another school, the school of affliction and persecution, for the man who was after his own heart. The singing women who celebrated the recent victory over the Philistines sang, "Saul hath slain his thousands and David his ten thousands." A bitter spirit of jealousy tempted Saul, and he yielded to the temptation. "They have ascribed unto David ten thousands," he said, "and to me they have ascribed but thousands, and what can he have more but the kingdom?" Is it any wonder that on the morrow an evil spirit from God came mightily upon Saul; another degree of possession than in chap. 16:14; see Matt. 12:43-45? Wherever wilful sin is yielded to, there the door is open to the enemy; there is unspeakable danger in trifling with sin. Saul prophesied in the midst of the house, but under an inspiration from beneath, constrained by the demon which used him as a tool. "David played with his hand"; but things had gone too far now, the evil spirit yielded neither to music nor to the presence of God with David, and he led on Saul from jealousy to murder.

It was the old story of Cain; jealousy indulged ripened into murder. And now began a succession of attempts upon David's life by the man whose position as king of God's covenant people, called for faithfulness to God's commandments, which should have been the example and encouragement to obedience of all his subjects. In the first place, Saul, while David was playing upon the harp to soothe him, cast a javelin at him, and David twice escaped this murderous attempt of the king upon his life. How significant it is that nevertheless Saul was afraid of David, not David of Saul! And Saul's fear of David arose from the fact that the Lord was with David! How the breach was widening between Saul and God! How awful is the state of a man with whom God has had close dealings, but who has never wholly surrendered himself to God! So Saul, who had desired David to stay at court, now found him a post in the army, and God was with him, so that he commanded the love of all the people by his wisdom and righteousness, while their respect for Saul was on the decline.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

For the Little Ones who are Passed By

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 650

Sister Dorcas suddenly thought of a five-dollar gold piece that some one had given her a few days before, with the direction: Use it to bring brightness into some shadowed life. Surely this might go to Mark. The shadows were surely falling heavily over his little life, and the five dollars would keep him at the Home two weeks. Other help might come then, and on this slender foundation the suffering child was admitted to the Home.

For weeks, Mark's cough grew worse. Even the rich milk from the Jersey cows, and the careful attention of the nurses did not help him at first. The two weeks passed, but he stayed on—what woman's heart could send him back to certain death? Money came in little sums as the child's story was told, and he stayed on, a month, a year. The crisis passed, and now a visitor at the Home may see a bright-eyed boy, with skin as brown as a berry in the sun and wind, caring for the chickens, making his little garden, happy as the day is long. It is Mark, still at the Invalid Children's Home. He is not well yet, but a little while longer will complete his cure.

"What are you going to do, Mark, when you grow up?"

The question has been asked him several times, at first in sport, then to catch a glimpse of the thoughts in his mind. The first time, soon after he reached the Home, he replied: "I ain't goin' to do anything. The doctors say I'm goin' to die." The next answer came a few months later: "Maybe I'll be a minister, or a doctor—no, I think I'll just stay here, and work in the garden, so more boys can come." The last time the question was asked, a few days ago, Mark replied—his ideas have been enlarging rapidly—"I ain't never goin' back to the city; No, never! I'm goin' to hire out to some farmer just as soon as I get so I can work, and I'm goin' to save my money, and buy a little piece of land around here, and I'm goin' to build a little house on it, and live there always." And his brown face lighted up with pleased anticipation.

This Home for Invalid Children is situated on a beautiful hill in Dutchess County, ninety miles above New York City. It is almost the only institution of the kind in the world. The Fresh-Air movement takes well children to the country, the hospitals and homes for crippled children bring help and light to the very sick child, but what is being done for children like Mark? Or like little Helen, now in the Home, who is not sick enough to go to a hospital, but who from neglect, abuse, and starvation, is so weak, that, though she is nine years old, she falls down in attempting to step from the bare floor to a rug. Is it not time that the heart and help of the Lord's people should be turned toward these little suffering "passed-by" children? We have found them languishing in rooms so dark that there is but little difference between day and night. We have found them with scars on their tender bodies, inflicted by parents, sometimes by the mother—the mark of human teeth! The deep scar of a burn from a red-hot poker!

The Home for Invalid Children will accommodate fifty, and we shall have this number as soon as support can be assured. We have usually an average of about twenty-five children in the Home. There is no endowment for the Home as yet, so we can help only as friends help through us. The Home is managed with the most rigid economy, but there are many expenses—food, fuel, clothes—just the simplest and plainest. We are not anxious, for we know that God will incline the hearts of his children to supply our need.

It costs only ten dollars a month to keep a child in this Home. It nearly breaks our hearts that we have to refuse very many little ones, for refusal means often, that the child will droop and die. What more beautiful way to invest a little money, than in this work? What sweeter way to keep fresh the memory of some other dear child, gone from your home to the heavenly land?

Pray for this beautiful work, and if the Lord incline your heart to write us, either sending help or desiring more information, direct to Deaconess-in-Charge, Invalid Children's Home, Verbank, N. Y. L. R. M.

"Desirable for Libraries"

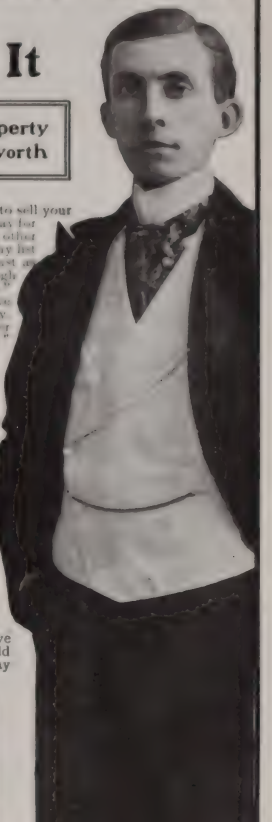
The Hall of Fame is truly a wonderful book. It is at once interesting and instructive, and makes a desirable addition for any library. The "Art Gallery" is beautiful. Each one of the pictures is a gem, and taken collectively they surpass anything of the kind I have ever seen. Elvora Conklin.

If You Want Cash

For Your Real Estate

I Can Get It

No matter where your property is located or what it is worth



IF I did not have the ability and facilities to sell your property, I certainly could not afford to pay for this advertisement. I has "ad." like all my other "ads.") is practically sure to place on my list a number of new properties, and I am just as sure to sell these properties and make enough money in commissions to pay for the cost of the "ad" and make a good profit besides. That is why I have the largest real estate business in the world to-day.

Why not put your property among the number that will be listed and sold as the result of this "ad."?

I will not only be able to sell it—sometime—but will be able to sell it quickly. I am a specialist in quick sales. I have the most complete and up-to-date equipment in the world. I have branch offices throughout the country, and a field force of 2,500 men to find buyers.

I do not make any money through the various side lines carried by the ordinary real estate agent. I MUST SELL real estate, and lots of it, or go out of business. I can assure you I am not going out of business. On the contrary, I expect to sell twice as many properties during 1903 as I did during 1902, but it will first be necessary for me to "list" more properties. I want to list YOURS and SELL it. It doesn't matter whether you have a farm, a home without any land, or a business; it doesn't matter what it is worth or where it is located. If you will send me a description of your property, including your lowest cash price, I will tell you how and why I can quickly convert it into cash, and will give you my complete plan (free) and terms for handling it. The information I will give you will be of great value to you even if you should decide not to sell. You had better write to-day before you forget it.

If you want to buy any kind of a Farm, Home, or Business, in any part of the country, tell me your requirements. I will guarantee to fill them promptly and satisfactorily. :: :: :: ::

W. M. OSTRANDER,

Suite 1417, North American Building, Philadelphia.

Even Better than Announced

IN our issues of July 8th and 22d, respectively, we announced that The Twentieth Century World-Wide Encyclopedia contained about eight thousand pages. In that we were mistaken. We are now informed that the 12 large volumes constituting this superb work contain, counting maps and inserts, about 9,500 pages. The sets not yet spoken for, are still offered at the following exceptionally low figures:

$13 if Paid by Cash accompanying Order.
$14 if Paid $2 Down and $2 a Month for Six Months.
$15 if Paid $1 Down and $1 a Month for 14 Months.

Everything Large and Clear

Remember that these are large volumes, that they are twelve in number, that they contain over 9,000 large pages, that the type used is large and clear, that the margins are wide, that they are beautifully and artistically bound, that they are safely and securely boxed, that they are put Free on board cars, and that the Purchaser Pays the Freight Charges.

The Greatest Opportunity Ever Offered

The set requires shelf-room thirty-three inches long, ten and a-half inches high and weighs over forty pounds. This is your greatest opportunity. Embrace it to-day, for to-morrow may be too late. MONEY REFUNDED IF NOT ENTIRELY SATISFIED.

The Christian Herald Book Dept.

BIBLE HOUSE NEW YORK CITY

Send full shipping directions with order, and be sure to give your freight station

CHEAP RATES California, Washington, Oregon, Colorado. We secure reduced rates at intermediate points on account of colonist excursions to the above States. Write for rates. Map of California, FREE. TRANS-CONTINENTAL FREIGHT CO., N. 225 Dearborn St., Chicago

Are You Deaf?

We have 25 KINDS OF INSTRUMENTS TO ASSIST HEARING. Sent on approval. Write for catalogue. HEAR, WILLIS & CO., 124 South 11th Street, Philadelphia

When Hamlet Exclaimed "Aye, there's the rub!" could he have referred to SAPOLIO

The Baby Thrives on HORLICK'S MALTED MILK

because it is pure, rich milk from our own dairies, with the extract of malted grain, already prepared and reduced to powder form by our own special process—nutritious, easily digested, containing everything needed for the upbuilding of the child. Its use prevents the summer troubles incident to impure milk and improper feeding. Thousands of healthy children attest its value. Keeps in all climates. Convenient to carry and prepare when traveling. No cooking or addition of milk required. Ask your physician about it.

Very sustaining and strengthening for nursing mothers—a delicious invigorating food-drink for EVERYBODY, ready in a moment by stirring in water.

Used and sold everywhere—at all druggists.

SAMPLE If you are not using it, send for a trial package, charges prepaid FREE

Horlick's Food Co., Racine, Wis., U. S. A.

24 Farringdon Road, London, Eng. 25 St. Peter St., Montreal Can

"Standard of Highest Merit"

FISCHER PIANOS.

THE NEW SCALE Fischer yields a wonderfully pure quality of Tone, combined with great power and durability; it stamps the Fischer Piano with an individuality that no other Piano possesses.

63 Years Established

Over 110,000 Sold

BY OUR NEW METHOD of Easy Payments, every home is at once enabled to possess and enjoy a High Grade Piano. Pianos delivered to all parts of the United States. Write for catalogue, terms and all particulars.

J. & C. FISCHER

164 Fifth Ave. New York, N. Y.

ZOBO

CORNETTO

The Musical Wonder

Solid metal (brass finish) Sample sent prepaid for 25c.

You Can Play it on Sight Without Being Taught

Entertains Everybody Everywhere

Free Zobo Entertainments for Home, Church and Sunday School sent on receipt of name and address.

Strauss Mfg. Co., 138 W. 14th St., Dept. 19, New York

PRICES REDUCED FOR 60 DAYS.

$1.00 Vapor Bath Cabinet $2.25 each
$5.00 Quaker " " 3.50 each
$10.00 " " " 6.10 each
$1.00 Face & Head Steam. Attch. 65c

Quality best. Guaranteed. $2. Book Free with all "Quakers." Write for our New Catalogue, special 60-Day offer. Don't miss it. Your last chance. New plan, new prices to agents, salesmen, managers. Wonderful sellers. Hustlers getting rich. Plenty territory. World Mfg Co., 675 World Bldg., Cincinnati. O.

LOOKING FOR SAFE INVESTMENTS

Will remind you of the WILLIAM R. COMPTON 5 per cent. Mortgages. Recommended by financiers of national reputation. Book free. Address, No. 5 WARDELL BUILDING, MACON, MO.

STARK TREES best by Test—78 Years

LARGEST Nursery. FRUIT BOOK free. We PAY CASH WANT MORE SALESMEN Weekly STARK BRO'S, Louisiana, Mo.; Dansville, N. Y.; Etc

Agent's Outfit Free.—Rim Strainer, fits any pan. Agents make 3 to 5 dollars per day. Large catalogue new goods free. RICHARDSON MFG. CO., Dept. 6, BATH, N.Y

The Great SPREAD For Daily Bread

Karo

CORN SYRUP

Spinal Curvature Corrected in Your Own Home

We offer a certain relief to all who suffer from this terrible affliction. Throw away the cumbersome and expensive leather and plaster Paris jackets and try our Scientific Spinal Appliance.

It does not encase the body like a vise, but allows perfect freedom of movement. It weighs ounces where others weigh pounds. It is so per cent cheaper than the old methods and 100 per cent better. It conforms to the shape of the body so that no one would notice it. It can be worn by the smallest child or the oldest adult with perfect ease and comfort. It will give permanent relief in any case of spinal curvature. They are not made up in large quantities, but each one is made to measure, to meet the individual case, and a perfect fit is guaranteed. If you or any of your friends suffer from any form of Spinal Trouble, write us at once and we will give you full particulars as to how your curvature may be corrected, without inconvenience or discomfort, and Without Leaving Your Own Home. Address,

PHILO BURT MFG. CO., 30 Eighth Street, JAMESTOWN, N.Y.

A Failing Memory

Is the First Evidence of Mental Decay

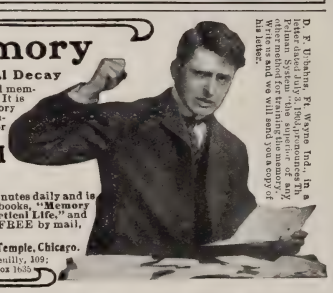
No matter what your position in life may be, a good memory cannot fail to be of inestimable value to you. It is absolutely necessary to success. The poorest memory may be developed and strengthened by proper training, just as the muscles are developed by a proper course of physical exercise.

THE PELMAN SYSTEM of Memory Training

is taught in six languages. Requires only a few minutes daily and is so simple a child can master it. Mr. Pelman's books, "Memory Training: Its Laws and their Application to Practical Life," and "The Natural Way to Learn a Language," sent FREE by mail, postpaid. Write right now—before you forget it.

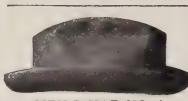
The Pelman School of Memory Training, 1670 Masonic Temple, Chicago.

LONDON, 4 Bloomsbury St., W.C.; PARIS, Avenue de Neuilly, 109; MUNICH, Mozarstrasse, 9; MELBOURNE, G.P.O, Box 1635



D. F. Ushaine, Ft. Wayne Ind., in a letter to the Pelman School, says: "I have studied other methods for training the memory, but yours is the superior of any." Write him and we will send you a copy of his letter.

A 50-Cent Hat by Mail



MEN'S HAT NO. 1

In soft, rough finish. Colors: Gray Mix, Brown Mix, and Black Mix.

Either of these hats sent, postpaid, on receipt of 50 cents in cash, postal order or stamps. Money back if not satisfactory. We refer to The First National Bank of Middletown, N. Y. We are hat manufacturers and make the following offer to introduce these hats and our other lines of Men's, Boys', and Women's Hats in every town in the United States. Send for catalogue.

MEN'S HAT NO. 2

In smooth finish. Colors: Black, Brown, Maple, Steel, and Pearl.

If your hat band has become soiled, send to us for a new all-silk one, made up, ready to sew on, at the following prices, postage prepaid: 5-8 in. and 1 in. wide, 25 cts.; 1 3-4 in. wide, 50 cts. Colors: Black, Dark Gray, and Beaver. If binding is wanted to go with bands, 15 cts. extra.

MIDDLETOWN HAT COMPANY, 44 Mill St., Middletown, N. Y.

Grow Ginseng

Fortunes Made in Small Gardens

A square rod of ground will easily grow 1000 plants. The roots, seed and young plants from such a bed, if sold at prices now prevailing, would yield over $50,000 within ten years. 400,000,000 Chinese use it as a medicine. It is not an opiate. Supply very limited. Hardy everywhere in United States and Canada. Easy to cultivate in either city or country—your leisure hours will do it.

We sell cultivated roots and seed. Send two 2-cent stamps to help pay postage and get our complete booklet, "Ginseng," and current number of our magazine, "The Ginseng Garden."

Chinese-American Ginseng Co. Dept. G Scranton, Pa.

One of a Thousand

Different Kinds of DIXON'S American Graphite PENCILS

For Every Pencil Purpose

Illustrated Booklet V. Free

Joseph Dixon Crucible Co. Jersey City, N. J.

Fleisher's Yarns

are made from selected wools, carefully spun, and have an even, lofty, elastic thread. Dyed in a full line of beautiful shades, which can always be matched.

An article knitted or crocheted of Fleisher's Yarns will always hold its shape and yet be soft and elastic. Every skein of the genuine bears the trade-mark ticket.

Knitting Worsted, Dresden Saxony, Shetland Floss, Germantown Zephyr, Spanish, Ice Floss, etc.

New Knitting and Crocheting Manual mailed for five tickets from Fleisher's Yarns and 2 cents for postage.

S. B. & B. W. FLEISHER, Inc., Department B, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE WORSTED FLEISHER'S BEST YARNS

Dr. Lyon's PERFECT Tooth Powder

Used by people of refinement for over a quarter of a century

PREPARED BY

J. W. Lyon, D.D.S.

REAL ESTATE WANTED

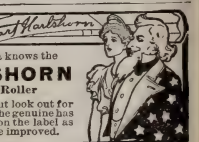
For Hundreds of Cash Buyers.

The names and addresses of these Cash Buyers you can get in full in our monthly U. S. REAL ESTATE JOURNAL. These cash buyers are located throughout the United States and Canada. Get our Journal and write to them, and sell your property yourself. If the buyers addresses are not in our Journal, we will refund your money. Yearly subscriptions $1.00. The first Journal may make or save you many dollars in buying or selling. Sample Journals 25 cents each.

U. S. Real Estate Journal, 55 House Block, Ilion, N.Y

Stewart Hartshorn

All America knows the HARTSHORN Shade Roller is the best. But look out for counterfeits. The genuine has the signature on the label as above. Get the improved.



DEATH TO HEAVES Guaranteed

NEWTON'S HEAVE COUGH, DISTEMPER AND INDIGESTION REMEDY. A veterinary specific for wind throat and stomach troubles. Strong Recommends. $1.00 per can. Dealers. Mail or Express paid.

Newton Horse Remedy Co., Toledo, Ohio.

PRESIDENT SUSPENDERS

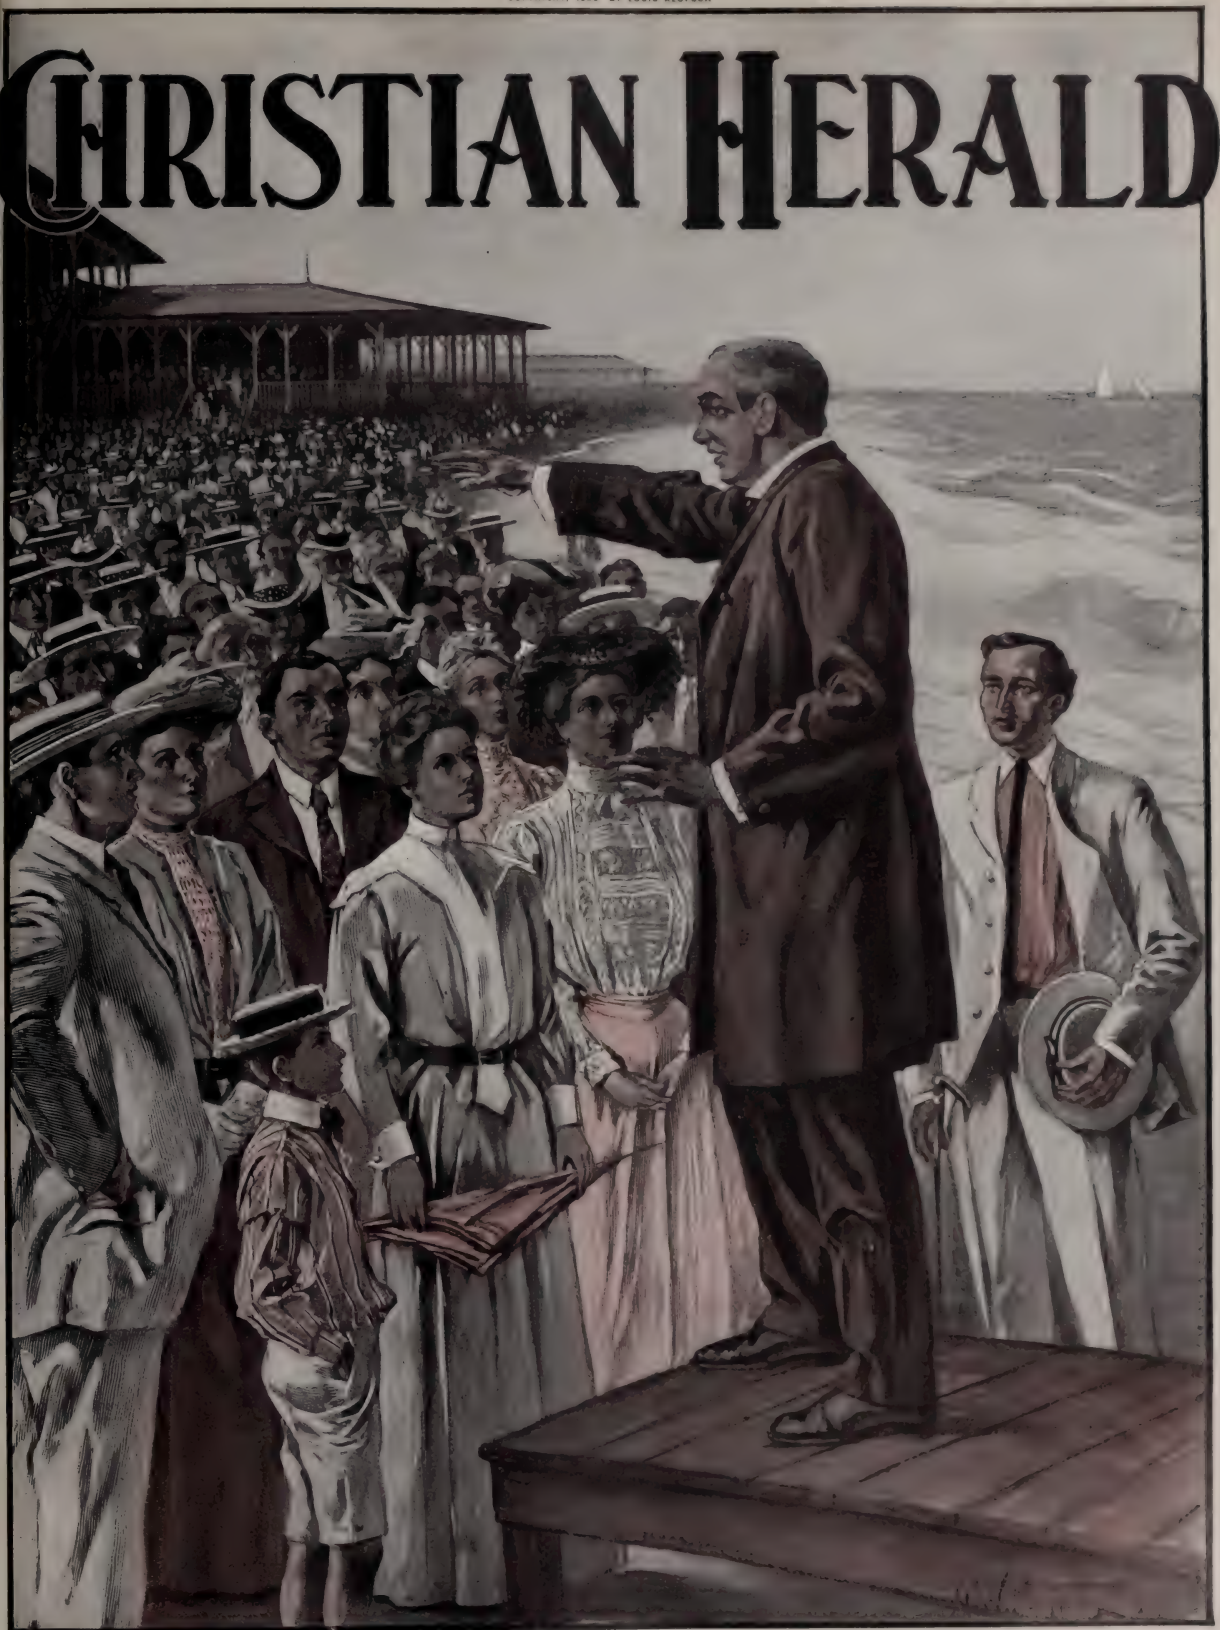
Comfort and service. 50 cents and $1.00. "All breaks made good." Any shop or by mail.

C. A. EDGARTON MFG. CO., Box 209-O, Shirley, Mass.

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
Published 52 Times a Year

NEW YORK, AUGUST 12, 1903
COPYRIGHT, 1903, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH
VOL. 26—No. 32. PRICE 5 CENTS
Offices: Bible House, New York

CHRISTIAN HERALD



SEE PAGE 671

A "Sunset Service" on the Sea-Shore, at Ocean Grove, N. J.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Dr. W. H. F., Lexington, Ky. Can you not do something to alleviate the terrible condition of slavery and cannibalism in the Congo State? THE CHRISTIAN HERALD stands always for those who are suffering and oppressed.

Recent exposures and events now in progress promise to put an end to the Belgian brutalities in the Congo State. These outrages are the crowning infamy of King Leopold's reign. It would be an excellent movement for all the missionary societies represented in African work to unite in a vigorous protest in the name of Christianity and civilization.

W. M. H., Ledgerwood, N. D. In THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, of July 15, answering a question regarding cyclones and tornadoes, you say, "God is not the author of evil." Will you please explain Isaiah 45:7?

In the familiar passage referred to by W. M. H., the prophet is dealing primarily with the situation of his people, who were in captivity and about to be released. Cyrus, to whom the words were addressed, believed, as a Persian, in the existence of two rival powers in the universe, one the origin of good and the other of evil. The prophet sweeps all that aside, and declares that all events come from God. The prosperity of Israel came from him, and the calamity which had befallen them—or, as they would say, the evil that had come on the nation—that, too, came from him. Paul teaches the same lesson (Rom. 11:22), "Behold, therefore, the goodness and severity of God." The prophet never intended to teach that God created moral or physical evil; but that when a nation so favored as Israel was, became faithless and turned from him to idols he had at his command the means of punishment. This is not inconsistent with our answer as to cyclones, which are natural forces, and are not to be regarded as punishment on the victims. Christ expressly warned us against so regarding them (See Luke 13:4, 5).

Mrs. N., Sams Valley, Oreg., writes:

Our interest, our sympathy, our indorsement, are given to the dear brave sister in Walla Walla, and the kind, just treatment you have given her protest against the drink traffic. I, too, come asking help. For many years a patient little company of women have held the W. C. T. U. fort in Medford.

The writer sends a dramatic description of saloon decorations (as they ought to be), and concludes by asking: Does the financial reward compensate the saloon-keeper? We think not. His victims are miserable enough, but he, in the final stages of his body-and-soul-wrecking career, must be the most miserable of all.

Anxious, Tacoma, Wash. When one has hopelessly disgraced himself or herself, and there is no ground for expecting rehabilitation, or restoration to the lost place in society, is not suicide the wisest course? Would not God forgive it in the circumstances?

Suicide is foolish as well as wicked. We can imagine God forgiving it in cases in which the mind is so unbalanced as to be irresponsible, but we cannot see any ground for a sane person hoping for forgiveness for taking away his life. The bravest course is to bear the disgrace, to reform, and by a life of humble usefulness, atone for the sin, whatsoever it may have been. Atonement cannot be made to God, and is unnecessary. Christ has atoned fully, and through him pardon is granted; but your question seems to refer to social relations, and in those, a changed life is counted for atonement. Hawthorne's Scarlet Letter is a vivid illustration of a fact that has often been duplicated.

Subscriber, Jefferson, O. Is it right for Christian people and church members to play progressive games of any kind?

We do not agree with those who believe that the life of a good man or woman should be one wholly destitute of enjoyment. There are many recreations that are both proper and profitable. An excellent rule is to abstain from any game or recreation which is identified, even remotely, with gambling, cruelty, licentiousness, inebriation, wicked waste of time, or extravagance in any form. Cards are the implements of the professional gambler, and nothing can efface the stigma that attaches to them. Besides, even though one did not gamble, the mere example may be the means of leading some one else to ruin.

L. W. S., Mendota, Ill. Is there any possibility of the Gospel narratives being fictitious? Did no secular writers or any historian of the time refer to Christ?

There are incidental references to Christ in connection with Christians, by several historians. Tacitus, who was prætor under Domitian in A.D. 88, only fifty-eight years after the Crucifixion, refers to Christ (Annal XV:44). Pliny the younger, who was tribune in Syria about the same time, also refers to him (Epistle X:97). There are also references in Lucian, who lived about the middle of the second century. He states explicitly the fact of Christ having been crucified. Suetonius and Eusebius also refer to Christ. Besides these evidences, there was the persecution of the Christians under Nero, which is recorded by all historians. Nero died A.D. 68, only thirty-eight years after the Crucifixion. It is therefore clear that there were many Christians before that time. How could the sect have come into existence without a founder? If you saw an oak growing in a place where there was no tree fifty years before, you would suspect that some one had planted an acorn there, and if four men told you how, when and by whom it was planted, you would be prepared to believe them. So there is good reason for believing the Gospel narratives, when you read in secular history of the existence of the Christian Church fifty years after the Crucifixion. Their stories are a credible explanation of a well-established fact.

A. T. M. Are the members of another denomination permitted to partake of the sacrament in the Episcopal Church?

Yes, if they have been confirmed.

W. W. Benton, Galesville, Wis. Reading in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the story of John King, the founder of teetotalism, reminded me of an incident that happened many years ago. About 1825 or 1826, Mr. Redfield, a Presbyterian minister, preached two discourses on temperance. My father, my brother, myself and several others formed a Temperance Society, in Greenfield, Saratoga, N.Y. I do not think, therefore, that John King is entitled to be called the Father of Teetotalism.

It is not claimed that there were not temperance societies anterior to John King's day. His, however, was the first teetotal organization, so-called. Prior to that time the designation "teetotal," had never been used.

J. P. F., Atlanta, Ga. Is there no place where I can send my boy (13) to be educated and brought under good Christian influence at a moderate cost, such as a working man can afford? For him to run the streets, with no one to care for him, is worse than suicide.

This letter has been submitted to the editors of The Outlook, New York, who make a special study of educational matters, and as the reply may interest many other readers in the South, we give it as follows:

While we know of some schools and homes in the North where the boy would be under the influences desired, we presume that it would be most practical for him to receive his training in his own section. We would therefore suggest that your correspondent write to Mr. George R. Cherry, secretary of the Organized Charity Association, 454 First street, Macon, Ga.; to Dr. T. D. Longino, Atlanta, Ga., and to Edgar Gardner Murphy, Concord, Mass., for information as to the educational opportunities for the lad in his own State. Any of these gentlemen will be acquainted with the local institutions and schools, and can give definite counsel. If your correspondent is a colored man, we would refer his inquiry to Mr. Booker T. Washington, of Tuskegee, Ala.

G.G.,——. 1. Is not the Old Testament command, to give one-tenth to the Lord, still in force? 2. If a man who gains his money dishonestly drops a five dollar bill, is the finder justified in giving it away in charity, seeing that the loser neglects his duty in that matter?

1. Christians are expected to give to the Lord's cause, but as in other matters they are not under the law. They are left free, but they certainly should give as much in their liberty, as the Jew gave under compulsion. There are, however, cases in which the gift of one-tenth would be too great a proportion, while there are other cases in which one-tenth would be too small. A widow, with young children and only ten dollars a week, could ill-afford to give a dollar; while a bachelor with a hundred dollars a week, could well afford to give more than ten. It is the spirit that counts, not the amount given. If the spirit is consecrated, the gifts are sure to come. 2. The finder of the bill should restore it to the loser, and should not give it away in charity. He has no right to give away another man's money.

E. M. P., Sharpsburg, Pa. Is crystal-gazing a science, or a forbidden practice? Is it identical with the Urim and Thummim of ancient Jewry, or not? I have a strong inclination for things occult, but I want to be sure that I am right, before I go on.

Crystal-gazing, star-gazing, astrology, and their kindred occult mysteries, are among the pseudo, or false sciences, which mislead, and do not benefit mankind. They are mostly practiced by charlatans who prey upon the credulous. We advise you to let them severely alone. Do your duty, and leave the future in God's hands.

Myrtle Jackson, a Virginia Sunshiner, writes:

I am an invalid, and wanting to do something for Jesus, I started to get money to send some of New York City's poor to Mont-Lawn. God has helped me in realizing this amount ($7.25), and I pray that it may help some little ones enjoy life a few days, and learn about Jesus and how he loves his little children. And I do pray he will help you in the good work you are doing. I am trying to do all I can to bring sunshine to other's lives.

This is a very precious offering, and one deserving of special recognition. Such patience and self-denial will surely bring blessing.

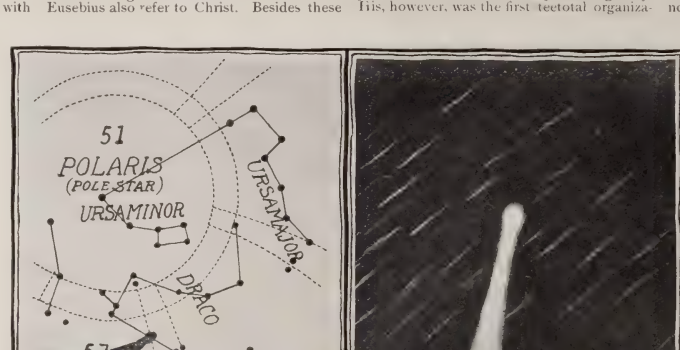
Inquirer. 1. Do animals go to heaven? Is there anything in the Bible to show whether they do or not? If so, where? Doesn't the God who cares for everything give the animals a hereafter? Heaven would be a lonesome place for me if my pets were not there, too. 2. Is it true that we are only married on earth and will not be husband and wife in the great hereafter? If we do know our husband or wife in heaven, what will the second or even fifth husband or wife do?

1. There is nothing in Scripture on the subject, if we except II. Kings 2:12 and 6:17; Joel 2:4, Rev. 6 and 9 chapters, and similar passages. 2. You have repeated the question which the Sadducees put to Christ. See his answer, Mark 12:24-27 and Luke 20:35, 36.

G. E. N., Unadilla, Ga. When a boy, over fifty years ago, I was a Sunday School scholar in a Presbyterian Sunday School, and in one of the books was a poem, the first lines of which read thus:

To think of summers yet to come,
That I am not to see,
The last lines I think run thus:
When all that can die shall be dead
Oh where shall I appear!

Can any of your readers tell me where to find this poem?



THE GREAT BORELLI COMET, NOW VISIBLE IN THE HEAVENS

Borelli's comet, now visible in the skies, has been photographed by the Yale Astronomical Observatory. It is steadily increasing in brilliance, and can be seen with the aid of a field telescope. It has two tails (as shown in the photograph), and is traveling rapidly sunward. Its closest approach will be 31,000,000 miles from the sun. On August 27 it will begin to recede, and will gradually disappear.

A writer in the New York Sun has the following verses on the celestial visitor:

O wayward world, thou fleeting, wandering star,
Now rising in the firmament afar;
With bulk of earth a myriad times combined,
Stupendous tails, four million miles behind;
Whence comest thou? And whither dost thou go?
What dost portend to mortals here below?
Dost thou bear evil tidings to mankind?
With ruin will thy path be strewn behind?
The universe in terror looks upon
Thee in thy race, so madly rushing on.
Throughout the realms of vast and endless space,
Canst thou not find thine own appointed place?
Or art thou some lost world being now destroyed,
That once, like planets fixed, full rest enjoyed?
May one full potent and majestic sun
Hold thee in check, nor let thee reckless run,
With no fixed friendly planet interfere,
And send thee safely from our system here.
The moon and all the stars suffice as lamps;
A need have we for no celestial tramps.
May no obstruction hinder in thy flight—
Good night! thou wayward, wandering world, good night!
—B.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 12, 1903

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

GOING TO THE FLOWER FESTIVAL | HOLIDAY SCENE IN TOKIO STREETS | HOME ENTERTAINMENT

FESTIVAL DAYS IN JAPAN

ALTHOUGH it is by no means certain that the proverbial "war-cloud," which lately threatened to involve Russia and Japan in hostilities, has been permanently dispersed, there is nothing in the tone of recent letters from Japan which would indicate that the Mikado's subjects are at all troubled over the situation. Tokio is as gay and its people as merry as at any time in its history. Feasts and holidays are celebrated with as much zest as though war were a thousand years off, at the very least. He was an observant philosopher who called Japan the "Third Kingdom of Merry Dreams," for their amusement is universal, and there are times when one is impressed with the conviction that the whole nation is laughing, or at least in the mood.

In Tokio, the flower festivals are accounted among the great events of the year. The calendar (writes Eliza Ruhamah Scidmore), is divided into the time of the camellia, the plum, the cherry, the wisteria, the lotus, the chrysanthemum, and the maple. Cherry and maple represent, respectively, spring and autumn. At the New Year the streets of Tokio are crowded with merry-makers and illuminated at night by thousands of torches and gay lanterns, while fairs are held in every direction. One of the prettiest of all is the Tokio festival of the blossoming of the cherry. On such days Nyero Park is crowded with gay parties of the middle classes. Temple bells toll softly, happy voices fill the air, and groups gather under the big trees to drink tea, while benches are set under the cherry trees, upon which people sit for hours and dine and sup merrily. The common people frequent the avenue Mukojenia, along the river, which is lined for two miles with double rows of cherry trees. Boating parties, men in masquerade, samisen-players, and many other kinds of amusement are indulged, and although there is a good deal of sake drinking, brawls and rowdyism are almost unknown.

Then in June there are the iris fetes, and thereafter, as summer advances, the flower festivals follow each other in rapid succession. August ushers in the great lotus show in Tokio. In the park lakes acres of these beautiful plants are seen in full bloom. In autumn, the whole empire is decked with the red, white and yellow flowers of the chrysanthemum, the height of the festival of the national flower being reached on the Mikado's birthday, which is a universal fete, being marked by flower-shows everywhere throughout Japan. Floral masquerades, jugglers, fakirs, acrobats, pedlers, make Tokio a scene of rare attractions for the visitor.

But there are many other Japanese festivals besides those of the flowers. In the temples the religious celebrations are numerous and imposing. Then there are five great annual festivals, half religious, half social, viz: The New Year, the Festival of the Dolls, devoted to the female children, in which all the dolls in the home are entertained by the little girls at a banquet; the Feast of Banners, in honor of the boys; the Feast of Lanterns, when little girls parade at night, carrying big lanterns and singing with all their might; and the Feast of Chrysanthemums—a family celebration, in which chrysanthemum flowers are scattered over the cups of tea and wine. Of minor festivals there is also quite a large list.

Notwithstanding many drawbacks, the work of our Christian missionaries is making excellent progress among the Japanese. They are intensely interested in Western ideas, dress and education.

In a letter from Missionary Florence H. Learned, stationed at Kyoto, the writer draws a most entertaining picture of kindergarten work among the native children. She writes:

Last spring, we cultivated silkworms, to show the children the development of animal life, from the hatching out of the eggs to the laying of the eggs again. A friend sent us by mail a slip of paper, the size of a letter envelope, all covered with tiny specks of eggs. It was an interesting sight to see these take on life and grow between two and three inches long, and as big around as a common lead pencil, living all the time on mulberry leaves daintily cut up for them. Two of our teachers were "experts" in the business. The children took delight in bringing leaves from their homes. One family gave us ten small mulberry trees, which are growing in our yard for this special purpose. It takes quantities of leaves to satisfy them. From out one paper of eggs came hundreds of worms, and the result at the end was two skeins of beautiful white silk thread.

Curiously enough, these silkworms were quite like Christians in observing one day of rest in every seven. After a certain number of weeks, when they showed signs of wishing to spin cocoons, a sheaf of straw stood in the corner of the room, and as the worms were ready, they were laid at the foot of it. Each one had sense enough to crawl up a stem of straw and settle down, and then spin the beautiful soft white silk house in which it sleeps, to awake a butterfly, which flutters till it breaks its cocoon and flies away free to enjoy life for a short season, lay its eggs and die. The sheaf was a beautiful sight, with all those soft white cocoons fast to it. Some of them we let develop into butterflies, but most of them were taken off and put into a deep pan of boiling hot water, over a fire, and the ends of the threads gathered and reeled off on to a tiny reel. It took eleven cocoons to make one small strand of thread. All this was done before the children's eyes, they helping when there was anything they could do.

I would like every American child to have the experience of growing silkworms for one season.

Another delight the children have both spring and fall is going out on little excursions of an hour or two with their teachers, once a week. Right opposite the kindergarten is a large and beautiful park. The Imperial Household Department has granted us a permit to take the children into the park. I think I have told you of their little flower-plots in the kindergarten yard, along the fence, each one a foot and a half by two feet. There are fifty of them. I have given out seeds, put in orders and soon a paper pinwheel is set out in each one, and later on each little owner will stick a nasturtium seed into the soil. At each place is stuck a written card, a bamboo stick with mark to show which is a mistake as to which plot belongs to whom. At present, English [illegible] are blooming profusely all along the back of this long row of little beds. The flowers are [illegible] some go to sick absent pupils, or to a sick mother or other person of the family.

The Emperor's birthday comes as an occasion on which to display the patriotic spirit.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 670

A HOLIDAY SHOW OF ACROBATS IN A TOKIO SQUARE

The American Pulpit

: : Sermon by : :

Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage, D.D.

Housekeepers and Servants

TEXT—PSALM 123: 2: "As the eyes of a maiden unto the hand of her mistress"

TWO weeks ago, "The Privilege of Being a Consecrated Domestic," was my subject. To-day I preach from another standpoint of this vitally important theme, namely: "The Relations of Wives, Mothers, and Housekeepers, to their Servants." We would try to show that the antagonisms and difficulties and estrangements, existing between the parlor and the kitchen, are due to faults upon both sides. It is easy enough for the complaining housewife to develop such keenness of censorious vision, that she can see innumerable imperfections in her servant's life. But when plucking the motes from out of her humble sister's eyes, it is not always so easy for the mistress to perceive the beam, the huge destructive beam, projecting from under her own overarching eyebrows.

That the housekeeper as well as the servant can be negligent in her duty, there is no doubt. The Psalmist, as a spiritual diagnostician of the heart's weaknesses, asserts it. He figuratively seems to place the mistress as a prototype before her domestics. Then, as a young artist crosses the seas to study at the feet of the old masters, and sits day in and day out copying a Raphael's "Sistine Madonna," or a Paul Veronese's "Last Supper," or a Rubens' "Descent from the Cross," or a Michael Angelo's "Last Judgment," the Psalmist raises the mistress upon a pedestal as a model for her servants. Day in and day out, the actions of the parlor are being duplicated in the kitchen. Adam Clark, the great commentator, interprets these words of my text in the following way: "As servants look to their masters and mistresses to see how they do their work, that they may do it in the same way," so may we correct some of the evils found in the kitchen by exposing the evils practised in the parlor. All virtues are not clothed in broadcloth. All feminine unfaithfulness and injustice does not warm itself near a kitchen stove, or centre in a stupid and stolid head with a waitress's cap, or nestle in the selfish heart of the girl, who, wearing a nurse's apron, pushes the baby's carriage along the avenue. If the head of the house wishes her servants to be faithful and true to her, then she must first set an example of faithfulness. She must be true and kind, and loving and Christianlike to her servants, and to all the people with whom she comes in contact in her domestic walk of daily life.

Corrupting Example

The housekeeper is her servant's model. That implies that the mistress must be honest if she wants her servants to be honest. Plato, the philosopher, once tried to convey the idea that an evil man's deeds could be concealed, at least for a time. He illustrated this thought by the story of the fabled Gyges' ring, which could make the false actions of its wearer invisible to the naked eye. "Thus," wrote Plato the Greek, "the truly honest man is the one who would be honest at all times when he could be dishonest and his dishonesty never be found out." But is such a contingency possible? Who can ever be sure that his dishonesty is safely hidden? The eyes of rivals, of subordinates, of employees are keen and see more than we know. They are apt to imitate, too, both the good and the bad, so that one wrong-doer may cause deterioration through whole circles of his social inferiors. In the home, as in business, the example of dishonesty has always the tendency to recoil on the wrong-doer. The merchant who connives at his clerks' cheating of the customers in his interest, must not be surprised if the clerks cheat him in their own interest. If a farmer knowingly sends false weights to market, and when he is packing a barrel of apples places the good apples upon the top of the barrel and a lower grade of fruit beneath, that farmer is teaching his farm-hands to be deceitful in their relations to him when they are gathering the fruit. He is teaching his men to lie as he has lied, and be dishonest, as he was dishonest. If the bank officials criminally misplace the institution's trust funds, there is likely to come a time when one of those bank employees will default, and in the emptied safe of that bank, the sins of that financial institution will, like the proverbial chickens, come home to roost. A step farther! If a housewife will bid her waiting-maid answer the front-door bell and tell the would-be caller that she is out, when she is in, that mistress is teaching her servant to be a liar in all things as well as in part. If a wife is false in her dealings with her grocer and butcher, and washerwoman, and false in her financial dealings with her servants, she need not be surprised if the laundress steals the stray handkerchiefs and collars, and the cook sinfully wastes the butter and filches the cupboard, and perhaps goes so far as to sell the potatoes and the eggs. If a housewife, to protect herself, is unjust to her servants, and turns them off at a moment's notice when she is leaving for the country vacation, then she should not grumble if her servants treat her in the same way.

Dishonesty is contagious. Dishonesty is an immoral germ which is apt to spread through a whole family as the diphtheria germ often in the olden times used to destroy all the children of one household. The sinful plague of dishonesty and untruthfulness and unfaithfulness does not always enter a home by the back door. It is sometimes comfortably installed in the boudoir long before it appears in the servants' quarters, and its first nap in a household is taken upon the parlor sofa and not by resting in a kitchen chair. The mistress, in spite of herself, is an exemplar to the domestic. Very often when the housewife is finding fault with her servant, she is denouncing the malformed results of her own evil life.

Sympathy Needed

The housekeeper is the domestic's model also in the matter of sympathy. If she wishes the servants to be sympathetic with her troubles, then the housekeeper must be sympathetic with theirs. Her knowledge of her servants ought not to be limited to their service. She should take an interest in their personal concerns and give them counsel and help in their difficulties. Trials are the common lot of our race. The trials of the household will be all the easier to bear if the housekeeper and her servant meet them with clasped hands, each calling the other her sister.

Servants sometimes seem to have no sympathy with the wear and tear, and the sorrows and the sicknesses of their housekeeper's life. They seem to be foreigners dwelling for a little while under the roof of a home with nothing in common between themselves and their mistress. Mr. Beecher once described a summer jaunt through Germany. He said that it was one of the strangest experiences he ever had, because up to that time he had never placed his foot upon European soil. All about him were men and women living a distinct life of their own. They bought and they sold, traveled in railroad trains, and ate in hotels. These people lived alongside of him. Yet he was a thousand miles away from them. He could not speak their language. He had nothing with which to draw him and them together. So some of the servants living under our roofs seem to speak a foreign tongue. They never seem to become "familized." They do not care what happens to us in any way. If death comes, or sickness comes, or great trouble comes, they will heartlessly leave us at a moment's notice, to get along the best way we can.

But, housekeepers, why should you expect your domestics to sympathize with you in your time of trouble? You say that your cook left you during that awful crisis when your husband was hovering between life and death on account of typhoid fever. But have you ever sympathized with your servant in her sicknesses? Tell me frankly, have you ever stopped for one moment to realize that you had a human being, an immortal soul, working for you in the kitchen, or have you regarded her only as a little cog in the domestic machinery, which can be thrown away as soon as it is useless? Your eyes have been red with weeping from sitting up by your baby's crib. Did you think to ask why your chambermaid's eyes were red with weeping, on the day after she received that letter with a foreign postmark? You have had a hard financial struggle to get along and make ends meet. You have complained again and again because the female help are so wasteful. You say, "They will let the furnace go out, and then you must start it up again with extra coal and wood. They will not turn down the gas in the dining-room and the parlor, and in the halls, and they do not care if the bills run up. They will throw away good meat, because they are too indolent to cook it in another form." But, my sister, did you ever stop to sympathize with your servant's financial struggle?

Heroines of the Kitchen

Some of those girls are humble heroines. We think of a heroine as a Grace Darling, rowing away from her father's lighthouse, in the teeth of an awful storm, to save a shipwrecked crew. Under the plain dress of your humble domestic, there may be beating as brave a heart as that of the famous young English girl. Why is she working, and so carefully economizing? For herself? Oh, no. She is perhaps sending home all her wages to support her old parents, or to help educate her orphaned brothers and sisters. If you were to go into your servants' room to-day, perhaps you would find they did not have sufficient clothes to keep them warm. Why should your servants sympathize with your troubles if you care so little for theirs?

Sympathy, God-given, practical sympathy, can break down many a barrier which to-day separates the kitchen from the parlor. Christopher Columbus' life proves what well-directed sympathy can do. After the great Genoese mariner had returned from his voyages of discovery, jealousies arose. He was thrown into prison, and manacled with irons. The effects of these persecutions was to make Columbus' heart as dead as stone. A popular writer of that day described the new world, and stole away its rightful name. The two continents which should bear the title of Columbia, are called America. Columbus said nothing. His enemies lied about him, and called him a traitor. Columbus said nothing. But one day he was brought before the Spanish throne. He came into the royal palace a stern-faced man. He looked up and saw the eyes of Queen Isabella wet with sympathetic tears. At once this strong and sullen hero wavered. He knelt before the throne, and buried his face in his hands, and wept, until his frame shook with emotion. Sympathy, God-given sympathy, placed Columbus at Isabella's feet; not the chains, not the persecutions, not the upbraidings, not the indifferences. So, my sister, if you expect your servants to be sympathetic with you, be as Queen Isabella, who sympathized with Columbus' troubles. You must sympathize with theirs.

Examples of Domestic Life

The housekeeper is the servant's model, also in devotion to the home. The servants will inevitably fail to appreciate the dignity and nobility of domestic service, unless their mistresses feel that the highest honor any woman can have is to preside over, and dedicate her life to her home.

The name of Home ought to have for every true housewife a charmed sound. It ought to be spelt by her, as her grandmothers used to spell it, in many letters of gold. It ought to be spelled in tongues of flame, glowing above the hearthstone. It ought to be spelled in a word of eleven letters, "opportunity"; in another word of nine letters, "happiness." It ought to be spelled in two words, the one of eight and the other of three letters, "maternal joy." It ought to be spelled in another word of seven letters, "liberty." The true wife should never want to be anywhere but under the shadow of her home. But though Mary Anderson, the queen of the American stage, gladly abdicated her theatrical throne in order to be queen of her domestic fireside, a dangerous tendency of this age is for wives and mothers to vacate their domestic thrones. They want to hand over the kitchen to their cooks. They want to leave their children under the exclusive control of the nurses. They want to be separated from their husbands, on account of their clubs. They want to be liberally educated in everything on earth, except in the old-fashioned way of learning how to be a good housewife and mother.

False Pride

Now, housekeepers, is it right to expect your servants to be proud to work in the kitchen, when you yourself are ashamed to be found doing kitchen work? Is it more of an intellectual accomplishment to be able to speak poor French, than it is to cook good bread? Lord Aberdeen, the Governor-General of Canada, did not think so. A few years ago, in a public speech, he said that the most pleasant experience of his sojourn in America was in the following incident: He was, in an official capacity, traveling through one of the Canadian Provinces, and was stopping at a prominent official's home. After an elaborate meal, perfectly cooked and perfectly served, he turned to the hostess and congratulated her upon her cook. With that the lady's face lighted up with pleasure, as she answered, "My Lord, I thank you for your compliment. Your words of praise sink deep into my heart. This afternoon, our regular cook was taken sick, and so my daughter took her place. She will be in presently from the kitchen. You can then, face to face, congratulate her upon her success."

Is it a disgrace, as many women seem to think it is, for a mother to be seen wheeling her baby-carriage along the street with her own flesh and blood in that carriage? For my own part, I think such a public sight of a wife and mother is a far more honorable one than for such a woman to be seen carrying around a pet dog, or to be seen out driving with a French poodle by her side. I say unto you, oh wives and mothers, that you can never get your servants to appreciate the nobility of a domestic calling, until you yourself fully realize that the greatest work and the most honorable work you

CONTINUED ON NEXT PAGE

Worshiping on Mount Tabor

IT would be difficult to find a more picturesque or attractive locality for a summer religious gathering than the grounds of the Mount Tabor Camp-meeting Association. Picture a fine tract of land, 125 acres in extent, finely diversified with mountain, glen and woodlands, and with beautiful groves and extensive recreation grounds, the whole being 700 feet above sea level. This retreat is located in Morris County, N. J., thirty-five miles distant from New York City. The grove is adorned with majestic chestnut trees, the scenery is delightful, the atmosphere invigorating, and there is an abundance of the purest water. Beautiful for situation, the camping-ground is like a little city in the woods. There are over 225 residences, many of them being elegant and artistic. Many of the avenues are named after the bishops of the Methodist Church and are very prettily laid out. The grounds are lighted by gas and electricity. Among the literary attractions is a free public library.

Mount Tabor's chief interest is its religious services. It was organized as the camp meeting ground for the Newark Methodist Conference. The purchase was made in 1868, the mother of Bishop Fitzgerald heading the enterprise, by the purchase of the first lot sold. For thirty-five years it has been the scene of an annual camp meeting. Many of these gatherings have been occasions of marvelous spiritual power. People flocked to these grounds by the thousands, and many signal displays of converting and sanctifying grace have often been witnessed.

The Association has a large auditorium and pavilion, with good accommodations for open-air services. One of the special religious features is the regular service held at the residence of the venerable Mrs. Fitzgerald.

REPRESENTATIVES OF THE NEWARK CONFERENCE AT MOUNT TABOR, N. J.

Fervent and helpful services are held almost daily during the season under her direction, and many have found a Saviour within these sacred walls.

The season for Mount Tabor begins in May, continuing until October. Regular religious services, with preaching, prayer meeting, and class meetings are sustained; concerts of various kinds are held, also, occasionally, social receptions and lawn parties. Two camp-meetings are held, the "holiness meeting," under the direction of Mrs. Fitzgerald, and the meeting under the leadership of the conference committee. The dates for the present season are: the first from Aug. 11 to 17; the second from Aug. 18 to 31.

Previous to the conference camp meeting there are four large gatherings: the W. C. T. U., the W. F. M. S., and the W. H. M. S. hold conventions, and the Epworth League holds a rally. Two notable concerts will be given under the direction of Prof. D. D. Eaton. The treasurer of the society is Mr. J. S. Richardson, Mr. J. H. Cox is superintendent, and the board of trustees is made up of good Christian business men interested in Mount Tabor. The president, Rev. A. B. Richardson, D.D., has proved himself an exceedingly capable officer in executive and financial ability, as well as in presiding at the various gatherings. The Mount Tabor Observer, edited by T. F. Crane, celebrates its fifteenth anniversary this season. Mr. Crane, who is an artist as well as editor, has supplied the photographs accompanying this article.

All the services at Mount Tabor are deeply spiritual and helpful, and those who attend them find them an inspiration to higher and nobler lives.

Housekeepers and Servants

A Sermon by REV. FRANK DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D. Continued

can have, is that which is to be found within the four walls of a consecrated home.

The housekeeper is her servants' model. Then she must give to them her love as well as her sympathy. "Oh, no," some housewife answers, "I could not love my servants. I could sympathize with them in their troubles, but I could not love them. Why, if I loved them, I should have to receive them into the 'Holy of Holies' of my heart. I should in one sense have to make them part of my own family. I cannot place my servants side by side with my children." Yes, my sister, you can love as well as sympathize with your domestics. You can give them your heart as well as your hand. They can learn to love you.

Housewives, if you will only learn to love your servants, and make their interests your interests, that love would be returned to you in a thousand blessings. We can prove this by the silver cords of affection which bound some of the Southern planters to their black slaves. Did not those slaves return their masters' love by a noble devotion? There was many and many a woman in the South who, after her husband had been shot in the Civil War, would have starved to death, had not the strong-limbed negroes who worked for her as "slaves of the law," continued, of their own free will, to work for her as "slaves of love." There was many a wounded Confederate soldier who would have died, had not his body-servant, who easily could have escaped into the Northern lines, gladly and willingly and prayerfully nursed him back to health and strength. There is many a servant working to-day as a hireling in some home, who, if she was loved by her mistress, would return a wealth of affection and devotion, such as she herself does not believe herself capable of giving. The true interpretation of love means simply this: If you love your servants, you will take them into your life, and make their interests your interests. And by your loving them, they will let you creep into their hearts, and make your interests their interests.

The housekeeper is the domestic's model also in religion. Therefore, by her life she should teach her servants that religion is not a mere sham, but a reality, and that the noblest of all lives is that consecrated to the service of the Lord Jesus Christ. It has been said that "No man is a hero to his valet." Therefore, "No mistress could be a true Christian exemplar for her servant." That statement is only partly true. No housewife, if she is leading an insincere life, can have a true spiritual influence over her servants. The nearer you come to the huge piece of rock in the Yellowstone Park, which in the distance seems to be the face of a man, the more you see its jagged corners and distorted features. The nearer a servant comes to an insincere mistress, the more she is repulsed by her pretensions to religion; but the nearer a domestic comes to a pure, true, noble woman, who is earnestly and prayerfully trying to follow out the teaching of the Christ-love, the more she realizes the importance of living for eternity and not for time; for Christ, and not for pleasure; for present duty, and not for a transient whim.

The greatest cause of unfaithfulness and dishonesty in the kitchen is the fact that your servant-girl is not converted to Christ. Perhaps the chief reason why your servant is not converted, is that she does not see you, her mistress, a professing Christian, living the Christian life you ought to live. My sister, is it not time for you to turn over a new leaf and start afresh for Christ? Is it not a good resolve to try to settle this "servant question," once for all, by surrendering yourself, body and mind and soul, to the service of your Master?

The spiritual influence which a consecrated Christian woman can have over the life of her servant, was well shown by Rev. Francis E. Clark, of the Christian Endeavor Society. He told this beautiful story soon after his return from China. The wife of an American missionary, who was massacred in the late Chinese uprising, was one day teaching a Sunday School class, among whom was one of her Chinese servants. This servant girl, by coming in contact with her mistress, was not only led to the feet of Christ, but also was led to believe that her faithful mistress was her true spiritual adviser. So this day, the young girl looked up into the face of this Christian lady and said: "Missionary, as you talk about the great joys of heaven, I would like to ask you a question. Will we know each other when we reach heaven? Will you know your father and mother, and husband and little children? Will you know me, and I know you?" "Yes," answered the Christian lady. "Then, missionary," said the poor Chinese servant, "you have been so kind to me, that when I get to heaven, I am going to ask Jesus to just let me sit by your side and hold your hand forever, and ever, and ever." Oh, mistresses! oh, housewives, and housekeepers, in your dealings with your servants may you reveal the same gentle Christian life that the martyred Christian lady showed to her household. In your prayers, in your consecration, in your family altars, in the purity of your life, may you always help your household servants to look beyond the grave, and to look up. Then there will be no untaithful or slothful domestics.

Housewives and housekeepers, heed well the importance of consecrating your lives to Christ, not only for your own sake, but also for the sake of your servants. Remember that it is far easier for you to commit a sin against those whom you suppose to be lower than you, than it is against those whom you suppose are above you. It is easier for a parent to sin against a child, than for the child to defy a parent. It is easier for a king to do an open wrong to a subject, than for a subject to flagrantly sin against a king. And remember further, that God judges our actions just as much in how we treat our cattle as our masters; our underlings as our employers; our servants as our husbands and wives. May the Spirit inspire every housewife to live such a holy life that her servants can well take her as a spiritual model, and can see in her face a reflection of the Christ, who willingly became the servant of all.

FESTIVAL DAYS IN JAPAN

Continued From Page 667

The kindergarten's patriotic fire is kindled some weeks beforehand by the learning of a song appropriate to the day, and they are carefully instructed as to the meaning of the day, and the national song is rehearsed. A few days before, little flags are made—the red sun on a white ground—and also purple flags, with the chrysanthemum crest of the Emperor. The children are allowed to make one apiece of each kind. On the national day, after the opening exercises, we have our little burst of patriotism in a short ceremony. The flags are given to the children, they sing their song and the national song, and then they are given oranges and bean cakes.

Next month the city of Kyoto has an educational exhibit at which the schools of the city, from the Imperial University to the Kindergartens, will be represented. We have been invited to take part and are busy getting ready. Though a small part, I hope it will be a fairly creditable one.

There are our mothers' meetings, connected with our work here, which are well attended, also a sewing class and two cooking classes, besides many homes open for Christian work. Indeed, the opportunities for service are numberless. The first cooking class is made up of women from the nobles' families near us, and from the families of the Kyoto Imperial University professors. They seem anxious to learn foreign cooking. Some are interested in the Bible, and thus, we hope, they may be led on to spiritual things. They are delightful women to meet socially—women of influence in their own circles—they come to us in silk and crepe gowns, to peel potatoes, stir up bread, and engage in the kitchen work, which cooking entails. We have no servant to wait on us, and these ladies work under my direction.

* * *

As to the sewing-class—there is a "fad" in Japan, now, for "foreign style clothes" for children, and it would seem as though another generation would see Japan in foreign dress. It is another means, just now, for the great end in view—bringing the Gospel message to those who will not hear it in other ways. The outcome is, that our work is looked upon with kindly eyes by the whole neighborhood. The change in this respect in the last few years is really wonderful, and it is worth a great deal to have it so.

* * *

Our Sunday School has grown satisfactorily during the past year. It is now about one hundred in numbers. Sometimes more, sometimes less. The Sunday evening Bible class and preaching service are well attended. Prof. Aoki, of the Doshisha Theological School, has charge of these, and is also the superintendent. Last November we had a week of good evangelistic services, conducted by Mr. Seimatsu Kimura, a graduate of the Moody Institute, Chicago. Many decided for Christ, and many of them have now united with the church.

FLORENCE H. LEARNED.

Miss Learned's letter is one of many that show the substantial progress our missionaries are making among the natives, especially among the young people. Such work promises well for the intellectual and spiritual future of the Japanese.

Henry Norman wrote, not long ago, that there was "very much in Japanese life that was purely Oriental (in the bad sense) and barbaric (in the good sense)." Their religious spectacles, instead of corresponding to those of Spain, Mexico or Manila, Mr. Norman declared, were more like the barbaric performances of New Guinea. This picture, however, was probably overdrawn, although it is true that primitive beliefs underlie the national religions of Japan—Shentoism and Buddhism. Shento is the State religion. According to recent statistics there were 152 great Shento temples, and 192,207 shrines, secondary temples, and small wayside chapels in the Mikado's dominions, the whole being in the care of nearly 55,000 priests. The Buddhist temples, shrines and priests were considerably less numerous. There is unquestionably a marked improvement in Japanese morals in the last quarter of a century. In the popular literature, the character of the matsuri or temple festivals, the behavior at picnics and parades, and the general social conditions as a whole, the tendency has been upward. The earlier missionaries found immorality quite as difficult a problem as idolatry and much more tenacious. But the missionaries and Christian teachers toiled on, and the moral advancement of to-day is a part of the result of their consecrated labors.

* * *

Dr. Karl Gutzlaff was the first missionary to make the Japanese acquainted with the Word of God in their native tongue, his translation of the Gospel and Epistles of John being printed in 1839. Subsequently Luke and Acts were translated by Rev. Dr. Bettelheim in 1854. Other parts of the Word followed, but it was not until 1880 that the entire New Testament was published in the Japanese vernacular. The Old Testament followed in 1882, and in 1888 a public gathering was held to celebrate the event. In 1889, the complete Japanese Bible was issued by the three great Bible societies of the United States, England and Scotland, and it is to-day widely distributed throughout the length and breadth of the Mikado's empire.

THE MIKADO'S PALACE, AT HAKONE

A NATIVE BED—SIMPLY MATS AND ROLLER

A NIGHT AT THE BOWERY MISSION

By S. H. HADLEY,
Superintendent of the Water Street Mission

WHO can describe the Bowery—the great, restless, seething, crowding thoroughfare—with its tides of humanity passing up and down in an endless stream?

The Bowery is over a mile long, over one hundred feet from curb to curb, with a wide sidewalk. It reaches from Chatham Square to Cooper Union. Fourth avenue and Third avenue pour their crowds into it. Park Row from City Hall to the Post Office empties its thousands into it, and all are swallowed up in the Bowery. Madison avenue, Third avenue and Second avenue trolley cars sweep up and down ringing their gongs to clear the track. Thousands of heavy trucks pass all day long, and a double line of Elevated Railroad thunders overhead.

Every specimen of humanity can be seen here; the merchant, the manufacturer, the banker and the "bum" rub against each other all day. One passing that way for the first time could not see much. He would be so confused with the crowd and noise, he probably would turn off on some other street.

* * *

About eight o'clock P.M. the Bowery begins to wake up. Below Grand street especially, signs appear that have not been visible throughout the day. Dives and dens of infamy of every description open up to catch the unwary. "Crooks" of every degree are on hand for business. Every species of gambling, from the slot machine to "craps" and roulette, is going on; secretly, of course, but with a sharp lookout. Down midway between Canal and Bayard street, on the East side of the Bowery, at No. 55, is a building of which I wish to speak. It is the Bowery Mission. The wonder of a stranger would be that any one would be brave enough to attempt to carry on a religious work in such a place, but such a work is carried on there, and its power has been felt to the ends of the earth. On one side is a large rum shop; on the other, a huge lodging-house with over 300 beds, and within pistol-shot are 10,000 people sleeping in lodging-houses, at prices ranging from five cents to twenty-five cents.

This blessed Lighthouse, which pours out its glorious strains of music, that rise and swell even above the awful din of the Bowery, stands just on the edge of Chinatown, whither hundreds of poor girls have been drawn by the opium habit. They finally take up their abode with the Chinamen, and only come out when carried to the morgue.

* * *

Never was a vine of God's own planting set down amid such surroundings of sin and crime as this old Bowery Mission. Outside passes an endless stream of humanity. The big thief, the little thief, confidence men of all kinds; the half drunk, the wholly drunk and the maudlin drunk; the "bum" and tramp; the deserted and desperate wife; the fallen woman, leering along trying to attract attention, and the timid girl out on her first trip, all pass the open, hospitable doors of this home of rest which looms up like a glorious lighthouse to guide the mariner in the midst of dangers. It has stood there many years, and has weathered many a storm. At one time, when the consecrated men who started this work had passed away, one by one, the great question of closing the mission arose. City churches were appealed to, but without success. At last, when it seemed as though this blessed landmark for Jesus was about to be blotted out, Dr. Louis Klopsch voluntarily took upon his own shoulders the responsibility of carrying on this work, and has done so ever since.

The writer paid a visit to the Bowery Mission the other evening. Dear reader, let me take you along. A most wonderful organ poured forth its sweet tones into the street, inviting all who heard to come. The player was Victor H. Benke, now a professor and composer of some of the best known church music. How did this Bowery Mission get hold of such talent? Why, he came in, as did all the rest, a homeless outcast, to get something to eat. He came to one of Mrs. Bird's Sunday morning breakfasts. The room was crowded when the writer entered, and Prof. Lou. W. Brown, once an opera singer, was leading the song service. I noticed in the audience many faces once well-known and familiar in the busy scenes of trade and commerce, men who had been swept down by some mighty wave of trouble, and had lost all but their souls. But they were more welcome there than they could have been in any other condition, for "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." It was "Converts' Night." One fine young German was joyfully celebrating the first anniversary as a Christian. A giant of a man who had been drinking, came in and sat down on the front seat, and asked the leader to pray for him. All knelt at once, and joined in a solemn petition to the Sinner's Friend. The poor fellow prayed also, and on arising from his knees with some difficulty declared his intention to drink no more.

* * *

At this moment a bevy of beautiful young ladies, accompanied by some young men from Bethany Presbyterian Church, came in and sang several songs. One feature of this delightful service was a song sung by the Bowery Quartette. I doubt if better music could be heard in any church or theatre in this city. The song was entitled, "God Bless My Boy To-Night," one verse runs:

I know not where his head may lie,
Perchance beneath the open sky;
But there I ween God's watchful eye
Can see my boy to-night.

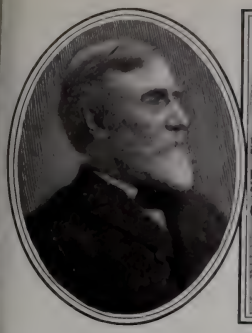
God bless my boy, oh bless my boy
And keep his footsteps right.
God bless my boy, oh bless my boy,
God save my boy to-night.

Tears filled the eyes of many "wandering boys," as the sweet strains of this song filled the room.

Mr. Thos. Gladding has opened a memorial home at 242 East Broadway. It is one of the loving arms of the Bowery Mission, and is in the care of one of the converts, Mr. Fred. Card, a splendid business man, who has some forty converts there under his care while they are learning to stand alone and to get employment.

In closing, I wish to mention one who is lovingly called "The Mother of the Bowery Boys." Blessed name! Blessed reality! Her presence reminds the writer of the glorious sunshine upon the apple blossoms or on the silky corn in the ear. Oh the love and reverence the Bowery boys have for Mrs. Sarah J. Bird! A gentle lady, educated and refined, brought up amid the surroundings of wealth and culture, but who for years has cast her lot amid the purlieus of the Bowery, and is inseparably connected with this Mission. When she rises to speak, it is pathetic to see the dull eyes kindle, and when she moves through the aisles, looks of homage follow her very step. She has a Gospel Settlement at 111 Clinton street, where she lives and carries on a work of education and salvation among the thousands of aliens who surround her, and where a thousand Jewish children a week are taught how to live and how to die.

When the writer walked out in the street, he said to himself: "Can it be possible that those rich, strong churches uptown, 'closed for the summer,' with their grim, silent walls frowning down on the weary passer-by, realize what a work is going on for God and the lost away down on the Bowery, and how souls are plucked out of the fire every night in the year by the Bowery Mission." S. H. HADLEY.



Copyrighted, 1903, by R. F. Turnbull

MIDSUMMER DAYS AT OCEAN GROVE

OVER thirty years have passed away since Ocean Grove became known to the religious world as a camp-meeting ground. Every year has witnessed an increase in the multitudes who go there for a season of spiritual refreshing. At the present writing, the population of the Grove is equal to that of many a good-sized city.

There are even yet among those who go to Ocean Grove in midsummer, many who recall with interest the beginning of things in that wonderful "city by the sea." They remember the time when it was a wilderness of sand hills and beach grass. They revive memories of the first general religious service—a prayer-meeting in the tent of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. Thornley, of Philadelphia, when the Rev. Alfred Cookman, W. H. Osborne, Adam Wallace, George H. Hughes and E. H. Stokes were among the little company assembled to ask Divine guidance. In those intervening years, what a long list of consecrated names of men and women—devoted workers for the Master—is interwoven with the story of the progress of Ocean Grove! Many have passed beyond—indeed almost all the original founders; but the seed they planted has grown to a vast and glorious fruitage.

In the attractions of Ocean Grove, the natural and the spiritual are strangely blended. This season the programme for the August services and the camp-meeting is one of unusual interest. Camp-meeting begins the 21st of August and continues until the 31st. It is expected that Dr. J. Reginald Campbell, of London, will preach one Sunday forenoon during the meetings. Beginning August 21, sunrise gatherings will be held daily at 5:45 A.M, in the Tabernacle; Dr. Ballard, leader. Family prayer 6:45 A.M., in the Auditorium. Fellowship meeting, Thornley Chapel, 9 A.M.; Rev. William Franklin, leader. Decision meeting, Tabernacle, 1:30 P.M.; Mrs. Elizabeth Smith, leader. Children's instruction service, Tabernacle, 2:30 P.M.; Mrs. W. H. Starks, leader. Pentecostal season, Temple, 3 P.M.; Dr. Joseph H. Smith, leader. Twilight service, 5:30 P.M., in Temple; Rev. C. H. Yatman, leader.

Rev. Dr. O. Hanlon, for so many years the famous teacher of the midsummer Bible Class, has been succeeded temporarily by Rev. Dr. Munhall. Tali Esson Morgan, leader of the orchestra, is holding concerts Wednesday and Saturday evenings, and several sacred oratorios will also be given during the season.

The Young People's Services are now in the twenty-third year of Mr. Yatman's leadership, and an appropriate celebration of the fact was lately held. These services are more largely attended this year than ever, and the "Sixty Minutes of Sunshine" are brightening many lives. Among the other attractive services are the Sunday School Assembly, under direction of Rev. Charles L. Mead; the Festival Chorus of 300 voices; the Children's Chorus (still larger); the Spiritual Culture Society, with Rev. J. E. Gilbert as leader; the Summer School of Theology, August 18 to 29, under the personal leadership of Bishop Fitzgerald; the Lecture Course, with Prof. Rogers of Drew, Rev. Cross Alexander, D.D., of Vanderbilt, and Rev. R. J. Cooke, of Grant Universities, among the speakers; besides a host of other events, religious and social.

One of the notably picturesque features of the religious life of Ocean Grove is the Beach meeting. The announcement of a "Sunset Service" on the seashore is always certain to attract a great audience. The Rev. A. E. Ballard is usually the leader of the beach services, and is supported by earnest and eloquent exhorters.

Since the opening of the beautiful "Elim Cottage" in 1871 (the original idea of which was simultaneously conceived by the late Rev. Alfred Cookman and his wife, and the late Mrs. Ryer, of New York), over 4,000 ministers and their families, besides many students, have been entertained there.

The veterans of the Grove, those who belong to the "Old Guard," and who are the oldest regular attendants now living, are: the Rev. Adam Wallace, Rev. George Hughes, Rev. A. E. Ballard, Rev. J. H. Alday, Mrs. E. H. Stokes, Mrs. Alfred Cookman, and Mrs. R. E. Hatton.

REV. A. WALLACE, D.D. REV. A. E. BALLARD J. H. ALDAY

It is expected that fully 70,000 persons will attend the Camp-meeting, which opens a week hence. The holy enthusiasm and fascination have increased with the years. The beautiful, mysterious charm of the sea, suggests the thought that we are all voyagers to the "homeland," where a welcome awaits the faithful traveler.

MARY BARTON COOKMAN.

J. R. CLARK

A GOSPEL BOAT ON THE OHIO

THAT there is no better place for home mission work than in some of our large cities is a fact well illustrated by the splendid work of the City Missionary Society of Cincinnati. It has the power that comes from holy zeal and a sincere desire to do good. The City Missionary Society of Cincinnati was founded by the Methodists, fifteen years ago, and the record of its work during those years has been a most honorable one. It has given a spiritual and moral uplift to many parts of the city.

One line of work established by the Society is unique. It is a boat-house, built for the purpose of carrying the Gospel to the residents of certain localities along the Ohio River, and particularly to those living in the churchless locality of Shantytown, a far from attractive district of Cincinnati. In Shantytown, and on the river before it, live a large number of non-churchgoers. The City Missionary Society fitted up a boat, 16 x 60 feet, for the purpose of carrying the Gospel to them. Sunday School, prayer meetings, and regular religious services are held on the boat, and the attendants are men, women and children who never would have gone to church elsewhere. The Society has also a Gospel wagon, which goes to different parts of the city, carrying its message of a Saviour's undying love. Last summer, one hundred and forty-five street meetings were conducted from the Gospel wagon, and a total of more than thirty thousand people heard the Gospel preached from its steps. No one may estimate the harvest to be reaped from the good seed sown.

The Society has built three mission churches, and given financial aid to seven other churches in their building enterprises. It has helped five churches to clear off the indebtedness on their buildings, and has gathered four hundred children into the Sunday School. It has received and expended more than $100,000 for city missionary work. Among the Italians, of whom there are more than 8,000 in the city, it has done especially good work.

The president of the City Missionary Society is Dr. J. D. Jones, and for six years superintendent, to whom the Society owes much of its success, is Mr. Jesse R. Clark, while the first vice-president is Bishop J. M. Walden. These officers have made the Society a most potent power for good in Cincinnati. J. L. H.

THE GOSPEL BOAT ON THE OHIO RIVER

DR. I. D. JONES

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, ASSOCIATE EDITOR — LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor — G. H. SANDISON, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscriptions.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Midsummer Religion

AS we write, the great annual religious gatherings are in progress at the popular summer convention resorts. Leaving the torrid cities to the stay-at-homes, these midsummer pilgrims have set out for their annual Mecca, by seashore or mountain, where, amid delightful natural surroundings and in an invigorating atmosphere, they may enjoy all the pleasures of spiritual association, with little or none of its drawbacks. At Winona Lake, Mount Tabor, Ocean Grove, Ocean City, Northfield, and a dozen other centres of religious interest, these multitudes are assembled, and the next few weeks will be spent in the most pleasing and profitable companionship. When all is over, and the pilgrims again face toward home, they will depart with that sense of increased spirituality and blessing, which comes to those who take themselves aside for a refreshing season of communion and worship, upon which the world and its affairs may not intrude.

But, wholly independent of the personal blessing that comes from mutual prayer, praise and conference, there should be, in the case of every really earnest Christian attending these midsummer gatherings, an impulse to more energetic and consecrated service. Not he alone, nor his intimates, but the whole community should feel the benefit of his spiritual refreshing. His influence should be widely diffusive, after every such experience. The duty of one who "has been with God" for a season, is thus beautifully described by the poet Cowper:

> When one who holds communion with the skies,
> Has fill'd his urn where those pure waters rise,
> And once more mingles with us meaner things,
> 'Tis e'en as if an angel shook his wings;
> Delicious fragrance fills the circuit wide,
> That tells us whence his treasures are supplied.

So, when the camp meeting or midsummer convention days are ended and you go back again to the business of every-day life, let your influence among men and women bear witness for you that you have been not in the Valley of Humiliation, but upon the Mount of Communion. Be more Christ-like, more kindly, more generous, more forgiving. Share freely with others the blessing you have received, and let the world be the better for your pilgrimage. And in thus sharing, you will multiply and redouble it many times over.

Making the Best of Things

WE may make the best of the situation or the worst, according to the way we accept or rebel against it. For instance, it may be our duty to engage in very uncongenial tasks, and we may be thrown with uncongenial people, whose manners are repellent, and whose tempers are critical and harsh. We only heighten our own discomfort and increase our own discouragement by dwelling on the unlovely phases of character which annoy us, and by repining against the hardships or the pin-pricks of our lot. Take hold of the disagreeable or tiresome task, and finish it with courage and patience. If one must grasp a nettle, do it boldly, not gingerly and with fear. In dealing with difficult people, whether or not one lives with, or only meets them occasionally, the golden rule is to disarm prejudice with courtesy, and to conquer hostility with love. The soft answer proverbially turns away wrath. Gentleness has an invincible strength. The brusque candor which wounds and scars is not praiseworthy, for our Bible tells us to speak the truth in love.

Oh, how sweet and how powerful is love, leveling every distinction, smoothing every rough road, bringing the peace and joy of heaven into human lives! What though the old and worn-out man or woman in the household be irritable and exacting, or the semi-invalid crabbed and fretful, or the youth thoughtless, or the child heedless and irresponsible! Take the best and most hopeful view of the case, not the pessimistic and churlish. Age lays heavy burdens on those who have been accustomed to activity, and those who are still equal to the day's demands are prone to forget how exasperating it is to an energetic temperament to be laid aside; how vexatious for one who has been important and essential, to realize that he or she must yield to others the place that has grown familiar and is prominent. Let us bring sympathy to the aged, and not force them to feel themselves superfluous. And as for young people, time will soon ripen their crudeness and prune their too exuberant growth, and correct their faults of impulse and haste.

Children are fast leaving childhood behind. Make this period of their lives a very garden of bliss. For the well and the vigorous not to be patient with and tolerant of those who are ill, or infirm, or depleted of sufficient strength for their day's tasks, is surely both weak and sinful Let us make the best of whatever is God's will for us on the road of life.

The New Immigrants

OUR boast, hitherto fulfilled to an extent positively astonishing, of our ability to assimilate any number and kind of immigrants, is about to be put to a most severe test. So long as the immigrants came from Great Britain, Germany and Scandinavia, the task, though arduous, was not hopeless. As a rule, the newcomers had, at least, a common school education, and they had lived in a society and under institutions not very dissimilar from our own. They could understand our system of government, and even those who did not fully appreciate it, had children who entered thoroughly into the spirit, and adapted themselves readily to the new conditions. So, though immense numbers came—788,000 in 1882—the huge influx occasioned no inconvenience, and as a considerable portion went West and developed the land, the immigration was a source of increased national wealth. In that year, four-fifths of the total came from the three countries we have mentioned. From Great Britain 276,000; from Germany, 251,000; and from Scandinavia 105,000.

This year there is again a flood tide, and it is higher than the huge figures of 1882. The number, according to the Government report just published, is 857,046. That volume, however, would not occasion serious concern if the proportion in the sources of origin was maintained. But the large numbers now come from Italy, Austria and Russia. Two-thirds of the total come from those countries. The numbers are, respectively: From Italy, 230,000; from Austria, 206,000, and from Russia, 136,000. The mere consideration of nationality is not so important, however, as the prevailing personal type. The majority are of a much lower intellectual calibre, and there is a strongly marked animal cast of features noticeable among them. They evidently belong to races unaccustomed to self government, having for generations been held in stern control by the executive power. The question naturally arises how such men will behave in their new conditions. Will they be able to discriminate between liberty and license? Are we justified in expecting from them that respect for law and order which heretofore, in their own lands, has been yielded under compulsion? Another important fact is that the large majority of the newcomers belong to the ranks of unskilled labor. They do not bring us mechanical adroitness, nor agricultural enterprise; their capital is in their muscles and strong limbs. Those who do work at handicrafts are largely tailors and similar trades. They settle in the cities and come into competition with the already overcrowded ranks of unskilled labor. They are also to a startling extent illiterates. We cannot expect that they should be able to read or write in our language, but the serious fact is that so many cannot read or write in their own. It is difficult to influence such men. If a crisis arose in which it would be necessary to appeal to their minds, it would be hard to convince them. They are accustomed to be held in check by brute force, and there is reason to fear that they would despise argument.

"I am not an alarmist," says the Commissioner General of Immigration, who has given the figures to the press, "but I appreciate the peril that threatens from them, should hard times come." It would be well if Congress also realizes the peril. The time has come when it is necessary to add to the tests with which the undesirable immigrants are sifted from the desirable. We authorize the Commissioners to reject the idiots, the diseased and the criminals. They ought now to have the power to reject those who, by racial instinct, or by mental obtuseness, or by illiteracy, increase the number of the dangerous classes. Until this is done, the churches ought to receive the most liberal support in their home missionary work, so that the newcomers may be reached by Gospel influences.

Always a Way of Escape

THERE is a place in the Hudson where, as you sail, you seem to be entirely hemmed in with hills. The boat drives straight on toward a rocky wall, and it seems as though it must either stop or be dashed to pieces. But just as you come within the shadow of the mountain, an opening is suddenly disclosed, and the boat passes out into one of the grandest bays on the river.

So it is with temptation. You are not to seek it, not to enter into it; God promises no way out in such a case. But if it meets you on your heavenward journey, you are to go straight on though you see no way out. God does not promise "a way of escape" until the temptation actually comes. The way will reveal itself in due time if you only keep on, your way being the way of duty. And remember, that as in the river, the beautiful bay lies just around the frowning rock, so often your sweetest and best experience of life lies just behind your most threatening temptation.

An Important Correction

WHEN we first advertised the Twentieth Century World-Wide Encyclopedia, every line of which is new, we stated that the weight of the twelve volumes was thirty pounds. In a later issue we made a correction, stating that the weight was forty pounds. Now we have just received the first consignment of the bound volumes, and on weighing them we ascertain the accurate weight to be fifty-five pounds for the twelve volumes. We feel confident that such of our friends as may have already purchased one of these sets, or may contemplate purchasing one, will not feel disappointed at getting for their money nearly double the return which we originally promised them.

For the benefit of such of our readers as may have in view making early application for one of the sets, we would here repeat that The Twentieth Century World-Wide Encyclopedia is not an old work, brought down to date by the patching up of old plates, but is an absolutely new production, just completed from new plates made from new type, and never before printed from. It contains the very latest information on every subject that can engage the human mind.

Each one of the 75,000 subjects handled has been carefully and scientifically considered, and treated as though the reputation of the entire work depended on that particular article.

As a Universal Educator, The Twentieth Century World-Wide Encyclopedia is absolutely unsurpassed. It is a great compendium of all human knowledge, whether pertaining to History, Science, Art, Invention, Geography, Biography, Literature, Commerce, Manufacture, or any other subject. It takes in the whole range, and affords, in the most accessible shape, all the light available to the most careful research, and highest expert authority.

The Scholar, the Student, the Professional Man, the Banker, the Merchant, the Mechanic, the Laborer, the Housekeeper, the Mother, the Wife, require Twentieth Century information. The ideas of the last decade will not apply to-day. Things have changed, progress has been made, and an encyclopedia of the Nineteenth Century is as antiquated in the Twentieth as the summer's fashions of 1880 differ from those of 1903.

The publishers of The Twentieth Century World-Wide Encyclopedia realized this fact, and therefore they had a new work prepared, newly written, newly set, and newly printed. And it is this great work, the result of the most modern research, that we here offer in twelve mammoth volumes of about 750 pages each, with maps of every country and State, beautifully printed, and with many superb half-tone full page inserts, illustrating the progress of the world in all its various and exceedingly interesting phases, all attractively and substantially bound in high grade cloth and genuine gold.

Please bear in mind that if you are not entirely pleased—yes, delighted—with this latest and fullest encyclopedia, you may return it within ten days and get your money back. We have only one set for every one hundred subscribers, and only one price to each and all, freight payable by purchaser:

$13 if paid by cash accompanying order.

$14 if paid $2 down and $2 a month for six months.

$15 if paid $1 down and $1 a month for fourteen months.

The set requires shelf-room thirty-three inches long, ten and a-half inches high, and weighs over fifty pounds. This is your greatest opportunity. Embrace it to-day, for to-morrow may be too late. Money refunded if not entirely satisfied.

THE BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

The Mountain Railroad

TWO scenes portrayed on this page give some idea of one of the most wonderful triumphs of engineering on earth. They are photographs taken on the line of railroad which was planned to reach the summit of the Jungfrau, one of the highest peaks of the Bernese Alps. This daring project was initiated by M. Guyer-Zeller, who died in November last, leaving the work only partially completed. The total height he designed to reach is 13,671 feet above the level of the sea. The railroad, however, was to stop 240 feet from the actual summit of the mountain, and passengers were to be carried the remaining distance by an elevator specially constructed for the work. It is not yet certain whether the death of the chief constructor will prevent the completion of the line, but it is hoped that some engineer will be found capable of finishing it. The part already finished, and over which passengers are now carried, runs into the interior of the Eiger Glacier, 9,020 feet above the sea. Starting at Lauterbrunnen, it proceeds up the side of the mountain as far as the glacier, which has been tunneled. Thence it was intended to carry it at the back of the glacier to the Monch, the Jungfraujoch, and thence up the Jungfrau itself. Many passengers avail themselves of the road as far as it has been completed, and so save themselves the labor of climbing. The single rail system is adopted, and the power employed is electricity. The difficulties of constructing such a railroad may be realized from the fact that it was not until 1811 that any mountaineers had reached the summit. Two Swiss gentlemen named Meyer were the first to make the ascent, and since that time others have successfully followed their example. It is, however, regarded as one of the most dangerous undertakings, only to be attempted by experienced mountaineers. It will be a surprise to stay-at-homes to know that there are so many people desirous of ascending the mountain as to justify the construction of a railroad. One can but wish that in the spiritual world there was a similar desire to reach the highest altitudes.

I will lift up mine eyes to the hills from whence cometh my help (Ps. 121: 1).

A Visit to Tolstoi

The famous Russian author and philanthropist has been entertaining an American visitor. Prof. Edward A. Steiner, of Grinnell College, during a recent European tour, made his way to his home, and was courteously and hospitably received by the great leader. Tolstoi was ill when Prof. Steiner reached his estate, but recovered before he left, though he was still feeble. His family had forced the old man, much against his will, to leave the close, little room he usually occupies on the ground floor of the house, and occupy more comfortable quarters in the upper story. During Prof. Steiner's stay, pilgrims came from all parts of Russia to talk with Tolstoi. Members of the revolutionary societies of Europe also consult him, and lay before him their violent projects, with no fear that he will betray them. Tolstoi listens to them patiently, and reasons with them, urging them not to resort to violence, but to develop the kingdom of God within them. Prof. Steiner was assured that many revolutionary outbreaks had been prevented by Tolstoi's influence. He found everywhere evidences of the effect of Tolstoi's teaching and example. There was far less superstition even in Moscow, which is twelve hours by railroad from Tolstoi's estate. Many wealthy men had followed his example in giving away their property to the poor, and others who had not gone to that extreme were active in philanthropic work. It would appear that the Russian Government is mistaken in regarding Tolstoi as an enemy. His advice has more weight with revolutionaries than that of any living men, and it is therefore well for the Government that it is on the side of peace and order. Like the words commended by the ancient Preacher, Tolstoi's advice is from the highest source.

As nails well fastened are the words of the masters of assemblies which are given from one Shepherd (Eccles. 12: 11, R. V.).

Life Artificially Produced

Astonishing results of an experiment recently made by Dr. Charles Littlefield are reported from Alexandria, Ind. A number of scientific friends, at his invitation, assembled at Anderson to witness a demonstration of his discovery. He had prepared a solution of common salt, alcohol, ammonia and other ingredients. After the salt crystals were impregnated with the hydrogen and the volatile magnetism of the chemical solution, they were transformed into living forces that immediately sought nourishment through mediums that Dr. Littlefield termed "feeders." A microscopic examination showed that crystals not affected by the chemical mixture retained their original cubic or square form, while the magnetized crystals were of hexagon shape, with life first appearing in the centre and spreading until the crystals were round, and, finally, of globular shape. A mass of the life substances possessed magnetism of pronounced degree, radiating a power that would separate the crystals and then draw them together again. It was not determined that the germs or atoms would propagate, but Dr. Littlefield was content with what he declared to be the successful generation of life. Such a boast needs confirmation. Many have thought before this that the great secret of the beginning of life, so eagerly sought by the ancient philosophers and chemists, had been discovered, but hitherto man has been compelled to admit that the apostolic explanation of the origin of life is the only true one.

God who quickeneth all things (I. Tim. 6: 13).

A Horse Returns

A remarkable story of a horse's instinct is told in a press dispatch from Dover, N. J. A lady who lives at Mine Hill, disposed of her saddle horse about three months ago to a New York dealer. He sent the animal by rail to Hackettstown and thence drove it a distance of six miles to Schooley's Mountain, where he intended to keep it in pasture during the summer. A few days ago the lady who had sold it, was surprised to see the horse standing at the door of its former stable at Mine Hill. It whinnied with delight on seeing her and showed its pleasure at being back in its old home. It was flecked with foam and its hoofs and legs were scratched, probably with jumping fences and traveling through rough country. The strange feature of the affair was that the horse had never before been driven over the road lying between its home and Schooley's Mountain, which is fifteen miles off. How the animal could have found its way over a country it had never before traversed is a mystery. Attention seems to be a gauge, the power of which has not yet been recognized. We can but wish, as did the ancient prophet, that men showed as much fidelity to it as do the animals.

The ox knoweth his own owner, And the ass his master's crib; but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider (Isa. 1: 3).

Mistaken for a Burglar

An officer of a Presbyterian Church in New York, narrowly escaped arrest at the hands of a zealous policeman a few day ago. He had occasion to go to the church one afternoon during the week, and while there, noticed a stain of damp on the ceiling. On examination, he discovered that it came through an open skylight. He climbed to the roof to close the window, and while there crawled around to examine several other places where there was a possibility of the rain getting in. Some of the people in the neighborhood saw him on the roof, and not recognizing him, called the attention of the policeman on post to his movements. Knowing that the church had been entered by burglars more than once recently, and the poor-box robbed and hymn-books and other property stolen, he concluded that another burglary was being attempted. He summoned other policemen from the station-house, and as soon as there was a sufficient force to prevent the escape of the supposed burglar, a shout was raised for him to come down and surrender. The church officer, being conscious of his innocence, bade the policeman go away, and assured him no mischief was intended. That reply did not satisfy the guardian of the peace, and producing his revolver, he ordered the supposed burglar to descend immediately. Obedience was necessary then, and happily some members of the church, who knew him well, met him when he reached the ground and prevented his arrest. It is not the first time that a man desiring to do good to the church has been mistaken for an enemy of it. The men whose names are now held in reverence as true reformers and preachers of the truth were in their day denounced and persecuted by those who professed to be the most zealous friends of the church. The reproach uttered by Stephen has been deserved in every age.

Which of the prophets have not your fathers persecuted? (Acts 7: 52).

A STATION ON THE JUNGFRAU RAILROAD

RESTAURANT AT THE TERMINUS

BRIEF NOTES

Japan has the cheapest postal system in the world. The ordinary postage on a letter from any town in Japan to any other is two sen (one cent).

A Christian Scientist of Toronto, Canada, has been convicted of manslaughter, he having neglected to employ medical aid for his child, who died of diphtheria. The Court of Appeals has confirmed the verdict.

The Spurgeon Orphanages are supported by the late Pastor C. H. Spurgeon, to which purpose he bequeathed £20,000. At the annual anniversary recently, a lady gave a check for five thousand pounds on the collection plate.

Our Household Circle

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

Whom Having Not Seen

WHOM having not seen, we love! Every Christian who really knows the sweetness of fellowship with the Saviour, understands this apparently difficult thing. Sight is not necessary to love, nor to faith. Tens of thousands of devout hearts to-day, follow Jesus of Nazareth with passionate loyalty and unswerving devotion.

"The healing of His seamless dress
Is by our beds of pain,
We touch Him in life's storm and stress,
And we are whole again.

And warm, sweet, tender, ever yet
A present help is He,
And faith has still its Olivet,
And love its Galilee."

In every-day experience we have illustrations of this love that pours itself around an unseen object.

. . .

Which of us has not our heroes that we love: Washington, Lincoln, Grant, Lee, Jackson, Farragut, Dewey, Schley, Sampson, McKinley, men whose hands we never clasped, but whom our souls have held in honor and reverence? Sight is not essential to love, but knowledge is, and we have knowledge of many whom we never see. We may have deepest, fullest knowledge of Jesus Christ our Lord.

. . .

When I hear some one say, I could love and follow Jesus, if he were here now, as he was when the disciples heard his voice and left their nets and followed him; I long to tell them that it is as easy now as then. Love knows the way yet, though it leads straight on and up through the jasper walls. In many an hour of woeful perplexity, in many a time of trial, and in many a day of care and loss, Jesus comes to us yet, as near, as real, as much ours, as he was when he talked with Peter and John or with Mary and Martha. We have not seen him with these purblind eyes that see so little, but the soul's vision has caught the radiance of his look, and the soul's fealty has been pledged to him. "Though now we see him not, yet believing, we rejoice in him with joy unspeakable and full of glory."

Leading a Song Service.

The leader of a service of song must not be a wooden Indian of a man, nor a mere machine of a woman. Magnetism, feeling, precision, and a habit of command are all indispensable, and must be blended in the successful leader. Some of our young people, who desire to be of real use in public meetings of a religious order, may find their vocation here:

"Take my voice and let me sing, Always, only, for my King," is a prayer that is in place on Christian lips. And if one have a voice, and it be strong, rich, sympathetic and pure, why shall it not be a leader's voice too, helping others to lift their praises to the Most High?

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—GENE. Offer your arm to no woman unless she is blind, old or ill.

—JANE. Why force a little girl to wear a dress she hates? Give it away and make her another.

—LUCY M. Don't fuss over a man's hat and stick. He can usually find a place to put them down.

—VIOLET. It is decidedly unfair to both your admirers to leave each in ignorance of the other's existence. I fear you are a flirt.

—LEIL. Eaves-dropping and the reading of another person's letters secretly are both very dishonorable practices, and a mother is not justified in pursuing them with her grown daughter. The daughter's resentment is natural.

—HELEN. Canary birds? Well, keep their cage very clean, and hang it neither in a stiff breeze nor in a hot sun. Give them fresh water for bath and drinking and plenty of seed, with a little green stuff now and then. Talk to them, pets suffer from loneliness, more than you think.

—GOLDEN WEDDING. Decorate with yellow flowers and yellow ribbons, and present the bride and groom of the function with golden gifts if practicable. Golden wishes may certainly be brought to the honored pair.

Bits for You

Avoid superlatives and exclamations that add nothing to the force of your speech.

Don't fan on the back of your neighbor, nor send an icy shiver down her spine while you are cooling off.

Thunder-storms will be frequent this season. They always are in hot weather. Repress your terror if you feel it. Ask God to help you rise above its bondage. Be very tender and gentle with those to whom electric storms are a sense of dread and pain.

A Bit of Talk with Our Boys

"BLESSED are the pure in heart," said the Master, "for they shall see God."

I have been thinking a good deal lately about the need there is for boys to avoid every thought that can blur their minds and defile their purity. Boys cannot always be sheltered under the home roof, nor guarded from outside temptations. As they mingle with others, they may meet those whose speech is tarnished by profanity not only, but by something worse—by indecency and immodesty. They may hear allusions and tales which they would blush to repeat to their fathers and mothers, and which would fill them with indignant anger, were they so much as mentioned in the presence of their sisters. Evil-minded persons sometimes offer boys books and papers which are as poisonous, and as shocking as if the Prince of Darkness had inspired them, as indeed he has.

. . .

I want to plead with every growing boy to be clean-minded and pure-hearted. Refuse to listen to anything which must be whispered under breath. Refuse to read anything you must hide from parents and teachers. Refuse to associate with vile persons, or with those whom you know have two sides, one shown to society, and one displayed in secret to intimate friends. If a boy is disposed to talk in a way your mother would condemn, let that boy go on a separate road from yours.

Once the pure, clean surface of one's mind has been stained, once the door of one's heart has been set open to wrong thoughts, the backward steps are difficult, and the sense of loss is terrible. Christ can and does wash away our sin if we repent and believe. But there is wilful sin that all noble boys should avoid, as they would avoid smallpox or yellow fever were either of those pestilences raging in their neighborhood.

. . .

Boys who are at school, or in business, and at the age when a boy is putting away childish things and taking on larger responsibilities, need this caution. It is the pure in heart, to whom clear vision is given, who see God! What does this mean? Surely not something in the future, when they shall behold the face of the Father in glory. I think it means something fine and beautiful and splendid right now. It means discerning the right, the best, and knowing God's will without struggle, and seeing ever before one a light that guides in the straight and safe pathway.

. . .

A boy should not brood nor waste his time in day dreams and fancies. When not busy in work with hands or brain, there is nothing better than good, hard, honest play; than sport that tires you a bit, and sends you to bed sleepy enough to lose your waking self as soon as your head touches the pillow. Baseball, basket-ball, tennis, golf, are all good games, because they are all in the line of good and clean and wholesome sport. They are played in the open; they need no screens, no sentries on guard, no furtiveness. A boy who excels in athletic sport, or who can hoe his row well on the farm, who is thorough and diligent in his work, whatever it is, that boy is apt to be clean of mind, as well as hale of body.

. . .

If you suspect wrong any where, do not wait for certainty; give yourself the benefit of the doubt. Take counsel of your father, or your mother. A boy who is in the confidence of his parents, has armor of proof against the devil in this world, where it is every one's business to fight the devil and down him, and put him to flight, as Christian did Apollyon.

Stocks and Belts

Among the prettiest accessories of a young lady's toilette are stocks and belts, and of course they are always acceptable presents to her. Stocks are made of silk or linen, of cambric or linen, are tucked finely, or fagoted, a term for covering with little knots, embroidered, lace-trimmed, and made after a variety of patterns. If a girl discovers a new fashion in stocks, she either keeps it herself as long as she can, or sends word to her friends, so that they too may enjoy it. A pretty stock adds the last touch to an elegant summer gown. The tidy and trim young woman takes the greatest pains to put on her clothes with care. Her shirt waist is not thrown at her, it is adjusted with extreme neatness, and her belt covers the line between skirt and waist. Not every young woman is a great beauty, but every one may be as trim and neat as a yacht ready for a race over ruffling waves on a breezy day. Neatness is better than mere good looks.

TRUDGING ALONG

Cheery little comrades, never less than gay,
Trudging on so merrily in the summer day.
Little Joe and sweet Babette, marching on to meet
Father who is coming, his little ones to greet.
Darling children, sturdy, brown, and worth their weight in gold,
If ever, in the market-place, were two such darlings sold.

THE BEST—FOR THE MASTER

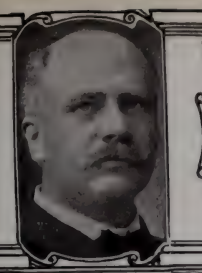
MARGARET E. SANGSTER

IN her vase of the fair alabaster
She brought unto Him as was meet
Her gift of the best, to the Master,
And broke it in love at his feet.
Those feet that were blistered and burning,
She bathed in the perfume so rare,
And swathed them in tenderest yearning
In the soft silken veil of her hair.

Oh, sweet as we read the dear story,
The fragrance that clings to the page;
And deathless the halo of glory
Investing her age after age.
The Mary, who, greatly forgiven,
Loved greatly: whose love was expressed
In a deed that found blessing from heaven,
Who poured on the Master her best.

Oh, let us be large with the Master,
Not mean as the miser, who hoards
The treasure that seems to him vaster
Than a look and a smile of his Lord's.
Oh, bring Him sweet youth with its gladness,
Its wonder of zeal and of joy;
The grace of its sometime brief sadness,
Its gold, without selfish alloy.

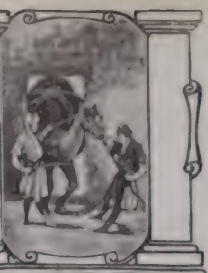
For see! He is giving us ever
The whole of his kindness unpriced;
Earth hath not a sword-thrust to sever
One soul of his loved, from the Christ.
Come, gather the best in the morning;
Come, give Him life's dew ere it dry,
And answer the world's bitter scorning,
With a song that goes swift to the sky.



THE NARROW GATE

by REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON, D.D.

Author of "In His Steps."



CHAPTER IV.—Continued

THE billiard rooms connected with the saloons also were crowded with players, all of them smoking, many of them young men from the farms, and evidently learning for the first time not only how to play billiards, but to play the game of lost manhood. Douglas found his blood at fever heat as he watched all this human tragedy, and reflected that the cool, complaisant, smiling bartenders, who represented the one business of the United States that of set purpose deliberately makes more money for less labor than any other form of barter known to the human race; and his soul felt volcanic at the thought of the men, who after two thousand years of Jesus Christ in the world, vote year after year to license the most gigantic sin of civilization, simply because it is political or financial policy to do so. What! shall we bolt the party? Shall we offend the rich brewers and distillers who can furnish so many votes for the success of the party? Of course, the saloon is bad, and excessive drinking is bad, and drunkenness is vulgar, and it would be better not to have the saloon. But it is an evil that must be "regulated." License it, and make it pay heavily for current expenses. But it is a form of human passion that cannot be prohibited. Let us regulate it and not say so much about it. In any case, our party must not be disturbed. It will not do to intrude radical measures about the saloon into our great national or state conventions. It will cost us votes. Neither is it the place of the preacher to agitate about the saloon from the pulpit. Let him stick to the Gospel. The pulpit is not the place for politics. Let the pulpit stand for the simple Gospel. When we business men go to church we are tired; we don't want to be stirred up over these questions, we don't want to have our minds agitated over politics. We get all we want of that during the week. Sunday we want to be soothed with a comforting Gospel, led to thoughts of heaven and the future reward and eternal life. Don't worry over this old question of prohibition. You cannot prohibit anyway. Give us the Gospel on Sunday, and we will support the Gospel liberally. But we will not support politics in the pulpit.

And will you tell us, Christian voters of America, how many pulpits in America are giving the business men a "soothing Gospel" of generalities and platitudes and rhetoric for fear of offending the rich and influential pew-holders, while what the business men in all the saloons, states, and cities need is an earthquake of applied Gospel from the pulpit on the sin of licensing the saloon, an earthquake of applied Gospel that shall make it so disturbing for the business man and voter, that either he or the prophet in the pulpit will have to resign from that church or work together at the prayer-meeting and the polls for the extermination of the world's greatest public enemy.

Douglas had gone in eight of the ten saloons but had not found Quits. In two saloons he found trace of him, but he had just gone out. In every saloon Douglas found the usual appalling crowd of young men. He calculated the probable number of men, old and young, in the prayer-meeting at all the churches in Colby that night compared with the number in the saloons. There were ten saloons and fifteen churches.

When he had finally made the rounds of every saloon without finding the pressman, it was half-past nine. He came out on the street sick at heart over the things he had seen and doubtful what to do next. Finally he decided to go back once more to the Wayside Inn, acting on a word dropped by one saloon frequenter that Quits may have gone back there.

He went in, and found the place crowded, but the pressman was not there. After waiting a few moments he went out. As he was leaving, he heard loud talking at the farther end of the bar, and noticed two young men who had evidently been drinking heavily quarreling over something. Their angry voices rose higher every minute, and Douglas was relieved to step out on the sidewalk and escape the sight and sound of their drunken folly.

He walked slowly down towards the office, and as he was going by the Methodist Church, which was on the way, he saw lights still burning in the chapel, where Mr. Vernon was holding his meetings for the organization of his Good Citizenship Club.

He stopped in front of the church, debating with himself about going in to see Mr. Vernon. As he stood there he heard loud voices down the street in the direction of the Wayside Inn.

There was an electric light hanging over the street at the corner below the church, and as Douglas looked in the direction of the voices he saw two figures coming up the street. Under the street lamp they paused, and Douglas saw them swaying together striking at each other. They separated and staggered along, cursing, until they were opposite the church. There one of them stooped as if to pick up something in the street to use as a weapon.

What happened next all occurred so quickly, it was so terrible in its results, so entirely unexpected and unforeseen, that Douglas was wholly unprepared for it. There was a flash, a loud report followed by another and another. The figure that had been stooping fell face forward in the street. The other stood still a moment, then turned and ran in the direction of the saloon.

Even then Douglas could hardly realize that a tragedy had been enacted within a few feet of him. With an involuntary cry for help, however, he ran into the street

"Douglas ran into the street and knelt down by the form that lay there" and kneeled down by the form that lay there. The church door opened and several persons came out. Douglas, still kneeling by the unconscious figure, called out, "Mr. Vernon, there's been a shooting affair here! Call help at once!"

Doors opened at the different houses near-by. People began to come out into the street. Down near the saloon another group gathered. Some one said, "they've caught the man that did the shooting."

Vernon ran over and kneeled down beside Douglas. As they turned the figure over from its position face downwards, and Vernon caught the first glimpse of the face, he exclaimed, "Good God! Douglas! This is Mrs. Lane's boy! I called on him yesterday, and he promised to come out to the meeting to-night. He never came, and I was going around to his boarding place in the morning. This is terrible!"

They carried the boy into the church vestibule and had him down on some pew cushions. He was still breathing, but was unconscious. A great crowd, excited and full of questions began to gather. A doctor was examining the wounds. Douglas and Vernon kept the crowd out of the church vestibule where the boy lay. A carriage had been sent for, and a messenger dispatched to that locality to notify the mother of her boy's injury.

Douglas and Vernon, with one or two others, quickly and silently obeyed the doctor's few directions. There had been no doubt on the doctor's mind from the moment he saw the pistol wounds.

Every shot had taken effect. Two of the three were dangerous, one of them fatal. The crowd outside the church was growing clamorous. There were shouts of "Hang the murderer!"

Some of the crowd started down towards the saloon, in front of which, it was rumored, the young man who did the shooting had been caught. As a matter of fact he had been arrested there, and had been taken to the county jail, where the sheriff was guarding him for fear of a lynching.

Fifteen minutes went by, and it was growing more difficult to keep the mob out of the church. Some of Mr Vernon's parishioners were holding them back with difficulty, expostulating and pleading to give the doctor room for his work, when he slowly rose, together with Douglas and the minister.

"It's all over," the doctor said briefly. The news spread to the crowd like lightning. It stunned every one at first, then some of them shouted "Let's hang the murderer!" and the entire mass rushed down to the saloon, and from there to the county jail, leaving Douglas, Vernon, the doctor and the group of church people with the dead boy.

Douglas and Vernon stared at each other, white-lipped and trembling.

"One more! Only one more of the thousands of others in Christian America. O God! How long! how long shall we continue to license murder for the sake of the revenue! We build our cities with blood and our nation is drunk for greed." Vernon spoke sternly and Douglas, unmanned by the swift and awful event, put his hands over his face and groaned as he sat there, the image of that boy on the blood-soaked cushions, mingling in his mind with his own mother's agony over a ruined home. "Tragedies?" these two? Yes, verily. The sin of America is apathy in the face of murder, not of this lad, for he is only one of thousands, but murder daily and yearly committed in the name of politics, selfishness and the worship of mammon. When this Republic has a few more fatalities like these two, it will perhaps be conscious of its awful guilt in accepting the revenues of blood, and pray a just and merciful God to pardon the wrong of centuries and smite the saloon into oblivion.

They carried the body over to the undertaker's, and Mr Vernon stayed there until the messenger who had been sent for the mother, arrived with her. It was morning when the woman came in, almost crazy with apprehension and grief.

The minister silently led her into the room where her boy lay. There with God alone the minister witnessed a scene which could never be recorded. And will God not recompense? Shall all those mothers' and widows' tears and heart-broken sobs avail nothing in his sight?

Though the years pass slowly on,
And the [illegible]

CONTINUED ON PAGE 680

Copyright, 1903, by Charles M. Sheldon

PERSECUTION LIGHTENED By FRIENDSHIP

David and Jonathan

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR AUG. 23
I. SAMUEL 20: 12-23

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

GOLDEN TEXT — PROVERBS 18 : 24 :
"THERE IS A FRIEND THAT STICKETH CLOSER THAN A BROTHER"

THE friendship of David and Jonathan is one of the noblest examples of human affection the world has ever known. Jonathan was the son of a king, the heir-apparent. David was but a young herdsman, with little or no prospect to start with, being the youngest son of his father. Jonathan was thirty-five years old, David scarcely twenty-three. Jonathan wore the garb of a prince; David a shepherd's coat, when he first burst upon the vision of Jonathan that day when he was brought before the king as the victor over Goliath, with the giant's head in his hand. Love laughs at all differences. In that brief moment, Jonathan the prince came to love David the shepherd lad as his own soul. By putting upon David his costly embroidered girdle and other princely garments, and giving him his sword and bow, he virtually passed over his birthright to David. At least, he showed the wish to do it, whether or not it was in his power to do it. "Thou shalt be first in the kingdom, and I will be next unto thee," were Jonathan's words to David a little later. Jonathan thus showed that he loved David even better than himself.

Did Jonathan love David more than David loved Jonathan? Let us measure David's love by the scene in the field by the rock Ezel. A French writer has said: "To love, is to be a candidate for sorrow." So it proved when Jonathan became the champion of David, even against his own father, King Saul. He even suffered an attack on his life by his father, which was all the more flagrant because of the public manner in which it was made. The occasion was the feast of the new moon. David's place at the king's table was empty. And when the king inquired of Jonathan why David was absent, he was told that he had gone for a sacrificial visit to his father's house. In great anger, King Saul commanded that David should be brought, that he might kill him. And when Jonathan demurred, asking: "Wherefore shall he be slain, what hath he done?" even then, in the presence of courtiers and slaves, King Saul threw his javelin at Jonathan himself. Jonathan went out from the banqueting-hall, and sought David, who, by appointment, was waiting for him in the field, having returned from his father's house. David was in hiding, behind the rock Ezel. He saw Jonathan coming into the field, and with him a boy carrying arrows. A bow was in Jonathan's hand. He took an arrow from the boy, stringing his bow, and the arrow sped on its mission—a mission of life, and not of death—for the manner in which it was shot, and the words of Jonathan which followed, although spoken to the boy: "Is not the arrow beyond thee?" conveyed to David the knowledge that, to save his life, he must no more come back to the king's palace. The boy was given Jonathan's bow and arrows to carry away, and when he had passed out of sight and hearing, David came out of his place of concealment, and Jonathan's arms were thrown around him, and his arms around Jonathan, and they wept upon each other's shoulders and kissed each other, until "David exceeded." This certainly means that David's love was not less than Jonathan's. But Jonathan had the greater test.

To use an Oriental term: David and Jonathan were "blood brothers." They had each other's blood in their veins, not by heredity, but through the ceremony of the blood covenant, a part of which was the opening of a vein in the arm of each, when the openings were pressed one against the other, and the flowing blood crossed in its passage. They had entered into this covenant before the Lord, three days before the warning arrows were shot as David was about starting for his father's house. The loving kindness which they had for each other, was sealed as an inheritance for their children. And Jonathan caused David to promise that even after he should become king (for he recognized him as the Lord's anointed), his attitude should not change. How sacredly the promise was kept we know, for after Jonathan had long been dead, and it was told that his son Mephibosheth, lame in both his feet, was living in poverty, David had the cripple brought to his palace to eat continually at the king's table, and had his patrimony, the property of his grandfather, King Saul, restored to him.

After the incident by the rock Ezel, David and Jonathan saw each other but once again, in the wood of Ziph, when Saul was pursuing David to kill him. Jonathan came over into the camp of the "enemy" to comfort David and strengthen him in God. And yet again on this occasion they renewed their blood covenant.

Illustration and Application

I. PERSECUTION. There is no mystery in suffering, so far as it is the manifest consequence of sin. Such a sequence is what is expected in a God-governed world. The guilty often say, in the words of Byron:

> The thorns I reap, are of the tree I planted;
> They tear me and I bleed.
> I should have known what fruit would come
> Of such a seed.

The guilty often find a grim satisfaction in the pain, as if it were an atonement for his wrong-doing.

But when a man suffers, as David did, for well-doing, that is hard to understand and hard to bear. Such a problem made Job's head and heart ache, until he almost forgot his physical ills and financial losses. The best man in the land of Uz had lost health and property at once, and with it also reputation, for his best friends thought his suffering must be a revelation of retribution for his hidden sins. Out of these multiplied sorrows that made God seem his enemy, in those days when there was no Bible to explain affliction, he cried: "O that mine adversary had written a book!" When David came to greater trials he bore them more patiently, partly because the "book" desired, had been written in part. David had the Pentateuch (made up of Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers and Deuteronomy), and probably the book of Joshua also, and he knew what is in the book of Judges, if not by reading, through oral teaching. He had thus learned how God's chastenings of his people were "for good always." The journey to Canaan had become to him a picture of the journey of life. And yet David's trial was a little harder to bear than any preceding case of affliction.

"THEY KISSED ONE ANOTHER AND WEPT ONE WITH ANOTHER"

In Israel's history, the words "evil, distress, repentance, deliverance," had often recurred, but in David's case, more than in any case before him, we see suffering for well-doing. In conquering Goliath, he had saved Saul from dethronement and his people from captivity. While the people shouted his praises, he had conducted himself with great humility, ascribing all honor to God. But Saul seeks to slay him, and the people do not interpose. Even God seems to leave him to the malice of his enemy. It was such a case as Joan of Arc, who delivered France, only to be executed. Such a case as that of Columbus, who gave Spain America, only to be rewarded with chains. This is the outward seeming. But David's eye of faith sees God watching. He cannot be afraid with God looking at him. He sees also God's promise that he shall be king, and, therefore, has no fear that Saul will succeed in efforts to kill him. All the same, he dodges the javelin, and keeps out of Saul's sight. The stone Ezel, where he hides, is a fitting reminder of his rock-firm God-trust, which we find so often in psalms written then and at other trying hours.

A young Englishman riding horseback across snow-clad fields, with a young lady who was soon to be his bride, saw letters written in the snow, and reined up to read them. "My heart shall rejoice in thy salvation." (I. Sam. 2:1). "The work of some madman," he said, as he turned scornfully away. He thought he had enough things to rejoice about; such as health, wealth, marriage; but "salvation" was not on his list. Presently his horse's foot was caught on a root hidden by the snow and stumbled to the ground, throwing him violently on the frozen earth. He was taken up unconscious and carried to a hospital, where in delirium of fever he kept repeating sadly: "Those letters in the snow." When he had sufficiently recovered for conversation, his sister told him of the words he had repeated in his delirium, and asked him what he meant by "letters in the snow"? The question brought it all back to him—the contempt with which he had read, "My heart shall rejoice in thy salvation." Then he felt no need of "salvation," but now in sickness he yearned for it, and through sorrow found its joy. So David learned in suffering what he taught the world in song, that one may learn to rejoice even in tribulation, if he will ever "practice the presence of God."

A good story is going the rounds of a traveler from the city, stopping a few hours in a quiet country town, who said to a woman knitting on her stoop, "You must see a good deal of happiness here." She was partially deaf, but thinking she had caught the question answered, "No, I haven't seen him so far as I know. I am not much acquainted around here, and anyway my eyes are so poor that I wouldn't know him if I saw him coming in at the gate."

> If happiness has not her seat
> And centre in the breast,
> We may be wise or rich or great,
> But never can be blest;
> Nae treasures, nor pleasures,
> Could make us happy lang;
> The heart aye's the part aye
> That makes us right or wrang.
>
> BURNS.

There lived once a young girl whose perfect grace of character was the wonder of those who knew her. She wore on her neck a gold locket which no one was ever allowed to open. One day, in a moment of unusual confidence, one of her companions was allowed to touch the spring and learn its secret. She saw written these words; "Who having not seen, I love." That was the secret of her beautiful life.

> Lord Jesus, make thyself to me
> A living, bright reality—
> More present to faith's vision keen
> Than any outward object seen;
> More dear, more intimately nigh
> Than e'en the sweetest earthly tie.
>
> . . .
>
> Jesus, these eyes have never seen
> That radiant form of thine;
> The veil of sense hangs dark between
> Thy blessed face and mine.
>
> . . .
>
> I see thee not, I hear thee not,
> Yet art thou often with me;
> And earth hath ne'er so dear a spot
> As where I meet with thee.
>
> RAY PALMER.

II. FRIENDSHIP. Persecution is night even though starlit with promises of God. David's case friendship illumed it like a full orbed moon. First an invisible friendship. But he needs also "human friends" such as David had in Jonathan. His love was "wonderful" in three respects especially: First, in that he loved one whom his father hated. He repudiated the code of the feudist, that one must take up his family's quarrel, right or wrong. He saw his father's wickedness in persecuting David, and courteously protested at the peril of his life (I. Sam. 19:4,5; 20-32).

Jonathan's love was "wonderful" second in that he was heir to the throne and loved the one God had chosen to displace him. "Thou shalt be king in Israel, and I will be next unto thee." It was like the case of John the Baptist, from whom the crowds had turned to hear Christ. When John's disciples complained to him of this, he said in beautiful self-forgetfulness, that he served only as "the friend of the Bridegroom" to prepare the way for the marriage of Christ to the Church. "He must increase and I must decrease" (John 3:26-31).

Jonathan's love was "wonderful," third, in that he faithfully warned David of danger. It does not take so great courage to give warning of physical danger, but to warn a friend of his moral danger is about the hardest of friendship's duties. "Faithful are the wounds of a friend" when it is a wound to save. In the writer's Bible, taking a hint from Jonathan's arrows of loving warning, every passage in which the retribution that follows sin is proclaimed, is marked by an arrow in the margin, that we may not think them words of anger, but only warning arrows of the King's Son, who has loved us unto the death.

. . .

Gleanings

OUR ENEMIES

SATAN	APPETITE
UNCLEANNESS	LAZINESS

HOW TO ANSWER ABUSE. An honest blacksmith was once grossly insulted, and his character infamously defamed. Friends advised him to seek redress by means of the law, but to one and all he replied, "No; I will go to my forge, and there, in six months, I shall have worked out such a character and earned such a name as all the judges, law courts, and lawyers in the world could never give me." He was right. It is by honest labor, industrious toil, manly courage, and a conscience void of offense, that we assert our true dignity, and prove our truth, honesty, and respectability.

JONATHAN A "GREATHEART." President Roosevelt being asked by a lady what character in fiction he regarded as coming nearest to what a man should be, answered, "Greatheart." Jonathan was the Greatheart of history.

> Oh, who will walk a mile with me,
> Along life's merry way?
> A comrade blithe and full of glee,
> Who dares to laugh out loud and free,
> And let his frolic fancy play,
> Like a happy child, through the flowers gay
> That fill the field and fringe the way,
> Where he walks a mile with me.
>
> And who will walk a mile with me,
> Along life's weary way?
> A friend whose heart has eyes to see
> The stars shine out o'er the darkening lea,
> And the quiet rest at the end of the day—
> A friend who knows, and dares to say,
> The brave, sweet words that cheer the way
> Where he walks a mile with me.
>
> With such a comrade, such a friend,
> I fain would walk till journeys end,
> Through summer sunshine, winter rain,
> And then? Farewell, we shall meet again?
>
> HENRY VAN DYKE.

Contributions to the China Famine Fund not Previously Acknowledged

A SUPPLEMENTARY LIST WILL FOLLOW NEXT WEEK

Ohio

Abbott, Mrs F E.. 1 00
Abraham, Victor.. 1 00
Achard, Mrs C L.. 1 00
Adams, Miss A.... 50
Adams, Mrs S J & daughters 2 00
Adams, Mrs S.... 50
Adle, Mrs P P.... 1 00
Albright, Charles. 50
Alderson, Jane D. 1 00
Andrews, Geo W.. 1 00
Ayres, Mrs 2 00
Augspurger, Albert 1 00
Augspurger, C C.. 50
Augspurger, Edw.. 1 00
Augspurger, J G.. 1 00
Augspurger, Rev J 1 00
Augspurger, Mrs K 1 00
Augspurger, Louise 50
Augspurger, Lydia. 50
Augspurger, Otello. 50
Augspurger, S K.. 1 00
Ayer, Iva 2 00
Babcock, Mrs M H 2 00
Baer, A E.... 2 00
Baker, H E.... 5 00
Baker, Desta.... 4 00
Baker, Harmon.... 1 00
Baker, Jacob.... 30
Baker, Miss N.... 1 00
Baker, S & wife.. 3 00
Baker, Mrs Wm J.. 1 00
Bailey, W Elmer.. 2 00
Baldwin, A W.... 1 00
Baldwin, Mrs J A 1 00
Barnard, G W.... 1 00
Barnhouse, S W.. 1 00
Barnstter, F E.... 1 26
Bartlet, Mrs 25
Bates, Mrs D R.. 25
Bates, Mrs Eliza.. 1 00
Bates, Wm A.... 3 00
Bauman, Christ.... 25
Bell, Robert.... 05
Beach, Lucy E.... 1 00
Beach, Ruth 10
Beatty, Ollie E.... 1 50
Beebe, Burton.... 2 00
Beeman, C S.... 1 00
Beery, E.... 1 00
Behrendt, L S.... 25
Bellamy, Mrs LE 1 00
Bender, Geo 1 00
Bingaman, D A.... 3 00
Bisel, Mrs B.... 1 00
Bitts, Mrs 25
Blacker Chas E.... 1 10
Boetler, Mrs 06
Bordner, Mrs E.. 1 00
Bouhand, G Grinnell 1 00
Bouman, Mrs 50
Boyd, Miss M L.. 1 00
Boyd, Mrs Marlon. 1 00
Bradford, M S.... 10 00
Bradley, Mrs Z M 1 00
Branson, Mrs A M 2 00
Brenneman, Mrs L 1 00
Brenneman, S S.... 1 00
Bright, Lottie 6 00
Brindley, J W.... 5 00
Bristol, Mrs 1 00
Bristol, Emma.... 10
Bristol, Starr 05
Brobst, Mrs Cyrus 25
Brobst, Justin.... 25
Brown E W, Catharine, James Margret & Kate.... 4 00
Brown, Mrs S.... 1 00
Brown, Miss Rose. 50
Brubaker, Mrs D.. 1 00
Buckles, W R & E 1 00
Burd, Mrs E.... 1 00
Burgess, Mrs S A. 10 00
Burgett, S E.... 30
Buckholder, Isaac.. 25
Burlingame, Geo.. 1 00
Burr, Mrs E.... 1 00
Burr, Miss M.... 1 00
Burton, Mrs R.... 1 00
Byerly, Miss E.... 1 00
Cahill, Mrs Eva.. 1 00
Campbell, Belle... 20
Campbell, Mrs J E 25
Cameron, Eleanor.. 2 00
Carey, Chas 2 00
Carey, Mrs Chas... 1 00
Carey Mrs L A.... 1 00
Carlisle, Child.... 1 00
Carman, Mrs E.... 25
Carner, Mrs E.... 1 00
Carter, Mr 02
Cassel, H E.... 1 00
Cellarius, M C.... 2 00
Champney, Bradford 25
Chasemun, Mrs LD 1 00
Clark, A 2 75
Clark, S W.... 25
Clark, Mrs V R.. 1 00
Clarke, M M.... 5 00
Clarke, J S.... 1 00
Clay, Mrs Mollie.. 1 00
Clendennin, N E.. 2 00
Cliek, Mrs Hannah.. 50
Cline, Edna 3 25
Cochran, Mrs Jas.. 50
Cochran, W M.... 25
Cole, Mrs R.... 80
Cole, Walter E.... 10
Cole, Warren B.... 10
Coleman, Dr B.... 1 00
Collins Mrs C.... 1 00
Collins, Mrs M F. 2 00
Colmery, DeWitt.. 20
Colville, Mrs S.... 50
Condit, H & P.... 2 00
Conrad, Mrs Jos.. 50
Cook, Mrs J.... 1 00
Cook, L A.... 10
Cowell G A.... 1 00
Coyle, Lillian.... 25
Crawford, Mrs MF 2 40
Crego, O W.... 10
Cummings, Mrs J.. 1 00
Cummins, D W.... 1 50
Curtis, Mrs M.... 1 00
Dalton, O.... 2 00
Davenport S S.... 1 00
Davidson, R S.... 1 00
Davis, Alma.... 25
Davis, Dolpea.... 25
Davis, E C.... 1 00
Davis, John.... 25
Davis, Lewis.... 25
Davis, Lydia L.... 25
Davis, Martha.... 1 00
Davis, R C.... 3 00
Davis, Wm 25
Davis, Wm 25
Deals, Mrs R R.. 5 00
Dehnhoff, O P.... 1 00
Dehnhoff, Virgel.. 25
Deldrick, F E.... 6 00
Delhr, John 50
Deininger, J H.... 2 50

OHIO—Contd

Deitch, Rosa 1 00
Delap, Clara E.... 1 00
Denier, Mrs D J.. 75
Denscher, Maggie.. 25
De Voe, Mrs S.... 1 00
Dibble, C F.... 50
Dibble, Mrs C F.. 25
Dickerson, O H.... 5 00
Dine, Wm 25
Dloura, A S.... 2 00
Dodd, J F.... 2 00
Doerfler, S 1 00
Dole, J A.... 25
Dombush, L.... 1 00
Doner, C & M.... 2 00
Denham, Fannie.. 1 00
Dosson, Mrs M.... 50
Doubs, B J.... 50
Doutte, Esther.... 3 00
Downing, Mrs WW 50
Drake, Miss C.... 1 00
Dumbauld, Mrs H. 1 00
Dunham, C E.... 25
Dunlap, Mrs Hattie 50
Dunlap, Miss Mary 1 00
Dupler, Mrs Amanda 25
Dustin, H L.... 10
Early, Watson.... 1 00
Easterbrook, Mrs. 25
Eby, W M.... 1 00
Easterday, Mrs P 15
Eckert, A.... 1 50
Eckert A W.... 1 00
Edgerton, Lottie.. 2 00
Ehrhart, A M and T E McCaskey.. 2 00
Elverson, Mary.... 25
Elverson, Mrs S S 25
Elder, Rev J F.... 25
Elliott, J K.... 05
Elliott, Leon.... 05
Elliott, Robert.... 05
Emery, Jessie and Belle Schooley.. 3 00
Eubanks, W G.... 1 00
Evans, Maggie E.. 1 00
Ewing, Frank C.. 1 00
Ewing, Lizzie.... 1 00
Fackler, Jno 5 00
Fouke, Susan E.. 1 25
Ferguson, R B.... 50
Ferguson, Vertue.. 2 00
Ferree, Mrs 25
Ferris, Lizzie.... 1 00
Fetters, A D.... 1 00
Fetters, Enoch.... 1 00
Fetters, Anna.... 25
Finch, Mary L.... 1 00
Findley, Mrs T L. 5 00
Fisher, Mrs Allie. 25
Fisher, Mrs 25
Fisher, Mrs B F.. 25
Fisher, Mrs Fanny 3 00
Fisher, Miss Grace 25
Fisher, Mrs L B.... 25
Fix, Inez M.... 25
Fix, Mrs Chas.... 25
Flack, Emma and daughter 1 00
Flissle, Jno.... 1 25
Foltz, Edna.... 10
Foltz, Florence.... 05
Foltz, Jno 10
Foltz, Sam.... 05
Ford, T G.... 10 00
Foster, Miss Bertha 25
Foster, Josephine.. 1 00
Foster, R.... 10
Fox, Miss Sarah C 5 00
Freeland, Mrs 10
Freeman, Mrs E.. 2 00
Freeman, Mrs H C 45
Frees, Mrs Cora.... 1 00
Frees, Miss Myra.. 1 00
Frees, Norton.... 25
Frees, Mrs S J.... 1 00
Fribley, Dollie L.. 35
Friend, B J.... 1 00
Fry, Jas 2 00
Fuller, Katherine G 2 00
Fulton, Margery.. 10
Fulton, Mrs Jos.. 3 50
Furnace, Mrs S.... 2 00
Garlock, Mrs.... 2 00
Garman, Mrs K.... 25
Garver, Jno 1 00
Geauque, A A.... 25
Geauque, Mrs C.... 50
Geiser, Daniel.... 1 00
Geyer, Ernest.... 2 00
Gilbreth, Mrs A.. 2 00
Gillmore, J W and family 7 00
Gilmore, Nancy.... 25
Gitteau, Wm S.... 2 00
Glasgow, Adam.... 5 00
Glass, Wm 2 00
Glenn, Miss 25
Glenson, Mrs E S.. 1 00
Good, J I.... 25
Goodman, Lydia & Wife 5 00
Gougler, Clara.... 25
Gougler, Fannie.. 10
Graham, C O.... 1 00
Graham, Mrs C.... 1 00
Graham, Newton.. 1 00
Gray, Guy.... 1 00
Green, B W.... 2 00
Green, Mrs C.... 1 00
Greene, Hattie.... 2 00
Greenoe, Klnnie.. 10
Griffin, Mrs Maud H 3 00
Griffith, Mrs A.... 10
Griffith, James T. 5 00
Griffith, Mrs R.... 10
Grimes, Mrs W.... 25
Grimes, Millie.... 3 00
Griswold, Mrs E A 3 00
Grover, S N.... 1 00
Guller, Lewis.... 05
Gunzey, Emerson.. 25
Hadley, Deborah L 2 00
Haines, Chas W & wife 25
Haines, Mrs Mary B and friend.. 2 00
Hall, I Brayton.. 50
Hall, Lewis 05
Hall, Mrs Margaret 20
Hammond, Alice.. 50
Hardle, F M.... 25
Harper, Albert.... 25
Harper, Iva A.... 10
Harpster, Mrs Dora and S Sch Class.. 1 90
Harrison, Miss M. 2 00
Harry, Sarah.... 10
Hart, Mrs I L.... 1 00
Hartong, Allen.... 50

OHIO—Contd

Hartman, Mrs J M 1 00
Hartong, Mrs Al Ien 25
Hartong, Mrs E.. 75
Hartong, Mi L.... 50
Hartong, Inland .. 10
Hartong, S S 1 00
Hartong, Mrs Sam. 50
Hartong, Sol.... 1 00
Hartong, Mrs Sol 1 00
Hartong, Unity .. 10
Hastings, Mrs Emma R 2 00
Haverfield, Mrs N T 2 00
Hawkins, Lydia E, Coll by.... 10 00
Heft, Mrs Geo.... 25
Heilen, Matilda.... 25
Heilen, Olive.... 25
Heisey, M E.... 1 00
Helser, D M.... 1 00
Helser, Mrs M 1 25
Helser, Mrs Mary. 50
Helser, Mrs Sarah E 25
Henaling, A F.... 1 00
Herbster, Jacob.. 1 00
Herbster, Mrs J.. 50
Herchelrode, Mrs. H 1 00
Hering, Anna.... 1 00
Herriman, Mrs A, Supt Red Hill S S 1 40
Herring, Louisa M 50
Herring, May M.. 5 00
Herring, Ross H.. 50
Herriman, Tillie.. 25
Herron, Wm C.... 10 00
Hetsle, Gottlieb.. 1 00
Heylmann, Mrs C 2 00
Heylmann, W H.. 1 00
Hildenbitle, H.... 50
Hill, Jas A 2 00
Hills, Mrs J.... 50
Hinkle, Mrs Jno.. 25
Hirst, Alcha C.. 10
Hirst, Elizabeth.. 50
Hirst, Mariah.... 25
Hiskey, Lloyd S... 50
Hobson, A J 2 00
Hollingsworth, Mrs S 2 00
Hopkins, Maria T.. 1 00
Horn, Margaret.. 1 00
Hornbeck, Cora.... 1 00
Houck, Mrs Gabe.. 25
Houck, Mrs Jno.. 10
Houcker, Peter.... 25
Hover, Celestia.... 10
Hover, E 50
Hover, James B.. 1 40
Hover, Wm H.... 1 00
Howe, Edwin J & wife 1 00
Howes, Miss Sadie 1 00
Howes, Mrs Jno.. 10
Howey, Geo 1 00
Howick, S F.... 1 00
Howick, W H.... 1 00
Hubbard, C L.... 5 00
Huffman, Mrs Cora 1 00
Hughes, Mrs Margaret 2 00
Hummleott, Miss Mary M.... 6 00
Humphreys, David. 25
Hunter, Mrs H 3 00
Hunter, Mrs Eliza 1 00
Hunter, Wm 2 00
Huntley, Mrs W S. 1 00
Hutchinson, Mrs S 5 00
Inboden, Abram.. 1 00
Inboden, Isaac.... 35
Jackson, Mrs Jennie 2 00
Jacobs, W T.... 1 00
Jahrans, Alfred.... 1 00
James, Mrs C.... 25
Jamison, Mrs Y.... 50
Japp, V K.... 1 00
Jeffres, Olive E.. 50
Jenkins, Alvina.... 2 50
Johnson, Mr Supt W Grove S S.... 8 74
Johnson, Loreua V 1 00
Johnson, Mrs Marie 1 00
Johnson, Retta.... 10
Johnson, Mrs W R 50
Johnston, Jennie.. 1 50
Jones, Mrs 25
Jones, Rev D L.... 1 00
Jones, Rev L S.... 1 00
Jones, Mrs R W.... 25
Judkins, Lee C.... 1 00
Judy, J K.... 50
Kain, Mrs Felicia. 1 50
Kane, Miss Mgt.. 1 00
Kauffman, F B.... 50
Keen, Miss Mary Brown 2 00
Kelsey, C K and wife 5 00
Kelton, Daisy.... 10
Kendrick, Miss C. 1 00
Kenestrick, Mrs E 2 50
Kennel, Alex.... 1 00
Kennel, C I.... 1 00
Kennel, J J.... 1 00
Kennel, Jno Sr.... 1 00
Kennel, Jno C.... 1 00
Kerr, W S.... 3 50
Killinger, Rudy.. 05
King, Edna, Minnie and Tommie.. 1 00
King, M S.... 25
Kinnison Lillian.. 05
Kinnison, Mary.. 05
Kinnison, Mrs W L 25
Kinsey, Miss Mary 2 00
Kinshiger, Rudolph 50
Kinsinger, Samuel.. 1 00
Kirkbride, M and E 2 00
Kiser, L and Mrs 25
Kittel, Rev F.... 10 32
Kleber, Ida.... 1 00
Klopfenstein, Mrs S U 2 00
Klose, Mrs Kate.. 25
Knox, Phebe.... 05
Knox, Ethel L.... 10
Kolb, Mrs 25
Koontz, S D.... 50
Koontz, W W.... 20
Kramer, A J.... 1 00
Kramer, Wm H.. 1 00
Krehbiel, H J.... 2 00
Kresco, R M.... 1 00
Krieger, David.... 1 00

OHIO—Contd

Kruse, Jno.... 1 00
Kuhlman, Jno.... 25
Kuhlman, Otto.... 25
Lafler, Flora.... 20
Lamb, Miss I.... 1 00
Lamb, L B, thro.. 5 00
Lambert, Mrs Anna 50
Landing, Mrs J T.. 10 00
Lantzenheiser, P.. 1 00
Larsen, Louis.... 50
La Tourrelle, Mollie 1 00
Laughlin, H H.... 25
Layport, Rev E.... 1 00
Leadbeach, A W.. 1 00
Leadbeach, Emanuel 25
Leffel, Mary A.... 50
Lemon, W F and wife 3 00
Lenhart, Miss M.. 1 00
Lentz, Miss Delia 1 00
Leonard, The Misses 2 00
Lewis, Mrs 25
Lincker, Geo H.... 1 00
List, Cleo 05
Littell, M E.... 1 00
Lobaugh, Mrs 25
Long, B H and Mrs 1 00
Long, Mrs M T.... 50
Lord, Mrs E.... 25
Lotz, Lydia 2 00
Lowrie, Saml 25
Ludwig, Mrs Jacob 50
Ludwig, P Earl.... 1 00
Lutz, Harvey.... 1 25
Lutz, Josiah A.... 1 25
Lyman, C A.... 2 00
Lynch, Cora.... 1 00
McCaughey, Mrs E 10
McClain Mrs Alex and Grace.... 1 00
McClatchy, A H.. 1 00
McClish, H C.... 1 00
McCowan, Abbie.. 1 00
McCowan, Mrs Nettie 1 00
McDaniel, Mrs M. 50
McGrew, Gilbert.. 50
McKinley, Geo R.. 1 25
McKisson, Donald. 10
McMillan, Cora.... 60
Magee, Emerson.. 40
Maier, Catharine.. 1 50
Maier, Noah.... 50
Main, Mrs A V.. 2 75
Manevas, Eliz.... 1 00
Mapes, F E.... 50
March Geo O.... 50
Marsh, Mrs J E.... 1 00
Martig, Mrs Louise 50
Matson, Hanna M. 1 00
Matson, Jno 50
Mattles, L C.... 5 00
Maxwell, Mrs &S Mary 1 25
Maxwell's Mrs F C Bible Cl; Broad St Pres S S, Columbus 14 00
Maxwell's Mrs F C Bible Cl; Broad St Pres Ch S S, Columbus 3 50
Mellor, F B.... 5 00
Merceon, C E.... 1 00
Merrick, Louella.. 2 00
Messer, Mrs Annie. 2 00
Miller, Harvey, family and friends 5 00
Miller, Rev P L & wife 1 00
Mobley, Everett, Coll by.... 2 00
Mock, E and Mrs. 1 00
Moorhead, S F.... 5 00
Morey, Mrs Geo.. 50
Morgan, Miss M E 2 00
Morgan, Mrs 25
Morlan, Kate.... 1 00
Morton, A W.... 25
Morviel, Melvin.. 10
Mosier, Wm 25
Mosiman, Jno.... 50
Mowrey, D W.... 3 50
Money, Cynthia.. 25
Munson, C W.... 2 00
Munson, Mrs Lucy 2 00
Murphy, Eliza.... 2 00
Murphy, O F.... 50
Mustard, Mrs R J 25
Myer, Catherine.. 1 05
Myers, Benj 25
Myers, Jennie.... 25
Myers, Louis 5 00
Myers, Lovina.... 1 00
Nash, Mary O.... 10
Neoland's Mrs M.. 50
Neill, Miss Geo.. 1 00
Neill, Lelah L.... 1 00
Newcomb, Miss C 1 00
Newcomb, J B.... 25
Nickle, A M and wife 5 00
Noel, Miss Inez.. 1 05
Normando, Leon.. 1 00
Nouss, Jno 1 00
Nuhn, Jno A.... 25
Oapper W H.... 1 00
Ogdon, D M and Co 25 00
Ohl, Mrs Geo A.... 1 10
Oole, M.... 2 00
Overholt, Mrs J S 10 00
Owens, E O.... 1 00
Ovr'r, Emma.... 1 00
Palmer, Mrs 25
Palmer, Emma.... 25
Palmer, Mrs Barbara A.... 50
Parker, Lydia M.. 1 00
Patterson, Mrs A.. 50
Patterson, Violet.. 25
Patton, Andrew.... 1 00
Patton, Miss Lida. 2 00
Patton, Miss Lida. 1 00
Patton, Miss Phllo 1 00
Paulus, C E.... 2 00
Payne, Mrs 1 00
Pease, A D.... 1 00
Pease, Mrs L D.... 1 00
Pelton, W G.... 1 00
Pickens, Epb.... 1 00
Pickett, A L.... 50
Pickrell, Mrs J.. 50
Pierce Mr.... 1 00
Pfatter, Mrs N J.. 5 00
Pol, Mrs Mgt.... 10 00

OHIO—Contd

Pond, C N.... 1 00
Porter, Jas E.... 1 00
Powell, Emma.... 50
Powell, Wm 1 00
Powell, Wm 1 00
Poe, Mrs A M.... 2 00
Pownes Mrs J C 50
Poll, Jno 2 25
Prentice, Weltha.. 1 00
Radcliff, Mrs Lettie 1 00
Reaves, Almira B.. 1 00
Reed, Miss Clara B 2 00
Reed Miss M A.... 1 55
Reesse, L D.... 20 00
Reichenbach, Mrs H 75 00
Rhodes, Kate N.... 5 00
Rice, Mrs Anna.... 1 00
Richey, Beth and Chas Rose.... 1 00
Richmond, Mrs and Mrs Ross.... 5 00
Ritchart, M R.... 1 00
Ritchie, Harriet.. 1 00
Ritchie, J C.... 25
Ritchie, L T.... 25
Ritchie, Mary C.. 10
Ritchie, Rose.... 10
Ritchie, Phenia.. 10
Robens, Mrs M J.. 25
Robinson, Mrs, M Robinson, Pearl.... 1 00
Rockel, Sarah.... 2 00
Rosebaugh, Mrs .. 25
Rogers, L W.... 5 00
Rose, Mary.... 1 00
Rumbaugh, Mrs M 1 00
Russ, Sarah F.... 2 00
Russell, D H.... 2 00
St Clair Mrs Elizabeth 50
Sandals, Sarah.... 1 00
Sanor, Hiram.... 1 00
Sargeant, C H.... 1 00
Sayre, D S.... 1 00
Schanf A.... 50
Schlosser, Jane.. 2 00
Schwencker, J.... 25
Schneerer Theo C. 2 00
Scholl, Mrs Fred.. 2 25
Scholl, Wm J and Mrs 1 00
Scholl, Saml.... 1 00
Schumacker.... 75
Schuntz, Claus and Sons 5 00
Scott, Carey.... 25
Scott, Mrs Emily.. 1 00
Scott, W 25
Scuder, Mrs 25
Scuder A N.... 25
Scuder, Dora.... 25
Shaffer, Howard.. 25
Shaffer, Lida.... 20
Shaffer, Louisa.... 1 25
Shaffer, Sarah.... 25
Shaffer, Zephaniah 50
Shasteen, Miss Emma 50
Shaw, Mrs A H.... 1 00
Shaw, Elizabeth M 5 00
Shepherd, Mrs F.. 1 00
Sherer, Mrs 1 00
Sherwood W C.... 2 50
Shessler, Mrs J.... 35
Shields, Miss B.... 2 00
Shoaf, Geo 10
Shull, Miss Emma.. 25
Shumaker, Jno.... 75
Sbuss, G A.... 1 00
Sidlesinger, A F.. 1 00
Sidesinger, Anna.. 25
Sidesinger, Hazel.. 25
Sigler, Mrs R N.. 25
Simmons, Mrs Ella. 1 25
Sloth, Ann 1 00
Smith, A W.... 3 00
Smith, Mrs Abbe.. 2 00
Smith, Mrs 25
Smith, Mrs B L.... 1 00
Smith, Carl W.... 5 00
Smith, Mrs Carl W 1 00
Smith, Mrs Chas.. 1 00
Smith, Ella.... 1 00
Smith, H C.... 1 00
Smith, Jos.... 1 00
Smith, Jos.... 1 00
Smith, Lulu.... 2 00
Smith, Ollie & Lillie 1 00
Smith, Oliver.... 5 00
Smith, Theo.... 1 00
Smythe, S S.... 2 00
Snider, L 2 00
Snider, Daniel.... 2 00
Snider, Julia.... 25
Snitf, Elder A R.. 1 00
Souders, F 2 00
Sowers, Allen.... 25
Steele, Etta M.... 10
Steele Milton.... 25
Steele, Willie.... 25
Steele, Wm 5 00
Steer, Rachel.... 10
Stephenson, Geo. & Charles Ringold.. 2 00
Stevens, Geo.... 1 00
Stewart, Mrs M J.. 50
Stewart, R C.... 50
Stines, H 05
Stinebring, Wm.... 50
Stinson, Mrs I C.. 50
Stodter, J and Mrs 2 00
Stoneseker, Mrs .. 50
Strawbridge, Mrs Jno 2 00
Stround, Grace.... 1 00
Stuntevant, D R.... 25
Stuntevant, Mrs A.. 10
Stuntevant, Rose.. 15
Suffel, Cora.... 1 00
Suffel, Irene W.... 25
Suffel, Wm 25
Swank, Noah and Mrs 2 00

OHIO—Contd

Swift, Mrs Nellie.. 50
Sweitzer, Mrs A E. 5 00
Talbert, Emma.... 50
Taylor, W 1 00
Taylor, Mrs R J.... 2 00
Tecon, Elizabeth.. 25
Teeter, Mrs Mary 25
Thayer, L A.... 1 00
Thomas, Wm L.... 1 00
Thompson, Mrs M A 2 00
Thomson, Mrs Sallie 1 00
Thorp, Mrs Jno.... 1 00
Tinkham, Mrs Mary 1 00
Tobias, Mrs Chas 1 00
Vogel, Mrs Geo.... 25
Vonk, Isbrig.... 1 00
Wadsworth, James 1 00
Wallace, E S.... 1 00
Ward, John H.... 25
Warren, Miss M.. 25
Wassing, Wm H.... 25
Watson, Walter.... 10
Waxsharn, David.. 25
Weakins, Thos 5 00
Weaver, Mrs R.... 1 50
Weber, Mattie.... 1 00
Webber, J 50
Weldays, Miss 05
Welling, Mrs Sarah, Treas C E S 1 05
Wellman, H C.... 5 00
Wheeler, Chas.... 5 00
Whidler, Mrs A M 5 00
Whidler, Mrs S A. 1 00
White, Mrs 25
White, Blanche.... 25
White, Mrs Ellen.. 25
White, H A and wife 20 00
White, Dr J A.... 10
White, Mary E.... 10
White, Sarah E, Sr 10
White, Telford.... 25
White, W W.... 25
Whitlock, R.... 1 00
Wilkinson, Ruth.. 2 00
Williams, Mrs 1 00
Williams, Gladys.. 25
Williams, Mrs J H 10
Williams, Rhea.... 25
Williams, Sarah.. 25
Wilson, Kate.... 25
Wilson, Sadie.... 50
Winger, C S.... 10
Winger, Mrs Jno.. 50
Wingerd, Rev E... 1 00
Wohlford, Jacob.. 25
Wood, Miss Hittie and Mrs Rees.. 1 50
Wood, Mrs M P.... 3 00
Woodman, C P.... 2 00
Workman, Miss L.. 50
Small Contrs, all from Cadiz, O, Republican 37 00
Workman, Mary A and Hanna Gordon 2 00
Wright, Jno.... 50
Wright, Mrs Knox.. 50
Wright, M L.... 5 00
Wright, S W.... 50
Wright, Miss U.. 3 60
Wyeth, Mrs W H 10 00
Yetter, Mrs Fred.. 10
Yingling, Mrs 25
Yingling, C J.... 2 00
Yocum, Emerson.. 25
Yocum, Mrs Mary.. 25
Young, C C.... 25
Yost, Frank 25
Young, Mrs C.... 25
Zimmerman, Frank 1 00
Zimmerman, Mary L 1 00
Zimmerman, Mrs C H and wife, Cleveland 2 00
Zouhand, Mrs B C H and wife, Cleveland 2 00
Zwick, Mrs E A M, Saybrook 25
Zwick, Mrs E A M, Norwalk 10 00
Zwick, Mrs E E, South New Lime 1 00
Zwick, Mrs J M, Poland.... 1 00
Zwick, Mrs F E C, Medina.... 50
Zwick, Mrs J G, Toledo.... 5 00
Zwick, Mrs J P, Toledo.... 5 00
Zwick, Mrs J C S, Cleveland.... 1 00
Zwick, Mrs J F, Canton.... 5 00
Zwick, Mrs J M T, Lima 2 00
Zwick, Mrs M A C, Medina.... 50
Zwick, Mrs M R and R B, Shiloh 3 00
Zwick, Mrs M J K, Midland 1 00
Zwick, Mrs M, Lindenville.... 50
Zwick, Mrs R B C, Lindale.... 50
Zwick, Mrs R H S, Toronto.... 1 00
Zwick, Mrs T C N, Brookfield, Akron 1 00
Akron 1 00
Akron 1 00
Akron, Cleveland 1 00
Athens 10
Camp Chase 1 00
Cincinnati 1 00
Cincinnati 1 00
Cincinnati 1 00
Cleveland 2 00
Cleveland 1 00
Dayton 1 00
East Liverpool 1 00
Elyria 1 00
E Orwell 1 00
Glenville 5 00
Hamilton 1 00
Harrison 2 00
Hudson 1 00
Hull Prairie.... 1 00
Lebanon 1 00
Lorain 1 00

OHIO—Contd

Louisville 1 00
Mansfield 1 00
Marion 1 00
Mt Vernon 1 00
Norwalk 1 00
Painesville 1 00
Perrysburg 1 00
Ravenna 1 00
Rockport 1 00
Salem 1 00
Sandusky 1 00
Springfield 1 00
Toledo 1 00
Toledo 1 00
Toledo

Contributions to the China Famine Fund not Previously Acknowledged

Continued

NEW YORK—Cont'd
Balmore, Mrs Geo. 1 00
Banfer, Mrs Mary. 1 00
Barber, Mrs Rhoda 50
Barker, Anna C. 1 00
Barker, Miss A. 1 25
Barnes, Helen M. 2 00
Barrett, Mrs R R. 1 00
Bartlett, Jas R. 2 00
Barton, Miss A C. 25
Bassage, L. 1 00
Bassett, Mrs C M. 2 00
Bates, Edward. 1 00
Beal, Mary E. 1 25
Beam, Mrs A H. 25
Beaumont, Mrs EF 1 00
Becker, Adolph. 1 00
Beebe, Mrs Betsey 50
Beebe, Cinthia. 1 00
Beebe, Mrs Lewis. 50
Beebe, Miss Lois. 50
Bell, Mrs R S. 2 00
Benermann, Mrs L. 1 00
Bennett, Mrs H. 1 00
Bennett, J D. 2 00
Benson, Mrs. 1 00
Besch, G. 50
Best, W F. 2 50
Biddlecome S S. 1 00
Bigalow, Levi. 15 00
Bigelow, T M. 5 00
Billard, B T. 1 00
Bingham, G W. 1 00
Birdlebough, Mrs G L. 50
Blackstock, E M. 1 00
Blohm, Mrs C M. 1 00
Blount, Mrs E. 1 00
Blount, Miss Rose. 1 00
Bogart, Mrs P J. 1 00
Boggs, Mrs W F. 50
Bolton, Mrs C. 1 00
Booth, H L. 1 00
Boothroyd, Mrs T. 50
Borroughs, Mrs. 1 00
Botham, H L. 1 00
Bouton, Mrs L. 1 00
Bow, Mr. 25
Bowen, W C. 1 00
Bowhall, Charles. 10
Boyce, Mrs A. 2 00
Boyce, Mrs John. 1 00
Boyce, M A. 1 00
Boyd, Mrs Martha. 1 00
Boynton, F D. 2 00
Brandes, C & F. 1 00
Brayton, W A. 5 00
Brayton, Mrs W A 5 00
Brenenstahl, Mrs F 1 00
Breslow, B. 3 00
Bridge, Mrs C F. 2 00
Briggs, A. 1 00
Brimmer, Mrs S R 2 00
Brooks, Mrs D C. 1 00
Brooks, Morris. 25
Brooks, Thos. 1 00
Brown, Arthur B. 1 00
Brown, Ela A. 1 00
Brown, John C. 1 00
Brown, Minerva. 50
Brown, Olivey. 50
Buesink, Wm. 1 00
Bundy, H P. 1 00
Burns, Mrs John. 5 00
Burt, H S. 5 00
Bush, Lucy A. 2 00
Cady, Mrs H R. 4 00
Cady, Mrs N W. 1 00
Cairns, Mrs Jane. 1 00
Calkins, Mrs A. 2 00
Calkins, H L &Mrs 1 00
Calkins, F C. 1 00
Calvelli, Dr G. 4 00
Campbell, Miss CB 1 00
Campbell, Flora. 5 00
Candee, Miss A. 25
Candee, Mrs J W. 25
Carpenter, Mrs CE 1 00
Carpenter, Jennie. 10
Carter, Belle. 25
Cary, V R. 1 00
Castor, Mrs E. 10
Chapper, Jas. 50 00
Charles, Mary E. 15
Chase, Mrs S P, coll by. 7 00
Chesebrough, T W 5 00
Church, F P. 10
Clark, Geo H. 1 00
Clark, M E. 1 00
Clark, Susan W. 2 00
Clark, Wm. 2 00
Clement, Mrs S. 1 00
Cleveland, G H. 3 00
Cline, Catherine. 1 00
Close, George. 25
Clute, Mrs D. 25
Clute, Miss Katie. 1 00
Clute, Mrs Maude. 1 00
Coe, J Ida. 2 00
Coe, Mrs Julia V. 1 00
Cole, E H. 10 00
Collins, Miss F. 5 00
Colville, R E. 5 00
Congdon, Rev Dr. 6 00
Cook, Mrs C S. 1 00
Cook, Mrs Geo J. 50
Cook, Lewis B. 2 00
Coolman, Mrs W. 2 00
Coon, Jocl. 1 00
Cooper, Chas. 2 00
Copernoll, Nettie. 2 00
Cornell, Bessie. 1 25
Cornish, Della E. 5 00
Cottrell, Mrs A M 1 00
Couch, Sarah. 2 00
Courson, Clifford. 1 00
Courson, Paul. 1 00
Coursey, Ellen M 1 00
Coville, Mrs Lydia 1 00
Coye, Mrs H A. 2 00
Crain, C. 2 00
Crandall, W S. 5 00
Crane, Mrs E F. 5 00
Crane, J E. 1 00
Crawford, B F. 5 00
Crawford, Mrs J. 7 00
Crosby, Maunsell S 10 00
Cuff, Geo. 1 00
Cunningham, T. 2 00
Darmin, Mrs F. 1 00
Darrow, Joseph. 1 00
Davis, David. 10
Davis, Mrs E W. 1 00
Davis, Mary. 25
Debbie, Mrs Nelig. 25
Decker, Mrs M J. 1 00
Dedler, Mrs. 2 00
Deforest, Mrs G. 1 25
DeGraff, Miles. 25
De Graft, V. 2 00
Delaware Cong. 9 27
Demarest, C H. 5 00
Demarest, Mrs J. 1 00
Denny, Chas B. 5 00
DeRemer, Maria. 1 00
Denton, Monica. 2 00
Dewey, E F. 25
Dexter, Miss F. 3 00

NEW YORK—Cont'd
Deyo, Mrs J H. 1 00
Dickie, Mrs Ellen. 1 00
Dickson, H D. 6 00
Dillingham, E. 1 00
Dorman, Sarah J. 1 00
Dowd, H I. 2 00
Drake, H. 05
Dutcher, R F. 12 00
Dye, Elizabeth. 1 00
Dye, Frances A. 1 00
Earle, Warren. 25
Earlenbach, A. 50
Earsley, Miss T. 1 00
Eaton, Mrs A P. 25
Eaton, F J Adam. 1 72
Eddy, Miss F. 50
Eddy, Geo. W. 4 00
Edgett, J. 1 00
Edwards, E R & fam. 1 00
Edwards, Mary E. 1 00
Egbert, Mrs J. 2 00
Elling, S F. 30
Evans, Dorcas. 1 00
Failling, Mr. 25
Fairfield E W & Mrs. 2 00
Fenton, Joel. 50
Field, Sarah D. 2 00
Finch, Mrs W T. 1 00
Findlay, A. 1 00
Finegan, Florence. 1 00
Fink, Mrs C. (Jr). 1 00
Fike, Edna M. 1 15
Fleming, Mrs Jno. 2 00
Flint, B F. 1 00
Folan, Mrs S. 10
Foote, John H. 25
Foote, Mrs M P. 25
Forbes, Harriet. 1 00
Fosdic, Eliza. 1 00
Furch, Mrs L C. 25
Gaeser, L & Mrs. 1 00
Gage, Chas A. 5 00
Gage, Edna E. 1 00
Gage, Margaret. 1 00
Gailey, Mrs Josiah 5 00
Gardner, E. 1 00
Gardner, Mrs E. 1 00
Gardner, Mary A. 1 00
Garfield Tea Co. 1 00
Garrett, Wm N. 25
Gaver, D C. 1 00
Gero, Mrs Chas. 1 00
Gibbin, Edward. 50
Gibbin, Will. 25
Gibbin, Wm. 5 00
Gillett, Mrs T W. 50
Gillett, Roy L. 25
Gilmartin, Geo E. 3 00
Gloss, Herbert. 1 00
Godfrey, Mrs A. 1 00
Godfrey, Mrs A. 1 00
Gordon, Jas. A. 1 00
Gordon, Mrs J. 5 00
Gough, Mrs C B. 5 00
Grannis, W S. 2 00
Graw, Katherine. 1 00
Green, Andrew. 50
Green, Geo. J. 2 00
Greene, Miss E. 1 00
Greene, Miss M. 1 00
Griffin, Mrs B. 1 00
Griffin, Mrs F E. 1 00
Grittley, Mrs A. 50
Gurnea, R E. 1 00
Hagaman, C A. 5 00
Hagaman, C A. 1 00
Hagaman, C A. 3 00
Hagaman, C A. 2 00
Hagaman, C A. 2 00
Hagaman, C A. 2 00
Hagaman, Mrs F L 1 00
Haight, M T. 2 00
Hallenbeck, A. 1 00
Hale, Henry. 3 00
Hall, Clarence. 05
Hall, Mrs E V. 13
Hall, Mrs Jane. 1 00
Halladay, Mrs M C 1 00
Hallenbeck, E M. 50
Hallock, Miss M J. 1 00
Hamilton, Mrs C. 1 00
Haner, E A. 1 00
Hanner, Mrs Guy. 07
Harper, Mrs H W. 2 00
Harrison, A & C. 2 00
Harris, Mrs L M. 1 00
Harrison, Miss C E 1 00
Hart, Mrs A. 25
Hart, Mrs David. 25
Hart, Helen. 1 00
Hartman, Clarence G. 25
Hartman, Hall. 2 00
Harvey, J E & fam 2 00
Harwood, Mrs H. 1 00
Haskins, Emily. 10
Haskins, L N. 2 00
Hauber, Maggie. 2 00
Heath, Miss E. 1 00
Heath, Pearl. 22
Heeler, Ella. 1 00
Hecker, Oneita. 1 00
Heffer's, Miss E, Class. 1 35
Hemstreet, 55
Hendershott, Miss Kate. 1 00
Hendricks, Mrs M E. 5 00
Hibbard, Mrs C L. 1 00
Higgerson, Mrs C. 40
Hillman, Mrs G W 1 00
Hilton, Mrs Anna. 25
Hobbs, Edw H. 5 00
Hochdraper, Mr. 30
Hoffman, Frank. 10 00
Hogan, Mrs Wally. 1 00
Hooper, Saml. 20
Hooper, Mrs Kate. 10
Horton, E P. 25
Howes, Mrs A B. 1 00
Hovens, Mrs S. 1 00
Howard, Mrs M A. 1 00
Howard & Carlston. 1 00
Howell, Mrs C A. 1 00
Howes, Mrs M HE 1 00
Howland, Mrs H. 1 50
Howland, Miss F. 2 00
Hoyt, N O. 1 00
Hubbard, T S. 10 00
Hull, Jennie. 2 00
Hurshall, Mrs. 1 00
Hunter, Mrs H H. 1 00
Hurd, Miss Eliza. 1 00
Hutchinson, J S. 3 00
Hutchinson, Jno S 2 00
Ingersoll, A M. 22 42
Jackson, H M. 2 00
Jackson, Mrs M L. 1 00
Jacobie, Grace. 50
Janes, C M. coll by 55
Jensen, Carl. 5 00
Jewell, Mrs A F. 1 25
Johns, Mrs John. 10
Johnson, Mrs B. 1 00

NEW YORK—Cont'd
Johnson, Miss H M 1 50
Johnson, M E. 1 00
Jones, C. 2 00
Jones, Eliza. 15
Jones, M L. 5 00
Jones, Mrs H S. 1 00
Jones, R A. 50
Jordan, Mrs M E. 1 00
Joslyn, Elnora. 1 00
Judson, Miss. 1 00
Kasson, Cora. 1 00
Kast, Lottie. 10
Keck, Dora G. 1 00
Kessler, Mrs Jno. 1 00
Kenfield, Mrs Ella 1 00
Kenyon, Mrs D. 2 00
Kerslake, Bernice. 1 00
Kettle, Mrs J G. 1 00
Kibbe, Annie. 1 00
Kimberley, Geo W 1 00
King, Anna C. 2 00
Kingsley, Mrs J. 1 00
Klotzer, Mary. 3 00
Klug, Mrs A J. 2 00
Knapp, Emma. 1 00
Knox, Mrs C M. 1 00
Kort, A W & wf. 5 00
Kouwenhoven, L. 1 00
Lassen, Miss E. 1 00
Latimer, Mrs G T 23
Lawnday, Fred. 25
Layton, Elizabeth. 1 00
Lazell, Edith A. 1 00
Leggett, Cornelia. 3 00
Leonard, Benjc. 1 00
Leonard, Byron. 25
Leonard, Chas E. 1 00
Leonard, Julius. 50
Leonard, M E. 50
Leonard, Theo. 5 00
Le Suer, Jas. 1 00
Lewis, Mrs H. 50
Liable, L K. 1 00
Linaberry, Wm L. 1 10
Linderoper, A. 1 00
Linnell, Miss T & Mrs M A. 3 00
Lipp, Fred L & neighbors. 2 75
Lockard, Mr & Mrs 2 00
Lockwood, Ella. 25
Lockwood, Emma. 25
Lockwood, Mrs MJ 1 00
Long, Clara B. 2 00
Loomis, A. 25
Love, James. 1 00
Low, C. 50
Luke, D P. 25
Lumbard, Mrs J. H 1 00
Lumbard, R C. 1 00
Lyon, D. 1 00
Lyon, Mrs Mattie. 1 00
Lyons, Miss R. 10
McAtee, A J. 1 00
McBurney, Mrs E. 1 00
McIlhinney, Rev J N. 50
McIlveen, Mrs. 3 00
McKeachie, Miss E 3 00
McKenzie, Mrs J. 1 00
McMurray, Mrs J. 10
McNett, Mrs A W 2 00
Mackey, Wm. 5 00
Mackey, Mrs H S. 2 50
S Cl, Pres Ch. 2 00
Mahr, Mrs T. 5 00
Manchester, 25
Marsh, Miss E M. 10 00
Martin, M Affia. 1 00
Martin, Nicholas. 1 00
Mason, C H. 5 00
Mathews, Mrs E. 3 00
Matthews, A D. 1 00
Matthews, R W. 1 00
Mayborn, Mrs H. 1 00
Mayborn, Mrs Lina. 1 00
Maye, Frank. 25
Maye, H. 10
Mellon, Louis B. 50
Merrill, Jas H. 1 00
Merrill, Lottie M. 5 00
Merwin, F S. 1 00
Michaelson, Miss E 1 00
Miller, Mrs C. 1 00
Miller, Mrs S. 10
Miller, Sarah. 30
Millspaugh, M L. 25
Milmine, Mrs C E. 2 00
Mitchell, Mrs T B 50
Mongomery, Mrs N 2 00
Mooney, Amelia. 1 00
Moore, Mrs David. 25
Moore, Mrs B. 1 00
Moore, Martha & Lottie Barringer. 1 25
Moore, Mrs L D. 2 00
Morgan's, Jas, S S Cl in Union S S 2 30
Mosher, Mrs J D. 1 00
Mosher, Mrs L D Cornell. 2 00
Mould, Jno C. 10 00
Mumbulo, H & V. 10
Myers, Mrs E. 1 00
Myers, Eugene C. 2 00
Myers, Mrs F M. 50
Myers, Mrs Lizzie. 25
Myrick, C E. 4 00
Narthup, Bush. 1 00
Neely, David. 1 00
Nesbitt, Mrs J W. 1 00
Newell, Miss M. 1 25
Newkirk, Mrs A H 2 00
Newton, Newell. 2 00
Nichols, A H. 1 00
Niles, Mrs E M. 1 00
Nitram, A. 1 00
Noble, F L & Mrs. 1 00
Oberton, Mrs G B 1 00
Ogden, Alfred K. 5 00
Olmstead, F L. 10
Olmstead, Ruth. 10
Olp, Mrs Eliz. 20
Orcutt, Harold, Irma and Mason. 1 00
Osborn, Mrs. 55
Palmer, Miss. 10
Palmer, Miss B. 3 25
Pardee, Geo. 1 00
Parker, Miss E. 50
Parks, Miss Carrie 1 00
Parks, J H. 1 00
Parks, S O. 1 00
Parshall, Mrs. 1 00
Parsons, F A. 2 00
Parsons, Helen. 50
Partridge, I E. 25
Penney, Miss W. 2 00
Payne, Mrs A S. 5 00
Payne, C. 5 00
Payne, K B. 5 00
Pease, Mrs. 10 00
Pease, M A. 2 00
Peavy, Mrs Chas. 50
Peirce, Mrs Fay. 5 00
Penney, Miss W. 2 00
Perry, H C. 1 00

NEW YORK—Cont'd
Phelps, Mrs Mary 1 00
Phillips, E. 50
Phillips, Miss E J. 1 00
Phillips, Fleda. 03
Phillips, Mrs Jos. 10
Phillips, S S & Mrs. 20
Phillips, Mrs W. 10
Pierce, Daniel. 5 00
Pierce, Mrs. 1 00
Pierce, Mrs N. 2 00
Poole, Mrs Jane. 2 00
Porter, P J. 10
Potter, Alvin. 10
Powell, Mrs A. 1 00
Powell, Mrs E. 2 00
Pratt, Mrs Clara. 1 00
Pratt, Mrs J R. 1 00
Pritchard, Scott. 1 00
Pulver, Mrs Mary. 50
Putnam, Mrs C S. 5 00
Quay, Mrs. 2 00
Rankin, Grace. 25
Ray, Mrs R J. 2 00
Raynor, Mrs L M. 1 00
Raynor, Mrs Sarah 5 00
Rector, L L. 25
Reed, Hattie B. 10
Rellim, A H. 3 00
Requa, Mrs E P. 1 00
Reuber, J. 4 00
Revina, Mrs. 1 00
Reynolds, Mrs L. 1 00
Reynolds, Mrs M. 1 00
Rhodes, E M. 2 00
Rich, Miss Jane. 3 00
Rich, Mrs Sarah. 3 05
Richards, Thos. 50
Richardson, Mrs. 25
Richardson, B. 50
Richardson, Wm. 25
Ridgeway, W E. 1 00
Robinson, Mrs. 2 00
Robinson, C B & Viola M Stone & E L Spanswick. 2 00
Robinson, Mrs D. 50
Robinson, D C. 25
Robinson, J S. 5 00
Robinson, W Lyle. 50
Robles, Raymond. 10
Rockwell, Mrs R. 1 00
Root, H S. 10
Roraback, Mrs. 10
Rose, Howard D. 2 00
Rounds, Lula. 25
Rowland, Mrs. 1 00
Rowley, Mrs J. 1 00
Rudman's, Miss & J Heffer's Cl. 2 50
Russell, Diana. 1 00
Russell, Mrs Julia 1 00
Sanders, Mrs E D 25
Sanford, Mrs C A 10
Sanford, Mrs F C. 1 00
Sare, Mrs T J. 2 00
Satterlee, A. 1 00
Satterlee, Mrs C. 3 00
Saville, Mrs H. 1 00
Scanlock, Mrs. 1 00
Schauber, M E. 1 00
Schmelzle, Mrs H 25
Schugler, Miss E. 25
Schuyler, Mrs E. 25
Scott, Fred M. 1 00
Scott, R R. 2 00
Scott, T D. 5 00
Scott, Walter. 10 00
Searle, Mrs E R. 1 00
Seckner, Ellnor. 2 00
Seckner, Jennie. 1 00
Seward, H. 3 00
Seymour, E A. 50
Shane, Mrs M J. 1 00
Shefcit, Mrs Grace 25
Shepard, Emma L 2 00
Shephard, Mrs A C 1 00
Shephard, Jno. 5 00
Shipley, Miss L G. 1 00
Shoemaker, Rev H R. 1 00
Shufelt, K. 25
Simion, G. 10
Simkin Misses. 2 00
Simpson, Edw E. 5 00
Simpson, F W. 1 00
Sixbury, F A. 2 00
Skinner, Mrs C E. 2 50
Skippon, Alice. 1 00
Slater, Jno. W. 2 00
Slawson, Mrs M A 25
Smith, Alice D. 1 00
Smith, Mrs E. 5 00
Smith, Elias. 7 25
Smith, Mrs J. 1 00
Smith, Lie Mary L Briggs. 10 00
Smith, Mary. 1 00
Snyder, Violet & friends. 2 50
Southall, E W, MD 2 00
Southard, Mrs F. 1 00
Spicer, R S coll by. 1 00
Sprague, Mrs E F, coll by. 50
Sprague, Elsie. 05
Sprague, Mrs Jas. 50
Springer, Mrs L G 1 00
Stainach, E C. 1 00
Standley, W H. 5 00
Stanley, E E. 2 00
Staples, H A. 1 00
Starks, Geo. F. 1 00
Starr, Mrs E D. 5 00
Stephenson, A H. 1 00
Stephenson, Clara. 10
Stephenson, Gertie 10
Stephenson, Morris 10
Stevens, Mrs Allen 10
Stevens, E C L. 1 00
Stocking, H B. 1 00
Stocking, Mrs H B 25
Stormon, Arthur. 20
Stow, Mrs E S. 1 00
Stowell, Mrs C. 15
Stowell, Claude. 10
Sullivan, Miss Ina. 15
Strachan, A &Mrs 1 00
Strang, Rufus H. 1 00
Swanaway, W. 1 00
Stratton, Mrs O. 1 00
Stringham, F C. 1 00
Sturdevant, O W. 5 00
Sturges, Mrs A. 1 00
Sullivan, G S. 5 00
Sutton, I C. 1 00
Sutton, I M & Mrs 4 00
Swanwick, Mrs N 2 00
Sweet, Mrs L. 50
Swift, Ella M. 1 00
Taft, Miss E L. 2 00
Taylor, Addie E. 1 00
Taylor, Henry. 25
Taylor, N. 1 00
Teegen, F. 5 00
Tenbrook, Mrs I & Mrs C E Race. 1 00

NEW YORK—Cont'd
Tew, Lizzie. 5 00
Thompson, A M. 1 00
Thompson, T G. 5 00
Ticknor, Oscar. 05
Titus, M W. 1 00
Toupkins, Susan R 5 00
Tribe, Mrs Jno. 1 00
Trott, E. 10 00
Trumbull, Wm R. 1 00
Tucker, Mrs Wm. 1 00
Turrell, Mrs Dora. 50
Tuthill, W H. 50
Twiss, Mrs Jno R. 1 00
Tyler, Mrs N City. 1 00
Upright, Norman. 1 00
Vail, Mrs G. 2 00
Vanastwerp, Mrs. 25
Van Arsdale, Mrs N S. 2 00
Van Der Veer, Mrs S 1 00
Van Horn, Anna. 30
Van Kleeck, Peter. 1 00
Van Keuren, Ethel 2 00
Van Slyke, Miss C A. 2 00
Van Valkenburg, J 1 00
Vedder, Mrs C A. 1 00
Vergeth, Addie. 1 25
Vickers, Mrs M. 2 00
Voorhis, Mrs E L 2 00
Vosburg, Mrs R. 1 00
Vosburgh, Harry A 50
Vooman, Mrs. 25
Waggoner, Mrs. 25
Wagner, Miss L. 1 00
Waite, Andrew. 1 00
Waldo, Mr & Mrs. 2 00
Waldron, Mrs C D 1 00
Walrath, Chas H. 1 00
Walrath, Mrs M E 1 00
Ward, Alice. 1 00
Wardell, Wanda. 2 00
Wardle, H H. 1 00
Ware, Mrs E. 1 00
Warner, Mrs C C & children. 75
Washburn, B G. 1 00
Washburn, Mrs T. 1 00
Waterbury, Jno T. 50
Watkins, F. 10
Watkins, Fred N. 2 00
Waughel, Chas. 03
Weed, Mrs S A. 1 00
Weeks, Catharine. 1 00
Weismer, Mrs J. 1 00
Wells, Charles. 25
Wells, Laura. 55
Western, Benj. 10
Western, Charles. 25
Wetherbee, H J. 2 25
Wheeler, Lydia E. 50
Wheeler, Mrs M. 1 00
Whitaker, Rev A H. 10 65
White, A L. 1 00
White, Geo. 25
White, Mary I. 1 00
White, W H. 1 00
Whitehead, Mrs A M. 2 00
Whiteman, Rev SL 25
Whitney, Mary L 1 00
Whittemore, F. 5 00
Wichelus, S & Cl. 1 00
Wickser, Mrs E C 1 00
Widdeman, Mrs M. 1 00
Wilams, Melissa. 25
Willetts, Mrs. 10
Willets, Edna. 10
Willett, Chas. 5 00
Williams, Mrs J. 1 00
Williams, R S. 1 00
Willis, W H & family. 3 26
Winant, Inez M. 1 00
Witherspoon, T G. 5 00
Wollaston, A M. 1 00
Wolsey, Mrs Jno. 1 00
Wood, Mrs Alfred 1 00
Wood, Mrs C B. 5 00
Wood, E W & fam 1 55
Wood, Fred. 1 00
Woodland, Mrs L. 1 00
Woolston, Saml. 1 00
Worthington, MrsM 05
Wright, Mrs. 10
Wright, Sam W. 10
Yates, Mrs M A. 1 00
Young, Clifford. 1 00
Young, Miss Ethel. 1 00
Youngs, Hellen. 1 00
Youngs, Leslie. 2 00
Zimmerman, Miss E 2 00
Zimmerman, Mrs J 1 00

Mt Pleasant, Austerlitz. 1 25
Vernon —, Oneida 1 00
Francis, Rhoda & Mildred. 2 50
Lizzie S, New Rochelle. 1 00
Morris, P. 15 00
A A, Old Forge 1 00
A I T, Mexico. 1 00
A J R, Appleton. 25
A N M, St Johnsville. 5 00
A S I H, So Onondaga. 2 50
A T M, Elmira. 1 00
Mrs B, Morrisville 5 00
C A, Hague. 3 00
C L E, N Y City. 5 00
C N C V, Nis-kayuna. 1 00
D G K, Preston. 50
D K S, Gouverneur 2 00
E O G, IndianLake 1 00
E S & J K, Schenectady. 1 00
E W B, N Y City. 2 00
F C H, Wyanskill 2 00
H A D, Cincinnatus. 5 00
H D, Ballston Spa 1 00
H E L, N Y City. 1 00
H G, N Y City. 1 00
H H, N Y City. 2 00
H T B, Groveland Spa. 1 00
J Z L & Mrs, Mendon Centre. 1 00
K & L, Rensselaer 1 00
M E W, Albany. 1 00
M L A, Batavia. 10 00
Mrs M L G, Buffalo. 1 00
M S, Amityville. 2 25
Mrs N N, Buffalo. 2 00

NEW YORK—Cont'd
Mrs R G J, Five Corners. 1 00
R S, Albany. 4 00
S C C, Oneida. 2 00
S D H, Schenectady 5 00
S M S K S, Rye. 10 00
S M J, Bklyn. 2 00
S S S, Binghamton 2 00
V V G, Matteawan 5 00
W A, Fairport. 1 00
W J P, N Y City. 4 00
W L A, Geneva. 1 00
W L W, Hartland 5 00
Y Z B, N Y City. 1 00
—, Albany 50
—, Ancram Lead Mines. 50 00
—, Bainbridge Spa. 5 00
—, Bklyn. 1 00
—, Centre Lisle. 25
—, Centreport. 1 00
—, Chittenango. 1 00
—, Crarryville. 2 00
—, Eastavon. 20
—, E chatham. 1 00
—, Flushing. 5 00
—, Flushing. 1 00
—, Greenville. 5 00
—, Ilion. 1 00
—, Lyons. 60
—, Manhasset. 2 00
—, Mayfield. 1 00
—, Morish. 25
—, Mounds Park. 20 00
—, New Haven. 10
—, N Y City. 1 00
—, N Y City. 1 00
—, Orwell. 25
—, Pawling. 1 00
—, Perryville. 1 00
—, Richfield Springs. 1 00
—, Russell. 1 00
—, Selkirk. 2 00
—, Senior. 2 00
—, Silver Island 1 00
—, Shortsville. 5 00
—, Sprucewood. 3 00
—, Sterling. 2 00
—, Syracuse. 1 00
—, Wales Ctr. 20
—, Walton. 24
—, Warrensburg. 15
—, Wolcott. 25
Cash, Farmersville 10
Cash, St Johnsville 5 00
Faith Tent, Troy, For Jesus Sake, 50
Canajoharie 50
A Friend, Chenango Forks. 1 00
A Friend, Coventry 1 00
A Friend, Fullerville. 10
A Friend, Glen. 25
A Friend, Gloversville. 25
A Friend, King's Sta. 1 00
A Friend, Medina. 1 00
A Friend, Morrisville. 1 00
A Friend, N Y C. 5 00
A Friend, Oxford. 1 00
A Friend, Patchogue. 5 00
A Friend, Spring Valley. 1 00
A Friend, Windham. 10
A Few Friends, Monroe 6 00
Friend, Allegheny. 1 00
Friend, Bklyn. 1 00
Friend, Cattaraugus. 1 00
Friend, Clarksville 1 00
Friend, Cortland. 25
Friend, Davenport 2 00
Friend, Elmira 3 00
Friend, Limerick. 2 00
Friend, Lowville. 2 00
Friend, Milwood. 3 00
Friend, N Y City. 5 00
Friend, Pine Bush 1 00
Friend, Pt Leyden 1 00
Friend, Stanley. 25
Friend, Syracuse. 25
Friend, Tiashoke. 1 00
Friend, A B, Stamford. 26
Friend in Hewes St, Bklyn. 2 00
Friends, Bainbridge 1 58
Friends, Cherry Ck 1 50
Friends, Gloversville. 2 25
Friends, Granville 1 25
Friends, Mt Vernon 15 00
Friends, New London. 1 25
Friends, No River. 2 71
Friends, Sanquoit. 2 00
Friends, Union Springs. 20 00
Friends of the M E Ch, Burke. 4 00
Some Friends, Otego. 60
Two friends, W Saugerties. 1 25
Three Friends, Medford Sta. 5 00
In Christ's Name, Northport. 2 00
H N, Ballston Spa. 5 00
I H N and D I, Bklyn. 5 00
I H N, Elmira. 1 00
I H N, Lacona. 6 00
In His Name, Minaville. 2 00
In His Name, Canajoharie. 8 50
In His Name, Saratoga Spgs. 1 00
I H N, Guilford. 1 00
I H N, Wilmington. 1 00
In Memory of Mrs A B Banks, Crittenden. 1 00
In the name of the Master, Ft Ann. 2 00
Subr, Fairport. 1 00
Sympathizer, Cuba 2 10
Sympathizer, Lowell. 1 00
Sympathizer, Winthrop. 50
A humble disciple of Herkimer. 50
A member of Cornell Assn, Ithaca 25
A Missionary Bklyn. 5 00
A Sunshine Worker, Brooklyn. 1 00

NEW YORK—Cont'd
A Sister in Christ 2 00
Anon, Port Byron 10
Anonymous, Niagara Falls. 25
Children of Grace Chapel, L I City 2 00
Christian Family, Melone. 50
Coll. In Revival Service at Dryden. 5 00
For the dear Master, Venice. 200
Guests at Mt Hope Cook House, Catskills. 5 00
Thank offering, Spring Water. 1 00
Two Endeavorers from Albany. 5 00
Two Sisters, Humphreysville. 2 00
Three Sisters, Curtytown. 25 00
Bapt Ch, Cincinnatus. 10 00
Bapt Ch, Sanford. 4 00
Bapt Ch, So W Oswego. 17 00
Chapel of 1st Ref Ch of Athens. 1 54
Cen Pawling Bapt Ch, Pawling. 21 90
Cong of Shavertown. 3 00
Fist Alfred Ch, Alfred. 1 00
1st Bapt Ch, Batavia. 10 50
First Bapt Ch, Batavia. 1 10
Gaine's Cong, Ch and P S C E. 8 25
Glwood Landing, Presb Ch. 6 67
Manheim Luth Ch, Churchtown. 6 37
Pres Ch, Hannibal 5 00
Pres Ch, Onondaga. 6 00
Ref Ch of Currytown. 5 50
Union Meeting of Bapt & Pres Chs, Ontario. 5 00
United Presb Cong, W Charlton. 28 00
Members of Lansing and Groton Bapt Ch. 4 18
Balmville Union S S, Newburgh. 7 00
Bethel S Sch, Newburgh. 10 00
Chinese S Sch, Albany. 5 00
Chinese S Sch Ch of Disciples of Christ. 55 28
Cong S Sch, Westmoreland. 3 07
Conklin Hill S S School, Callicoon Depot. 5 83
Dansville S Sch, Clifton. 1 25
Emerson S Sch, Moores Forks. 1 13
First Ch of Christ Disciples, Elmira 3 00
1st M E S Sch, Amityville. 6 00
Friends S Sch, Upper Brighton. 3 00
Hall Dist S Sch, S W Oswego. 3 00
Highland Pres S Sch. 4 00
Kennedy S Sch. 2 00
M E S Sch, E Troupsburg. 6 25
M P S Sch, Living-ston Manor. 1 00
Olivet M E S Sch, Syracuse. 5 00
Overlook Union S S Sch, La Grangeville. 2 00
Riverside Union S Sch, Highland. 1 50
S Sch of the 1st Bapt Ch, Hamburg. 1 00
S S Sch of the 1st Bapt Ch, Hamburg. 1 00
W Omega Creek & W Newark S Sch, Meltonville. 3 50
Willow Glen S Sch 1 00
Class No 20, Central Pres S Sch, Rochester. 3 00
Class No 20 Honest Hill S Sch. 28
Miss Training Sch, Buffalo. 7 75
Missionary Train-Sch, Buffalo. 18 37
Primary Class of Sabbath Sch, Byron Centre. 1 00
Advent Soc, Low Hampton. 6 25
C E Society, Bonney. 5 20
C E Soc, Pres Ch, Central Pres. 2 77
C E Soc, Marshville Evan Ch. 12 00
C E Society, Minerva. 2 00
C E Society, Norton Hill. 5 25
C E of 1st Pres Ch, Fort Jefferson. 11 23
C E Soc Pres Ch, Ridgebury. 6 00
C E Society, So Westerlo. 2 50
C E of Friends Ch, W Brookfield. 13 50
Christian Missionary Alliance, Richfield Spgs. 12 00
Church Town Y P S C E. 6 30
Circle of Willing Doers, E Scott. 2 00
Kings Daughters, Amagansett. 5 00
Endeavor Society, E Pine Bush. 4 00
Epw League of Meth Ch, Valley Falls. 2 00
Epworth League, W Stockholm. 6 00
Ger Ref Aid Soc, Clarence. 5 50

NEW YORK—Cont'd
St Remy C E Soc. 2
Highland Pres C E Soc. 8
Homer Epw League, Cortland 5
Hydeville Epw League, Barker. 1
Jr Bapt C E, Mariners' Harbor. 1
Jr C E Soc, Bushwick Ave Ref Ch, Bklyn. 5
Jr C E Soc of 1st Ref Ch, Kingston 5
Jr Epw League, No Lawrence. 2
Kings Daughters of McMasters Corners, Sennett. 5
Ladies' Miss Soc, Noxon. 1
Self-Denial Band, Buffalo. 19
Silent Circle of King's Daughters, Peckskill. 1
The Little Hope Holders, Bklyn. 2
Three Woman's Foreign Missionary Societies of Bapt, Meth and Cong Churches, Hartford. 6
Union Y P S C E, Adirondacks. 5
Union Y P S C E, Parishville. 5
Wilbur Chap M E Soc, Oneonta. 8
W C T U, Churchville. 21
W C T U, Marathon. 10
Young Ladies' Mission Band, Ovid Center. 3
Y P S C E, Adams Basin. 2
Y P S C E, Bluff Point. 5
Y P S C E, Burlington. 5
Y P S C E, Burlington Flats. 5
Y P S C E, Irondequoit. 6
Y P S C E Pres Ch, Pompey. 7
Y P S C E Mem Pres Ch, Rochester. 5
Y P S C E Pres Ch, Weston. 3

Miscellaneous

Anderson, L O. 10
Atkins, Lillie. 1
Bean, Mr & Mrs. 2
Cavender, G. 5
Crawford, A B. 10
Crenshaw, W T. 10
Currie, Mary. 05
Currie, Nellie. 05
Dillard, N. 1
Edwards, E. 5
Endrilly, C H. 10
Endrilly, David. 10
Gardener, Miss A. 1
Hadley, Geo. 25
Hall, R T. 25
Harris, Mr. 1
Haseloff, G F. 25
Hoogeboom, Miss, Maxwell City. 25
Hungerford, J. 1
Kaspersma, J, Maxwell City. 25
Kidwell, A A. 10
Lapp, Mrs S. 25
The McCutcheon Children. 35
Miller, C K. 25
Mitchell, Ethel. 10
Napper, Jas. 10
Noel, W T. 25
Otley, Mrs W H. 10
Pannell, Mrs. 1
Pierson, Chas E. 5
Ponton, Geo E. 10
Sackville, Howard. 25
Satterlee, Ministry. 05
Thompson, R A & wife. 30
Tiny, W T. 1
Tomlinson, H B. 25
Wallace, J H. 25
Ward, S B. 10
Wood, W B. 25
Miss Training Sch, McAllester. 1
Mayberry, —. 50
Harry, —. 50
Wm S, —. 5
Ax-By, —. 1
B H C, Watertown 2
B T S, Fayville. 1
Mrs B, —. 25
L & F, —. 50
M M, Rantoul. 1
W D, —. 50
Y P C L, —. 1
—, Gainesville. 1
—, —. 5
—, —. 3 —, —. 1 —, —. 1
—, —. 1
—, —. 1
—, —. 1
—, —. 10
A Friend, Duke City 2
A Friend, Southampton. 2
Friend, —. 50
Friend In Concord. 10
Friends of C. 75
Children Ref Ch, Maxwell City. 75
Harrington Pk Miss Soc. 2
Prot Half Orphan Asylum, —. 2

Little Lives Brightened at Mont-Lawn

HERE is a pathetic little story of only one of the many little lives that are constantly coming to the "Children's Paradise," Mont-Lawn. When we have the history of one of a class, we have an idea of many in that class.

As the stage drives up, a boy's wan face peers from the side, losing some of the care-worn expression as he absorbs the new sights and sounds, and forgets himself in his surroundings. But when the face is in repose—oh, how sad it is! He goes around as a little old man, burdened with many family cares. For two or three days he is almost unconscious of self, so absorbed is he in his environment, until he remembers his mother. How can she get along while he is enjoying all these beautiful things? He thinks of the family of four at home, without a father's care or provision, and he goes to the teacher and tells her that he is afraid that the baby will have no milk, as he is not there to go after it, or that his mother and the other children will want for food, because he has been in the habit of going to bakeries and obtaining things—stale rolls and bread. This is the pitiful story the teacher sometimes hears. Or the father surely came slowly, but just as God wished it for me. He won't part us, just us four, for I have suffered enough, and all I can ever stand. To part me from my children would break my heart.

If I could not work, I know I should die—die heart-broken. So many talk about my putting with the children. I will work hard for them, trusting my Saviour that they will grow up men to love God.

Such is a picture of one home brightened by the influence of a visit to Mont-Lawn.

Here is a type of another class: A boy with a "Bowery swing" and independence. He disliked to leave Mont-Lawn and persisted in the attempt to return. A teacher met him at the Bible House with a little bundle tucked under his arm. He was slyly preparing to return to the place he loved so well. He thought if he could get on the steamer Chrysteuah unnoticed, he would be all right. As the teacher was counting her little charges after they had reached the boat, she discovered the boy. The captain persuaded him to go home, and the little fellow, much against his will, was finally induced to go back to his own people, having already had his holiday outing.

Among the letters received by the Housemother during the week from may be a drunkard, and the mother trying to support herself and the children, the boy helping her. Such child-love for a mother is to be found even among the very poor.

LITTLE WAIFS HELPING IN THE KITCHEN

One of the teachers became so interested in the little tenement lad in question that she visited his home in the city. It was a picture of neatness. Even the floor was scrupulously clean. The children were poorly clad, but neat. The mother was very anxious to obtain work. The drunken father had threatened the lives of herself and children and now he was in the hands of the law.

Many a day the mother had found the cupboard bare, but she trusted in God to provide in some way, and their trust had not been disappointed.

In a joint letter received from the boy and his mother, after his departure from Mont-Lawn, he expresses gratitude for being permitted to visit our Childrens' Home, and asks our prayers that he may get well and strong and grow up to be a good man. The mother sends thanks for some food that was sent to her from the Mont-Lawn Home, and then says:

I am still hoping and trusting in God that there will be a place somewhere for me in the fall, where I can earn money to support them. I have been promised a place and money for my services. How glad I shall be and how thankful. I am trusting in our Heavenly Father to let me keep my children and home, and for my health. God has never left me, If what I asked for did not come just then, it some of the children who enjoyed an outing this season at Mont-Lawn was this:

Dear Miss ——:—I am glad I am home, for mamma can't walk, she is so sick, and I am here to help her, for she cannot work. My brother is sick too. Please pray for our sick at home. Mamma is too sick to write. She is reading the chapters you wrote to me. Tell Miss —— I am a good boy and am thankful for my going out there. RICHARD D.

Ever since the opening day, this season, our Fresh-Air Home has been crowded with the little boys and girls of the tenements. Applications have poured in this year as never before, and even if the Mont-Lawn facilities were doubled, they would still be inadequate to meet the demand. Many of the letters received are from poor and worthy widows who desire to have their little ones get the benefit of an outing, and as it is impossible to grant all these demands, many are necessarily disappointed. The pleading of these poor mothers for a "little fresh air" for their children would touch even the hardest heart. Many letters are also received from city mission workers, pastors and Sunday School teachers.

Clothing for many of the children is greatly needed. Contributions of garments (which should be clean and whole), should be sent to "Housemother Collins, Children's Home, Mont-Lawn, Nyack, N. Y." All contributions of money in aid of the Fresh-Air work are to be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

56
Years Ago—
Quality
From the starting point back in 1847, when Rogers Bros. silver plated ware was first made and sold, there has been no reduction from the original superior quality.
"1847 ROGERS BROS."
goods were first made at a time when "quality counted." The high standard has ever been maintained—even increased, and to that has always been added the beauties of new designs that progress brings to skilled workmen. To-day the complete trade-mark "1847 Rogers Bros." stands alike for quality and beauty, and is the guiding mark for purchasers of "Silver Plate that Wears."
Sold by leading dealers everywhere. Beautiful patterns are fully illustrated in our catalogue "H-57" sent free anywhere. Address
MERIDEN BRITANNIA CO., Meriden, Conn.,
TO-DAY—Quality and Beauty of Design

Would YOU Consider It a GOOD Proposition?

Would You Consider It a Good Proposition?

If we made you a partner in our business no matter how small your capital?
If we showed you a way to secure your supplies at a saving of 25 per cent?
If we paid you liberally for all business secured from your neighborhood through your influence?

Would You Consider It a Good Proposition?

That's just what we propose to do and it won't cost you one cent to find out.

Cut This Ad Out and Write for Full Particulars To-day. DO IT NOW!

Sign Your Full Name, ...

P. O. .....

County, ... State, ...

Cash Buyers' Union, First National Co-Operative Society,
DEPT. C 18, 158-168 W. VAN BUREN STREET, CHICAGO.

PIANO Do You Want a Genuine Bargain

Hundreds of Upright Pianos returned from renting to be disposed of at once. They include Steinways, Knabes, Fischers, Sterlings and other well known makes. Many cannot be distinguished from new. Get all are offered at a great discount as low as $150. Also beautiful New Uprights at $135, $150, $175, $200 and $250. A fine instrument at $290. Sole agents for many $400 pianos. Monthly payments accepted. Freight only about $5. Write for list and particulars. You make a great saving. Pianos warranted as represented. Illustrated Piano Book Free.

FROM

LYON & HEALY
38 Adams St., CHICAGO.

The Betts Family Record System is a modern system for keeping a memory record of family events, personal data, anniversaries, etc. More than an album. A method. Used in educational, business, commercial, religious or a home in one. Full set 7 essential sheets. Only $1.50 delivered.
W. J. BETTS CO., Dept. C, Madison, Wis.

Individual Communion Cups
Send for FREE catalogue and list of 2,000 churches now using our cups.
Sanitary Communion Outfit Co., Dept. 7 Rochester, N.Y.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SONGS OF PRAISE
Let the New Songs Lead all the Prayers.
25 cents per copy ($2.70 a dozen, new publication)
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

HOME BIBLE STUDY BY MAIL.
This Book, "Home Bible Study," FREE if you write and enroll at once. Course covers the whole Bible and leads to diploma and degree. You can take this course at home by mail. Terms easy. Best testimonials. For free catalog write
C. J. BURTON,
Pres. Iowa Cons. College, Oskaloosa, Iowa

CHURCH FURNITURE.
Success! Less than one year old. We are
GRAND RAPIDS SCHOOL FURNITURE WORKS,
Salesroom, 22 West 19th Street, New York.

MELLIN'S FOOD
FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS
TRADE MARK

Fretful babies become calm and peaceful babies when fed on Mellin's Food. Mellin's Food nourishes.

A sample of Mellin's Food costs you nothing but the asking. Will you not then ask for it for your baby's sake?

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

Paint Your House Cheap

And Have it Guaranteed to look Better, Wear Longer and Cost Less Than the Best White Lead Paints.

We Send Name of Nearest Carrara Dealer, 50 Sample Colors and Illustrated Book, "How to Paint a House," Free to All Who Send Name and Address.

There is but one "Carrara." It is made by the Carrara Paint Agency, 1080 Carrara Bldg., Cincinnati, O., and it is the only paint in the world that is absolutely Guaranteed not to fade, crack, chalk, peel or scale. It is not affected by acids, gases, fog, sea air, or any climate conditions, and it covers more surface, gallon for gallon, than the best white lead and oil, and costs less than the cheap mixed paints that injure more than they protect.

The Roof of the Great Field Museum, Chicago, Covering 7 Acres of Ground, is Painted with Carrara Paint.

Carrara is used by the Pennsylvania R. R.; the Pullman Palace Car Co.; the Chicago Telephone Co.; the Field Museum, Chicago; the Kenwood Club, Chicago; the Cincinnati Southern R. R.; the Chicago & Eastern Illinois R. R.; the Denver & Rio Grande Railway and thousands of others of the largest and most particular users of paint in the world. The famous Waldorf-Astoria hotel of New York, one of the finest in the world, has used tons of Carrara because it is the best that can be found in the market to-day.

For interior or exterior it has no equal. Smooth and clean, it has stood the rigid test of time and man. If you want to save half your paint bills send your name and address for nearest Carrara dealer; 50 sample colors and a beautiful illustrated book sent free, showing a large number of fine houses just as they have been painted with Carrara, and keep well in mind that Carrara is the only paint ever backed by a positive guarantee in every case.

DIAMONDS ON CREDIT

You may have a Diamond handed to you at your own door, and pay for it in such easy monthly amounts that you will hardly miss the money. You simply make a selection from our illustrated catalogue, then we send the Diamond to you with all express charges prepaid. If you are entirely satisfied you keep the Diamond and pay for it in eight equal monthly payments, otherwise return it at our expense and your money will be refunded immediately. We are one of the oldest (Est 1858) and by far the largest house in the business, and refer to any bank in America. For instance, ask your local bank how we are rated in the Dun or Bradstreet books of commercial ratings. You will be told that we stand at the top in credit, promptness and reliability, and that our representations may be accepted without question. Beautiful booklet explaining everything and catalogue, sent free. Write to-day.

LOFTIS BROS. & CO. Dept H 95 92to98 State-st
OPPOSITE MARSHALL FIELD & CO. Chicago, Ill., U. S. A.

I Print My Own Cards

Circulars, Newspaper, Press $5. Larger size, $18. Money saver. Big profits printing for others. Type-setting easy, rules sent. Write for catalog, presses, type, paper, &c., to factory.

EXCELSIOR THE PRESS CO., Meriden, Conn.

ADDICTED TO THE DRUG HABIT?

If so, you can be relieved. Our Sanatorium was established in 1875, for the treatment of Drug and Alcoholic Addictions. Relief Guaranteed.

HOME TREATMENT IF DESIRED.

We have relieved thousands that have failed elsewhere. The Dr. J. L. Stephens Co., Dept. R 5, Lebanon, Ohio.

THE NARROW GATE

Continued From Page 675

The nation's heart and brain.
Yet He sits upon the throne,
Who will speak the final doom,
And He will not speak again;
His arm shall be made bare,
When his vengeance smiteth there;
The lust of a nation's pride,
Shall grow to a swelling tide,
But He who has waited long
For the sons of men to turn
From the world's contemptuous sin,
Shall shackle the ages' wrong,
And the chaff in the fire shall burn
When his judgment shall begin;
But the tears of his children shall be Wiped away eternally.

Down around the county jail that night several efforts were made to break into the jail and take out the prisoner. But the mob was not organized and the sheriff, with a posse of deputies, kept the crowd back until reinforcements came over from Clinton. Toward daybreak the mob grew weary and gradually dispersed, and there was no farther attempt made the next day.

Colby awoke that morning to some sense of the tragedy. It was not the first by any means. Mr. Vernon, in his Sunday morning sermon, reminded his congregation of that fact.

"I find," he said, after a graphic account of the scene on Thursday night, "on looking up the records here, that during the last ten years Anderson county has on its roll of crime, due to the saloon, over 400 cases, including assault with intent to kill; seven murders, nearly every one of them as brutal as this one, together with arrests for drunkenness, where no crime was committed, that sum up the total to nearly 1,000 cases. Does this sound appalling for one county? Yet there are your records. Do you know how much the saloon is responsible for in America?

"The United States Commissioner of labor, Hon. Carroll D. Wright, gives the amount of license money received from saloons in one year by 118 largest cities of the United States, all having a population of over 30,000. The total amount is $24,091,396. These cities have 58,226 saloons, which make the average saloon license money collected from saloons by cities, towns and villages under 30,000 population, $75,000,000, making a total sum of $100,000,000 collected by cities and villages, which must be added to the $183,419,571.67 paid to the Federal Government.

"Every cent of these millions is stained with blood, wet with tears, soiled with impurity, stamped with dishonor and blazoned with ruined character. Every dollar of this revenue is taken from honest industry, and wrested from childhood's needs and woman's chastity. It has all passed through the sea of debauchery, crime and anguish before it drops dripping into the treasury of the United States Government. If this Federal Government whisky revenue money could speak, as it is taken out of the saloon till and paid over to the government, the voice of its combined wail of anguish, of its shriek of tortured childhood, its groan of lost life would rise up to heaven out of the world's hell, and its awful roar of pain would drown all other voices and bid the universe be aghast at the real tragedy of the century, which all the little novelists of the petty historical stories that deluge the world-reading public have ignored, while their puerile pens scratched away at make-believe history. Out there in the street in front of the church was some real history the other night. Out on a lonely farm is some real history in the blasted life of that woman, who yesterday saw the earth drop on the coffin containing her boy, killed while drunk. Out there in the vestibule of the church are some stains on the floor, that I hope to God will stay there long enough to preach their history to every boy here to-day. And yet in spite of all this tragedy, which the easy little novelists of this age pass by to describe the millinery of a hundred years ago, I venture to predict that this town will go on licensing the cause of the stream of death. After the present wide spread excitement has died down, matters will go on as usual. You will vote with the old party; the criminal lawyers will enter for their client a plea of self defence, he will escape either scot-free, or with a mild sentence, just as four out of the seven murderers in Anderson county have escaped, and the saloon will settle down to its life-destroying business again. I make this prediction." At this point Mr. Vernon was interrupted by cries all over the church, "No! No!"

TO BE CONTINUED NEXT WEEK

LIVES THAT COUNT*

The True Way to Success and Fame and Lasting Glory is in Self-Effacement

MANY young people are content to drift with the stream. The impetus that they receive in their childhood carries them along; they do their duty, and pass out of life with no definite object and no clear purpose. It cannot be said that they have succeeded or failed. They have lived and died; their place is filled when they have vacated it, and they are soon forgotten. It cannot be said that their lives have counted. There is nothing to show that they ever lived in the world. Their families mourn over their death, but the world is no better for their having lived in it. Whether or not they have won fortunes, is a matter of no moment to them or to others. Compared to lives like those of Francis of Assissi, or moderns like Spurgeon, Beecher, Moody or Phillips Brooks, how barren they seem. It is not within the power of many to fill so large a place as those we have mentioned, but there are places which might be filled with equal efficiency. The poorest endowed personality that ever entered this world, has a niche which it might fill. It can be filled only, if at the outset, the guiding principles of life are chosen and faithfully followed.

How then can we plan our lives so as to make them of use? How can we live, so that some benefit has accrued to the world by our having lived? The only way yet discovered is to forget self. That is not a popular rule. Every man praises another if he looks well to his own interests and takes care to secure advantages for himself. But looking back over history, we see how true was Christ's maxim, that he who would save his life should lose it. The men whom the world remembers most gratefully; the men whose memory will never fade, are the men who never sought worldly fame or honor or wealth, but those who laid down their lives for others, who sought to do other people good and to contribute to the world's happiness. In that way, and in no other, can we attain true success.

*Topic of the Epworth League for Aug. 23. II. Timothy 3: 10-15; II. Cor. 11: 23-28.

A Wasted Life

A remarkable will contest is now in progress in Victoria, B. C. A man who was long known as one of the leading business men of the province, an extensive owner of mines and railroads, lately died, leaving a considerable estate. Some of the heirs are now seeking to invalidate the will, on the ground that the testator was for many years prior to his death a victim of alcoholic dementia. Testimony was introduced to show that during the course of twenty-five years he led a life of intemperance that is almost without a parallel. In that time he drank nearly 7,000 gallons of whiskey, 4,500 gallons of champagne, 3,500 gallons of other wines, 2,300 gallons of "mixed" drinks, and 750 gallons of bromo, ammonia, and other decoctions intended to sober him and make him fit to do business. During those twenty-five years he was, so the contestants aver, continually sodden with drink, frequently delirious, and subject to all kinds of visions, grotesque hallucinations and delusions, the result of a disordered brain. Even in his rare intervals of comparative sobriety his wild talk showed that the delicate organism of the brain had been impaired. His consumption of nearly 20,000 gallons of mind, body and soul-destroying alcohol had cost him a vast fortune in money alone, and it had left him a poor drivelling slave, dead to all the finer aims and aspirations of his manhood, oblivious to the best opportunities afforded by his wealth and position, and forgetful of his duty toward both God and his fellow-man. Such a life is one of the most pitiful of shipwrecks.

No Substitute

not even the best raw cream, equals Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Cream for tea, coffee, chocolate, cereals and general household cooking. It is the result of forty-five years experience in the growing, buying, handling and preserving of milk by Borden's Condensed Milk Co.

It didn't hurt

First teeth should not fall until new ones are ready to come; then they go without pain if the gums are healthy.

RUBIFOAM

An antiseptic, astringent preparation, hardens the gums, whitens the teeth, arrests and prevents decay; is perfectly harmless, pleasant to use, and the easiest dentifrice for children.

25c. at Druggists.

Sample Vial Free. Address

E. W. HOYT & CO., LOWELL, MASS.

Get the Doctor Quick!

When an accident happens run for the household bottle of POND'S EXTRACT. It's the old family doctor—always ready—always sure, at any time of night. In deep cuts, it stops the blood; in severe burns, from sun or fire, it takes out the inflammation; in bad bruises or sprains it prevents soreness and pain. A bottle of POND'S EXTRACT on the medicine shelf is like having a doctor in the house.

Caution.—Ordinary witch hazel is not the same as POND'S EXTRACT.

POND'S EXTRACT is sold only in sealed bottles with buff wrapper to prevent adulteration.

Reduced Rates to Seattle, Tacoma, Portland, Vancouver or Victoria via Pennsylvania Railroad.

On account of the Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress and National Irrigation Association meeting at Seattle, Wash., August 18 to 20, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will sell round-trip tickets to Seattle, Tacoma, Portland, Vancouver or Victoria July 31 to August 13, good to return until October 15, at rate of $87.80 from New York and proportionate rates from other points.

For full information concerning routes and stop-over privileges, consult nearest Ticket Agent.

A BENEFICENT WORK

THE INDUSTRIAL INSTITUTE AT MAYESVILLE, S. C., FOR THE EDUCATION OF THE COLORED RACE

OUR readers who have generously contributed to the support of the Educational and Industrial Institute at Mayesville, S. C., will be glad to hear of the progress that has been made by the Institution. During the past season there have been 403 day pupils under instruction, and seventeen boarders. Many applications for admission as boarders were received, but owing to lack of accommodation, it was impossible to entertain them. Besides the ordinary literary education, the boys were instructed in carpentering, wheelwright's work, blacksmithing and shoemaking, under skilled teachers of their own race. The girls were taught sewing, dressmaking, cooking, and trained in other branches of domestic service. Three times during the term the pupils were examined by educational experts, and their proficiency was certified in a higher degree than had been expected.

ONE OF THE SHOEMAKING CLASSES AT MAYESVILLE INSTITUTE

The school accommodations will be largely increased next term by the erection of a building now nearly completed, which will contain dormitories, dining room, matrons' offices, and reception room. The cost of this building is defrayed by an appropriation from a trust fund which was secured by friends of the Institution in Boston, Mass. It is now proposed to remove the building now used as a school to a site near the new building, so as to make the two edifices the nucleus of a more convenient institution, and bring all into one connection.

The little farm recently purchased, and now nearly paid for, has proved a profitable investment. It has produced beside the vegetables required in the institution, rye, potatoes and other products, which have been sold and the proceeds used for current expenses. Many of the students have contributed their labor on the farm, thus acquiring useful knowledge, and it is proposed that during next term an arrangement shall be made by which nearly the whole of the work on the farm will be done by students, who will receive their board and education as compensation for their labor.

The institution, while enjoying the confidence and cordial good will of the white people in the neighborhood continues to be managed by colored people. Miss Emma Wilson has demonstrated her fitness for the general management, and has proved a most efficient superintendent. The work shows in a most conspicuous way that the colored children and their parents appreciate the benefits of an education, and they especially value the industrial branch which helps them in their efforts to support themselves. Their eagerness to avail themselves of the advantages offered is pathetic, and shows that in such efforts they are working out for themselves the solution of the problem of the colored race.

The most urgent need now is for money to carry the Institution to perfection. Money is needed for furnishing dormitories, in the new building; for school apparatus; for implements for the farm, and for other purposes. The utility and efficiency of the Institution has been fully proved; its growth from a little school shows how great was the need of such a work. All that is now needed is the means to carry the enterprise over its period of development, so that it may reach a position of self-support. Any contributions sent to the office of this journal will be gladly received and acknowledged.

INFLUENTIAL LIVES*

How to Make Our Lives Count as the Apostle Paul's Has Counted

NEAR the close of his life, testimony such as that which Paul gives in his letter to Timothy, has immense significance. It is at such times that men can make an estimate of their lives. We can imagine such men as we in America hold in the highest esteem, coming to such a pass. Death is near and they look back over their lives. Some of them can remember homes of poverty. They recall how hard it was to get an education. They call up the images of their father and mother counting every dollar, carefully saving their money to meet the payments. Then their own start in life, the anxieties and struggles, the gradual success, and then the money rolling in until it could be counted by millions. Perhaps in the acquisition it was necessary to squeeze competitors to the wall. Perhaps success was gained by obtaining a monopoly that forced other men out of business and stripped them of the hard-earned savings of a lifetime. But the result, how grand! how gratifying! As the man makes his will, how proud he feels at having millions to distribute. This is a successful life, viewed from the popular standpoint.

How different was the retrospect of the aged apostle. If he had made a will, all that he would have had to distribute would have been the books, the parchments, and the cloak he left at Troas. Yet the man seems satisfied. He had achieved the thing at which he aimed. After all, that is the measure of success. The question is whether the thing sought was worth the struggle. He had sunk reputation, family connections, wealth, influence. What had he gained? At this distance of time, we can see better than even he could. Who now takes into account his possessions? The name of Paul stands so high that we do not consider whether he was poor or rich. His life had an influence on the world that will never fade. When the names of our millionaires are forgotten, this poverty-stricken man will still live in the world's grateful memory. The reason? He lived not for himself, but for Christ and humanity.

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society and Baptist Young People's Union for August 23. II. Timothy 1: 6-8; II. Cor. 11: 23-28.

Financiers of National Reputation

Buy my Loans and endorse my statements of their high character. Those looking for

ABSOLUTE SECURITY IN 5% MISSOURI FARM MORTGAGES

High Interest Rates

often jeopardize their capital. My clients are not speculators, but staid, conservative, business men, who wish fair returns on their capital without annoyance to them or any degree of risk, either in loss of capital or variations of market values on listed stocks and bonds.

Missouri's record of 35 successive good crop yields, her conservative laws, the fact that our farm loans have never been losing or annoying investments, attracts the thinking man or woman of means.

To you, actuated by the same desire, I offer my Loans in amounts of $500 to $10,000

You want Evidence. Send to-day for my booklet, descriptive letter and testimonials of prominent financiers, clients of mine for many years.

WILLIAM R. COMPTON,
No. 5 WARDELL BUILDING, MACON, MISSOURI.

Good Laundering

Ironing day has a different interest to the woman who has learned the good qualities of KINGSFORD'S
OSWEGO
Silver Gloss Starch
It is no longer the dreaded task of old. The satisfaction of seeing the laundry come out white as driven snow, with that firm, satiny finish and rustle is gratifying to womanly pride. Then, it's more economical because it goes further.
Sold at all grocers.
THE OSWEGO STARCH FACTORY, OSWEGO, N. Y.

There's no other way you can SAVE 55 CENTS
so easily as by using KNOX'S GELATINE

Every gallon of Jells made effects just that saving. It takes eight of the ordinary 2-cent Sweetened Gelatine Packages, total cost 80 cents, whereas two packages of Knox's Gelatine, total cost 25 cents, make a gallon of decidedly better dessert. No woman when she realizes these facts will continue to waste money in that way. Besides, KNOX'S alone is made from absolutely pure calves' stock, and is ready to serve in one hour. Knox's granulated is as measure as easily as sugar. Among A few of our large fortunes, 15 cents

Free Pint Sample and Instructive Cook Book for 4 cents in stamps to cover packing and postage. Full 2-gallon package 15 cts.; 2 for 25 cts. Include grocer's name. Money refunded if unsatisfactory.
CHAS. B. KNOX, 55 Knox Ave., Johnstown, N. Y.

HOW DO YOU WASH

No matter how you do it now, we can make the work easier and save wear and tear on your back as well as on the clothes. The washes fast and is not tiresome, cleans everything, suds and rinses—no [illegible] scalds and bleaches at [illegible] all it is easy. Made of steel-galvanized, on rollers. New principle—washes by air pressure.

SYRACUSE EASY WASHER

Would you like to try it for 30 days' wash anything and every [illegible] with it and then return it if you wish? We pay freight both ways. Write for free book of modern laundry formulas.

DODGE & ZUILL, 540 S. Clinton St., Syracuse, N. Y.

THE NORTH-WESTERN LINE

The Black Hills Yellowstone Park

and a score of other places of interest to the tourist are reached by the complete train service of the Chicago & North-Western Ry. Especially low rates now in effect from Chicago and all points east for the summer season.

St. Paul Minneapolis

Four trains daily from Chicago, rate of $16 round trip throughout the summer; $20 round trip Chicago to Duluth.

Excellent daily train service to the various summer resorts of Wisconsin, Northern Michigan and Minnesota, the Hot Springs of South Dakota, the mountain resorts of Colorado and Utah, and to Yellowstone National Park, California, Oregon, Washington and Alaska.

Summer tourist rates in effect from Chicago and all points east. A series of booklets, one of which is descriptive of Colorado, another of California, and another entitled "Hints to Tourists for 1903," with detailed information regarding routes, rates and schedules will be promptly mailed upon application to

W. B. KNISKERN,
PASSENGER TRAFFIC MANAGER C. & N.-W. RY.,
CHICAGO, ILL.

NW37

Absolute Range Perfection

Sold for Cash or on Monthly Payments.

$10 to $20 Saved.

Freight paid east of the Mississippi River and north of the Tennessee Line; equalized beyond.

Your money refunded after six months' trial if

Clapp's Ideal Steel Range

is not 50 per cent. better than others. My superior location on Lake Erie, where iron, steel, coal, freights and skilled labor are cheaper and best, enables me to furnish a TOP NOTCH Steel Range at a clean saving of $10 to $20. Send for free catalogues of all styles and sizes, with or without reservoir, for city, town or country use.

CHESTER D. CLAPP, 620 Summit Street, Toledo, Ohio.
(PRACTICAL STOVE AND RANGE MAN.)

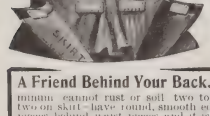
MINUET Skirt and Waist Holder

A Friend Behind Your Back. Just four thin plates of aluminum cannot rust or soil two to sew on waist, two on skirt—have round, smooth edges—slip skirt pieces behind waist pieces and it is on. No teeth, hooks or projections can be washed, passed through wringer and ironed over freely. Invisible, takes up no room; holds waist smooth—works as well with waist over skirt.

Enough For All Your Garments FREE.

Send us the, for a sample set and then you can take advantage of this offer. Hundreds of ladies are doing this. Why not you? Send the, to-day.

WHEELER & BALDWIN, 610 Garden City Bldg., Chicago.



Dwiggins 10 to 50c aft.

A model of taste in design, strong enough to last a lifetime, woven throughout of double galvanized steel wire. Catalog (FREE) shows other fences for lawns, parks, etc.

Dwiggins Wire Fence Co., 12 Dwiggins Ave., Anderson, Ind.

STARK TREES best by Test—78 Years LARGEST Nursery.
FRUIT BOOK free. We PAY CASH
WANT MORE SALESMEN Weekly
STARK BRO'S, Louisiana, Mo.; Dansville, N. Y.; Etc

Aunt Sarah's Mission

By Ida E. Tilson

"OUR Missionary Society was languishing, too," said Aunt Sarah, settling back in her chair, smoothing her hair, pushing up her glasses, and crossing her feet, the well-known signs that a good story was coming.

After discussing the weather, our relatives, and our new clothes, we took up more spiritual matters. Half sadly, half jokingly, I had said that soon over our Missionary Society would be written the epitaph on a young lady's grave at old Plymouth Rock, "Died of a languishment," whatever such mysterious malady means.

"I know all about it," continued Aunt Sarah. "First we had a literary society, with reports and readings and recitations on Mexico and Alaska and all the countries, just as long as our minister's wife could hunt up the magazines and make programmes for us.

"When Elder Addicks went away, we thought we must have a young minister. Naturally, his wife had little children and did not attend the missionary meetings. We kept on a spell as a devotional meeting, but while we all felt the spirit, only two or three had courage and training to pray aloud in public. Pretty soon they seemed to think they could pray as well at home.

"Then Mrs. Candoll proposed we sew in a missionary way. Well, some of the women said they couldn't sew very well, and some said they had too much of it to do at home. But Mrs. Candoll, who has no children, and whose rich husband humors her in everything, she overruled all objections, and said those who couldn't sew could cut and baste, and those who had sewing of their own might just furnish house room, and the society would do their sewing any afternoon for moderate pay, and turn the proceeds over to missions. Some shook their heads at this. They had taken out and done over too much work by a parcel of chattering women. It was finally decided to make a specialty of children's clothing."

"Because children are kind of shapeless, I suppose, and don't have to be fitted," I laughed softly.

Aunt only nodded, and went on vigorously. "Mrs. Olee always seconds Mrs. Candoll, so promised to find needy children. Now one of the beauties of living in the country, as I do, child," continued my aunt, with an extra placid expression, "is that everybody can earn a decent living. There are no very poor people. It would break my heart to live in a city, where there are so many calls to charity, and no one person could relieve all. I must refuse some. Well, to resume my story," and Aunt Sarah gave another hitch in her chair, and a characteristic hair-smoothing, "Mrs. Olee furnished the names of two families about three miles away, where there were lots of children, and the society all pitched on me to visit them for information, measures, etc. Land sakes, how I hated the job, invading those stranger women's homes and sanctuaries, as 'twere, and asking about their business. But the society woman said I could talk so well, better than I could sew.

"Mrs. Awtry offered to take me out there with her nice carriage and gentle horse. She thought she could do that better than sew. Mrs. Awtry is of such good family, her carriage is an easy one, and she is such fine company herself, that the joys of the trip partly reconciled me.

"At the first place was a man with one hand off, though we didn't look him up, but his wife. Her blue calico dress, though faded, was perfectly whole and clean. So were the blue calico shirts of her little boys. The house, though bare, was clean, too, and she offered me her one rocking-chair with real dignity. I suppose I looked some older than Mrs. Awtry. I felt I must begin delicately. The busy hens, droning bees and thrifty garden suggested a way.

"'Do you take care of all those?' I asked, with a sweep of my hand toward the door.

"Looking a little surprised, she bowed. Then, pursuing my advantage, I said, 'I suppose you have to help your crippled husband harness his horses and such like.'

"'Oh vell,' she answered, in her broken English, 'sometimes I holp, but him ver schmart mit dot vun hand.'

"'But you must have so much to do,' I insisted, 'that we church women felt we ought to sew for your children, and we will furnish material.'

"The German woman thought a moment, then said simply, 'Ve got eferyting. Ve got eleven cows, ve got ten pegs, ve got sixty schickens. Coom in hier,' and she led the way to another room, where stood a brand-new sewing-machine. Pointing with pride she added, 'It dakes not ferry long to make clothes on dot. See mine quilts, too.' Sure enough from a press she took a number of elaborate patchwork quilts. 'You don't get time to make these now,' I remarked.

"Turning suddenly on me, she took the role of questioner. 'You try do good?' 'Yes,' I humbly answered. 'Vell, den, I dells you how. Mine neighbor, Mrs. Lenton, she ferry lame, she so lonesome; you call dare. She no need sewing; she bootiful sewer. She need fren's. She sew for me; I dake her eggs.'

"'Thank you! I will!' was my modest reply. Then I cordially invited my new-found German acquaintance to call on me. 'Yah! I've known about you dese many year!' was her non-committal farewell.

"Well,' sighed Mrs. Awtry, 'There's one visitation done, and we escaped being shown the door. Shall you visit Mrs. Lenton?'

"'Of course,' and chid, whom did Mrs. Lenton prove to be, but an old pupil of mine whom I had lost sight of. She is paralyzed in both limbs, but hitches about in a big rocking chair, and actually does her own work, by her husband leaving everything handy. She was so cheerful and so delighted to see me.

"Our second family to visit had been South, where fever, ague, and doctors' bills, finally lost them their little home. Relatives had helped them back North, and now they were renters. Here were more blue calico shirts and dresses, but no rags. Another thrifty garden and some more fine pigs helped me suggest the wife's many duties, and the propriety of our sewing.

"'Do those women need something to keep them out of mischief?' retorted the little black-eyed woman I had now to deal with.

"'That is about the size of it,' I admitted, and we all laughed heartily.

"After considerable general visiting, Mrs. Awtry and I rose to go. Our little hostess, in a conciliatory way, said, 'I am proud to have had you stop, and real obliged to those charitable women. If I should get in a pinch, I would call on them. But I wash for the woman we rent of, and she sews for me. Our children are nearly all boys, every one of them helping work already. If we can only have our health, we shall be content and pull through ourselves.' Again I gave a cordial invitation to return my call.

"When we got outside, Mrs. Awtry asked me, 'Do you really mean those invitations? You know you have more acquaintances on your list now than you can get around to.'

"'Yes, I know that, but I mean them. I can't bring myself to invade people's homes, offering them charity which they prove not to want, then refusing the friendship they would value. This afternoon showed me so much honest self-respect and pluck, it has done me good, and confirmed what I always thought, that the highest gift is ourselves. No other giving amounts to much without it.

"The Ladies' Society received our report with credulity, indignation and disappointment. The report was 'laid on the table.'

"A few days later, a tall, angular, weary, strange old woman called on me, introducing herself as the mother of our last-visited woman. She brought along a black dress pattern, given her months before, which her poor, old eyes had been unable to make. 'Had I been home the other day,' she exclaimed, 'I should have taken up your offer, for this dress.'

"The old lady owned good blood, and bore a historic name, but she was a 'mountain white' of the South, left one side by the tide of education and progress. Yet the homely tales she told me, had an originality and power of their own.

"As she saw our bee-hives, she remarked she had a 'misery' in her stomach for which honey was powerfully good. So I finally got out my precious china and fed the old lady on warm biscuit and honey.

"She left the dress pattern. I hurried round among the ladies; but, 'with one accord, they began to make excuse.' They had company or were invited out. They wished to sew sociably together. They did not wish to 'bone down' to hard dressmaking. They planned for children's sewing.

"'Yes,' I said, meekly. 'I know all that. I only asked for children's work, but the Lord, our Father, has seen fit to send us an old woman, when we asked for children. What are you going to do about it?'

"We finally arranged to fit and make the dress and furnish its trimmings. We sent it to the old woman, rather forestalling another visit from her." Aunt Sarah's eyes had a far-away look when she resumed.

"Just a few weeks later the old lady died, full of years and sorrows, and was laid out in our dress. 'If you hadn't made that dress, I don't know what else she could have been robed in for the grave,' a neighbor confided to us. And the women of our Missionary Society looked at each other with tearful eyes, as they recalled in whispers the words of the Man of Sorrows, 'rejected and despised of men,' who said, when others complained of Mary's anointing—'She hath done it against my burial.'"

All Kalamazoo ranges and cook stoves are equipped with patent oven thermometer. Makes baking sure and easy.

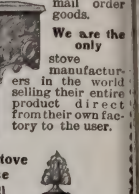
The KALAMAZOO

A better stove or range than you can get from any other source. A saving of from 25% to 40% in price. Prompt shipment from factory to user. Factory prices—no dealers' profits. Freight prepaid by us. 360 days approval test. Guarantee backed by $20,000 bank bond.

KALAMAZOO Stoves and Ranges are manufactured by us in our own factory. We know they are all right "clear through." Don't confuse them with cheap mail order goods.

We are the only stove manufacturers in the world selling their entire product direct from their own factory to the user.

There isn't a better stove or range at any price and by eliminating all dealers' and middlemen's profits we save you easily 25% to 40%. Moreover we give you a 360 Days Approval Test. If your purchase is not satisfactory in every way, return the goods at our expense. We have a complete line of ranges, cook stoves and heaters for fuel of all kinds. All stoves blacked, polished and ready for business.

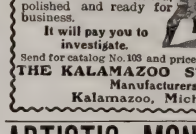


It will pay you to investigate.

Send for catalog No. 103 and prices, freight prepaid.

THE KALAMAZOO STOVE CO., Manufacturers, Kalamazoo, Michigan.

ARTISTIC MONUMENTS



Cost No More than Plain Ones in

White Bronze

Marble is entirely out of date.

Granite soon gets moss-grown, discolored, requires constant expense and care, and eventually crumbles back to Mother Earth. Besides it is very expensive.

White Bronze is strictly everlasting. It cannot crumble with the action of frost. Moss-growth is an impossibility. It is more artistic than any stone. Then why not investigate it? It has been adopted for more than a hundred public monuments and by thousands of delighted customers in all parts of the country. Many granite dealers have used White Bronze in preference to granite for their own burial plots. We have designs from $4.00 to $4,000.00 Write at once for free designs and information, stating about what expense you anticipate. It puts you under no obligations. We deal direct and deliver everywhere.

Over $90,000 worth of work sold to Christian Herald readers in the last few years. Agents Wanted.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.
70-90 Howard Ave., Bridgeport, Conn.

Rider Agents Wanted in each town to ride and exhibit sample bicycle

'03 Models high grade $9 to $15

1901 & '02 Models, best makes $7 to $10

500 2ND - HAND WHEELS all makes and models good as new $3 to $8. Great Factory Clearing Sale. We ship on approval and 10 day's trial without a cent in advance.

EARN A BICYCLE taking orders for us. Write at once for bargain list and our wonderful special offer to agents. Tires, equipment, sundries, half price.

AUTOMOBILES Bargains in new and second hand Autos and Motor Cycles. All makes and styles. If interested write for Automobile Catalogue.

MEAD CYCLE COMPANY, Dept. 64K CHICAGO, ILL.

SALESMEN & AGENTS WANTED.

NEW INVENTION. Big Wages to men and women at home or traveling, selling and appointing agents. Wonderful seller. Everybody buys. No toys or novelties retails $3.50 up. Mr. Gleason made $1,777 first year. Mrs. Howard $59.00 one week. New plan and offer FREE.

WORLD MFG. CO.,
943 WORLD BLDG., CINCINNATI, O.

GET YOUR GLASSES AT WHOLESALE

Examine your own eyes without an oculist. Send for our "OCULARSCOPE," the latest invention of the 20th century. SENT FREE, with our beautiful illustrated catalogue of spectacles and eyeglasses. MAIL ORDER ONLY. Send today.

GRAND RAPIDS WHOLESALE OPTICIANS, Dept. G, 400-401 Houseman Bldg., Grand Rapids, Mich.

SELF-EFFACEMENT

Jonathan's Loyalty to David an Example

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

THE history of Saul is a striking illustration of how utterly incapable any of us are to do any good thing in our own nature and by our own strength. Meanwhile Jonathan, Saul's son, the Crown Prince, was strongly drawn to David. Jonathan knew God; he had no true fellowship with Saul, and there was in David that loyalty to God which responded to and strengthened his own faith. "The soul of Jonathan was knit with the soul of David, and Jonathan loved him as his own soul." (I. Sam. 18: 1). True love is self-sacrificing. "Jonathan made a covenant with him. . . . And Jonathan stripped himself of the robe that was upon him [the princely robe], and gave it to David, and his garments, even to his sword, and to his bow, and to his girdle." It was a practical abdication of his succession to the throne. He took God's view of David.

What a type this is of a true child of God who takes God's view of Christ! It is not difficult to renounce self, if our hearts are drawn out by the Spirit of the Lord to understand and appreciate God's Anointed. True loyalty to Christ is to renounce all rights and claims for ourselves in favor of our Lord Jesus. But Saul saw David in a very different light. The women who sang in the triumphal procession which followed the victory over the Philistines, sang, "Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands." This aroused bitter jealousy in the heart of Saul. He took David into his court again; he would patronize the hero champion who had slain Goliath; but he "eyed him from that day and forward. And it came to pass on the morrow that an evil spirit from the Lord came mightily [R.V.] upon Saul, and he prophesied [under this power from beneath] in the midst of the house" (vers. 6-10). Saul's indulgence in the sin of jealousy opened the door to the enemy, and under the inspiration of this power of darkness, he attempted David's life.

It is very instructive to note the downward steps of this man. God had visited him, the Spirit of the Lord had come upon him, and God had even given him another heart. But he had acted in self-help and disobedience; would neither trust the Lord nor wait for Samuel; he preserved Agag alive, who should have been slain; and now had thoughts of murder in his heart. This attempt on David's life was the first of ten attempts to murder the man whom God had used to save Israel. He had attempted to slay David with his javelin, but God had other purposes for his chosen king than that he should die by the hand of Saul.

Then the king commanded his servants to slay David. But Jonathan made him hide, while he represented to his father how unjust and irrational was this persecution of a man who had only done him good. So David was recalled, and was in his presence as before; but the evil spirit was stronger than all his good resolutions, and again he attempted to slay David with his own hand. The wretched king had become the tool of the evil one, he was no more master of himself. Then he sent messengers to slay David in his own house, but his wife Michal saved him. The life of a man for whom God has special purposes is not in danger, whatever may be the circumstances in which he is placed. God can reverse the orders of any king, or turn the point of any spear. He had determined that David should reign, and Saul could not prevent it. Saul feared David. Men who do wrong stand in fear of those who do right, because they know that God is with them.

A true child of God knows that he is not of the world, and is, therefore, not surprised if the world hates him. The world loves its own. Worldly men love those who are like them; but they hate and fear those whose lives reflect discredit upon theirs. They hate the unselfishness which make their selfishness stand out by force of contrast. They hate the humility which shows up the meanness of their pride, and they fear men who walk with God.

ANY BOY who is willing to work after school hours on Friday and on Saturday can earn as much money as he wants. If he will write to us we will not only tell him how to do it but put him in the way of doing it. We want boys in every town to sell

The Saturday Evening Post

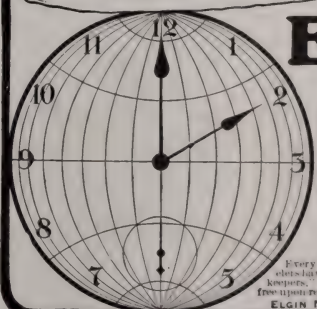
Hundreds of boys all over the country are making many dollars weekly in this work. Some are making $10.00 to $15.00 a week regularly. No money required to begin. We furnish the first week's supply free. You can start next week if you write now.

$225 IN EXTRA CASH PRIZES will be distributed next month among boys who sell five or more copies weekly

If you will try it, write and we will send next week's supply and everything necessary to start at once, including a booklet showing photographs and describing methods of our most successful boy agents.

The Curtis Publishing Company, 403 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Our whole terrestial being is based on time and built of time. CARLYLE



ELGIN TIME is the world's time - ELGIN watches the world's timekeepers

Every Elgin Watch is fully guaranteed. All jewelers have Elgin Watches. Timemakers and Timekeepers," an illustrated history of the watch, sent free upon request to ELGIN NATIONAL WATCH CO., ELGIN, ILL.

DEAFNESS

The Morley Ear-Drum

is the most recent and most effective invisible device for the relief of DEAFNESS.

It is easily adjusted, comfortable and safe. Send for descriptive booklet.

The Morley Company, Dept. E, 19 South 16th Street, Philadelphia.

SALESMEN AND AGENTS WANTD.

BIG WAGES—[illegible] Pur-Han Water Still, a [illegible] Guaranteed. Over 72,000 already sold. Demand continuous. Every family buys. Over the Counter store or [illegible] plenty of demand, sealed. [illegible] Pure Water. Quick method—[illegible] tea and [illegible] coffee instantly. [illegible] Write for Booklet, New Plan, Terms, Etc. FREE. Address, Harrison Mfg. Co., 668 Harrison Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

NEW YORK UNIVERSITY LAW SCHOOL — Sixty-ninth year opens Oct. 1, 1903. Day Classes with sessions from 9:30 to 6 P. M. Evening Classes, sessions 8 to 10 P. M. Graduate classes lead to LL.M. and J.D. Tuition $100. For circulars address L. J. TOMPKINS, Registrar, WASHINGTON SQ., NEW YORK.

LEARN PROOFREADING

[illegible] HOME CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL PHILADELPHIA

CLEAN CUT CAKE TIN

FREE TO AGENTS

Outfit free Exp. prepaid. [illegible] HOUSEHOLD NOVELTY WORKS, Chicago, [illegible] N.Y.

PRESIDENT SUSPENDERS Comfort and service. 50 cents and $1.00. "All breaks made good." Any shop or by mail. C. A. EDGARTON MFG. CO., Box 209-O, Shirley, Mass.

The Most Reliable

FOOD

For Babies and Growing Children is

IMPERIAL GRANUM

IT PERMANENTLY AND EFFECTUALLY OVERCOMES THE DISORDERS OF WARM WEATHER AND TEETHING. IT IS THE BEST FOOD DURING AND AFTER WEANING

NEW TRIAL SIZE, 25 CENTS, AT DRUGGISTS

"THE HAPPIEST PEOPLE IN THIS WORLD ARE THE CONVALESCENTS" QUICKLY BROUGHT BACK TO HEALTH AND STRENGTH BY IMPERIAL GRANUM. IT IS INVALUABLE IN THE SICK-ROOM, FOR SUFFERERS FROM DYSPEPSIA AND THE AGED : : : : : :

Send a postal for FREE sample of Imperial Granum and a copy of "FOOD," published in the interest of healthful diet

JOHN CARLE & SONS, DEPT. F, 153 WATER STREET, NEW YORK CITY

Drawn by Miss Cory, courtesy of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly

CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
Published 52 Times a Year

NEW YORK, AUGUST 19, 1903

VOL. 26 NO. 33. PRICE 5 CENTS
Offices: Bible House, New York

SEE PAGE 695

A SWELTERING AUGUST DAY IN THE NEW YORK TENEMENTS

Sketched from Life—The Baking Pavement of the Tenement Yard is the Children's only Playground—To these Waifs an Outing at Mont-Lawn is a Priceless Boon

Supplementary List of Contributions to the China Famine Fund not Previously Acknowledged

New York

Ackley, Mrs Jennie 2 00
Allen, Mrs E E.. 2 45
Allen, W I..... 1 00
Austin & Fuller, Glen Falls..... 2 00
Ayres, W H..... 5 00
Barber, M W..... 5
Barber, Mrs R A.. 1 00
Benning, L A..... 1 00
Billings, Mrs E F 4 00
Bird, Mrs..... 2 00
Bonney, G C..... 1 00
Bowen, Constance 10
Boyd, Alice M..... 25
Bromley, Mrs J.... 25
Brown, E..... 10
Burnacker, Josie.. 50
Chamberlain, N L. 10
Clark, Mrs E B... 5 00
Colan, Katherine.. 1 00
Cook, Nellie S..... 9 00
Darbee, Prudence C 1 00
Davis, Miss..... 10
Davis, Grace W.... 1 62
Eckler, Mrs A H.. 50
Ellis, Annie F..... 1 00
Failing, Chas..... 50
Ferguson, Rose M.. 2 00
Field, Sarah L..... 2 00
Fitch, Mrs..... 1 00
France, Mrs Wm S 1 00
Godfrey, Mrs A.... 1 00
Godfrey, Mrs A.... 1 00
Godfrey, Mrs A.... 2 00
Gough, Mrs C R.... 2 00
Greene, Rev Wm E 5 00
Gunsaw, W S..... 10
Gurnea, S..... 50
Hagaman, C A..... 10 05
Halbert, Mrs..... 1 00
Hanenek, Bertha.. 2 00
Hendrick, L..... 2 00
Honey, Mabel K.... 25
Huntley, F W..... 1 70
Hurst, Mrs E H.... 1 00
Jessup, Chas T.... 5 00
Johnston, C J..... 5 00
Judd, Mrs M C..... 1 00
King, A..... 50
Kitling, Miss M.... 1 00
Knox, Mrs J L..... 5 00
Krum, Seward E.... 50
Larkin, H Bertha.. 10
Lansdere, Amanda.. 3 00
Lillonmellon, C W 5 00
Loveland, L M..... 1 00
Maxwell, Mrs M E. 3 00
Merkley, Miss N.... 5 00
Miller, E M..... 10
Moore, Rev & Mrs Robt 5 00
Morrison, Mrs S.... 1 00
Myer, J T..... 1 00
Nichols, Mr..... 5 00
O'Leary, Rose..... 10
Orton, Mrs S A & Minnie N..... 1 00
Parker, Mrs C..... 25
Peterson, N..... 25
Pickles, Mary..... 1 00
Randell, Mrs Wm.. 1 00
Reynolds, Mrs H B & S & Class..... 1 10
Rodgers, Agnes O.. 2 00
Rogers, Mrs J W.. 1 00
Russell, Diana..... 1 00
Russell, Diana..... 1 00
Russell, Diana..... 50
Sanders, Harry.... 50
Scidmore, Mrs G S 2 00
Sharp, Ed G..... 2 00
Shelland, Ira..... 25
Smith, J..... 50
Smith, MrsJennieP 2 51
Smith, L & M..... 1 00
Smith, S H..... 1 00
Smith Theo 1 00
Stebbins, Mrs L K. 2 00
Stewart, J C..... 50
Taylor, Robert M.. 50
Thomas, Allen..... 50
Thomas, Mrs Jno.. 1 00
Tilton, Attie J..... 5 00
Tobey, John E..... 2 50
Tubbs, Eliza M.... 1 00
Tyler, L J..... 1 00
VanBramer, Jennie & Eva & Lulu M Bixby 4 00
VanDousen, MrsCM 1 00
Waldron, Mrs J W.. 25
Wallace, Mrs S A.. 25
Watson, A L..... 4 00
Wells, W R..... 5 00
Wholgemuth, Mrs W H..... 50
Wiley, Edw C..... 4 00
Williams, C S..... 3 00
Winne, M..... 10
Young, N D..... 25
Young, Mrs N..... 1 00
Young, N..... 1 00
Mrs ABC Syracuse 85
A M S Schenectady 1 00
E J E, Canandaigua 1 00
K E W, Wayland.. 1 00
K R B, Norwich.. 1 00

NEW YORK Cont'd

Gallagher, Mrs M.. 1 00
Gardner, Harry R.. 25 00
Haefler, Lawr..... 05
Haefler, Rhea..... 05
Hall, Louis E..... 2 62
Hastings, F R..... 1 00
Hastings, J R..... 1 00
Hawthorne, Mgt.. 4 25
Heilman, John..... 1 00
Hiland M..... 50
Hinman, Mrs C G.. 1 00
Hoffman, Mrs R... 1 00
Hollman, Miss C... 35
Hughes, Helen..... 5 00
Johnson, Miss S L. 5 00
Johnston, Mrs A... 1 00
Keeler, Miss L F.. 1 25
Kelsey, C K..... 1 00
Magruder, Mrs C W 1 00
Merrifield, Boyd .. 1 00
Mills, Roda..... 1 00
Moore, Thos J..... 1 00
Noland, Dr S A.... 3 00
Nicholas, Mary E.. 2 00
Poglaise, Stanley.. 30
Preggraves, F E... 1 50
Quigley, Mrs Eliza. 1 00
Riedel, Anna M... 1 88
Scheth, Mrs J A... 1 00
Schichtenmyer, Mrs D H..... 5 00
Severcool, Mrs O B 1 00
Shepherd, Mrs F... 1 00
Smith, Clyde..... 16
Stanley, Mrs G L.. 2 00
Tarr, S J..... 60
Trevor, John B.... 25 00
Ulery, Ezra..... 10 00
Unger, Watson..... 1 00
Zumbro, Mattie.... 50
M S C, Ada..... 15 00
——, Minerva..... 1 00
——, Monterey.... 1 00
——, Oberlin..... 2 00
Friend, Gallipolis.. 35
A Friend, Madison-ville 1 00
Two friends, Paineville..... 1 50
I H N, Mt Vernon. 20 00
I H N, Sandusky.. 2 00
In His Name, Tremont 1 00
Sister of Corinth Ch, Specht 1 00
Sour Welch Ch, Jackson Co 2 60
No Pres Ch S S, Cleveland..... 2 34
Meth Prot S S, Sodom 4 00
SS coll, Charleston & Hickory Gr Ch 3 75
German C E Soc of Zion Evang Ch, Cincinnati 1 00
C E Soc, Port Wm 2 00
Y P S C E, Weymouth 3 00

Oklahoma

Adams, Robb..... 05
Ashby, M P..... 26
Brady, M E..... 25
Danby, Mr & Mrs C H..... 50
Fredrick, Sharon.. 1 05
H N, Fairmouth.. 1 00
"In Jesus' name,".. Connaeutville 1 00
Reader of C H, Harrisburg 5 00
Sympathizer, Lansdale 2 00
Mite, Dugus Mines . 25
John 3:2 Church, Franklindale 1 00
Coll by little girl, Lehman 2 00
Parish Ch, Atlantic 3 81
Bapt Ch, Austinville 1 00
Ebenezer U B Ch Butler 6 50
Slippery Rock Pres Ch, Chewton 16 65
Rockhill Mennonite Cong 5 50
Pres Ch, Vanport. 4 00
S S Ch, Alverton.. 50
Pres S S, Media.. 11 00
U Presb Temple Pres S S, Phila. 1 00
Union S S, Ringt'n 3 75
S Sch, Sabula..... 3 60
S S, Smallkerville 1 00
Gerung S S for S S Ct of girls, Allegheny 1 25
Str & Fr K L C E of MECh, Barnesville 2 50
Wom Home Miss of ME Ch, Blairsville 1 50
Y W C A of S W State Normal Sch, California 5 00

OHIO Cont'd

Hilliard, Mrs M... 1 00
Hilliard, Mrs Wm.. 1 00
Hoffman, Mrs C... 1 00
Hoffman, Mrs C G.. 1 00
Hoffman, Mrs C G.. 1 00
Hollman, Miss C... 35
Hughes, Helen..... 5 00
Johnson, Miss S L. 5 00
Johnston, Mrs A... 1 00
Keeler, Miss L F.. 1 25
Kelsey, C K..... 1 00
Magruder, Mrs C W 1 00
Merrifield, Boyd .. 1 00
Mills, Roda..... 1 00
Moore, Thos J..... 1 00
Noland, Dr S A.... 3 00
Nicholas, Mary E.. 2 00
Poglaise, Stanley.. 30
Preggraves, F E... 1 50
Quigley, Mrs Eliza. 1 00
Riedel, Anna M... 1 88
Scheth, Mrs J A... 1 00
Schichtenmyer, Mrs D H..... 5 00
Severcool, Mrs O B 1 00
Shepherd, Mrs F... 1 00
Smith, Clyde..... 16
Stanley, Mrs G L.. 2 00
Tarr, S J..... 60
Trevor, John B.... 25 00
Ulery, Ezra..... 10 00
Unger, Watson..... 1 00
Zumbro, Mattie.... 50
M S C, Ada..... 15 00
——, Minerva..... 1 00
——, Monterey.... 1 00
——, Oberlin..... 2 00
Friend, Gallipolis.. 35
A Friend, Madison-ville 1 00
Two friends, Paineville..... 1 50
I H N, Mt Vernon. 20 00
I H N, Sandusky.. 2 00
In His Name, Tremont 1 00
Sister of Corinth Ch, Specht 1 00
Sour Welch Ch, Jackson Co 2 60
No Pres Ch S S, Cleveland..... 2 34
Meth Prot S S, Sodom 4 00
SS coll, Charleston & Hickory Gr Ch 3 75
German C E Soc of Zion Evang Ch, Cincinnati 1 00
C E Soc, Port Wm 2 00
Y P S C E, Weymouth 3 00

Oklahoma

Adams, Robb..... 05
Ashby, M P..... 26
Brady, M E..... 25
Danby, Mr & Mrs C H..... 50
Fredrick, Sharon.. 1 05
H N, Fairmouth.. 1 00
"In Jesus' name,".. Connaeutville 1 00
Reader of C H, Harrisburg 5 00
Sympathizer, Lansdale 2 00
Mite, Dugus Mines . 25
John 3:2 Church, Franklindale 1 00
Coll by little girl, Lehman 2 00
Parish Ch, Atlantic 3 81
Bapt Ch, Austinville 1 00
Ebenezer U B Ch Butler 6 50
Slippery Rock Pres Ch, Chewton 16 65
Rockhill Mennonite Cong 5 50
Pres Ch, Vanport. 4 00
S S Ch, Alverton.. 50
Pres S S, Media.. 11 00
U Presb Temple Pres S S, Phila. 1 00
Union S S, Ringt'n 3 75
S Sch, Sabula..... 3 60
S S, Smallkerville 1 00
Gerung S S for S S Ct of girls, Allegheny 1 25
Str & Fr K L C E of MECh, Barnesville 2 50
Wom Home Miss of ME Ch, Blairsville 1 50
Y W C A of S W State Normal Sch, California 5 00

OREGON—Cont'd

Pickell, Chella 10 00
Rice, Minnie M.... 1 00
Sloan, Mrs M J.... 70
Warner, Mrs Eps.. 3 00
Wiley, Miss E.... 2 62
J W, Ricehill 20
——, Fall Creek 1 00
——, Marion..... 10 00
Coll in Ch, Portorford 7 00
Union S S, Enterprise 6 00

Pennsylvania

Baker, D R..... 1 00
Bakers, M E C.... 1 00
Banbury, Harriet.. 25
Beckett, Anna..... 5 00
Beckett, Saml..... 10 00
Brougher, Geo W.. 15
Carr, Miss A M... 5 00
Carter, Arabella.. 1 00
Colquist, Mrs John 2 00
Depue, Jane Gray.. 5 00
Dombdaser, Edna.. 50
Farnsler, Geo W.. 2 06
Fawcett, Jr, Mrs M H 2 00
Ferrell, Jas M..... 5 00
Fickes, Miss E M.. 5 00
Fickes, Miss S E.. 5 00
Gayley, T G..... 5 00
Hanna, Martha 1 00
Harris, H 3 00
Hartman, Julia L.. 5 00
Hartman, Kath 1 00
Hays, J D & wife.. 2 00
Hess, Amelia L.... 5 00
Hess, Mrs Jno..... 5 00
Hilbert, Mrs C.... 1 00
Irwin, Amelia C.. 5 00
Kabelin, Mrs Geo.. 2 00
Kurtz, Emma M.... 2 00
McClain, Mrs E.... 50
McConnell, Mrs AJ 1 00
McCormick, C G.. 10 00
Marburger, MrsWW 1 00
Mark, H D..... 1 00
Miller, M A..... 1 00
Morris, Y M..... 50
Oliver, M E..... 1 00
Pannell, Philip.. 1 00
Powell, Mrs, Thos. 25
Poorman, Mrs A... 5 00
Pridgeon, C H.... 5 00
Pugh, Hall A..... 1 00
Reiner, T Z..... 1 00
Root, W F..... 2 00
Scott, Mrs J..... 1 00
Sedinger, Mary.... 1 00
Smyser, Mrs Susan 10 00
Semple, Mrs M.... 5 00
Spicher, Mrs M E 3 80
Standfast, Mrs..... 1 00
Steacy, Anna..... 10 00
Steininger, Cora... 50
Strickler, Lydia... 1 00
Thomas, J E..... 50
Warner, O M..... 50
Wilt, M..... 2 00
Wolf, Fairphin 2 00
E R, Middle Creek 2 70
——, Fairfield 10 00
——, Nectarine 1 00
A Friend, Fairview 1 00
Friends, Port Matilda 50
Friends, Sharon... 1 05
H N, Fairmouth.. 1 00
"In Jesus' name,".. Connaeutville 1 00
Reader of C H, Harrisburg 5 00
Sympathizer, Lansdale 2 00
Mite, Dugus Mines . 25
John 3:2 Church, Franklindale 1 00
Coll by little girl, Lehman 2 00
Parish Ch, Atlantic 3 81
Bapt Ch, Austinville 1 00
Ebenezer U B Ch Butler 6 50
Slippery Rock Pres Ch, Chewton 16 65
Rockhill Mennonite Cong 5 50
Pres Ch, Vanport. 4 00
S S Ch, Alverton.. 50
Pres S S, Media.. 11 00
U Presb Temple Pres S S, Phila. 1 00
Union S S, Ringt'n 3 75
S Sch, Sabula..... 3 60
S S, Smallkerville 1 00
Gerung S S for S S Ct of girls, Allegheny 1 25
Str & Fr K L C E of MECh, Barnesville 2 50
Wom Home Miss of ME Ch, Blairsville 1 50
Y W C A of S W State Normal Sch, California 5 00

PENNA.—Cont'd

C E Soc, Hartleton 6 00
Jr Epw League M E Ch, So Fork.. 5 00
Y P S C E Grant St Pr Ch, Wilkesbarre 4 00

Rhode Island

Clarke, T W D & Bank 5 00
Morse, Amanda C.. 1 00
Richardson, Miss C 4 00
N B S Pawtucket 1 00
——, Barrington Centre 5 00

South Carolina

Bolt, Nannie..... 40
Day, Walter..... 2 00
Jackson, Miss M J 1 00
Manget, H..... 8 00
Manget, S N..... 3 00
Mason, M P..... 2 00
Nelson, Frank..... 1 00
Rogers, C R..... 42
Smith, Ella..... 1 00
Walpole, J B..... 1 00
Walpole, Mrs Da Vid, coll by .. 1 10
White, Mrs J W.. 2 25
E B, Edgefield.... 25
E & I D, Bennettsville 1 50
G, Greenwood 1 00
A Sympathizer, Greenville 65
Earnest Workers, Camden 1 20

South Dakota

Baker, Mr & MrsE 3 00
Beebe, Inez E..... 1 00
Bixby, Mrs E..... 50
Chilson, O A..... 10 00
Cory, W H..... 1 00
Hoover, L D..... 2 00
Hutchinson, MrsJN 2 00
Oliver, Mrs A..... 1 00
Searle, Alex..... 15
Searle, Mr & MrsC 1 00
Searle, Clinton.... 25
Searle, Stuart..... 10
Spencer, Fern..... 30
Wenz, Mrs H S.... 1 00
Young, John H..... 5 00
C W, Yankton..... 1 00
Ladies Miss Soc of Pr Ch, Hitchcock 5 25
W F M Soc, Pierre 3 75

Tennessee

Adams, Wm..... 20
Barrett, Mrs E..... 1 10
Barry, Mrs Belle.. 20
Barry, J E..... 50
Bain, Mr..... 05
Fite, Mrs J S..... 1 00
Giffan, Miss L.... 25
Graves, Miss S.... 10
Green, Mrs A..... 20
Johnson, Mrs..... 1 10
Martin, Mrs..... 25
Moses, Mrs Emma 25
Nelson, Mrs Jake.. 05
Price, Miss Sallie.. 05
Savy, Miss Helen.. 25
Mrs R P H, Newsome Sta..... 25
Oak Grove S S, Inman 1 00
Mrs J M Woodall's SS Ch, Estill Spgs 8 00

Texas

Barnes, Mrs G..... 1 00
Coursey, Mrs G W. 1 00
Crawford, Mrs S.. 1 00
Gibbs, Mrs G N.. 1 00
Gibbs, Mrs J W.. 1 00
Glaeser, W F..... 5 00
Grote, F A..... 5 00
Halbert, Miss Lena 2 35
Hardin, Mrs E.... 25
Lane, Mrs M..... 1 00
Light, Mrs Davis.. 1 00
Loyd, Geo..... 1 00
McConnell & Keith 2 00
Marty, J..... 3 00
Peebles, Mrs Jno.. 2 00
Propeck, Mrs N R 1 00
Sedgwick, Mrs Jake 05
Shannon, Mrs J W. 8 50
Speer, Mrs F S.... 50
Staley, I J, coll by 1 50
Stevenson, Paul.... 1 00
Thompson, Mrs SA 1 00
Wernly, John 2 00
W T & John Ira, Madisonville 1 00
Subsc, Alvarado .. 5 00
An orphan girl, San Antonio 1 00

Utah

Frost, L..... 1 00
Neilson, Miss C... 05
Quinn, J..... 25
Sorenson, S C 10
A Friend, Ephriam 10

Vermont

Allen, Jonas..... 10 00
Burroughs, MrsEW 1 00
Chapin, Edwd S.. 1 00
Jenkins, Mrs Geo.. 2 00
Jenkins, Geo A.... 1 00
Leonard, M C 1 00
Matson, Rosaline.. 1 00
Simonds, M E..... 1 00
Sumner, Mrs W C.. 50
I H N, Fairlee.... 2 00

Virginia

Alexander, Levi .. 10
Baker, Cora..... 10
Baldwin, J S &wf 2 00
Bassett, Mrs C C.. 10
Bates, Mrs J T.... 1 00
Bates, Mrs S T.... 1 00
Bolton, R E..... 1 00
Bridwell, O H..... 25
Brown, C S..... 05
Brown, Rev W M.. 05
Buford, Julius..... 25
Burchfield, MrsRR 10
Burruss Miss A.... 1 25
Burruss, Little.... 40
Campbell, Mrs AH 10
Cogan, Jno & Ida.. 1 00
Coghill, S L..... 25
Coghill, S L..... 75
Conner, J C..... 05
Conner, S C..... 05
Conner, T Y..... 05
Cooper, Mrs wife.. 50
Diggs, John B..... 2 00
Ford, Chas W..... 25
Giles, Chas..... 10
Gordon, Fleming... 05
Hall, Preston..... 05
Harris, Jim..... 05
Harris, Miss M.... 05
Harris, Mrs wife.. 50
Mantin, Anne W.... 5 00
Morton, Mrs E..... 2 00
Ogren, A J..... 2 00
Ogren, P J..... 10 00
Reuss, Beth & Gordon Pratt 50
Salisbury, C & S.. 1 50
Salisbury, Myrle.. 1 80
Salisbury, Mrs E M, son, daughter & grandchildren. 4 50
Sampson, Florence. 5 00
Sampson, Phebe.... 1 00
Schaal, Laura..... 50
Sherwood, Mrs CA 1 00
Spivey, Mrs Wm.... 1 00
Spivey, Mrs Wm.... 1 00
Stanton, Mrs M.... 1 00
Stevens, Mrs Robt H.. 1 00
Stevens, Mrs Wm.. 1 00
Stevens, Mrs Wm.. 1 00
Stevens, Mrs Wm

NEW YORK, AUGUST 19, 1903

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

THE MARTELLO TOWER — GENERAL VIEW OF SILVER BAY — ONCE A FARM, NOW A MISSION

Planning a World-Wide Campaign

MANY readers of this journal will doubtless recall the beginning of the great Student Volunteer Movement in 1886, at Mount Hermon, Massachusetts. Mr. Moody had called the college men to a conference. The spirit of missions began to be felt among them. Before the conference closed one hundred of them were banded together to go out into the world for Christ. They appointed a few of their number to travel around to the various colleges, and thus the number of volunteers continued to increase, until they were found in many lands.

Mr. Luther D. Wishard, who had done so much to organize the college branch of the Y. M. C. A., became identified with this movement at its start, and has kept in touch with it for seventeen years, although enlisted in other enterprises. One of the many results of this large number of volunteer workmen, was that the work itself outgrew the treasuries of the various church boards. Men are anxious to go to the front, and there is no money to send them. Mr. Wishard has been doing his best to bring up the home end of the work. A little over a year ago, he held a conference with a few of the representatives of the various young people's missionary organizations, and the first conference of Silver Bay was projected. Mr. and Mrs. Silas H. Paine, active in the Broadway Tabernacle, and proprietors of the Silver Bay Hotel, welcomed the Conference, and offered it a permanent home for each year. About 150 were present at the first gathering.

The definite result was the large gathering of this year at Lake George, during the last ten days of July. About 375 representatives of the various missionary boards and of the various young peoples' societies, and many who are prominent in local churches, gathered together to plan for a more successful campaign against heathenism. Among the speakers were such men as Bishop J. M. Thoburn, the veteran apostle to India. Mr. Robert E. Speer, the secretary of the Presbyterian Mission Board, and Mr. John Willis Baer, who has given up the secretaryship of the Y. P. S. C. E. organization, to push home mission work; Samuel H. Hadley of the Water Street Mission, New York City, and a host of others of similar weight in the different denominations and enterprises.

The daily programme began with a Bible Class at nine in the morning, led by Mr. Harry Wade Hicks, Assistant Secretary of the A. B. C. F. M. Over three hundred would gather with Bible in hand, to follow up his suggestions and references in the matter of the "Kingdom," and "How we are to spread it through the world." After a brief intermission, Mr. Charles V. Vickery, the Secretary of the Conference, led in a practical study of ways and means. A syllabus was issued, with subheadings under such general topics as "Missionary Committees," "Missionary Libraries," "Tested Methods of Securing Scriptural Habits of Giving," "Meetings," "Study Classes," "Missions in the Sunday School," "Prayer and Missions," and "Agencies." Each one of these had a morning to itself, and was subdivided into several topics, each being treated by an acknowledged expert. For example, under "Habits of Giving," the representatives of the Presbyterian, Congregational, and Methodist Churches were heard, and they told of the methods which they had tried with success; how they went to churches and secured a hearing; how they paved the way with excellent literature; and how they provided for different classes of people. Mr. Wishard concluded the discussion with an account of what he considered an ideal church, telling in detail the various arrangements that were made to give everyone a chance to know about the work, and to give to it.

The third hour of each morning was given over to separate conferences, on Foreign Missions, Home Missions, and the work of the teachers. The first was taught by Harlan P. Beach, who has himself labored abroad. Bishop Thoburn was an attentive listener and active director in this session. Prof. T. H. P. Sailer, talked to the teachers, and the Rev. A. L. Phillips of the Presbyterian Church, South, conducted the Home Mission study. At noon, a short time was given to prayer for missions, each in private or in selected groups. The afternoon was given over to recreation, and many delightful excursions were provided, suited to the amount of energy that each had in store. One who wandered over the grounds, found a large number in little groups, down by the Martello tower, or under the trees, or on the porch, or up in the outlook, 350 feet above the lake, poring over their Bibles, comparing their notes, and preparing for the studies of the evening or next day.

After supper there was a delightful vesper service. The first night it was addressed by Mr. Wishard who imparted a spiritual tone to the Conference by the earnestness of his opening words. One evening, Mrs. Besserer, of Highlandtown, Baltimore, Md., told of her wonderful success in rescue work, and then Mr. Samuel H. Hadley, of the McAuley Mission, [illegible] with his account of the work of grace first in himself, and then among the outcasts of the great metropolis. The various denominations also talked over the best methods of organizing their own work.

The interest continued without abatement and increased from day to day. Next year there will be three such Conferences, one at Lookout Mountain, Tenn., one at Silver Bay, and the third probably at Winona.

MEMBERS OF THE GREAT SILVER BAY MISSIONARY CONFERENCE OF 1903

The American Pulpit

True and False Success

A Sermon by REV. FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

ST. PAUL'S M. E. CHURCH, PEEKSKILL, N. Y

TEXT—II. PETER 3: 18: "But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ"

IN what does true advancement in life consist? It does not consist in the accumulation of wealth. The world says it does. Our rich soil, improved machinery, and energetic blood have made us enormously rich as a nation. The passion for money-getting is in the very air that we breathe. It is a mistake to suppose that money is the root of all evil; as a matter of fact it is used to support about everthing that is good. It is underneath every home where love is enshrined and childhood nurtured. It is at the bottom of every schoolhouse. It is underneath every cornerstone of every temple of the living God. It is not money that is condemned in the good Book, but the love of money.

There are some persons who grow in wealth, who grow also in real manhood and womanhood. Their wealth is used as a means of personal improvement and of public benefit. There are others who accumulate wealth at the expense of character. They give light weight and short measure; they misrepresent. So before we characterize the wealthy man as successful, we should ask how his wealth was gained. Froude, in his Short Studies on Great Subjects, sent a cat out on a pilgrimage to discover

The Secret of Happiness

She saw a bird swing, singing on a limb, an ox lying contentedly in the pasture, a bee sucking honey out of a bell-shaped flower, and a rabbit with little ones playing about her. In answer to her question they all told her that to be happy was to do duty. She stopped to dine with the fox, and he had a different idea. He said that the secret of happiness is to secure the property of another by superior ability. "I am never so happy as when I am carrying off some farmer's goose," and he turned and complimented the cub seated next to him at the table for having stolen the fine goose on which they had just dined. Many men come to wealth and fame by legitimate processes in the discharge of their duty. Too many, however, heed the advice of the fox, and get the property of another by superior ability. They will get their rival, or maybe a professed friend, in a corner in the exchange, and knife him to death, that they may enrich themselves with his goods, and they will sometimes get millions of people in a corner and hold them up and empty their pockets. Many people are inclined to think that these extremely clever operators are the greatest successes. So they are, as foxes, as stealers of geese, but not as men. There is another danger, too. We see it in the case of men who accumulate means by legitimate and honest processes, but who become chilled in their affections by their avarice, and grow smaller each day in their personal character in proportion to their advancement in wealth.

Nor does true growth consist in social culture. The young man and woman go from the farm to the city. The city people call them green. Perhaps they are, but not more so than the city people appear in the country. They are so very bashful, that it is with difficulty that they listen to the sound of their own voice in company, and almost stumble over the figures in the carpet as they walk across the room. By and by they learn the manners of good society, and become the elegant lady and gentleman. They have made true progress, if, while they have grown in the knowledge of the habits of good society, and have become self-possessed and winning in their outer demeanor, they have also grown more sweet, and true, and good. Large numbers of people from the rural districts do this, and in so doing, bring up the average of virtue in the land.

Bartered for Title

But this young gentleman and lady may have become less simple, less sincere, less trustful, less energetic, and less pure, all the time they were growing in their social greatness, and then there has been no real progress. We have examples of such in many of the fashionable resorts of our country. Christian men and women, as true and benevolent as any among us, reside in Newport and such fashionable places, but there are alas! others who claim to be at the head of American society, who are silly in their rounds of entertainment, tainted in their moral tastes, and far from true to the highest Christian ideals. There are American girls who think that the highest ambition in life is to occupy an exalted position in society, and especially in some of the capitals of the Old World. And there are noblemen from across the sea, who, recognizing that fact, come and lead American daughters to the bridal altar. Some of them are the noblest noblemen; strong in mind, warm in heart, pure in character; but there are others who are mere shells, moral wrecks. Parents only too often practically sell their daughters, and the daughters give themselves away, for really empty titles. These noblemen understand well the habits of the politest society, and are counted leaders in the same, but they are failures in real manhood. And the young women who give their lives away to such men, make a failure and not a success of life. True advancement then, does not consist in social culture.

Again: Popular praise and social influence must not be our test of real success. The young man of humble circumstance walks along the streets unnoticed by the influential or the wealthy. By study and industry he rises through a series of struggles against adversity into prominence. Step by step he is promoted, till he stands head and shoulders above his fellowmen. By his strength of intellect, his skill in managing men, his judgment in adjusting himself to events, he rises to a high position in the State, his name is prominent in the newspapers, his picture hangs upon the wall, his praise is upon the people's lips. The multitude cries "Hurrah!" Has he gained the greatest success? Not necessarily so. While a large number of our public servants have been true as steel and pure as gold, men who would scorn a bribe as they would a scorpion, we have had some political leaders who have grown smaller and meaner as they have been promoted, and have been a disgrace rather than an honor to mankind. Aaron Burr, who was one of the most brilliant and successful statesmen in America, who was Vice-President, and, but for Alexander Hamilton, would probably have been President of the United States, grew smaller and viler every day that he was advancing in political life; and Andrew

REV. FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Johnson, in his "swinging around the circle," gave a public exhibition of how small a man could be morally and yet be the head of a mighty nation. Usually, however, the Presidents of the United States have been men who have grown in sterling character and superb manhood as they have advanced by the suffrages of their countrymen.

Real progress does not consist even in intellectual growth. The highest advancement includes intellectual growth, but is not included in it. A boy in the class shows greater relish for his books than the rest. By study, thought and energy, he outstrips his fellows and becomes a scholar. The others look upon him as being the success, and talk with pride of their former associations with him. And although they may all be happily and usefully situated in life, they envy the one whom they imagine has left them far in the rear. That scholar may have grown less generous, less loving, less truthful, less honest, all the time that he was mastering his books, so that instead of being in advance of his fellows, he is far behind them. Many who have brought the richest treasures from the mine of philosophy have dug down deepest into infamy.

Many who have gathered large harvests from the fields of mind have gathered also tares of sin. The brightest men in the world of letters have sometimes been the blackest in the world of morals. Where the fires of genius have burned high, the flames of ungoverned passion have often burned higher. Bacon had one of the greatest intellects of the world, and yet while he was Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Great Britain, he sold his decisions to the ones whose hands held the largest bribes, and the Parliament drove him from his exalted position in disgrace, and, like a mighty oak rotten at the heart, he fell with a tremendous crash to the ground. Who ever sang so sweetly as Bobbie Burns, and yet at the very time he was composing those verses that were to charm generations, he was degenerating pitifully in his personal character, and he got so that they laughed at him in the coffee-house, and even the nobility who had petted him joined with the common people in saying, "Poor Bobbie!" What intellect was keener than that of Napoleon, or what will more daring, and yet how small he was in his character. He was a moral dwarf, not having the weight of a feather in real character. The throne and army of France were the tall stilts on which a little man stood, and with which he waded the rivers and climbed the mountains and frightened the nations. If his moral and spiritual nature had grown in proportion to his ambition and military skill, the map of Europe might have been different to-day, and he himself have become really great. He saw his mistake and lamented it when he had time for reflection at St. Helena.

The Enlarged Soul

True advancement consists in enlargement of soul volume, growth in mental stature, increase in moral and spiritual value. It is to grow away from ignorance to intelligence, from indolence to industry, from cowardice to courage, from sorrow to joy, from despondency to hope, from unbelief to faith, from envy, jealousy and malice to love. It is growth in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

This progress involves getting away from self. This is a very hard task, because self has a very strong grip and binds our feet with a heavy chain. About the hardest task anyone ever had is to get away from self. That man or woman who is always thinking about self, talking about self, and working for self, is going round and round in a very small circle and does not get very far along in life. The Spaniards have this very impressive fable. They say that a black hen had thirteen chickens. The last to break the shell was a poor little creature with one eye, one wing, one leg, and a half a bill. It was a mean little thing, which quarelled with its brothers and sisters, was saucy with its mother, and gave no end of trouble to the brood. One day it said to the mother, "I am not satisfied with things at home, I am going away." "Where?" said the mother. "To Madrid," said he. "For what?" she asked. "To see the king," he replied. "Silly creature," she said, "if you were a whole chicken and grown up you could not get to Madrid, and if you got there you could not see the king." But off he hopped.

As he passed over a field he saw a brook choked with weeds and grass, which cried, "Oh, chicken, I am choking to death. Take the grass and weeds from my throat and let me live." He answered, "I have no time for such trifles, I am going to see the king." Next he saw a spark of fire left in a gypsy camp, which said to him, "I am dying. Put some dry leaves and twigs upon me that I may have the breath of life again." He replied, "I have no time for such trifles. I am on my way to the palace of the king." The wind called to him from the forks of a chestnut tree, saying, "I am caught here and will perish. Come and release me." His answer was, "I cannot stop for so small a task."

As he passed over the palace lawn, the cook caught him and put him in a pot to cook for the king's dinner. As the water was about to smother him he cried out, "Oh, water, help! do not choke me." But the water answered, "When I was choking to death you would not help me. I have not time to save you, I am cooking dinner for the king." When the water began to boil, he cried out, "Oh, fire, do not burn me to death! Save me!" The fire replied, "You would not save my life, I cannot save yours. I have business with the king."

Self-Forgetfulness

The cook lifted the lid and saw what a poor dinner the chicken would make, caught him by the neck and flung him out the open window just as the king was entering the palace. He attempted to speak to the king, when the wind caught him and bore him away. He begged the wind to let him stay and speak to the king, but the wind answered, "You would not help me in the chestnut tree and I will not help you," and he flew away with him and placed him on the top of the highest steeple, from which he could not get down, and there he stands as the weather-cock to-day.

The Spanish fable is an illustration of vast multitudes of people who are living solely for themselves, who are not kind to their fellowmen, and who will not stop a moment to help the water, the fire, or the wind, but who are bent on their own pleasure, preferment, or promotion, and they are only half men and half women, the half-chick on the steeple, a mere weather-vane.

CONTINUED ON NEXT PAGE

A Missionary Launch

Dedication of a Floating Evangelization Agency in Brazil

THE gratifying news comes from a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in Brazil, that, through the perusal of an article in these pages, he was moved to initiate a missionary movement which promises to be the means of carrying the Gospel to more than a million persons. The Editors of this journal are deeply thankful for this intelligence. It has been one of their earnest desires that the articles they prepare may be the means of suggesting to Christ's laborers new methods of extending his Kingdom. It is, therefore, with peculiar pleasure, in which the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will join, that this letter from Mr. Ernest A. Jackson is now published:

"Through reading an article in the pages of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, the writer was encouraged to ask of God a launch to facilitate the evangelization of river valleys in Brazil. As the maps will show, Brazil has the finest and most extensive system of inland waterways of any country in the world. Millions of its inhabitants live along the banks of these magnificent streams, and probably millions more will soon be added to the number. These millions as yet are practically unevangelized.

"Three years ago, the writer received an urgent call to preach the Gospel in the valleys of the great San Francisco and its tributaries. On his first journey he received great hospitality and met with much kindness on the part of the people. Everywhere they gladly heard the Word; many friends were raised up and some yielded their hearts to the Lord.

DEDICATION OF THE GOSPEL LAUNCH, ARAUTO ("HERALD"), AT BAHIA, BRAZIL

"From that time the need of the launch was constantly presented before the Throne of Grace, but no appeal was ever made for funds. The pledge of the Father's will in regard to it was a $1 note, which came a long distance from a poor sewing woman. Unsolicited contributions have been made by friends of different denominations in different countries, varying from five cents to $150; and before the launch was to be paid for, the remainder of the purchase money was offered.

"The boat, of which I send you a photograph, was built in New York. It has a two-horse power motor, which requires neither registered engineer nor fireman, is twenty-one feet long and accommodates comfortably eight or ten persons. It will be transported by rail from Bahia to Joazeiro, where it is to be launched on the river. The San Francisco valley has an estimated population of one million, and borders on or passes through parts of five different States.

"On the 29th of June, brethren and friends of the evangelical denominations represented in the city, and many others, gathered at the Arsenal, where the launch is moored, to unite in consecrating it, the first Gospel boat in this great country, to its mission of speeding the messengers of salvation to thousands of lost souls. To our knowledge it is the first, but God forbid that it should be the last of its kind in this vast, needy, neglected field. It was dedicated with the name Arauto (Herald), in the hope that it may ever bear heralds of the King of kings on their missions of light and love. The readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are requested to pray for the maintenance of this boat, and for the fulness of God's blessing on the labors of the missionaries it is destined to carry. And also to remember the millions in other valleys, and pray for laborers with like facilities for their evangelization.

"ERNEST A. JACKSON."

"Santa Ritta do Rio Preto, Bahia, Brazil."

True and False Success • A Sermon by the Rev. Ferdinand C. Iglehart, D.D. • Continued

They truly get on in life who close up the spaces that separate them from their fellowmen, who have gotten close enough to the heart of the race to hear the cry of want, or see the tear of suffering, and who will offer a hand to help some one up. They rise highest in life who put their arms most tenderly about their fellows to lift them up to usefulness and happiness; those who grow in meekness and mildness, in faith, in long-suffering and love—those who grow in grace.

Turning from Sin

True growth implies also getting away from sin, sin in the individual heart, and in the past life. Sin is just as low ground as there is, and he who has not gotten away from it has not stepped an inch up, no matter how able he may be intellectually, how cultivated he may be socially, how rich or how powerful he may be. Sin is about as far back a starting-point as one can get, and he who has not left it has not gained an inch in the path of true progress. Christ has come to take our sins from us, and to take us away from our sins, and to give himself to us as the only source of spirit life and true development. He desired this so much that he laid down his life to gain it for us. Near our house, when I was a boy, there lived a little girl twelve years old, who was set to watch her baby brother in the cradle, while the mother stepped out of the house for a few moments on an errand. While she was gone the coal oil lamp exploded, setting fire to the clothes in the cradle. The girl ran through the flames, seized her brother, ran out into the street, and cried to a man, "Mister, please save my little brother!" The man rolled the baby in the snow, putting out the fire, and saving the child. While doing so, the poor girl was overlooked. The flames that had caught her clothes burned the body so badly, that after excruciating agony she died. She saved her brother, but she lost her own life. Christ saved us, but in saving us he lost his own life. But it is this knowledge of God's love, and the experimental knowledge of Christ's sacrifice in our behalf, which brings the divine life to our hearts, growth in grace to our characters, and genuine progress to our lives.

A poor Scotch girl came over to this country out of a true Christian home, with an intense personal knowledge of Christ. She not only hungered and thirsted after righteousness, but also after practical opportunity to do good. She entered a hospital and became a trained nurse. She went to a village where they had no hospital, and by her heroic service in doing all the housework, cooking, washing, ironing and nursing in the little house that was engaged, she aided the benevolent citizens in founding one of the most beautiful charities along the banks of the Hudson. About midnight one Saturday not very long ago I was called to her bedside. In bringing health to others she had lost her own. In bringing others back to life she had sacrificed her own. A bunch of violets which had been sent to her she took in her hand already growing cold, and said, "How beautiful they are, and how good everybody is to me." The sweetest words fell from her lips as they were being sealed and the warmest sentiments were expressed by the heart that was growing cold. She said, "I am dying young, but I am not in any way disappointed. I am only so glad that I have been permitted to do some little good in the world to serve the Master who gave himself for me, and I go now so cheerfully and happily to his arms and home." The next day there was universal sorrow in the village at her death, for there was scarcely a home some member of which had not received her loving ministry.

None of the millionaires and multi-millionaires whose palaces cover the hills in the neighborhood of the hospital were thought more of than this poor Scotch girl, who got away from self to others, from sin to holiness, who grew in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. In the poor Scotch nurse there was real success, there was true development, there was the highest greatness. Real royalty is not in crowns, or jewels, or thrones, or robes, or chests of gold, or equipages, or plumes; but in purity of character, sacrifice of life, and consecration to the cause.

Transforming Knowledge

The way to attain this growth of grace is by knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. We may know things mediately by the use of language: we may know things immediately by intuition, such as time, space, God, eternity. We may know Christ mediately by what the prophets say of him, by the blessed story of his love and sacrifice, given to us by the Evangelists and the Apostles. And then we may know him immediately, the Holy Spirit bearing witness to his presence in our innermost consciousness. We may have not only a knowledge of our own life, but also the knowledge of Christ's life within us. We have stood upon the broad prairie and drank in the spirit of Nature, in the beauty of the landscape. We have climbed the rugged mountain-brow, and looked out over the magnificent prospect which it commanded, until we have seemed to see in the weird forms the face of him who piled the masonry of the eternal hills. We have witnessed the masterpieces of fine art, until we have seen the spirit of the author and the spirit of absolute beauty behind them. We have been entranced with the most delightful strains of melody, have been swayed by the genius of the poet and the orator, have engaged in earth's tasks and life's sweet charities, but these experiences, beautiful and valuable as they have been, are nothing to the joy which now we feel at a knowledge of the Saviour within.

There is a breadth, a depth, a fullness, an infinitude in this experience of an indwelling Christ which language is powerless to describe. Oh, Saviour, come closer to us now. Earth, with all its charms, were a mockery to us without thy smiles, and heaven with all that heaven means, cannot be much above the joy which mortals feel at thy mysterious presence and at thy quenchless love. When we have cast one glance at thee, let us multiply that glance until we gaze steadfastly at thee, and be from glory to glory, by the Spirit of the Lord. And where in our heart there has been one drop of affection, let it multiply until it grows as the unmeasured ocean.

Changed into the Same Image

> As a rare perfume in a vase of clay
> Pervades it with a sweetness not its own,
> So when thou dwellest in the mortal soul,
> All heaven's own sweetness seems around it thrown.

It is strange that men will make so much of things that are intrinsically so little, that they will bestow so much time and attention upon the accidents and incidents instead of the realities of life. It is strange that men will encumber themselves with so much baggage, the weight of which frets and tires them, which is so easily lost, and which they will have to leave at the portals of the tomb, and pay so little attention to those treasures which enrich the mind and the heart and which are the property of the soul forever. The true progress, the growth in grace of which we have spoken, only begins here, but it shall continue forever. The Christ-life planted in the soul by a saving knowledge of him, will last as long as God shall live, and will be as full of increasing joy as the eternal love can furnish. Christ came to bring us the Father's love, and to tell us that death is only an incident in and not the end of life, that it is the hand that opens the doorway of eternal progression. We are like birds with a lost nature with which we walk: we are like birds with a wing nature with which we fly; and we fly higher and higher, plying our pinions in the sun's golden fires, and we fly higher and higher until we find God, and we sweep out into our sweet career of ceaseless years, and when the endless procession of the centuries shall have elevated us to the altitudes where archangels now stand, we will then be only on the shores of a boundless sea. What inward tranquillity, what high aspiration, what lofty ambition, what love that reaches into the love that is infinite; and beyond there are oceans of joy and pleasure, whose billows break on no shore.

SAILOR CONVERTS AND FELLOW-WORKERS AT WEI-HAI-WEI

A GATHERING OF MISSIONARY WORKERS AT KULING

China's Summer Cities among the Clouds

CHINA has many very attractive summer resorts. At the head of the list in order of time is Kuling, the mountain resort near Kiukiang on the Yang-tse-kiang, where overworked and tired missionaries go for a brief holiday. Kuling is a boon to those who are shut up in the hot interior, or in congested seaports during the "dog days." Edward S. Little, a former missionary of Kiukiang, has the honor of discovering and of writing the romance of this sylvan spot.

In midsummer the heat of the Chinese plains in central China is malignantly intense. Foreign residents at the Yang-tse ports and elsewhere are the prey of malaria, fevers, and exhaustion, which decimate their ranks, and for which there has been no help until recent pluck and enterprise have converted nature's mountain solitudes into sanitariums. These have hitherto proved inaccessible to the weary dwellers on the sun-baked plains. Now all is changed. Former small bungalows among the foothills, where a favored few might go, have been superseded by mountain-top settlements into which Hankow and Kiukiang, and a score of other cities, pour their streams of human life. The peaks above Kiukiang, looking down with smiling verdure, were counted sacred, Kuling having been a hotbed of nuns and priests in the days of the Taipings. These peaks are crowned with ruined temples, caves and pagodas. The priests, only with the greatest difficulty, were persuaded to rent a few spots. The mountain top was a wild waste given over to tigers, wild pigs, and a few stray charcoal burners. Nearly 400 temples were destroyed by the Taipings. No one claimed these desolate lands, which abounded in natural beauty. At length it was obtained as a perpetual lease of waste land to the Englishman, Little. The native name not being sufficiently euphonious, the section was given the name of Kuling (the Chinese form of "cooling"). A winding stair was built to reach this exalted estate, for road there was none. After many troubles and much opposition, involving feuds, lawsuits, etc., the matter was adjusted and the building of the missionary summer settlement began in earnest. Soon the gorges and hillsides were taken up by individuals, or corporations, or societies, and received names as "Hankow Gorge," "Dr. Hykes' Gorge" (of the American Bible Society), "The Methodist Gorge," etc. As if by magic, the city rose on the mountain top. A lovely church crowns the summit, where Chinese worship as well as foreigners.

It was our privilege to spend a charming month at Kuling. Away above the clouds, the picturesque summer city bursts upon the view, unrivalled by anything yet accomplished in China. Below the clouds, brooks and fountains gurgle back to the plains, and the road winds like a ribbon through meadows of bloom and green. Birds sing, and the blue sky arches, dome-like, over the midsummer pavilion, in which several hundred invalids, little children, and worn and weary workers, have assembled for a brief refreshing, away from the thronging Chinese cities. All the romantic spots, the Waterfall, the Dragon Pools, the Pagodas, the Temple Above the Clouds, the Big Trees, the Priest's Cave, ruined temples, and the like—make pleasant prospective points for an afternoon ramble or ride in "chair," and picnic tea with friends. Rosy and exhilarated, one returns to dreamless slumbers. Below the mountain, the beautiful lakes and fields spread for miles, dotted with farms, and rice fields and fishing craft, as lovely a panorama as eye could wish. Sometimes these mountain-top dwellers are enveloped in clouds and mist—a very unique experience. One descends the mountain at the expiration of vacation, with a host of new friendships, and with mind and soul refreshed, body strengthened, and a heart full of praise to God.

Away in the North, the Rev. Mr. Pike, of the American Methodist Episcopal Mission, in the vicinity of Shanhaikwan, made the discovery of a charming spot, Mountain Girt, on the Bay of Pechili; which has been converted into a northern sanitarium and summer resort; widely known and well beloved. Peking and Tientsin were the cities especially grateful for Pei-Tai-Ho, this new resting-place. When the heat comes, and the children grow sick and wan, and the floods set in, and all the work is impeded by the sickness and failing powers of the teachers and missionaries, what a boon, to "lift up our eyes to the hills, from which cometh our help," and "go apart and rest awhile." As at Kuling, a charming church and assembly hall adorn the spot. This resort was burned and pillaged by the Boxers, in 1900, and lay desolate for a time. Now it is being restored on an increased scale of beauty and durability.

Fifty miles south of Chefoo is Wei-hai-wei, on the rocky Isle of Liukungtao. In a quiet way a revival campaign was carried on there last year among the fleets. It was a wonderful summer, and this year we are soon again praying that more may be won for God's service. The work is inspiring, and over a hundred were "saved to serve" last summer.

Mohkansan, another mountain resort, is a day's journey from Shanghai by river boat. Thus the seekers for a season of rest in China may therefore oscillate between Kuling and Mohkansan, Pei-Tai-Ho, Cheefoo and Wei-hai-wei, and, while not far from their work, may yet obtain all the advantages of change of climate and congenial society.

MRS. J. WOODBERRY.

Shanghai, China.

Cannibals Slay Converts in the New Hebrides

IN a letter to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from the Rev. John G. Paton, the famous missionary to the New Hebrides, the writer tells of the opposition to the Gospel among the cannibal heathen, and the tragic fate of a number of native converts. Dr. Paton, however, is exceedingly hopeful of the spiritual future of the islands. He writes:

"After being nearly four months on its way, your letter reached me, after coming on board the steamer Tambo, as I left to attend our mission synod, and to spend a few weeks with our dear Anewa converts. I must cordially thank you, and by you the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, for the money so kindly sent me to help in the support of our New Hebrides Mission, for which I pray that our dear Lord Jesus Christ may reward and bless you all with success and every joy in him, his service, and salvation, till we all meet in the eternal glory of heaven

"You will be pleased to learn that among the 50,000 or more cannibal heathen yet on our group, the Lord steadily extends his work by our mission; but the heathen have lately shot a number of our Christian converts, in their opposition to the teaching and results of the Gospel among them. Scarcely a week passes without them shooting some native in revenge for their heathen belief, that some one or more of them have died by some others—generally a sacred man or priest, having exercised sorcery or witchcraft upon them, of which they live always in a state of dreadful fear. This makes the work of the missionary among them very trying and often dangerous. But, by the Holy Spirit's power, or the teaching of our dear Lord Jesus in the Bible by our missionaries, we have now over 16,000 avowed worshipers of God, trying to love and serve Jesus with wonderful consistency, asking the Divine blessing on their every meal. They have family worship to begin and close every day in their every household, and they all attend church regularly and try to bring others to fear, love and serve Jesus Christ, even in many cases at the risk of their own lives.

REV. JOHN G. PATON, D.D.
The Veteran Missionary to the New Hebrides

"This is a great help and encouragement to us missionaries in our work among them. I have often thought that if all white Christians were as zealous and earnest, according to their education, knowledge, and opportunities as our native Christians are, what a change for the better we would soon see in the world! May the time soon come when the greatest joy and highest honor sought by all true Christians will be to live and labor for Jesus, in seeking the conversion of the world to his service and glory.

"Yours in Christian love and gratitude, J. G. PATON."

A Policeman's Alternative

At a midnight mission meeting, a policeman, who was on duty, made his way from the rear of the hall to the platform, and asked permission to say a few words. "I have been listening," he said, "to what you have been talking about to-night of your rescue homes, and all that I say God bless you and help you. There's none knows better than a police officer the need of such work. Hard men as we often are, I have shed tears at the sight of a lovely girl down at the dregs of her life. It's a hard, cruel life, and most of 'em end up in misery. The beginning is merry. They like the lights and the drink and the jolly talk, but it soon gets dull and wearisome. They are ashamed to go home, and they sink down, down, till it's a choice between carbolic acid and the river. My advice to you is to go less on the rescue-homes and more on the mother. Those mothers forgive oftener than you think. The girls, too, have always a soft spot for the mother. I had one a few nights ago under arrest. She was scared, and begged me to let her go. I thought a scare would do her good, so I refused, unless she would tell me where her mother lived, and give her word that if I could get her back, she would quit the life. She agreed at last and I took her to the mother. It was not far off. 'Now,' I said to the mother, 'I've got your daughter in charge. Say quick, shall it be the island for her or do you take her back?' Well, you should have seen them two. They clung to one another and kissed and kissed till I couldn't stand it. I left 'em together, and I guess they ain't going to separate again."

PREACHING SIMULTANEOUSLY IN SIXTEEN TENTS

PHILADELPHIA'S GREAT GOSPEL CAMPAIGN WITHOUT A PARALLEL IN SUMMER RELIGIOUS WORK

THIS year, Philadelphia has led the whole country in summer religious work, both in tents and in the open air. Sixteen huge tents have been spread in the City of Brotherly Love, and beneath their snowy folds large audiences have gathered and listened earnestly to the presentation of the Gospel message.

The following summary will be of interest to our readers:

NUMBER, ATTENDANCE AND DENOMINATIONS OF THE OPEN-AIR MEETINGS HELD IN PHILADELPHIA, JULY 26, 1903

Denominations	Number of Meetings	Attendance
Presbyterian	22	14,335
Methodist	24	....
Salvation Army	22	....
Baptist	19	....
Non-Sectarian	10	....
Christian Endeavor	5	....
Episcopal	4	....
Evangelists	4	....
United Presbyterian	3	....
Seventh Day Advent	2	....
Lutheran	1	....
Congregational	1	....
Evangelical Alliance	1	....
Independent Evangelists	1	....
Bible Society	1	....
Church of Christ	1	....
United Christian	1	....
Bible Talk	1	....
Reformed Presbyterian	1	....
Gospel Association	1	....
The Lord Jesus Christ Soc.	1	....
Gospel Herald	1	....
Total	127	24,966

AN AUDIENCE UNDER THE SPREADING CANVAS

Of the above, there have been sixteen tents, in which were held twenty-two services. The remaining number of meetings—101—were held in the open air.

Through the kindness of Superintendent of Police Quirk, and his assistants, on July 26, at the request of the Presbyterian Evangelistic Committee, these statistics were gathered from all parts of the city. It was found that within the bounds of the City of Philadelphia, 127 open-air and tent meetings were conducted on that day, with an aggregate attendance of nearly 25,000 people.

It will be of interest to observe how the work has been undertaken by many different denominations. The Methodists have a larger number of open-air services than the Presbyterians. The Baptists report nineteen, which is very encouraging, and shows growth in this live denomination. The Episcopals have four and the United Presbyterians, who are generally believed to be very conservative, have three tents in operation.

The advantage of system and thorough organization is shown by the Presbyterian work in the city, for almost one half of the entire aggregate attendance was found at the meetings conducted by the Presbyterian Committee. The original object of the work of the Presbyterian Committee, set apart by Philadelphia but the General Assembly's Committee throughout the entire country, is manifest in these encouraging statistics. They not encouraged with the fact not only of the large attendance and the large number of people reached by the Gospel message but that there are so many consecrated ministers and Christian workers engaged in this aggressive campaign. One hundred and twenty-seven meetings, with an attendance of nearly 25,000 is far better than fifteen or twenty meetings with an equal number in attendance. The primary responsibility resting upon the Church is not for the gathering of converts so much as for the wide-spread giving of the blessing and message of salvation to the multitudes who do not ordinarily come within the bounds of regular, established church work. The benefit to the church at large of the evangelistic movement is observed by a careful study of the recent report issued by Dr. Wm. H. Roberts, Stated Clerk of the General Assembly. While he reports a falling off in the annual number of candidates and licentiates and local evangelists, there has been an increase over 1902 in church membership on examination of about 10,000.

STUDYING THE BIBLE AT CAMP NORTHFIELD

ON July 29 the Northfield Summer Bible School closed a most successful and profitable term's work. This school was established by the successors of D. L. Moody, to enable the people who come to Northfield during the summer months to obtain longer and more consecutive courses in Bible study than is possible at the summer conferences. It is, further, a part of the "year around" Bible study held at Northfield, in which it is estimated that more than two Bible lectures or classes are held each day during the whole year. Many requests had been sent in for such a school, and in the summer of 1902 the experiment was tried. Among the teachers engaged were Prof. W. W. White, President of the Bible Teachers' College, N. Y., Rev. John Kelman, of Edinburgh, and Dr. G. Campbell Morgan, who gave, for the first time in Northfield, his wonderful course, the "Crises of the Christ."

The lectures were well attended, and excited so lively an interest that it was decided to continue the school this year. Apart, however, from added courses and different lecturers, few radical changes were made. As before, no tuition fees were charged and no previous scriptural training was required for admission. The term of the school comprised the entire month of July, overlapping the Young Men's and Young Women's Conferences in such a way that any one attending the school could, at the same time, take advantage of the Conferences. Much of the time three lectures were given each day, in addition to the meetings that were held among the regular students themselves. The courses given this summer were "The Life of a Christian," "Three Aspects of the Temptation of Christ," and "Eleven Studies in First Corinthians," by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, D.D.; "The Oracles of God," a series of lectures delivered last winter in Exeter Hall, London, by Dr. A. T. Pierson, of Brooklyn; and a detailed study of parts of the Old Testament, by Prof. N. Fay Smith, of the Bible department of Mt. Hermon School. For supplementary reading and individual research, the splendid Biblical library of Northfield Seminary was opened. The afternoons were set aside for this kind of work and for helpful social times among the students. This latter feature was augmented by the close proximity of "Camp Northfield," whose hospitable doors are opened each summer to four or five hundred men from the cities and colleges, and by near-by hotel facilities.

THE NORTHFIELD SUMMER SCHOOL FOR BIBLE STUDENTS

Enthusiastic reports are given of the enjoyable outdoor life at Northfield, of the swimming and boating on the Connecticut River, of the tennis and golf, and of an occasional visit to "Mount Toby," Old Deerfield, or some other place of interest. All of these pleasant times, in conjunction with the inspiring morning and evening Bible lectures, will make the stay at Northfield long remembered in the minds of those who were fortunate enough to be there.

The class of people in Northfield during the time was representative, and included missionaries on furlough, a number of Southern ministers, S. S. workers, young people planning to enter Christian work and Y. M. C. A. men. The exact number in attendance has not yet been computed but it is believed more than double that of last year. Over seventy were registered in Weston Hall, one of the Northfield Seminary buildings, nearly as many more carry at "The Northfield," while numbers of others lived in the different guest houses of the great resort town. The school is followed immediately by the Northfield General Conference, ending August 16, and the First Conference Address, which close, September 21, the Northfield Season of 1903.

Concerning the work at Northfield, Mr. W. R. Moody writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

"I wish that we might have you with us at the Conference. I do not think we have ever had a gathering that has opened under conditions so encouraging as the present one. The attendance is larger than it has ever been, and the speaking is unusually helpful."

ANSWERED PRAYERS

F. A. G., Polo, Ill. "I am glad to say the Master has answered many prayers for me. Glory to his name."

A. P., Trenton, N. J. "After praying almost without ceasing for two days, I have received such an answer to prayer that it has caused me to greatly rejoice."

D. S., Paris, Ill. "I take my trouble to the Lord in prayer, and he has heard and answered, and there is a great load lifted from my heart."

Reader, New York. "I want to acknowledge many, many answered prayers, and to encourage all who will, to keep on praying. A life of prayer is the ideal life for every Christian."

H. V., Pa. "I wish to acknowledge that many times God has answered my petitions. I am waiting for the conversion of a dear son, and I know my Father will hear me."

Ida B., Ohio. "I wish to acknowledge that God has answered many of my prayers, since I confess my love and gratitude."

E. S., Lane, Idaho. "I write to thankfully acknowledge answered prayers. I prayed for a clear one, and my prayers were answered. Many times have my prayers been answered."

L. D. H., Philadelphia. "I want to testify that God does answer prayers, as he has done so for me in many instances."

Z. E. B., Pollock, La. "I can truly say that God is a prayer-hearing and prayer-answering Father. He has greatly blessed me, and answered my prayers more than tongue can express."

Mrs. A. M. N., Saratoga Springs, N. Y. "I wish to add my testimony to the 'Answered Prayer.' I do feel that God is answering mine."

Mary, F. W., Springfield, Ill. "We were in danger, and I asked God to protect my daughter and myself. He heard and answered, and I give him the glory."

Reader, N. Y. "A trouble lay heavily on my mind. It seemed an inextricable tangle. I prayed to the Lord and he smoothed it out, assured my petition was answered almost as soon as uttered."

Mrs. T. H., Churches Ferry, N. Dak. "I want to testify that God has answered many prayers for me. The answer comes, if not exactly as I would like it, yet for the best, the very best."

G. W. P., Granville, N. Y. "When I asked for the recovery of my dear wife, it was granted. When I asked that a relative [illegible] it was done. At other times I have known that I received [illegible]."

Mrs. F. M. L., Lawrence, Kan. "I have [illegible] Answered Prayers. [illegible] I have found them so encouraging [illegible] I received [illegible] and [illegible] so [illegible] I cannot [illegible] I [illegible] asking [illegible]. I [illegible] of [illegible] have. I know I [illegible] others, where I ask [illegible] be [illegible]."

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIÉ, ASSOCIATE EDITOR — LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor — G. H. SANDISON, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscriptions.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter

A Problem in Diplomacy

GRAVE news of ominous significance is that which comes from China, of the demand on the foreign embassies, that they give up for trial certain Chinamen who have taken refuge with them. These men are chiefly newspaper men and teachers, who have been advocating reform. It is a foregone conclusion that if they are given up, they will be executed, and that, too, not in a humane manner, but with savage barbarity. One such reformer, arrested before he could take refuge at a foreign embassy, was recently beaten to death, and it is stated that his body was almost cut to pieces before the lashes reached the vital organs and ended his sufferings. The order for this method of execution came from the Imperial Palace, and was evidently issued by the Empress Dowager.

In ordinary circumstances it would be unjustifiable for an ambassador to stand between a government and its own citizens. Neither we, nor any civilized nation, would permit an ambassador accredited from a foreign power, to shelter a native criminal from punishment. International law would not sanction such an interference. It is, therefore, a very serious matter for an ambassador to offend the nation to which he is accredited by the refusal to surrender the fugitives. Humanity, however, demands such a refusal in this case, and the British Ambassador has refused. He bases his act on an agreement made with the governor of Shanghai, that refugees shall be tried by a court composed partly of foreigners. That plea, however, is evidently weak, because the agreement being made with a subordinate, is repudiated by the supreme authority of the Empress. In any case, the refusal will be regarded by the Imperial Court as an unfriendly act, and will weaken the influence of the nation whose ambassador makes it.

We sincerely hope that in spite of this consideration, and in spite of the technical legal irregularity, our Government will take the same stand as the British Government has done. It would be better for us to lose some concessions, better to incur disfavor with the Empress, than to give up to a barbarous and cruel death men whose only crime is intelligent patriotism. They have done no more than advocate reforms that we have urged on China, and they are, therefore, entitled to our protection.

Child Redemption in Africa

WE are greatly pleased to note that many readers of this journal are taking an active personal interest in the great interdenominational plan of "Child Redemption in Africa," as explained in a recent issue. Although slavery has been officially abolished by the united consent of the civilized governments of the globe, a form of slavery still lingers in Africa, which is all the more pitiful and degrading because it is applied to the helpless and friendless children.

Bishop Hartzell, of the Methodist Church, the Rev. Erwin H. Richards, founder of the Inhambane Mission (one of the most experienced missionaries in the Dark Continent), and many others unite in describing the evils of this system of child-slavery which is practiced among the native tribes, and which constitutes one of the most formidable barriers to Gospel progress. Children of both sexes, but especially girls, are sold outright into domestic slavery. A parent or relative has the right to do this, in accordance with an ancient barbaric custom. These little black girls are sold with a single purpose: that they may become the polygamic wives of their purchasers; for, writes one missionary, "polygamy is the common lot, wherever a native has the means of purchasing as many women as he will. The selling of girls is a continental custom in Africa." The native heathen parent, we are further told, "has never yet been known to refuse the first cash offer for his daughter," whether the offer is made by young or old.

Experience has demonstrated that the most successful Gospel work in any land is that which begins with the children. In the tender years of childhood, the heart is more impressionable, and can be more readily reached than in adult years. Religious truths learned in childhood, take deep root and become ineradicable. Morals and manners that are acquired early, can never be wholly effaced or forgotten. In Africa, as in all other heathen lands, the golden opportunity lies with the children. If it were possible for the Church of Christ to bring into the shelter of its fold a thousandth part of the native heathen children of Africa now, by a supreme and Divinely-blessed effort, it would save that continent; for in less than one short life-time, the leaven of evangelism would permeate the whole land and convert its tribes to the Christian faith.

We ask our readers and their friends to uphold the hands of those missionaries who are pleading for the redemption of the children of Africa from this slavery which is standing, like a great black frowning wall, between them and the freedom of the Gospel. Bishop Hartzell, Missionary Richards, and their associates, rightly claim that those little black boys and girls, if they are to be brought into the light of the Gospel, must be rescued from this abominable life, which, once entered upon, practically places the child beyond recall. A letter to Missionary Richards will elicit all necessary information. He may be addressed to the care of this paper.

The Progress of Peace

OVER a hundred years ago, our forefathers planted the Liberty Tree. It has flourished and attained a glorious stature. Its branches already reach out across a Continent, and some of its widespreading arms have even touched the hem of the distant islands of the sea.

Only a few short years ago, a tree of Peace was planted in the Old World. It was but a mere sapling; yet it was, nevertheless, a true shoot of the original Peace Tree, which blossomed in the Golden Age. It was set out by loving hands, but those who ought to have watered and tended it, neglected it sorely, and it seemed likely to die. It has lately taken on new life, as the gardeners, doubtless repenting of their former neglect, are again assiduously cultivating it. Some of the more sanguine are even hopeful that it may live and thrive and become a worthy descendant of its great arboreal ancestor.

Allegory aside, it is gratifying to observe the many indications of the growth of the peace sentiment both at home and abroad. International arbitration—which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has warmly advocated for many years past—is no longer regarded as the vision of idle dreamers. Arbitration treaties for the adjustment of all differences already exist between this country and Great Britain, and also between Italy and Argentina. Their wisdom and practical value are impressing the European nations. In the French Chamber of Deputies, there is a large and growing element favoring an arbitration treaty with England, under which all future differences between these countries may be adjusted by a joint tribunal. Baron D'Estournelles, the leader of the movement in France, goes even further, and advocates an agreement between England, Russia and France, to amicably settle all present and prospective disputes, and to reduce the present intolerable burden of supporting formidable navies, which are a constant menace to the world's peace, as well as a ruinous drain upon the resources of the maritime nations and an oppressive burden upon their people.

This is a step in the right direction. God grant the day may soon come—the sooner the better—when rulers and Cabinets and peoples shall be convinced of the brutal folly and wickedness of war; when the leaders of men and the people themselves realize that no principle is ever decided by violence, and that the appeal to force is an appeal to unreason. But until that happy time arrives, treaties will continue to be broken; statesmen, Cabinets and kings will plot and counterplot; foolish nations will go to war, and the old familiar story of wild passion and slaughter, followed by sorrow and repentance, will be reenacted. And through it all, the Peace Tree will be growing apace. The world needs it—is waiting for it with a deep and mighty longing, a longing that will never be satisfied, until the Heavenly Prince of Peace himself shall come to quell the turbulent passions of men, and to lift up the race to the ideal human brotherhood.

Then will the Peace Tree flourish.

A Blessed Opportunity

WE are greatly in need of a new chapel at Mont-Lawn, the present one being altogether too small for our needs, and in such a rickety condition that only last year we found it necessary to brace the walls in order to prevent their falling.

While we have found our subscribers ever willing to contribute to the support of this glorious work—and how greatly we appreciate their generosity is more than we dare undertake to state—we do not think that they should be burdened with any share of the expenses incident to the raising of a new building—even though that building be a chapel dedicated to the service of our Master—and the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has devised a plan which, we believe, will furnish the necessary funds, without entailing any hardships too grievous to be conveniently borne.

Getting More Than You Give

As the Mont-Lawn work has fully established its claim to permanency, nothing less than a stone chapel will fill our requirements, and one large enough to accommodate not less than 400 auditors. Our children and the helpers, even at the present time, aggregate nearly 300—then there are the visitors and villagers, and finally, we must provide for natural growth with the course of time. To erect such a spacious and substantial chapel, with all the necessary furnishings, together with administration quarters, and rooms for the entertainment of visiting friends, especially visiting CHRISTIAN HERALD subscribers, would require not less than $20,000.

Fifteen Per Cent. Annuity

This money we propose to raise by selling 2,000 Life Subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, (donated for that purpose by its proprietor), at $10 each. A Life Subscription causes your name, or the name of any one you may wish thus to favor, to be placed for life upon the subscription list of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Each ten dollar subscription thus pays to the fortunate subscriber every year an annual subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, worth $1.50 per annum, equal to a life annuity of 15 per cent. on the investment, and at the same time contributes $10 to the erection of a Children's Temple at Mont-Lawn. Finally, these two thousand Life Subscribers will have a share in the blessings daily prayed by the little ones down from heaven upon the hearts and the lives of those who had helped in the erection of this house of worship and of praise.

The Only Opportunity of Its Kind

No other Life Subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have ever been accepted, and none will be accepted, as far as we can now tell, except such as come properly within the scope of the offer here published. If our readers will kindly remember this, it will obviate much useless correspondence.

Do It To-Day! Do It Now!

Let all who are interested, address THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City, and place at the left-hand lower corner of the envelope the words "For the Children's Temple."

Among the Workers

—DR. L. W. MUNHALL has been holding union meetings at Marseall, Mo. Six churches joined in the movement. The tent in which the meetings were held was crowded, and large numbers professed conversion.

—REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND has been holding meetings in New Britain, Conn. It was in that city that Elihu Burrett, the learned blacksmith, erected a missionary building, and it was there that Mr. Hammond held one of the services. About forty professed conversion.

—THE PARK SERVICES in Pittsburg and vicinity began on Sunday, June 21, and were held in all the parks of the entire Pittsburg region on Sunday, June 28, and in a portion of the parks on July 5 and 12. They will continue until October, under the general direction of pastor S. Edward Young, of the Second Presbyterian Church of Pittsburg.

THE BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

The New Pope

BOTH statesmen and clericals approve of the choice of the Cardinals of a successor to the late Pope Leo XIII. As had been anticipated, the largest number of votes recorded on the first ballot were given to Cardinal Rampolla, the most conspicuous Cardinal under Leo. He was, however, objectionable to Austria and to Germany, and his administration of affairs in his department had been offensive to several influential Cardinals, who vigorously opposed his election to the Papal chair. His opponents scattered their votes, but as the ballots proceeded, the number of those given to Cardinal Sarto increased, until, on the seventh ballot, he was elected. His surprise appears to have been genuine. He had remarked to a friend, who, before the conclave, suggested to him the possibility of his election, that there was no likelihood of his being chosen, and he felt so sure of it, that he had bought a return ticket to Venice. When the Cardinals pressed around him to congratulate him, while the votes were being counted, and before the result was announced, he said to them, "It is a cross that you are bringing me."

Giuseppe Sarto is an Italian, a native of Treise, where he was born in 1835. It is a curious coincidence that in 1303, exactly six hundred years ago, another native of Treviso was elected Pope. The Sarto family consisted of two boys and six girls. Giuseppe was the younger brother. The family was poor, and to this day all the members are in humble life. The new Pope's elder brother holds a small office under the Government, for which he receives a salary of eighty dollars a year. Two of the sisters, being unmarried, have resided with their now famous brother. He performed the duties of a humble parish priest until 1884, when Leo made him Bishop of Mantua, and, nine years later, he was made a Cardinal and Patriarch of Venice. He took no part in the political affairs of the Church, seldom went to Rome, but devoted himself to his own diocese, where he won the respect of Protestants, as well as Catholics, by his charities, his interest in social reforms, and his kindness and courtesy. It is stated that he was so generous in his gifts to the poor of his diocese, that he impoverished himself to such a degree that he has been known to pawn his official ring, to provide himself with funds for a temporary emergency. It was noticed after his election to the Pontificate, by a Cardinal who was making an appointment with him, that he was wearing a nickel watch, with a common silk guard.

No reliable predictions can be made of the policy the new Pope will pursue. He has chosen to be called Pius X., but the inferences usually drawn from the choice of a name are at fault in this instance, as it is not known which of his nine predecessors of that name he regards as a model. He is said to be a man of profound learning and sterling honesty of character. Americans who have met him say that in personal appearance and manner he bears a striking resemblance to the late Phillips Brooks. His contempt for relics has been manifested with some vigor, for he marked the beginning of his patriarchate by ordering the destruction of some that were being used in his diocese in the usual superstitious way. It is predicted that the long-standing quarrel between Church and State in Italy will be adjusted under his rule. The opinion is based on the fact that he, almost alone among the Cardinals, has held friendly relations with the late and present King and royal family of Italy. When King Humbert was assassinated, Cardinal Sarto vigorously denounced the crime, and spoke of the dead monarch as "our august King," which was a recognition that at the time excited great surprise as coming from a prince of the Church. Some of the other Cardinals were annoyed by the remark, but the late Pope took no action on account of it. He had a high esteem for Sarto, and predicted that he would be his successor. The King of Italy has expressed his gratification at the selection. It was noticed, however, that as at the election of Leo, the courtesy of notifying him of the result of the election was omitted. The omission may have been due to one of the officials, who all hate the King, whom they regard as profiting by the spoliation of the church. It is certain that the highest hopes are entertained in the European courts of an amicable settlement of the Italian difficulty, as well as of the difficulties in other lands, because of the new Pontiff's tact and geniality of character. Though, as Protestants, we have no veneration for Popes, or respect for their claims, we cannot but rejoice that the man who, by his office, wields so mighty an influence over such a vast number of people in all lands, should be a man of so high a character as that credited to Pius X. More than all other potentates of the world he should feel it incumbent on him to fulfil the injunction which God gave to the ancient king as the ideal of a ruler:

He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God (II. Samuel 23: 3).

CARDINAL SARTO, NOW POPE PIUS X.

An Heroic Engineer

The lives of eighty persons were saved last week by the heroism and presence of mind of an engineer. A dispatch from Salt Lake, Utah, says that a Rio Grande train was proceeding over its usual route on August 6, drawn by a locomotive under the charge of Engineer James Hughes. As the locomotive reached the high bridge over Fountain River the engineer felt a sudden depression in the track. Realizing that the cause could be nothing but a failure in the structure of the bridge, he shut off steam and reversed his engine. At the same moment, foreseeing that it was too late to save himself or the engine, and conscious that in its inevitable plunge it would drag the cars behind it with their human freight to destruction, he shouted to his fireman to uncouple the tender. The fireman happened to be near enough to the couplings to obey promptly. In another moment the locomotive crashed through the bridge and fell into the river, but not a passenger car left the track. They came to a stand on the very edge of the yawning chasm. That was true heroism for a man on the very brink of destruction to think of the salvation of others and not of himself. The whole world owes its opportunity of salvation to such heroism in its divinest form.

He saved others; himself he cannot save (Mark 15: 31).

Died for a Cause

A singularly pathetic death was reported a few days ago. A New York lawyer, who had acquired several lots on one of the islands off the coast, began a campaign last year against the practice of dumping garbage on the island. He insisted that the practice was a menace to the health of the people, and he prepared a petition against it, to which he obtained a thousand signatures. He fortified his case with the opinions of eminent physicians and bacteriologists, that the deposits of garbage would lead to deaths from typhoid fever. He succeeded in getting a temporary order prohibiting the dumping, but, suspecting that it would be evaded, he made daily visits to the island to detect violations, and to collect evidence in support of his suit for a permanent order of prohibition. It is supposed that he spent too much time there during the heated term. He was stricken down with typhoid, and, in spite of the most skilful medical attention, he died. His death proves how dangerous is the evil against which he contended. It is a pity that his championship of the reform should have cost him his life. Perhaps the fact of his death may do more to remove the evil than he could have done by his life, and so others may benefit by it. It seems to be a law of our existence that only by sacrifice can good come to us. It is so that we have hope of immortality and eternal felicity.

That through death he might destroy him that had power of death (Heb. 2: 14).

Lured by Gold

A searching party from Phœnix, Ariz., has just returned from an expedition to solve the mystery of the disappearance of a well-known prospector. Some time ago he set out from Aqua Caliente to search for a gold ledge, which has tempted many prospectors into the desert. This man believed that he had reliable information by which he could locate the ledge, and he made his preparations for the journey in spite of the warnings of his friends. So many persons have sought the same ledge, and have narrowly escaped with their lives, that all who had influence with the daring prospector sought to dissuade him from his project. But he would not listen, feeling sure that his skill would enable him to surmount the dangers of the search. Nothing more was heard of him, and after some time an expedition was organized to rescue him. The searchers almost lost their own lives in their effort. They found the prospector's body lying among his packs. His horse was still alive but terribly emaciated. The man had evidently lost his way, and had wandered around until overcome with thirst, hunger and fatigue. It is sad to think that a man should have lost his life in this miserable way, in his search for the gold that has lured so many others to death. Unhappily, there are many, too, who seek it in even less creditable ways by fraud and deceit, and so lose their souls.

For the love of money is the root of all evil: which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows (I. Timothy 6: 10).

A Marriage Among Lions

The manager of a menagerie at Coney Island, N. Y., has been adopting the now common method of a marriage in the lion's den to attract visitors to his show. A few days ago a young man and a young woman accepted the manager's offer of fifty dollars, to have their wedding solemnized in the lion's den instead of in a church. A minister was found who saw nothing inconsistent with his principles in officiating at the ceremony. He, however, prudently performed his part outside the bars. There were four lions, three tigers, and three jaguars, with their trainer, in the cage. The couple to be married took their places among the animals, but it was noticed that they were very nervous. The usual questions were put by the minister from his place outside the bars and were duly answered, and the couple were pronounced man and wife. The minister was just beginning a prayer to conclude the ceremony, when one of the lions made a sudden movement. The couple rushed for the door of the cage and made their escape, and the clergyman brought the ceremony to an abrupt conclusion. It was a foolish risk to run, and one wonders how a clergyman could be found to countenance it by his presence. We may hope that he will seek out that couple and never rest until he has taught them how to escape from a still greater danger, which they must surely meet, from a still more formidable foe.

Be sober, be vigilant, because your adversary the devil as a roaring lion walketh about seeking whom he may devour (I. Peter 5: 8).

BRIEF NOTES

The extent of business relations with the Old World may be inferred from the fact that the twelve cables across the Atlantic now carry an average of ten thousand messages a day.

The London Daily Mail, one of the most influential of the journals in England, has taken a positive attitude [illegible] against betting. It has rejected all advertisements of [illegible] and excluded the article on horse races and the [illegible] of betting, which appears in all other daily papers.

A report of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S work for the support and education of five thousand children in India [illegible] and will be sent to any subscriber on application. It contains letters [illegible] describing the work and the progress of [illegible] trained at the expense of readers of THE HERALD. It is illustrated with pictures of the orphanages and [illegible] and contains also a map of India, showing the location of the orphanages.

OUR MAIL BAG

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

H. H., Cortland, N. Y. Is the proposition which we see bulletined in the post-offices, in regard to young men for the United States training ships, advisable for a boy between the ages of fifteen and eighteen?

It must depend altogether upon the boy himself. To some it would mean a desirable opening, with a view to promotion; to others the reverse. Promotion without influence is said to be almost unknown in the navy.

M. E. P. Does not the statement of Christ, that he came not to call the righteous, but sinners (Matt. 9: 13), imply that there were righteous people on earth?

The connection shows that the words were not intended to be understood as an affirmation of the righteousness of any one. Christ was being reproached for mingling with people who were despised as traitors to their country, and with men and women who were openly wicked. He replied in effect that he was just where the Saviour of sinners ought to be. As a physician's place was among the sick, so a Redeemer should be with those in need of redemption. People who considered themselves righteous would not feel that they had any need of him.

J. C., Jermyn, Pa. What is the standard order of the different navies of the world at the present time?

According to statistics at the beginning of the present year, the leading navies stood as follows: Great Britain, France, United States, Germany, Italy, Russia, Japan, Austro-Hungary.

P. H. H., Lancaster, Pa. As I understand it, (among the Romanists) extreme unction is given when a person is at the point of death only. I have been informed that if a person, after receiving this sacrament, recovers, he is considered by the Church as dead. Is this correct or not?

No, it is not correct. If, after receiving extreme unction, the person recovers sufficiently to resume his interest in mundane affairs, the virtue of the rite is gone, and it is as though it had never taken place.

Rev. E. H. Richards, Missionary in Africa, sends us this note, which will serve as an answer to a number of inquirers:

In reply to many inquiries, please state that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S recent article on Child Redemption in Africa, referred for the most part to the entire continent. Concerning our own immediate District (Inhambane), boys are never sold, but the girls are always sold. The missionary, by legal methods, is often able to postpone the sale; but one can never tell when an irate, drunken father or owner of a girl may come, and with law and custom both in his favor, it is then impossible to save the girl, without paying the redeeming price. Many girls are so saved by the mission. The cost of educating a boy or a girl on our East African Mission is $15 a year.

Anxious Subscriber, New York City. If a young man, a member of a Christian Church, engaged in Christian work, and leading in all ways a good life, falls into evil courses, visits saloons, and, on one occasion, spends a night in a vile resort, is there any hope of his being forgiven, if he quits his sins and does all in his power to warn others against such courses?

We can understand how a young man with such an experience as you describe may have doubts about his being forgiven. There are several passages of Scripture which encourage such doubts. He is probably well-acquainted with them, as they are generally brought to the attention of persons in that situation. His own reason, too, must tell him how heinous was his sin. It was worse in his case, a thousandfold, to commit such a sin, than it would have been in the case of an unconverted man, because he brought reproach on the Christian name, and brought himself under the power of the evil from which he had been delivered. Admitting all this, however, we believe that if such a sinner sincerely repents and implores forgiveness, he will be forgiven. "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin" (I John 1:7). There are many passages scattered through the Bible, inviting backsliders to return, and promising them pardon and restoration. (See II Chron. 30:9; Job 22:23; Jer. 3:12; Hos. 14:4; Matt. 12:20, 31; Luke 15:4-7; I John 1:9, and many others). The one indispensable condition is sincere repentance and absolute separation from the sin. God sees the heart and knows whether the sinner is in earnest. He who forgave David and Peter, will not turn away anyone who is really contrite.

From a reader in Kentucky comes this suggestive note:

During Dr. Torrey's recent evangelistic tour, in which thousands professed their faith in Christ, the wonderful power of prayer was strikingly demonstrated. In view of these wonderful answers to prayer, why should not all Christians unite in earnest, continuous, prevailing prayer to God for (1) an outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon all ministers and professing Christians that they may be filled with the Holy Spirit and be made effective in bringing others to Christ; and (2) an outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the unconverted that they may speedily be saved; and (3) that God will establish righteousness in the land and utterly destroy the forces of evil, especially the traffic in liquor, opium, and slaves, both white and black. Suppose each of the thousands of readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD would thus engage in continuous, believing prayer to God for these things, and suppose each would earnestly endeavor to bring about a religious revival, and by evangelistic services, personal work, the distribution of tracts and religious literature, seek to bring the unconverted to know Christ as a personal Saviour, what a volume of prayer would go up to God, and what an army of workers would go into action. "Behold, now is the accepted time." "To-day is the day of salvation." "Go work to-day in my vineyard." Will you?

S. F., Deer Creek, Ind. Should a church session consent to the use of their house of worship for anything not in line with the commonly recognized worship of God, such as lectures, festivals, church fairs, etc.?

There is a wide difference of opinion as to the uses to which a church building may consistently be put. While it is true that there is nothing intrinsically sacred in the stone, brick, lime, or wood of which the building may be composed, yet it is equally true that the edifice, as a whole, has been consecrated as a temple to God, and that nothing should be allowed to take place therein that would detract from its consecrated character. There are certain classes of lectures and entertainments which may be held there with entire propriety. To hold fairs, lotteries and vaudeville entertainments there would be altogether out of keeping with the character of the place. Such amusements, if given at all, should be given in some other building, where these objections would not apply.

Mary M. R., Monroe, Mich. I have seen printed somewhere the number of words in the books of the Bible, the middle verse, etc. Will you kindly give these facts and oblige your readers?

The information asked is given below:

	OLD TESTAMENT	NEW TESTAMENT	WHOLE BIBLE
Num. of Chapters	929	260	1,189
" " Verses	23,144	7,957	31,101
" " Words	610,577	180,751	791,328
Middle Book	Proverbs	II. Thess-salonians	Micah and Nahum
" Chapter	Job 29	Rom. 13 & 14	Ps. 117
" Verse	II. Chron. 20:17	Acts 17:17	Ps. 118:8
Shortest Book	Obadiah	III. John	III. John
" Chapter	Ps. 117	Rev. 15	Ps. 117
" Verse	I. Chron. 1:1	John 11:35	John 11:35

There is a dispute as to the number of verses and words. Some authorities give the total verses as 31,173, and the total words as 773,692, but the figures given above we believe to be correct.

E. M. W., Boston, Mass. What is the meaning of the words "binding and loosing" as applied to sin in Matt. 18: 18 and other passages?

They were common phrases among the Jews referring to decisions on questions of law and conduct. Thus, when a man was in doubt whether a certain act was a violation of the law, and the question was submitted to competent authority, the decision was called binding or loosing. If the act was declared a violation it was binding; if it was declared not a violation it was called loosing. The same might be said of the supplementary laws or traditions of the scribes. Were they valid? One teacher might say they were; and so bound them or made them binding on his disciples. Another might deny their validity, and so released his disciples or loosed them from obedience. This power Christ conferred on his disciples, and how they exercised it you may see in Acts 15: 19-29, when the Apostles, in conference assembled, released the Gentile converts from obedience to certain Jewish rites and ceremonies. In individual cases you may see the same thing now. A man in great distress over some sin he has committed, fears that there is no hope of his ever being pardoned. He goes to some minister or Christian friend, who, having heard his story, assures him that, upon true repentance, God will, or has, pardoned him.

E. C., Macon, Mo. Ought a minister to attend a circus? Are circuses elevating?

We do not believe that a minister, any more than a layman, is to be condemned because he pays a visit to a circus. As a rule, such entertainments are instructive and amusing, and free from objectionable features. There are probably very few men or women who haven't some pleasing recollection of the circus. There might be occasions, however, when, for various sufficient reasons, it would be obviously improper for a preacher of the Gospel to attend such a performance.

J. H. P., Ivanhoe, Va. 1. How may we know the difference between remorse and repentance? 2. Under what circumstances did Jesus obtain an education?

1. The dictionary explanation is that remorse is derived from two words, signifying the gnawing or biting of some past act; while repentance signifies a change of mind toward the past, a sorrow for it and a change of conduct. Remorse, as the word is generally used, implies suffering without hope or reformation. Repentance is a turning again, an amendment. The feeling of Judas was more like remorse, while Peter's was more like repentance. 2. Probably in a school connected with the synagogue. These schools varied in efficiency, but it is not likely that the sciences or other branches common now, were taught in them. They were almost exclusively concerned with the law and with Jewish history. There were higher schools at the Temple in Jerusalem, and it is probable that the visit to them mentioned in Luke 2: 41-47 was not the only one Jesus paid to them.

AN INDIAN REVIVAL MEETING IN OKLAHOMA

THE annual fall revivals of the reservation Indians in southern Oklahoma are now in progress. These revivals are held under large tents, and are made a season of feasting as well as an occasion of having the Gospel expounded by the reservation missionaries. One of the most notable conversions in this territory in a great many years is the changing of Geronimo, the noted Apache chief. This Indian, who has slain many whites during his campaigns in Arizona, came forward during a religious service near the town of Lawton, and announced that he had sought a different God than the one he had formerly worshiped. The ministers were astounded, and they were glad to take him in. On a Sunday night, in the presence of many old men who had followed him through his campaigns, Geronimo was baptized, and has since preached to the Indians, bringing others to the truth. It is believed that the conversion of Geronimo will have a good effect among the Apaches.

W. R. D.

Miscellaneous Questions

G. E. R., Caribou, Me. Never heard of the book.

M. E. S., Mt. Vernon, Ills. Write to the Scott Stamp and Coin Co., 18 E. 23d street, N. Y. City.

Miss J. F., Knoxville, Tenn. All the letters are pronounced as written, except "C," which is silent.

M. C. Rennie desires to thank those friends who have sent him copies of the poem: "The poor wayfaring man of grief."

Louis F. Baker, Ada, O., asks some reader to send him a copy of the poem beginning "Just set a light when I pass to-night; Set it where it can be seen," etc.

W. H. Standley, of the Gospel Mission, Watertown, N. Y., makes appeal for good religious literature for free distribution in his mission work. Responses from any of our readers will be appreciated.

J. W. H., Washington, D. C. For every hundred thousand dollars in gold or bonds, deposited with the U. S. Treasury by an approved bank of issue, the bank is authorized to print and issue $90,000 in notes of various denominations, and these are placed in circulation in the regular course of business.

A. E. A., Newark, N. J. Earl's Housekeeping is a very simple plan for keeping domestic accounts, either in large establishments or in small private families of moderate means, where economy is an important object, and a desire to obtain the most value for the least possible outlay, is a serious consideration. From the number of unsolicited applications for agencies, we infer that the merit of the book is becoming widely recognized. It has the unqualified endorsement of the most prominent women of America. Earl's Housekeeping retails at 25 cents, and is now being supplied to agents throughout the country, in quantities of one dozen copies, at 15 cents each. The publishing office is 1223 Bible House, New York.

Let all Help the Tenement Waifs

"Won't you Send us to Mont-Lawn?" They Cry—A Golden Opportunity

THIS is the season of outing. As you plan for your own holiday or that of your dear ones, do not forget the little tenement children of the great metropolis—the half-million or more of sad little waifs, whose whole world is cooped up in some hot and sickly tenement yard, or some foul-smelling court. There are thousands of these wee brothers and sisters of ours who know no other playground than the sidewalk; who never know the delights of a romp in the grass or a ramble in the woods; who never hear the birds sing, nor see the wild flowers on hedge or bush. Every year, death mows a wide swath among them in the hot summer, and they are swept off by thousands. The death-rate among the children of the New York tenements is the highest of any on this Continent.

Mont-Lawn, our beautiful Children's Home on the Hudson, is the paradise of the waifs. Every year two thousand or more are received and cared for during the torrid weather. They are sent back to the city stronger, fresher, happier, with a better hold on life and with new love and hope kindled in their young hearts.

We wish every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD might have a share in this beautiful work of bringing health, joy and happiness to the poor neglected tenement children. Every day brings more applications than can be met, with the means that are available. Wee boys and girls, with pale, pinched, eager faces and wistful eyes, are insistent in their pathetic plea, "Won't you take us to Mont-Lawn?" for the name and fame of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Children's Paradise are known throughout the tenement districts of the great metropolis. We do not believe our readers will close their ears and their hearts to such an appeal, when for the trifling gift of three dollars, they can make one poor little waif supremely happy by a ten-days' outing at Mont-Lawn. We ask all who can to join us in the effort to extend the Fresh-Air work, so that no needy tenement child may be turned away.

Not the least of those labors of love which constitute the duties of the Housemother and her staff of helpers at our Children's Home at Mont-Lawn, is the task of caring for the clothing of the hundreds of little tenement waifs, who are their special guests. Many of them come to the Home in the very poorest of garments. There are mothers who, however poor they may be, always contrive to make their children clean and tidy, but alas! every child is not so fortunate as to have a loving mother. It is not difficult to distinguish the motherless ones from the others. But none of the little wardrobes are of the best, and when some kind patron of the Home, mindful of this need of the waifs, sends a box of nice clean garments or underwear—things that have been outgrown or put aside by members of their own family—that box and its contents are a veritable boon to our wee men and women at Mont-Lawn. There is a busy time fitting the girls and the boys with the garments and it is rare indeed that any serviceable article is left unappropriated, so many and so varied are the wants of the army of youngsters.

Truly "Cleanliness is next to godliness" at Mont-Lawn. In the mornings, you can see teachers, their arms laden with children's clothing, entering the laundry, accompanied by a bevy of ragged children who are delighted with the prospects of clean frocks. They are very anxious to get their old things off, and can hardly wait to see which garment they are to receive.

One of the best ways to win the regard of a child forever afterwards, is to give her or him a bath, and some clean clothes. It is really beyond their comprehension that the clothes are meant for them to wear, and they come out new creatures, both in appearance and action. No child who has soiled hands must come near them.

It is remarkable, the carefulness they exhibit in trying to keep clean. One poor little deformed girl, who had a sad and downcast air, was dressed in a little white Swiss—the gift of some good patron—and on a change! She was all smiles, and acquired a decided little swing, with her head up, except when she would stoop and brush down her dress with her hands when she gave it an admiring glance. She instantly transferred all her affections to the teacher who had dressed her.

A little lad, who was being dressed, kept asking the question, "Are you going to give me these?" As the small trousers were put on and then the vest, the question was repeated. When it came to the necktie the child again said, "Are you really going to give these to me?" "Yes," said the teacher, "you can have them." "For nothing?" cried the wee man. "Why, you could get money for these things."

Another tenement child who was dressed in a pair of diminutive white pantaloons and a velvet jacket with a waist and large sailor collar (sent by a patron, of course), had his brother called in by his teacher to see him. The brother could hardly recognize him, and when the little fellow himself fully comprehended the change, he fell backward in a faint. The physician said "he was simply overcome with joy and admiration."

All the children are thankful for the clothing that is sent in. If the givers could only see the sparkle of the eyes and the grateful looks, they would feel well repaid for their trouble. The little Italian children will look at the teacher so gratefully and then kiss her hand. If she happens to be passing, they will point to the clothes and again kiss her hand in gratitude for the patron's gift.

Here is a portion of a letter sent by a patron of the Home:

Please accept these few things with our love, for it is done in the name of the Master. I only wish it were more. The little girl's clothes are some that were our own little girls, who is now in heaven, and the boy's, those of our son, who is now a minister of the Gospel. I am very much interested in your labor of love in doing so much for the little ones, and wanted to help a mite.

LITTLE CHILD-GARDENERS AT MONT-LAWN . . . . AN HOUR AMONG THE FLOWER-BEDS

Contributions of money in aid of the Children's Home should be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, New York. Every reader of this paper is invited to have a share in this life-saving work among the poor children of the tenements. $3 will give a wan, a ten days' delightful outing, and this sum includes transportation both ways, by trolley and steamboat, and food, shelter, clothing, and medical care while at the Home. Every gift will be duly acknowledged in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

MANY GOOD CAUSES HELPED

THE following contributions, sent in by our readers, for the various good causes mentioned below, are hereby acknowledged:

Bethesda Home

Mrs A E Kittredge . . . 1 00
—, Athens, Greece . . . 24 07
J E F, Hartford, Conn . . . 5 00
Mrs O E Burrell . . . 50
A E W, Vergennes, Vt. . . . 2 50
Cornelius, Springfield, Mass . . . 2 00
Miss Ida and Augusta Lawrence . . . 10 00
Mrs John R Twiss . . . 5 00

Good Causes

A Downer . . . 50
Mrs Jas Park, Jr. . . . 30
Mrs J N Gore . . . 10
L Kernahan . . . 30
Mrs J G Faulkner . . . 1 50
Walter L Reynolds . . . 2 00
C G Lawrence . . . 2 00
Mrs Sarah Sturtevant . . . 2 00
Mrs G L Fernalo . . . 1 00
—, Estey, N Mex . . . 1 00
Friend, Coldwater . . . 5 00
Edna, Florida . . . 2 35
W S Bagley . . . 50
Nancy C Redkey . . . 2 00
L K Millman . . . 1 00
A D Lenker . . . 1 25
Q X Z, Central Falls . . . 21 00
Mrs A Horr . . . 1 00
B E Deeley . . . 1 00
Mrs L G S, Cortland . . . 1 00
Proceeds of Fair given by J Taylor, E Hazlett, F Singer, A Hutchins and C Smith, Phila, Pa . . . 2 50
Annie Young . . . 1 00
Mrs M A Myers . . . 50
J H Pedersen . . . 2 00
—, Poling, Ind. . . . 06
A M C Bingham . . . 50
J Shannon . . . 15
E M Shultheis . . . 20
L B Asbell . . . 25
A Friend Mo . . . 5 00
Hugh Turney . . . 85
Mrs J Durley . . . 1 00
Mrs D M Gray . . . 1 00
Mrs W L Wilson . . . 1 00
A R Scruggs . . . 50
Lorenzo Waldrin . . . 50
Emma L Baker . . . 1 00
Seth Moffett . . . 3 00
Miss Lydia B Holmes . . . 3 00
A A Thompson . . . 3 50
Mrs Wheeler (for a Scotch lassie) . . . 50
Lula C Boggan . . . 1 00
R S Greer . . . 20
Mrs Bryant . . . 20
Arthur Hare . . . 1 50
A Friend, I H N, Pa . . . 1 00
Mrs Milton Hays . . . 1 00
Mrs W H Dodd . . . 50
G J Baumgartner . . . 1 00

Foreign Missions

Carey Williams . . . 40 00
Mr and Mrs C A Bell . . . 1 00
Ernest Wheeler . . . 1 50

Foreign Missions, for Harry Carroll, Tangier, Morocco, North Africa

Rev N P Nelson . . . 5 10

Foreign Missions (Rev. Z. C. Beals, China)

R N Orton . . . 2 00
Unnamed, Monroe, La . . . 10 00
In Memoriam, Mechanicsburg, Pa . . . 5 00
Friend, Colton, Cal. . . . 3 00
M Struckenbruck . . . 1 00
John C Culbert . . . 10 00
I H N, York, Pa . . . 10 00

Foreign Missions, Africa

Epworth League and YPSCE, Sunman . . . 1 50
1 Girod . . . 5 00

W. China Orphan Fund

—, West Carrollton . . . 1 00

Foreign Missions (Mr. Wodehouse)

Member of Y P A of Pres Church, Shippensburg, Pa . . . 5 00

Rev. G. N. Thomssen, India

—, Columbia, Tenn . . . 1 00

Foreign Missions, India

Y P A of Pres Ch, Shippensburg, Pa . . . 5 00

E. Olsson, S. America

In memory of Mother, Middle Granville . . . 1 00
Mrs F J L—, South . . . 5 00
H Farnsworth . . . 1 00
D Marty . . . 20 00
M J W, Grand Junction, Colo . . . 1 00
S E Mary . . . 2 00
H Farnsworth . . . 1 00

Rev. F. H. Richards, E. Africa

Mrs Wm Kass . . . 2 00

Rev. Nicholas Zamora, Philippine Islands

Susie Langtree . . . 5 00
West Ward, S Sch, Holstein, Neb . . . 3 12
Wilson H Moyer . . . 1 00
I H N, Evanston, Ill . . . 2 00
Edward I Wade . . . 25
Charles C Grubb . . . 25 00
W F Root . . . 1 00
Mrs O E Burrell . . . 75
I H N, York, Pa . . . 10 00
Michael Brood . . . 3 00
S E Melville . . . 1 00

Mission Work in Brazil

I H N, Lanark, Ill . . . 5 00
—, Plainville, Conn . . . 5 00
C O D, Mechanicsb'g . . . 10 00
Mrs M E Maxwell . . . 1 00
Mrs T A Allen . . . 5 00
J H Keeler . . . 4 00

Mrs. Mary L. Allen, Africa

I H N, Lanark, Ill . . . 5 00
Mrs Malvina Lane . . . 50

China Inland Mission

C F Vandewater . . . 5 00

Miss Minnie Collins, Y. W. C. A., Calcutta

In memoriam, Mechanicsburg, Pa . . . 5 00
A E Hamilton . . . 1 00

Pundita Ramabai, India

Mrs Jay Mills . . . 2 00
1 Girod . . . 5 00
Mrs R M Harvey . . . 1 00

Dutch Leper Colony

E G Webber . . . 2 00
Mrs C L Deter . . . 1 00

Robert H. Bender, San Salvador, C. A.

In memoriam, Mechanicsburg, Pa . . . 5 00

Spanish-American Gospel Fund, Porto Rico

Friend, Providence, I . . . 1 00

Foreign Missions (Rev. J. Paton)

Wilson H Moyer . . . 1 00
I H N, York, Pa . . . 30 00
Matilda Parmley . . . 10 00
Mrs Julia Miller . . . 30 00

Foreign Missions, India

Subr. Dirkstown, S D . . . 5 00

Foreign Missions, China

1 Girod . . . 5 00

Jews in Russia

Richard Russell . . . 2 00
Matilda Parmley . . . 5 00
Herbert G Abbe . . . 5 00
Mrs H Banbury . . . 25
Mrs E F Fuller . . . 7 00
I H N, Calois, Me . . . 1 00
W F Hicks . . . 2 00
C McK Duren . . . 2 00
H Wolf . . . 1 00
Mrs J M Reese . . . 1 00
Chris Hageman . . . 2 00
Marion and Willie Morgan . . . 1 00
One of the Lord's Sheep, Philadelphia . . . 5 00

Spanish-American Gospel Fund (Chaplain Miller, Philippines)

J A Manson . . . 26
Mabel Wilson . . . 25
Mrs Mary E Sprague . . . 25
Mrs J G Conkey . . . 25
Wilson H Mayer . . . 50
George G Kreutzer . . . 25
Minnie Willmarth . . . 25
J H Craven . . . 25
Mrs E Austram . . . 50
J P Caldwell . . . 25
Miss C Fobs . . . 25
—, New York City . . . 25
S P Kane . . . 1 00
W H Koons . . . 1 00
Mrs H A Brooke . . . 1 00
Court W Ranslow . . . 25
Mrs S M Paxton . . . 25
S S Sidener . . . 25
Mrs David Simpson . . . 25
Miss Parsons . . . 25
M A Spencer . . . 50
Mrs H P Foote . . . 25
Esther Dome . . . 25
Mrs L H Westrom . . . 1 00
L W Felter . . . 25
Mabel F Hathaway . . . 25
Percy Herndon . . . 25
M Davidson . . . 25
F C Hess . . . 25
Mrs H F Owensboro . . . 25
Miss Jennie M Watt . . . 1 00
Miss F F Scott . . . 25
Miss Margaret Soules . . . 25
Mrs Lues Ward . . . 25
Frank Forman . . . 50
F P Race . . . 1 00
S A Edwards . . . 25
J O Hildegaard . . . 25
Mrs H Jones . . . 25
Jacob Fichthorn . . . 25
B Warren . . . 25
Edgar Ludlin . . . 25
A Mother at Rest Richmondville, N Y . . . 1 00
—, Washington, D C . . . 1 00
Delight M Shafer . . . 25
Mrs M G Cardwell . . . 1 00

Med. Missionary Student

L J Little . . . 1 00
Emeline L Barry . . . 4 00
Edith M Murry . . . 1 00
Mrs J C Francis . . . 1 00
J D Mark . . . 3 00
Talbot Jones . . . 10 00
Emma L Berry . . . 1 00
A B and G A L Pa . . . 5 00
Laura J Little . . . 1 00
Mrs W F Davis . . . 2 00
E G Mansfield . . . 1 00
Mrs J C Francis . . . 1 00
H I Musser . . . 10 00
S P Kane . . . 2 00
—, Zanesville, O . . . 1 00
Mrs Jas E Green . . . 25
J L Little . . . 1 00
E G Mansfield . . . 3 00
S P Kane . . . 1 00
Rev Chas Philips . . . 5 00
Mrs J C Francis . . . 1 00
S D Mark . . . 1 00
R Harley . . . 1 00
C W Johnson . . . 2 00
Laura J Little . . . 1 00
Edith M Murray . . . 2 00
Mrs J A Peck . . . 1 00
R C Orr . . . 1 00
L A Mountmiller . . . 1 00
John Allaire . . . 1 00
Mrs S J Wesson . . . 25
Mrs A T Burkhalter . . . 25
Mrs A Koontz . . . 25
Mrs A Penner . . . 25
M V B Penner . . . 25
Mrs I A Byers . . . 25
Miss Hattie Whitney . . . 25
Ellen Craig . . . 25
Josephine Wagner . . . 25
W F Hicks . . . 25
Sam B Givens . . . 25
Jessie Zimmerman . . . 25
Jacob Bauer . . . 25
Mrs J Tessenton . . . 25
Mrs Ida Bishop . . . 25
Gordon S Bean . . . 25
Robert Grant . . . 25
Mrs H F Foote . . . 1 00
Mrs A Sperrow . . . 25
Mrs M Hasselkus . . . 25
Mrs Sarah Mark . . . 25
Mrs Mary Bryan . . . 25
C J Barnes . . . 25
F B Rush . . . 25
P E Pace . . . 25
Mrs H Doug . . . 25
Mrs E A Wilson . . . 25
Jno and Ida Cogar . . . 1 00
Mr and Mrs F R Hyatt . . . 2 00
B F Lemke . . . 1 00
C A Prescott, Jr . . . 5 00
L S Hopkins . . . 1 00
Mrs P F Hopkins . . . 1 00
W H Gardner . . . 2 00
Samuel Lamar . . . 1 00
—, Ind . . . 1 00
Mrs J M Lewis . . . 1 00
Mrs S N Wilson . . . 1 00
Mrs M M Cooper . . . 1 00
Miss Salisbury, Hartford, Conn . . . 1 00
Mrs Bessie Barnett . . . 1 00
Andrew Sass . . . 1 00
H M Rogers . . . 2 00
L N Hasbrouck . . . 1 00
W H Rogers . . . 2 00
W H Rogers . . . 2 00
Three Pennants . . . 2 00
Miss Satan Banner & dungaree . . . 2 00
Mrs M Armstrong . . . 1 00
D I Wise . . . 1 00
H R Rockwell . . . 5 00
T M Stone . . . 1 00
Mrs A Penner . . . 25
G I Hoffstetter . . . 2 00
S I Mowen . . . 1 00
A Japanese in Christ . . . 1 00
Mrs C Lane . . . 1 00
G T Ewing, Wis . . . 1 00
H L M . . . 1 00
Mrs Hagerman . . . 25
Jno M Bowman . . . 25
A Friend . . . 1 00
—, N Y . . . 5 00
A Friend, New York . . . 1 00
Cyrus Lamar, Ind . . . 1 00
I H N Missionary . . . 5 00
A Friend . . . 1 00
I H N . . . 5 00
M L Jones, W Va . . . 2 00
Mrs Jno D Mowen . . . 1 00
Mrs Jno Mowen . . . 25
Mrs Jno Mowen . . . 25
—, Mo . . . 1 00
Mrs L L Hopkins . . . 1 00
Mrs L H Roches-ter, O . . . 1 00

Kansas Flood Sufferers

Matilda Parmley . . . 5 00
A H Dawley . . . 10 00

To FIGHT or FORGIVE ✳ DAVID SPARES SAUL

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR AUG. 30
I. SAMUEL 26: 5-12; 21-25

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

GOLDEN TEXT -- LUKE 6: 27:
"LOVE YOUR ENEMIES, DO GOOD TO THEM WHICH HATE YOU"

IT is evening. Weary David has lain down to sleep in a remote part of the cave of Adullam. A large group of interested hearers, the followers and defenders of David, are gathered around Abishai, for, by their request, he is to tell them of the dash into Saul's camp, made by David and himself the preceding night. They all had been eye-witnesses of David standing upon the hill-top with the spear and cruse of Saul in his hand. And they had heard David charge Abner, the chief of the king's bodyguard, with neglect of duty, for sleeping while an enemy had come so near his royal master as to make it possible to take the spear and cruse from his bedside. They had seen King Saul himself come out, and heard him call to David and confess his meanness in seeking the life of one who could treat him so generously as to spare his life, when he might easily have been killed. They had even seen David deliver the spear and cruse to a young man, sent by his request from Saul's army to receive them.

"We want to hear the whole story," say David's men to Abishai. "You were with him, and you can tell us all about it." Abishai speaks: "The spies brought in word that Saul, with three thousand picked men, had come into our vicinity, not more than five or six miles away, and had pitched his tent by the hill Hachilah. David went down and viewed the camp, to make sure the information given by the spies was true. Upon his return, he called Abimelech and myself to a council of war, and it was determined that I should accompany David upon a reconnaissance that very night. When we came in sight of Saul's camp, we saw that the baggage wagons were arranged in a circle, and, as we crept nearer, we saw the king's guard asleep in another circle inside the wagons. No one was astir, and so we walked stealthily on, until we stood at the very bedside of Saul himself. He lay fast asleep with his water-jar by his side, and his spear stuck in the ground beside his pillow. Abner, the chief of the king's bodyguard, was nearby. For a moment we stood and looked at the king, and then I reached forward to take the spear, saying, in a low voice: 'Let me smite him.' But would you believe it, David would not let me kill his bitter foe, neither would he strike Saul himself. He said: 'Let him alone, for he is the Lord's anointed. Let him live, until his day shall come to die. But let us take his spear and cruse, and be gone.' And so we left."

Illustration and Application

David dared to be better than his class and age by forgiving his worst enemies. Have I, have you, this highest grace? The story of this lesson, and three similar cases of forgiveness of foes must be reckoned with by those who charge that the strong imprecations in some of David's psalms, were expressions of personal hate against personal foes, not of righteous indignation against those who were thought of only, or chiefly as enemies of God, even when they opposed David.

Saul's renewed hostility must have seemed to all of David's followers a new argument why David, when he had Saul a second time in his power, should kill him, but David took only the cruse and spear as fresh evidences of his forgiveness, for another appeal to reason. Scarcely less surprising was David's forbearance when Shimei insulted him (II. Sam. 16: 5-13). David's forgiveness of his son Absalom, who sought his life, led Joab to exclaim: "Thou lovest them that hate thee!" (II. Sam. 19: 6).

Although even this side the Cross, forgiveness of enemies is the hardest of graces to attain and maintain, do we not all instinctively feel that it is greater to forgive than to fight? Would we think less or more of Joseph, in Egypt, if he had turned his soldiers on his brothers when they came into his power and slaughtered them, instead of forgiving and feeding them? If David had slain Saul, would it have increased his glory in history? Would Stephen seem to us a nobler man if he had died cursing those who stoned him to death, instead of praying: "O Lord, lay not this sin to their charge?" Would Christ seem to us a greater character if he had called his legions of angels to annihilate his crucifiers, instead of praying: "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do?" And all down the ages do we not enshrine as supreme self-conquerors, those who have been great enough to forgive rather than to fight? What David said of himself, the world's most honored ones could say, looking up to Christ: "Thy gentleness hath made me great." His psalms illustrate how God chose him above his taller brothers because of his great heart. Let us not linger in any debate as to whether David did not sometimes sin against gentleness. That he was too warlike, even for that age, God intimated when he deprived him of the honor of building the temple, and passed that honor down to Solomon, who was to be more peaceful. But in forgiving personal enemies, David reached a grace that many of us in this better day have yet to reach. Two things we need to learn from this story: The might of gentleness and the greatness of forgiveness.

The Bible abounds with illustrations not alone of forgiveness, but also of the power of gentleness. That is the meaning of the lesson God gave Elijah in the cave, when, after the whirlwind and the fire, came "a sound of gentle stillness," the "still, small voice." In the voice of God and the voice of man there is more of God's omnipotence, as history has proved, than in storms that rend mountains. Have not the gentle words of the Sermon on the Mount transformed once cruel and savage Europe as with earthquake might, until the Christlike "gentle-man" is her noblest type of manhood? "Come unto me," said Jesus, "for I am gentle, and ye shall find peace." Who are the Bible's greatest characters but the blessed gentle who are inheriting the earth? Moses, greatest of lawgivers, was known as "the meekest man" of his time. Peter's keys of power were his threefold yes to Christ's "Lovest thou me?" John, even in sight of heaven, "wept much," because no one was worthy to open the Book of Life.

Paul wept, and by his tears subdued
Strong men, by all his massive arguments unvanquished.

* * *

What is it like in Nature?

Although nature does not illustrate forgiveness, it does abundantly illustrate the might of gentle forces. What the hammer would only drive away, the magnet attracts and holds. A man seeking to drive a rusty bolt through a hole in a piece of timber, found it hard work and the timber in danger of a split, but a little oil on the bar and in the hole made the task easy. The Empress Anna, of Russia, built an ice palace of strength and beauty, defended by cannon of ice strong enough for use. No battering ram could have beaten it down, but it was destroyed by the sunshine of a single summer. All three of these incidents suggest to preacher, teacher, parent, and to us all, that what harsh words and deeds can not do, may be accomplished by gentle tact. "Blessed are the debonair," is the French rendering of the beatitude, which is equivalent to "Blessed are the gentle"—the gentlemen and gentlewomen.

If one was asked to name in one word the greatest historic victory of Christianity, he might well point to the word "gentleman," which Christianity has put in the post of highest honor in place of the selfish conqueror who has had first place in un-Christian lands. Dekker wrote:

"LET HIM LIVE UNTIL HIS DAY SHALL COME TO DIE!"

The best of men
That e'er wore earth about him was a sufferer;
A soft, meek, patient, humble, tranquil spirit,
The first true gentleman that ever breathed.

Shakespeare says of an exemplary man:

His life was gentle; and the elements
So mixed in him that Nature might stand up
And say to all the world, "This was a man."

And again in Portia's speech:

The quality of mercy is not strained . . .
'Tis mightiest in the mightiest.

To overcome evil with good is hard enough for those long civilized, but it is yet more a triumph of grace among savage and half-civilized tribes, but missionary history abounds in such incidents as the following, told by Mrs. Thompson, in a sketch of Syrian schools:

"Among the cripples is a poor Nubian, who lost both his legs—which were frozen during severe weather in the Lebanon—and he now trudges along on his wooden legs. He is the porter of the school. He was seated on a form by the side of another pupil, a Mohammedan, both quietly reading the New Testament together. A Mohammedan came in and seeing how they were engaged, angrily demanded whether Selim (the cripple) meant to make the other a Christian. Before he had time to reply, he struck him on the face and chest with great violence, and ere others could interfere, he injured him severely. Selim bore the aggression with patience, though several of the pupils wished that the police should be called. We heard no more of the offender for about a week, when he again entered the room, and going up straight to poor Selim, earnestly entreated his forgiveness, saluting him on the right cheek, and placing his hands with tenderness on his wooden legs. 'Ah,' said he, 'it was your forbearance—the kind, quiet way in which you bore my insults and my injury, which has melted my heart. For some days I expected that the police would come and take me t prison; but when they did not come, I saw that there was difference between your spirit and mine, and now I not onl beg your forgiveness, but I want to learn to read that Boo which has taught you to return good for evil.' He the begged the teacher to overlook the past, and teach him t read. And there he now sits, learning his alphabet wit avidity, in hopes of soon being able to read that Book."

* * *

When an ungentle blusterer, with more fuss than force said to another more gentle, "You're no gentleman," h quietly replied, "If you think yoursel one, I am content you should not thin me one." The marks of a true gentle man are, unselfishness tempered wit self-knowledge, self-reverence, self-control. Self-knowledg produces humility, which is but another word for honesty, true estimate of ourselves. Self-reverence is self-respect And self-control is self-kingliness. When a man flies into passion at some supposed wrong, or allows a grudge to fi his soul, it is a confession of his selfishness and lack of self control.

What is it like in Common Life?

A homely illustration of the fact that gentle ways are no only morally best, but practically most effective is the stor of an auctioneer, who became greatly annoyed at the ludi crous bids of a bystander, whose sole object was to amus the crowd at the auctioneer's expense. At length, enrage beyond endurance, the auctioneer looked about for an aven ger, and seeing a man of gigantic proportions, he cried out "Marlow, if you will put that disturber out I will give yo five dollars." Marlow assumed the ferocity of a lion as h moved toward the offender, but on reaching him, smile sociably, and whispered in his ear loud enough for all t hear, "My good frin, you go out mit me, I give you half th money." "Done, done!" said the jes ter, and it was "done' while the au dience cheered the bloodless victor of gentle tact in one who was a gen tleman in the rough.

Best of all stories of forgiveness i that of Judge Knowlton, whose onl son forged his name. When it wa discovered by the father, he agreed after a stormy scene at his home, t keep the awful crime secret if his so would that very night leave the coun try and the wife and child he had dis honored. He left on the midnigh train, and at noon next day took steamer for Europe. People wonder ed at his hasty departure and note that he did not return, but none knev the reason. He wrote months after ward a pathetic appeal for forgive ness, but the father tore it up an threw it in the fire. That very nigh his son's little Gladys came to th judge, asking that she might say he prayers to him and "ask questions the nurse would not answer. Wit a great love for the child, half-orphan ed by her father's folly and sin, he con sented. The child knelt at his knee

"'Our Father who art in heaven'—grandpa, does that mean he's every body's father?" "Yes, my dear, so i says." "He must have some ver naughty children, grandpa; does h love them too?" Little Gladys di not see the spasm of pain which passed over the noble face that ben over her as Judge Knowlton answer ed, "I suppose he does." "Of cours fathers always love their children even if they are naughty, 'caus they're fathers," prattled the child The prayer proceeded: "'Forgive u our trespasses, as we forgive them tha trespass against us;'—what are trespasses, grandpa?" Nurs said: 'Never mind what they are; hurry up, and get to bed, but I want to know what are trespasses?" "Wrong-doings sins," replied the man, as his hands took a firmer grip upo the arms of his chair. "Has anybody ever trespassed agains us, grandpa?" was the next question. Gladys wondered tha her grandfather did not answer. His head was bowed upo the table, and for a time he forgot he was not alone. A littl hand on his arm aroused him, and the question was repeated "Has anybody ever trespassed against us, grandpa?" "Yes shamefully, cruelly," spoke the man, forgetting for th moment everything but his own wrongs. Gladys clapped her hands. "Oh, I'm so glad; then God knows just how t forgive us. I was so afraid nobody had trespassed against us so's we could forgive them and show God how to forgive us. But he knows, doesn't he, grandpa? He'll forgive u just as we forgive them. Let me say it again." And kneel ing once more beside her grandfather's knee, she repeatec with great earnestness, "'Forgive us our trespasses as we for give them that trespass against us.'" The arrow shot by the childish hand went straight to its mark. Long after the little archer lay smiling in her peaceful sleep it rankled in the heart of the weary man who, try as he might, could not ignore it. "Forgive us as we forgive," he murmured over and over again, as he paced the floor with clasped hands and bowed head. The struggle was long and fierce, but as the light of the morning crept in through the curtained window a great peace stole into his soul. Kneeling upon the very spot where little Gladys had offered her childish petition, the once hard, stern, unforgiving father looked up into his Father's face and said: "Forgiven, as I forgive." The ocean cable never throbbed with a sweeter message than it bore that day to the weary, heart-sick, repentant wanderer, who, as he read the welcome words, "Come home," arose with a great joy and set his face towards his father's house.

Our Household Circle

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

Mothers' Rights

HAS mother any rights? She is the last person to insist upon them, and unless somebody else looks out for her, she will probably never receive what is her just due. In the early art of her maternity, a loving woman's heart and hands e taken up with the tender care she lavishes on her fspring. The babies keep her waking half the night, nd trotting half the day, but she does not mind, for er pleasure is equal to her pains, and the back bends asily to the burden. Later, when the young people are school, mother finds plenty to do, their sewing, mend- g, cooking, washing, and ironing, all alling upon her, and, multiform as her sks, she asks little aid from growing aughters and sons, because she fancies ey need every moment for their edu- ation. School has the right of way, and oung girls who might, if they were not oughtless, undertake some portion of omestic work in the mornings or even- ngs, without detriment to their own de- elopment, are excused by their mothers, nd spend their whole time on themselves, n their studies, their recreations and eir future ambitions. Undoubtedly the aims of schoolroom and college are xacting and imperious, yet it harms no d to undertake certain chores on the arm or around the house, and it hurts no irl to spend a little time every day in ousehold duties. Mothers who are wise ough to remember this, reap the profit many ways.

. . .

The rights of mothers, being little re- arded as a rule by the mothers in person, hould be jealously conserved by the rest f their families. A father who is quick see and to suggest, will often train his hildren to save their mother steps. I now men who never fail to pay all defer- ntial attention to their wives, and who, ecause practicing courtesy is to them as econd nature, demand the same politeness om their sons and daughters. "Clara, an you not run upstairs and get that for our mother? William, your mother has n errand for you. Mary, your mother is peaking. Jack, set your mother's chair or her," these little reminders are the best aining in etiquette a man can give or a hild receive. Children to whom minor ourtesies in the home are habitual, will e well-bred and gracious all their lives, o their latest day.

Mother has rights in the matter of dress, hen her girls are grown up. Often it is he who wears the shabby raiment while hey wear the new and fine clothing. Very aturally, when the exchequer is low, and unds are scarce, the mother goes without, hat the bloom and beauty of the young aughter may be suitably enhanced by retty gowns and hats. Yet this tendency n the mother's part ought not to be culti- ated, nor this trait encouraged. The ounger woman has the roundness and oftness, the clear skin, bright eyes, and issom straightness of her period in life. he older is fading, is perhaps too thin or oo stout for beauty, is somewhat the orse physically for life's wear, and she eeds whatever aid dress can give her. Turned gowns nd dyed stuffs, and any makeshifts that economy can dictate, are far better for a daughter than for a mother, nd on this point daughters should be very firm. New hings for mother first should be the rule in every pro- erly adjusted household.

. . .

Next, mothers have rights in the way of occasional ests and of frequent outings. I have seen summers pass in which the one person who never had an after- noon's break in the shape of a drive, a jaunt, or a ow on pond or river, was the mother. Sometimes the usy woman is so occupied the live-long day that she oes not get time for so much as a daily afternoon nap. What wonder that paralysis comes like a thief in the ight? What wonder that headaches creep on like foes rom an ambush? What wonder that mothers pre- naturely die, just when they ought to be entering on hat long table-land of peace, which is the Indian sum- ner of woman's middle age.

To husbands and fathers, sons and brothers, and to young girls of every degree, this note of warning and counsel is sent. Take care of the burdened mothers. Make them take thought for their own comfort. In whatever way is best, ease their loads and lift the heaviest end, and help them on to victory in the fight that we all wage with the powers of evil in the world.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—FATHER. If your daughter favors a young man and your wife upholds her, and your opposition thus far is overruled, you would better yield as gracefully as you can, even against your better judgment. Three against one have heavy odds in such a conflict.

—CURIOSITY. A governess in a wealthy family requires precisely the same preparation that any other teacher needs. She is employed to teach children and must know how to do it. If there are little children in the family a trained kindergartner is often employed.

—INTENDING BRIDE. You must personally write notes of thanks to those who send you wedding presents. You must write to friends of your fiance whom you do not know, if they send you gifts. The notes are simply acknowledgments. "Dear Mr. —— or Mrs. ——: I thank you very much for your kind remembrance of me; the gift is exactly what I want." You may add, if you choose, to an acquaintance of your husband, "Henry joins me in thanking you," but this is not necessary.

WATCHING THE BALLOON

Floating up into the blue
Almost out of sight,
I'd be timid, wouldn't you,
At that giddy height?

Up, up, ever floating up,
Like a spark of fire,
Where the stars are shining bright,
Floating ever higher.

GOD'S GOODNESS

Whatever befall me, this one thing I know,
God loves, and God cares, and his grace never fails;
It is his to withhold, it is his to bestow,
I'll trust that sheet-anchor, though wild be the gales.

Whatever may happen, there's nothing by chance,
We are safe in God's plan, and for you and for me,
We may reign undisturbed over all circumstance;
Around us forever God's goodness shall be.

AMY LATHROP.

The Girl I Left Behind Me

A YOUNG man, brought up among rural scenes, and accustomed to the society of his native country girls away to seek his fortune in the city. In his truest pocket, among letters and papers, reposes a photograph which represents the loveliest face in the world. Faith, Ethel, Mary, whatever her name may be the dear girl with the blue eyes, and the candid look, the sweet lips, the brave will, she has promised in every way possible except in words, to be his very own. If he has not asked her directly to be his wife, and she has not unquivering gifts presented to take him for her husband, the reason usually is that matters are understood between them, and they are merely waiting until the man shall have a salary large enough to warrant their marriage. When he finds himself amid new situations, studying law or medicine in a great metropolis, or selling goods in a big store, or traveling on the road for the firm that sends him out, if he is of good honest stuff, if the sterling mark is on his character, he will not desire to march to any other music than the tune of "The Girl I Left Behind Me." He will hold her very sacredly in his heart. He will write to her, and count the weeks until he can see her once more. When he is promoted, and success crowns his endeavors, then he will hasten to seek his dear sweetheart who is waiting for him far away, and proudly he will make her his bride.

. . .

If he be of fickle nature, he may forget his first love, when he meets other guise of a different training, possibly of a greater winsomeness of manner and bearing. The new faces will obscure the face that shone on childhood and early youth, like a star of hope. The young woman who gave him her picture would feel hurt did she dream that he had not glanced at it in a month, that it was hanging unnoticed in a dusty closet, hidden from the light in a discarded coat. I pity the girl who has pinned her faith to and dreamed her innocent maiden dreams about a man of fibre so slight as this, and so little worthy of confidence.

She is sometimes the fickle one, however. I have known a man to go East, West, North, South, or far away to the Philippines or China, secure in the thought that a certain beloved one was his, and his alone, and he has returned, to find her wedded to another. This is a sore blow and hard to be borne. Of woman one expects fidelity. The girl left behind should not prove a will-o'-the-wisp.

Taking a Dare

We all admire courage and initiative, but nobody likes recklessness. The foolhardy person is not admirable.

"I never take a dare."

The speaker was a dark eyed lad, well knit, strong, and tall for his age, which was fourteen.

"It depends," said I, "what the dare is. There are some dares it's very foolish to take."

Then I remembered several fellows who had, like Ned Archer, declared that whatever they were dared to do they would at least attempt, and I thought what trouble had come of it in some cases. There was Lawrence Fell. His father had warned him against skating one day last winter, when a thaw had thinned the ice on a certain pond, and made it unsafe to bear the weight of twelve or fourteen boys, or of even one boy. "Keep off the ice, Lawrence," his father had said, and Lawrence, usually obedient, had meant to do precisely as he was told. But he ventured into the area of the forbidden ground, meaning only to look on, and then the other boys dared him to skate across just once and back. They dared him tauntingly when they found he hesitated, and he borrowed his cousin's skates and struck out boldly, only to break through into the icy water in the very middle of the pond. Four weeks of bitter suffering with rheumatic fever, was a big price to pay for that dare.

Elmer Creelen attends the High School. He is a good student, eager and alert, and stands well up on the honor roll. Latterly, there has been a spirit of insubordination in the school, and the head master wrote the names of several culprits on the blackboard, and said they were to remain there for a week. The next morning they had been erased. On inquiry, it was discovered that of all boys, Elmer Creelen had rubbed them off: had been dared to do it, and as he prided himself on never refusing a dare, he was now in a worse case than the original offenders against law and order.

His price was suspension for ten days, and at the present writing he was in the term, that suspension lost him, by promotion. A heavy price to pay for a dare.

I would have every boy, "dare to be right, dare to be true," but beyond that I urge each of you never to be afraid to decline a dare if it be stupid or reckless, or in any way unworthy. Often, the very bravest, wisest course one can pursue, is to say No. And it isn't brave, it is only cowardly, is it not, to be afraid lest somebody shall think you a coward?

THE SITE OF THE "LOG COLLEGE"

THE LOG COLLEGE IN THE MOUNTAINS

IN the spring of 1900, in one of the neglected parts of the Kentucky mountains, where there is neither village nor post-office, a work for the Master was started on the banks of the middle fork of the Kentucky River, by Misses Louise Saunders, and Erastes Balee, under the auspices of the Society of Soul Winners, Dr. E. O. Guerrant being president. During the first summer the work was carried on in a large tent, which accommodated two hundred people. From the start a great interest was manifested by every one, and there was no difficulty in always having a large audience to hear the Gospel. Under that tent they studied catechism, learned many hymns and much Scripture, and the Creed by heart. There were calisthenic drills, which were participated in by children and grown-up people. There they sewed, and sang, and played, and the work under the tent was only a part of what was accomplished. They ministered to the sick, gave much instruction in many various departments, and, at the end of the summer, during a delightful and very spiritual meeting, those who had been instructed, came quietly into the church. Even children made a profession of Christ, and the workers realized that they were doing it intelligently, for they had heard the plan of salvation from their own lips, and there was no reason to think it was not in their hearts, and the older people of the community followed the example of the children.

. . .

From the very beginning of the work a great desire sprang up in the hearts of those poor, isolated mountaineers that their children might have the privileges and advantages of a school. For two years the subject has been borne upon the hearts of the workers, and earnest prayer has been constantly made that in some way a school might be started. The mountaineers felt their need greatly. Quoting from a worker, "a father, waving his hand over the heads of half a dozen small boys playing about his door said, 'Wat is to become of these, Louise?' and his question seemed to put the responsibility on me, and I replied, 'We will have a school and educate them.'" It is not meant to have merely a secular school, but one that will train them for the Master, educating their hearts as well as their heads and hands.

This spring, when the workers publicly discussed this question with the people, they found an intense interest and a great willingness to help. It is proposed to build a "Log College" containing four rooms, twenty feet square, on the ground floor, with a ten-foot hall between, thus giving a fifty by forty-foot chapel on the second floor. The mountaineers contributed generously, giving the necessary land (nine acres), a great deal of lumber, much labor and some cash, which is scarce in the mountains. Added to these contributions, the workers had a fund of about $200, and by faith, as God led them, they have made a beginning, though the building is estimated to cost $2,000. As an indication of the earnestness of purpose that the work should progress as rapidly as possible, the following was accomplished in the first three weeks: Foundation of dressed sandstones completed, all logs cut for the building, several thousand shingles ready and others being cut, arrangements completed for all timber to be at the saw-mill within a month, including flooring, door and window facings, rafters, sleepers, etc. The carpenters are now pushing the work as rapidly as possible.

Any one who desires further information on this subject can do so by communicating with Mrs. M. D. Stambach, Anchorage, Ky.

A PERSONAL LETTER FROM DR. KLOPSCH

To the Patrons of the India Famine Orphan Fund

August 10, 1903.

Dear Friend:

The India Famine Orphan Work, in which you and I are jointly and deeply interested, is the most glorious and most promising missionary effort of the Twentieth Century. It is surely a divinely ordained work, destined to do more for the ingathering of India's three hundred millions than could possibly have been devised by mere human agency.

* *

These 5,400 native dusky boys and girls, reared under Christian influences, and trained for Christian helpfulness, outrank two to one in point of numbers, all the Christian missionaries now operating in India. When they take their places, as soon they must, among the mighty agencies for good among their own people, they will influence countless thousands whose ears would remain forever closed to foreign preaching of the Word.

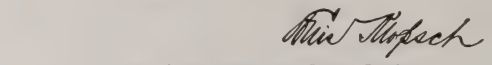
* *

Let us unitedly bear the burden for another two years, and then, having sowed the seed the Lord put it in our hearts to sow, leave the rest to the God of the harvest, who will surely bring to glorious fruition the work we have constantly had in view.

* *

May the Lord graciously incline your heart to a continuance of this beneficent work, and at last crown you for the share of the burden which, in His Name, you have so bravely borne.

Numbers 6:24, 25, 26.



Cost of Supporting an India Orphan

Frequent inquiries are received at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD office, concerning the cost of supporting an orphan, and as to what the term "supporting" represents. By arrangement with the International Committee at Bombay, the support of any one orphan of your own choice as to age, sex and denomination, is fixed at $15.00 a year. "Support" includes food, shelter, clothing, mental, spiritual, and industrial instruction, and such other care as parents bestow on their own children. There are, at the present time, a number of orphans awaiting assignment to patrons. We will be glad to welcome any reader of this journal as a new addition to our Patrons' List.

On your application, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will assign to you an orphan, complying with such conditions as you may impose. We send you the name of the child, the location of the orphanage, the name of the missionary in charge, and we instruct the missionary to have the child write you a letter occasionally, while the missionary, also, regularly reports to you as to the progress of your protege.

The Gospel in China*

An Immense Field Bristling with Difficulties, and Needing Prayer, Men and Funds

FROM the American Bishop of Central China comes the impressive observation: "We have found our feet; all we ask now is permission to advance." By "permission," the Bishop evidently means the pecuniary support by which alone an advance can be made. Other societies are in the same condition. All that has been done in China, compared with what remains to be done, is the preparation for a mighty campaign. The foundations have been well and truly laid; the organization has been effected; the conditions are clearly understood; the work can now go forward as soon as funds are supplied. Every society is ready to put new men and women in the field, the men and women are ready to go, but the funds are lacking.

That enormous population, estimated at four hundred millions, is practically untouched. A few points have been reached, and converts have been won, but the vast bulk of the people have never heard of Christ. The reasons are obvious. The missionary societies have done wonders with the resources at their command, missionaries in the field have had phenomenal success, but the work is so vast that money and men need to be multiplied a hundredfold. The number of missionaries of all denominations is about 1,000 men and 800 women. Thus, if all were equally distributed over the country, each worker would have a field of more than 200,000 souls. But the difficulties are not alone in the lack of workers. The chief difficulty is in the prejudices of the government and the people. The outbreak of 1900, in which so many missionaries and their converts were barbarously murdered, showed how intense is the hostility to the foreigner. It was not really a movement against the missionaries, but against the missionary as a foreigner. In spite of the severe lesson taught by the punishment administered for that outbreak, and earlier by the war with Japan, that hostility still exists. Only a few weeks ago, a Chinese newspaper editor was brutally executed for adopting the principles of the foreigners, and several others are now fugitives, who will be executed if the Government can get its hands upon them. There is need, therefore, not only of money, but of earnest prayer that God would remove this hostility.

*Topic of the Epworth League for August 30

REV. EDWARD K. CRESSEY

A SEASIDE EVANGELIST

THREE years ago, the Rev. Edw K. Cressey, D.D., formerly associa pastor at Tremont Temple, Bost began Gospel work among the mas of humanity in the crowded East Side New York. This experience led him to t contemplation of a greater work, in a st more needy region, and he was led to Con Island. "It seemed to take forty times mo sacrifice to commit myself to this work," declares, "than it ever took to stand in t pulpit. Nothing but a firm reliance up God could have enabled me to do it." At t present moment he is giving himself bod mind, heart, and soul to this duty, and t fruits are marvelous.

An Eastern man, one of the first to who the Gospel was preached there, was an offici in the government employ. He had lost h wife, and had become a frequenter of t "dives" of the island. A copy of the Ne Testament was given him. He received respectfully, read from it, and then began blaspheme, and finally said, "This is true; b why did God take away my wife?" Aga and again he read, at last a change came ov him. His life at present is that of a genuine redeemed man.

Another case was that of a train dispatche who had come to Coney Island for dissip tion. He received the overtures of the mi sionary with jeers. By the power of t Holy Spirit, after a brief conversation, he w led to say, "I thank you. I came to this pla to make a fool of myself, and I am succee ing; I am having a great time; I am sorry He afterward became a convicted and co verted sinner saved by grace.

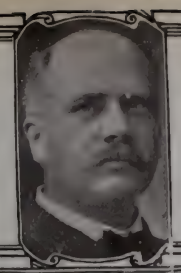
A young graduate of Oberlin College, w ordained, and had entered the pulpit. H married an unworthy woman. Dr. Cresse found him the moving spirit of certain mid night orgies at the Island. Though years ha passed since they had met, there was mutu recognition. "I am surprised to see you he brother John," was the missionary's first greet ing. "I am surprised to see myself here, an mad, too," was the response. "But do n call me brother John; it is of no use to tal to me now; go to some more hopeful wret and extend your ministries to him." Afte days of counsel and prayers he was awakened and began anew the Christian walk.

The Down and Out Club is a unique an pitiful organization, whose members look upo themselves as "down," and recognize tha they will soon be "out"; but they are boun to have a "good time while it lasts." Mi sionary Cressey was not repulsed as he en tered their rendezvous. Forty men there re ceived good counsel, and each got a copy o the New Testament or a prayer-book, and glinting of hope seemed to fall athwart thei souls. On New Year's day 1903, twenty-fiv others of the club received Bibles. There ar now indications that the club may disband

Within two weeks past a man came run ning to Dr. Cressey, and said, "Don't you know me? You gave me a Bible last year and that book is now my counsel, a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path."

Dr. Cressey has distributed many thou sands of copies of the Word at Coney Island Over 2,000 of these have been distributed since May of this year. These are printed in many tongues — German, Italian, Danish Swedish, Finnish, Spanish, French, Hebrew and in some other languages. He has come in contact with about 2,000 young men and young women. Many familiarly call him "Brothe St. John," "Papa," and "Pop." His work is under the auspices of no organized society but individuals, who have become interested contribute towards its support. Thus he goes on, year after year, preaching the unsearch able riches of Christ, and confident in the truth that God's Word shall not return unto him void.

W. R. M.



THE NARROW GATE

by REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON, D.D.

Author of "In His Steps."

CHAPTER IV.—Continued

WOMEN were sobbing, men's faces were pale and stern. Mr. Vernon waited. When it was silent again, he raised his arm and said impressively: "It rests with you, men and women of Colby, to prove me a false prophet. Pray God my prediction may prove untrue. But we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against the hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places. God give us the victory."

That was an exciting day in Colby. The First Methodist was stirred as never before. Judge Butler's comment on the sermon was, "I call it incendiary." Mr. Edward's comment was, "Just what Colby needs." Men and women were divided. All were agitated. The tragedy had struck home deep. For the time being, at least, the people felt the lesson and took it to heart.

The excitement and nervous strain through which Douglas passed made it physically impossible for him to get out the Beacon that week. Quits did not appear, and he had vanished so completely that no one in Colby knew anything about him. A few days afterwards, one of the brakemen on the fast freight that stopped at Colby, spoke of a tramp who had boarded the train that Thursday night under peculiar circumstances, and his description tallied with Quits' appearance, but no word came from Quits himself.

Friday and Saturday of that eventful week Douglas was nearly prostrated, and unable to do anything on the paper. He was called as a principal witness before the coroner's jury, and testified about the shooting. He was positive as to the facts. The whole affair had occurred only a few feet from him, but he had not seen the face distinctly, owing to the shadows cast by the electric lights. The fact, however, was proved, that the young man captured by the police had come running from the scene of the shooting. The revolver was identified as his own. A score of witnesses, including Douglas, were able to swear positively to the quarrel the two men had been having in the saloon before they went out on the street. So the coroner's jury brought in a verdict of "Came to his death by pistol wounds inflicted by some person not known or proved," and the case was turned over to the district court, and the person of the young man, who every one knew had committed the crime, remanded to the county jail to await trial at the September term of court.

The Monday after Mr. Vernon's sermon, which followed that remarkable week in Douglas' experience, found the editor of the Beacon hard at work on the paper. And, beginning with that morning, and continuing for three days, the office of the little paper witnessed a series of mishaps and accidents, that gave the young editor a feeling more like despair than he had ever known.

The press worked badly, and broke down altogether Tuesday morning, when the prospect seemed good to get at least half an edition off. Then George pied another form, and capped the climax by smashing one hand in the trimmer doing some job work which had been sent in. Everything, however, came to a standstill when the press went wrong, and Douglas stayed up all night Tuesday to make repairs, only to find that it was useless without a part of the press which Colby could not furnish, and which he finally had to get from Clinton, after expensive telegraphing and express charges. Mr. Edwards volunteered all sorts of help, but even the most enthusiastic and boundless friendships could not run the press, nor railroad the papers out to their subscribers.

Wednesday night the press was started up again, and prospects were good for getting the paper off at last, when Douglas discovered three columns of plate matter bottom side up, an error he never knew to occur before, and outside the experience of printer man so far as he knew. The entire edition was thrown out, and he began all over, for he was getting tremendously aroused now, and all his pugnacious instincts, which were strong rather than impulsive, were stirred in him by these accidents.

Thursday night found him still wrestling with the press, and with only half the edition ready for mailing out. George limped around the office with his hand tied up in a rag that looked as if it had been torn from the corner of the office towel. With all the other things the boy had succeeded in doing after smashing his hand he had dropped the galley-proof roller on his foot. His whole appearance was suggestive of an explosion in an ink factory, which had caught him climbing out of a vat; but with great good pluck he stayed by Douglas and the Beacon, and vowed he would not retire from the battlefield as long as he had a hand or foot left.

"If Quits was only here now we'd soon pull out; wouldn't we, Mr. Douglas? Where do you suppose he is?"

"I wish I knew," Douglas groaned. He was nearly exhausted, almost dead for lack of sleep; but he stumbled about the office and had no thought of leaving until the edition was all off.

It was half-past ten, and the boy had spoken again about Quits,-when a step sounded on the walk, paused at the office door, and a figure came in that brought Douglas and the boy up standing and staring in astonishment.

Douglas laid a hand on his shoulder. . . . "Will you promise?"

It was Quits, who appeared minus his hat, and all covered with dust. His shirt was in rags, and his trousers hung in tatters over his feet, and this time he had no shoes. A fragment of an old sock was on one foot, and the other was wrapped around with a torn woolen sock tied up with a cotton string.

"You're just in time, Quits," exclaimed the boy joyfully. "Where you been? Working on some meetropolitan daily and boardin' at the Waldorf?"

Douglas looked at him sternly and doubtfully. Quits did not meet his look, and presented a general downcast and ashamed appearance.

"Where's that new suit of clothes I got for you?" he asked Quits wrathfully. It was the first thing that occurred to him to say, as he eyed the disreputable figure.

"Gone to support the liquor traffic," replied Quits calmly.

"Then I want to tell you I am not running this paper for any such purpose. What have you come around for?"

"I thought may be you might need a hand," said Quits, looking at George.

"I don't want any drunken printers around," replied Douglas shortly.

"Do you mean it?"

"I do."

"All right."

Quits turned and limped toward the door.

Something in the sight of him moved Douglas.

"Hold on. Where are you going?"

"To the devil. That's my usual destination," said Quits, without turning round.

Douglas took a stride toward him and laid a hand on his shoulder.

"Will you promise—"

"Promise nothing. What's the use? I've promised God, and my wife (when I had one), and the church, and Jesus Christ, and I never kept anything. I'm willing to go to hell for a drink any time."

It was the longest speech Douglas had ever heard Quits make. It was also one of the most effective.

"If I don't give you work what will you do?"

"Go up to the Wayside and pawn them my wife's watch for a drink," said Quits promptly. "It's the only thing I've got now that used to be hers. I'd swap my baby's coffin for a drink any time."

"Come back," said Douglas.

Quits turned round, went up to the table where the forms lay, and put his head down on one corner where there was a clean space and sobbed like a child. The boy looked very much embarrassed, and pulled out what looked like another corner of the office towel and blew his nose with it. Douglas stood sorrowfully gazing at the human wreck that had been flung again on the little beach of the Beacon office.

At last when Quits' sobs had ceased, Douglas said, "If you want to begin to night, you can wash up and start in. Have you had any supper?"

"No," said Quits lifting up his head and furtively wiping his eyes on his shirt sleeve.

"Then you'd better have a bite first."

He sent George over to the hotel for a lunch, and after Quits had disposed of it with an eagerness that spoke of a long fast, Douglas put him to work again without any more questions. During the talk that followed Quits frankly related his experience, making no secret of his debauch, and also making no promises for the future.

"I'm a goner, Mr. Douglas. I killed my wife with grief, and my two children have been taken from me and adopted. I've taken every cure from the Keely to three attempts to suicide. When I got started a week ago to-night, I went into every saloon in town, and I saw you coming in several, and dodged you out of the back door.

"I got on to the fast freight at midnight and went down the road fifty miles to Bergin, then back to Clinton. I've been in Clinton most of the time. That's where I pawned my clothes. Yesterday, when my money was gone, I started back here. Got on a freight and was thrown off after a fight with the conductor. I laid out under a haystack all afternoon and tramped it up here. As long as I can keep out of the sight and smell of the saloon I'm not bad. No, I won't make any promises. I've pawned myself enough. If you want to run the risk I'll stay as long as I can. Yes, I've heard of the shooting. It's awful, but if you'd seen all I've felt and seen owing to the drink business, you wouldn't count that anything more'n one more drop in the basket. That's all 'tis."

When the Beacon finally got to its subscribers, it was with a well written apology from the editor, explaining the failure to appear on time, and promising to make good the omission by an extra in the near future. The Bartlett organ made the most of the Beacon's troubles. It gave an account of the shooting, and laid great emphasis on the need of better police protection.

"What Colby needs," one editorial in the organ concluded, "is a more extended and efficient police service, which will prevent the occurrence of such shocking affairs. We deplore the event as much as any one and trust it is the last; but the citizens of Colby will always be in danger unless we have a police system that is adequate to the real needs of our growing and enterprising town. This is a quo-

CONTINUED ON PAGE 700

Copyright, 1903, by Charles M Sheldon.

THE NARROW GATE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 695

tation from an editorial recently printed in a paper published in a whisky town, the day after an unusually brutal murder caused by a saloon brawl between two drunken boys.)

Edwards boiled over when he read this editorial. He was talking with Douglas and Vernon the day after it appeared.

"Police protection! What the citizens of Colby need is police protection from editorials like these, and from papers like the Mayor's."

"Matters are going just as I told the people Sunday" remarked Vernon. "It's only a week since the shooting, and already public sentiment is divided as to the affair. The plea of self defence has already been suggested by the Mayor's organ. In this country the papers try all criminal cases weeks before the courts get them. By the time cases are in court, the entire community has taken sides one way or the other. The Mayor's paper by September will be stoutly urging Rider's innocence, and declaring that when Lane stooped over it was for the purpose of picking up some weapon with which to attack Rider. The county attorney, according to common report, will make a very poor showing, and two of the shrewdest criminal lawyers have been engaged to conduct Rider's case. Meanwhile attention is being entirely diverted from the part the saloon furnished in selling these boys the liquor that made them quarrel. I shall prove to be a true prophet after all," said Vernon grimly.

"I hope not," Douglas spoke earnestly. "Do you really believe, Mr. Vernon, that in the vote of license or no license this fall, the people of Anderson county, in face of all the facts, will actually vote to continue the saloons?"

"I don't like to say, Brother Douglas," replied Mr. Vernon sadly. "But we have got to reckon with such people, for example, as the Mayor, and such sentiments as these in his outrageous editorial about police protection. We have got to reckon on the narrow prejudices and passions of partisan politicians, and on the unlimited funds at the disposal of whisky, with which they can bribe voters and courts, and legislators and newspapers, and even church members. I look on the battle between civilization and the saloon as the greatest and the most serious contest for human rights that this country knows anything about. And I am frank to confess that from what I know of my own church members, I very much doubt if the most influential voters in my church will vote no license this fall. Some of them will. But men like Judge Butler will vote the other way. He will support his party candidates. One of them is our present county attorney, a well-known whisky sympathizer. It is notorious that he drinks, that he is on friendly terms with the brewers at Clinton, that he has repeatedly been their legal adviser, and yet as enlightened and in many respects as excellent a man as Judge Butler will vote for him this fall, simply because he is the nominee of his party, and he will vote for license because he believes it is for the financial interests of the town.

"So, then, I say when we face such facts as these, true of men in the church, we ought to make up our minds that if we succeed in carrying the election this fall against the saloon, we shall need to pray and talk and work for our lives. If we win, it will not be an easy victory."

TO BE CONTINUED NEXT WEEK

"The Border-Land"

An aged pastor's poem, written shortly before his death

REV. J. B. Marsh, an aged and beloved minister of the Baptist Church, died at his home in Piedmont, S. C., January 8, 1903. He was a constant subscriber of this journal since the first year of its publication. He was a good and faithful pastor, showing his love for Christ his Saviour, by his ardent work and preaching the glad tidings, visiting the sick and afflicted, and giving to the poor and needy.

He wrote some beautiful poems; one, written a few months before he died, is entitled "The Border-Land." It is given below, having been sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD by Miss Julia Lanier:

These border-lands are calm and still,
And solemn are their silent shades,
And my heart welcomes them until
The fight of life's long evening fades.

I hear them spoken of with dread,
As fearful and unquiet places;
Shades where the living and the dead,
Look sadly in each other's faces.

But since Thy hand hath led me here
And I have seen the border-land,
Seen the dark river flowing near,
Stood on its brink as now I stand,

There has been nothing to alarm
My trembling soul; how could I fear
While thus encircled with Thine arms,
I never felt Thee half so near.

What should appal me in a place
That brings me hourly nearer Thee,
Where I may almost see Thy face,
Surely 'tis here my soul would be.

Father, into Thy loving hands
My feeble spirit I commit,
While resting in these border-lands
Until Thy voice shall summons it.

A Good-sized Home Library

We prize THE CHRISTIAN HERALD library very much, and feel proud of it. We have forty-nine books—Art Portfolio, Art Gallery, two Bibles (one old version and one new version), one Red Letter Testament, two pieces of Olive Wood. We have given away three Red Letter Testaments, and two other books. We thank you for all these beautiful premiums. I shall endeavor to take THE CHRISTIAN HERALD as long as I can read it.

Ellington, Conn, MRS. R. J. BRADLEY.

Our Art Gallery in India

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—Such beautiful pictures have come to us from you! How can you afford such rich and exquisite gifts to your million readers? These bright pictures are just what I needed in our mission bungalow! And they are a joy to many of our native friends (for we have few white callers at Sirur). They can learn much from them.

Sirur Poonah, India. MRS. RICHARD WINSOR.

Our "Family Art Gallery" free to all subscribers.

A New Name

THE nickname given by his comrades was "Brimstone." Though other soldiers could express themselves in a vigorous way, yet this man was awarded the palm in a certain New York Harbor Fort, where he was stationed. In another way, too, he was known in the Fort, namely as a "Chronic Kicker." But a new spirit crept into the reservation. The sentry did not challenge it because it came hidden in the heart of another soldier. This man had made a confession that he was a sinner, and that he wanted to be enrolled as a follower of Jesus, the "Friend of sinners." The supply of sulphur in "Brimstone" gradually shut off, until the men wondered what it meant. Now it was stopped by a helpful sermon at church; again at the garrison meeting when somebody came with an inspiring message. After awhile, true to his convictions, "Brimstone" stood to his feet and told his astonished comrades that, with God's help, he was going to live a Christian life. His confession was followed by uniting with a nearby church, where now he can be found when duties permit, and he seldom goes without taking some comrade. He is now at the head of the Soldiers' Bible and Prayer League in the Post, but his old nickname is gone, and in place of it he is called "The Parson." An officer commenting on the change, said, "He isn't the same, for we haven't heard a kick out of him for a long time."

Wondrous grace of God, that gives a man a new nature and a new name.

GEORGE A. SANFORD.

Two Mothers

I.

I sat one day with a friend, a consistent and worthy Christian woman, while she uncovered the sorrow of her life—the story of a prodigal son. The opportunity was mine, for which I had long wished to ask the cause of the downfall of this promising boy. "It has long been a mystery to me," I said, "how your child could go so far wrong, knowing as I do, the lives of you and your husband. How do you account for it?" "Oh!" she sobbed, "I did not pray enough for him when he was little! My father was a good man; my husband was a good man; my brothers led exemplary lives, and I never thought of my boy being in danger. I did not surround him with an atmosphere of prayer, as his character was forming."

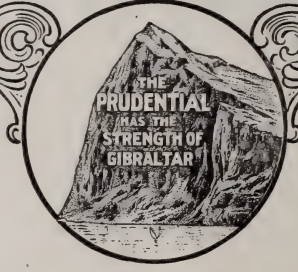
II.

Mrs. J. A. M., of Park College, and lovingly spoken of as the "College Mother," was sitting at the close of life, waiting her summons home, when a friend said to her: "What is the secret of your success in raising five sons to noble manhood, fitting them for the responsible positions they now hold in church and college life?" Her answer was most significant. "I prayed for them all the way. I prayed for them in the home and on the street; I prayed for them in their work and in their play; I prayed for them everywhere." A. K. B.

To Clean Carpets.

If you have a carpet that looks dingy and you wish to restore it to its original freshness, make a stiff lather of Ivory Soap and warm water and scrub it, width by width, with the lather. Wipe with a clean damp sponge. Do not apply more water than necessary.

The vegetable oils of which Ivory Soap is made, and its purity, fit it for many special uses for which other soaps are unsafe and unsatisfactory.



Life Insurance

has been described as "the poor man's friend and the rich man's bank." A concise and truthful description, for men of all classes and grades of wealth avail themselves of it and are insured in

The Prudential

INSURANCE COMPANY OF AMERICA

JOHN F. DRYDEN, President — Write for Information, Dept. 70 — HOME OFFICE Newark, N. J.

Fleisher's Yarns

are made from selected wools, carefully spun, and have an even, lofty, elastic thread. Dyed in a full line of beautiful shades, which can always be matched.

An article knitted or crocheted of Fleisher's Yarns will always hold its shape and yet be soft and elastic. Every skein of the genuine bears the trade-mark ticket.

Knitting Worsted,
Dresden Saxony,
Shetland Floss,
Germantown Zephyr,
Spanish,
Ice Floss, etc.

New Knitting and Crocheting Manual mailed for five tickets from Fleisher's Yarns and 2 cents for postage.

S. B. & B. W. FLEISHER, Inc.,
Department B,
Philadelphia, Pa.

THE FLEISHER'S WORSTED BEST YARNS

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO. 5% PER ANNUM

Idle Money . .
Won't Grow. .
We Pay You .
5%

YOUR funds are actively employed—loaned and reloaned on high-class Real Estate—always under New York Banking Dept. supervision. After 10 years' growth we have a

Capital of . . .	$1,100,000
Assets of . . .	$1,600,000

If you are dissatisfied with 3½ or 4 per cent., it may interest you to learn what our patrons (many clergymen and men of affairs) have to say about our methods, record and reliability. Write us.

Industrial Savings & Loan Co.,
1131 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

NEW YORK UNIVERSITY LAW SCHOOL Sixty-ninth year opens Oct. 1, 1903. Day Classes with sessions from 8.30 to 6 P. M. Evening Classes, sessions 8 to 10 P. M. Graduate classes lead to LL.M. and J.D. Tuition $100. For circulars address
L. J. TOMPKINS, Registrar, WASHINGTON SQ., NEW YORK.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

BIBLE STUDY COURSE At home by mail. This book "Home Bible Study" free if you enroll now. Terms easy. For free catalog write C. J. BURTON, President Iowa Christian College, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

DISTINCTIVELY a S. S. Book 80c. postpaid. GEMS OF SONG
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

Are You Deaf?
We have 25 KINDS OF INSTRUMENTS TO ASSIST HEARING Sent on approval. Write for catalogue.
WM. V. WILLIS & CO. 134 South 11th Street, Philadelphia

CHEAP RATES California, Washington, Oregon, Colorado. We secure reduced rates on household goods of intending settlers to the above States. Write for rates. Map of California, FREE.
TRANS-CONTINENTAL FREIGHT CO., N. 325 Dearborn St., Chicago

Boyhood Days of Famous Divines

No. III. DWIGHT L. MOODY

By REV. LOUIS ALBERT BANKS

WHEN Dwight L. Moody was a very little fellow, his father died, leaving behind so many debts that the creditors took everything they could secure, even to the kindling wood out of the woodshed, leaving the mother with seven children and a very hard row to hoe. The mother told the children that they must stay in bed until school-time, to keep warm. In this emergency, Uncle Cyrus, a brother of the mother, came to the rescue with a load of wood, which he sawed and split ready for use. Long years afterwards, Moody wrote: "I remember, just as vividly as if it were yesterday, how I heard the sounds of chips flying, and I know someone was chopping wood in our woodshed, and that we should soon have a fire. I shall never forget Uncle Cyrus coming with what seemed to me the biggest pile of wood I ever saw in my life." It was such memories as this, that always kept Moody's heart sensitive to the call of anybody in need.

DWIGHT L. MOODY
In boyhood

Dwight Moody's mother, though a kind and loving woman, was a strict disciplinarian, and never spoiled the child by sparing the rod. Dwight was a born mischief, and in later years he liked to tell of these punishments, and his failures to escape them.

"Mother would send me out for a stick, and I thought I could fool her and get a dead one. But she would snap the stick, and then send me to get another. She was rarely in a hurry, and certainly never when she was whipping me. Once I told her that the whipping did not hurt at all. I never had occasion to tell her so again, for she put it on so it did hurt."

In those days, in New England, Sunday began at sundown on Saturday night, and ended at the same time on Sunday evening. The young Moodys always went to church. The boys used to go barefoot, carrying their shoes and stockings in their hands, and putting them on when they came in sight of the church. The elder boys, who were out at work during the week, came home on Saturday night to attend church on Sunday with their brothers and sisters. They carried luncheon and stayed all day, hearing the two sermons, and attending the Sunday School, which came in between; then all would troop home again for supper, the older ones returning later to their work, while the younger children, watched for the sunset which announced the end of the day of rest, and released their long pent-up spirits in wild romps and shouts.

To a boy of Dwight Moody's make-up, those long hours in the village church were a tedious infliction; but years afterward he said, "I remember blaming my mother for sending me to church on the Sabbath. On one occasion the preacher had to send someone into the gallery to wake me up. I thought it was hard to have to work in the fields all the week, and then be obliged to go to church and hear a sermon I didn't understand. I thought I wouldn't go to church any more when I got away from home; but I had got so in the habit of going that I couldn't stay away. After one or two Sabbaths, back again to the house of God I went. There I first found Christ, and I have often said since, 'Mother, I thank you for making me go to the house of God when I didn't want to go.'"

Moody's business ability cropped out early. On one occasion, he wished to visit his grandmother Holton, who lived about four miles away. He was only five years old, and it seemed like a long trip. The stage ran near them, and as somebody had given Dwight five cents, which was only half stage-fare for the distance, he concluded to bargain with the driver. He got out by the road and stopped the stage, and asked the driver if he would not carry him for five cents. The driver said the stage was full inside, but he would take him for five cents if he would go as baggage. He consented, and for five cents was placed on top of the coach, within the rack that guarded the trunks. After a pleasant day, his grandmother urged him to make an early start for home, supposing he intended to walk back the four miles, but the luxury of that stage ride had spoiled him, and he thought it would be much pleasanter going back that way. He went out into the field and picked a huge bouquet of wild flowers, once more hailed the coach, and bargained his flowers with the amused stage driver, and went home in triumph perched upon the stage box.

This inventive spirit, mingled with a certain daring, made him a leader among the boys of Northfield as he grew older. Moody used to tell how a certain Squire Alexander, who lived nearest to the old red schoolhouse of that district, was, on that account, most frequently the indignant victim of boyish pranks. Sometimes the boys, with Dwight Moody always at their head, would appropriate the Squire's old "pung" to coast down the steep hill below his house. The danger of the venture only added zest to the fun. On another occasion Dwight led the young mischiefs to the cattle-sheds of the Squire, where they silently climbed up on the empty rafters, and then, at a signal, suddenly raised the most awful whoops and yells, at the same time jumping about on the loose planks. The effects of this horrid noise upon a lot of young steers was something almost indescribable. They rushed through the barnyard fences as though the wolf-ghosts were after them. This was just what the boys wanted. Of course, no one knew who was to blame for the stampede, for, before the Squire could reach the barn, there was no boys in sight, and in the round up of the excited cattle, all the boys, and especially young Dwight Moody, were valuable allies, and were apparently as full of indignation as the old Squire, at the meanness of whoever caused the stampede.

A great deal was always made of the "Closing Exercises" in the old-fashioned district school. Hardly anything else could draw out so large a crowd as these occasions. On one of these festive days, Dwight Moody was to give as a recitation, Mark Anthony's Oration over Julius Cæsar, and to add to the dramatic affect, he brought with him that morning a small box to represent the coffin of the illustrious dead. The teacher's desk served as a bier upon which the coffin rested, and as the eloquence of the orator found added expression in extravagant gestures, the lid of the box was knocked off, and out jumped a very frightened old tom-cat. The scene which followed had just the effect the young "Mark Anthony" seemed to have aimed at, for though the stones of Rome did not rise, every living thing in that schoolhouse was on its feet in an instant.

A new teacher came to the little school district, who was the beginning of a new order of things to others as well as Dwight. She opened the exercises the first morning with prayer, and that made a great impression upon the boys. But they were still more astonished when she told them that she intended to have good order, and yet have it without whipping anyone. Ere long Dwight had broken one of the rules, and was asked to remain after school. He supposed she had decided to whip him in private, and expected the usual punishment. To his surprise, as soon as they were alone, the teacher began to talk in the kindest way to him, telling him how it grieved her to have him disobey. This was harder on Dwight than a whipping. Finally she said: "I have made up my mind that if I cannot rule the school by love, I will give it up. I will have no punishment. If you love me, try and keep the rules, and help me in the school."

This was too much for Dwight, and he surrendered at once.

"You will never have any more trouble with me," he answered, "and I will whack the first fellow that makes you any trouble." And whack" him he did, the very next day, to the surprise of his companions and the consternation of the teacher.

Young Dwight Moody was keen at a bargain in those boyish days. He had all a Yankee's as well as a boy's love for "swapping." The older brother, George, who "fathered" the younger children and conducted the farm, was away from home one day, when a party of Gipsies came along. As usual, they had a number of horses to trade, and Dwight, who was only ten years old at the time, was alive to business. The family farm horse was old and lazy, and Dwight thought anything he could trade for would be an improvement. Before the family knew it, he had swapped with the Gipsies and really made a good bargain, though the new horse was a lank, raw boned animal with a docked tail. He was very proud of this trade. Soon after, he harnessed him to a wagon, and taking an empty barrel for a seat, started to the mill for the weekly supply of meal. The new horse seemed to rise to the occasion. He started briskly down the hill, and as he cut around the corner, left both Dwight and the barrel, wrong end up, by the side of the road.

NEW FALL SUITS,
Made to Order,
$8 to $40.

from which you may select. Our elaborate illustrated

TAILORED SUITS, $8 to $40. Suitable for all occasions and in both long and short coat effects—the newest Paris models.

CHURCH AND VISITING COSTUMES, $12 to $40. Exquisite and dainty creations, in designs never before shown.

NEW SKIRTS, $4 to $20. From Walking Skirts for every-day wear, up to the Dressy Skirts for Special occasions.

FALL AND WINTER JACKETS, $8 to $35. In every approved style and length.

WE PAY EXPRESS CHARGES TO ANY PART OF THE U.S.

All letters answered by young women of taste and experience in matters of dress who will be glad to advise you in regard to anything that may puzzle you. When you send us ads. orders they receive prompt attention, and if there is a better way we will give it the same care and attention that it would have if it were made under your own eyes by your own dressmaker.

The Catalogue and a large assortment of the newest samples will be sent FREE on request. Ask for New Fall Catalogue No. 9. Mention whether you wish samples for Suits or Skirts, and about the colors you desire, and we will send a full line of exactly what you wish.

NATIONAL CLOAK AND SUIT COMPANY
119 and 121 West 23d Street, New York.

The Baby Thrives on HORLICK'S MALTED MILK

because it is pure, rich milk from our own dairies, with the extract of malted grain, already prepared and reduced to powder form by our own special process—nutritious, easily digested, containing everything needed for the upbuilding of the child. Its use prevents the summer troubles incident to impure milk and improper feeding. Thousands of healthy children attest its value. Keeps in all climates. Convenient to carry and prepare when traveling. No cooking or addition of milk required. Ask your physician about it.

Very sustaining and strengthening for nursing mothers—a delicious evaporating beverage for tired people, ready in a moment by stirring in water.

Used and sold everywhere—at all druggists.

SAMPLE If you are not using it, send for FREE
Horlick's Food Co., Racine, Wis., U. S. A.
56 Farringdon Road, London, Eng. 2021 Peel St., Montreal, Can.

MISSIONS AT HOME*

The Duty of the Christian to the Immigrants a Christian and a Patriotic Duty

NEVER in history has a nation been confronted with a duty so perplexing and so enormous as is this nation, in the tremendous flood of immigration which annually reaches our shores. It is a standing marvel that the native population has not been swamped and the character of the nation completely changed. And the problem becomes still more enormous. In the fiscal year just closed, nearly a million persons from other lands settled in the country. That such an addition to the population is a menace to our institutions is admitted on all hands. But it is also an opportunity, and the time is come when the fact should be recognized, not only for the sake of the institutions, but for the sake of the newcomers themselves. They ought to be reached with the Gospel, and if that can be done, there is no need to fear their influence. To win them to Christ is therefore a patriotic as well as a Christian duty. They constitute a mission field at home and one peculiarly open to Gospel influence.

MISSIONARY FREDERICK WEISS

In coming here they were attracted by our prosperity, and by the opportunity that they expected to find here of bettering their financial condition. But they may find more than they hoped for. If we can show them how much this country owes to religion, how largely our civilization is built on the open Bible, they will be impressed by the fact and will lend a ready ear to the teaching. They are prepared to appreciate our freedom and our hospitality and ought, therefore, to be prepared to appreciate our faith. That they bring with them their religions and their irreligion ought to be no discouragement to Christian effort. The Christian faith has been found to be suitable for all races. The Apostle Paul declared it was the power of God unto salvation both with the Jew and the Greek. It has proved acceptable even to the savage in heathen lands. We ought, therefore, to preach it with confidence to the heterogeneous mass of foreigners who have come here. And besides preaching, we need to practice Christianity. We need to show the stranger the effect of the Gospel on our own lives, so that he may see for himself that the Word preached is a living, vital force.

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society and Baptist Young People's Union for August 30. Deut. 7 : 7, 8 ; II. Chron. 6 : 32, 33.

"Much Comfort"

The "Family Art Gallery" is beautiful; my family appreciates it very much. The Speaking Ork, our premium book, we have found far above our expectations. As for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, I don't think its equal was ever published. I cannot tell all the comfort I have received from it.

McKeesport, Pa. MRS. WM. MARTYN

This book, with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD one year, $2. The "Family Art Gallery" free to subscribers.

Flood Losses in Kansas

IN response to many inquiries received asking as to the correctness of reports heretofore made regarding flood losses in Kansas City, Kansas, the* Relief Committee makes the following statement:

"As the extent of the flood calamity in Kansas City, Kansas, becomes more correctly known, it is found that the reports heretofore given out by the Relief Committees of the city have fallen considerably below the actual conditions. This is especially true as to the losses and damages on dwelling houses, which are fully seventy-five per cent. of total value of houses in the flooded district, while the losses on household effects are not less than ninety per cent. With these rates of losses, suffered by fully twenty-three thousand people, which was the population of the flooded district as shown by the State Census taken in March, 1903, and composed as they are largely of laboring people, the need and necessity for aid in large amount is established beyond dispute. All contributions should be sent to T. B. Gilbert, Mayor of Kansas City, Kansas."

Rev. C. M. Sheldon, of Topeka, writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

"Receipts for Relief Fund from readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have now amounted to several hundred dollars, mostly in small sums. I acknowledge each individual gift, of course, as fast as it comes in, but feel specially grateful for the generous space given the appeal for help in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Very cordially,

CHARLES M. SHELDON."

Dr. Sheldon requests that $10 contributed by "Unknown" be acknowledged in this journal.

The Morocco Mission

MISSIONARY Frederick Weiss, after a brief visit to the United States, has returned to his post at Tangier, Morocco, to take up the work again which he left a few months ago. He writes to ask for the united prayers of our readers, to whom he is thankful for the help they have rendered in the past in keeping the Morocco missionaries in the field. "We have spent nearly two years in Morocco," adds Mr. Weiss, "and God has taken care of us. He has also given us a native convert who is a colporteur now supported by readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Our field is a hard one, but we are trusting in Him who helps us through the hard places, and who breaks through the heathen darkness and sends the radiant light of the Gospel to the benighted hearts of the people of Morocco."

Mr. Currall (Mr. Weiss' associate missionary) has arrived in America and will work here in the interest of the mission for a time.

A Successful Pastorate

Rev. Dr. Sowerby has resigned from the pastorate of the Talbut Street Baptist Church, London, Ont., after a most successful pastorate of four years, during which time one hundred or more converts have joined the church, besides reducing the debt of the church, till it is almost wiped out. During the past two years the congregation has so increased that seating room could not be found, and scores had to go away. When the Finland Famine Fund was brought to his notice (by one outside of his church), Dr. Sowerby took it up, and brought it before the church and collected over $70.00. He succeeds Dr. Bates, of the College Street Baptist Church, Toronto.

BOYS WANTED!

Any Boy who is willing to work a few hours after school on Fridays and on Saturdays can earn many dollars by selling among his neighbors and relatives. You can begin at once. Absolutely no money needed to start. Write us to-day and we will send you the first week's supply of ten copies free. This will provide fifty cents capital with which to start; after that all the copies you require at the wholesale price. $225 in extra cash prizes were distributed last month among boys who did good work; the same amount will be distributed next month among those who sell five or more copies a week. This is in addition to the profit on every copy sold.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

Don't Delay—Write To-Day

If you will try it we will take all the risk. Just write saying that you will do so and everything necessary will be sent.

The Curtis Publishing Company, 403 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

A 50-Cent Hat by Mail

Either of these hats sent, postpaid, on receipt of 50 cents in cash, postal order or stamps. Money back if not satisfactory. We refer to The First National Bank of Middletown, N. Y. We are hat manufacturers and make the following offer to introduce these hats and our other lines of Men's, Boys', and Women's Hats in every town in the United States. Send for catalogue.

MEN'S HAT NO. 1

In soft, rough finish. Colors: Gray Mix, Brown Mix, and Black Mix.

MEN'S HAT NO. 2

In smooth finish. Colors: Black, Brown, Maple, Steel, and Pearl.

If your hat band has become soiled, send to us for a new all-silk one, made up, ready to sew on, at the following prices, postage prepaid: 5-8 in. and 1 in. wide, 25 cts.; 1 3-4 in. wide, 50 cts. Colors: Black, Dark Gray, and Beaver. If binding is wanted to go with bands, 15 cts. extra.

MIDDLETOWN HAT COMPANY, 44 Mill St., Middletown, N. Y.

MELLIN'S FOOD FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS

TRADE MELLIN'S MARK

Sweet sleep comes to the baby who is properly fed with a proper food. Mellin's Food babies sleep well.

A postal request will bring a sample of Mellin's Food right to your home.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

Listen to Reason and Get a HARTSHORN

The only shade roller that is sure to last, to run even and to never spoil your shades. The genuine bears this signature,

Edward Hartshorn

LOOKING FOR SAFE INVESTMENTS

Will remind you of the WILLIAM R. COMPTON 5 per cent. Mortgages. Recommended by financiers of national reputation. Book free.

Address, No. 5 WARDELL BUILDING, MACON, MO.

STARK TREES best by Test—78 Years

LARGEST Nursery. FRUIT BOOK free. We WANT MORE SALESMEN PAY CASH Weekly

STARK BRO'S, Louisiana, Mo.; Dansville, N. Y.; Etc

Rider Agents Wanted

in each town to ride and exhibit sample bicycle

'03 Models high grade $9 to $15

1901 & '02 Models, best makes $7 to $10

500 2ND - HAND WHEELS

Great Factory Clearing Sale. We ship on approval and 10 day's trial without a cent in advance.

EARN A BICYCLE taking orders for us. Write at once for bargain list and our wonderful special offer to agents. Tires, equipment, sundries, half price.

AUTOMOBILES Bargains in new and second-hand Autos and Motor Cycles. All makes and styles. If interested write for Automobile Catalogue.

MEAD CYCLE COMPANY, Dept. 64K CHICAGO, ILL.

Tricycles for Cripples

Chairs for Invalids

Enable those helpless in lower limbs to go about with absolute ease and comfort. PROPELLED ENTIRELY BY HAND. Noiseless, light running. Strong, simple, safe. Our Illustrated Catalogue Free, shows many tricycles and invalid chairs specially designed for the comfort of cripples and invalids however afflicted. Address.

THE WORTHINGTON MFG. CO., Dept. A Elyria, O.

[Successors to Fay Tricycle and Invalid Chair Co.]

SALESMEN AND AGENTS WANTED.

BIG WAGES Harrison Blue Flame, Wickless, Fuel Oil Stove for cooking and heating. New, Wonderful Invention. Enormous demand. Everybody buys. Big Seller. Generates its own fuel gas from kerosene oil. A spoonful oil makes hogshead fuel gas. Cheapest, safest fuel. No dirt, ashes or big coal bills. All sizes. Prices $3 up. Write for special offer, new plan. Catalogue Free. WORLD MFG. CO., 5236 World Bldg., CINCINNATI, O.

STEEL ROOFING.

Strictly new, perfect, Semi-Hardened Steel Sheets two feet wide, six feet long. The best Roofing, Siding or Ceiling you can use. We furnish nails free and paint roofing, two sides. Comes either flat corrugated or "V" crimped. Delivered free of all charges to all points in U. S. east of Mississippi River and north of Ohio River at $2.25 PER SQUARE. Prices to other points on application. A square means 100 square feet. Write for Free Catalogue No. 373 on material bought from Sheriffs' and Receivers' Sales. CHICAGO HOUSE WRECKING CO., W. 35th and Iron Sts., Chicago.

Your Real Estate Sell it yourself. Our monthly U. S. Real Estate Journal will show you how, by giving you the ADDRESSES of CASH BUYERS and EXCHANGERS throughout AMERICA. Yearly subscriptions, One Dollar. Send now. The first Journal may make or save you many dollars. Send description and price of property. Sample Journals, 25 cents.

U. S. REAL ESTATE JOURNAL, 55 House Block, ILION, N. Y.

ADDICTED TO THE DRUG HABIT?

If so, you can be relieved. Our Sanatorium was established in 1875, for the treatment of Drug and Alcoholic Addictions. Relief Guaranteed.

HOME TREATMENT IF DESIRED.

We have relieved thousands that have failed elsewhere. The Dr. J. L. Stephens Co., Dept. R 5, Lebanon, Ohio.

Squabs Pay Beat Hens

Easier, need attention only part of time, bring big prices. Raised in one month. Attractive for poultrymen, farmers, women. Send for FREE BOOKLET and learn this immensely rich home industry.

FLYMOUTH ROCK SQUAB CO 8 Friend Street, Boston, Mass.

What brings release from dirt and grease? Why, Don't you know? SAPOLIO

THE "1900" FAMILY WASHER FREE.

Greatest invention of the Age. Labor and Expense of Washing Clothes Cut in Two.

No More Stooping, Rubbing or Boiling of Clothes

Every Household Needs One.

THE "1900" BALL-BEARING FAMILY WASHER SENT FREE to anyone answering this advertisement, without deposit or advance payment of any kind, freight paid, on 30 days trial. The 1900 Ball Bearing Washer is unquestionably the greatest labor-saving machine ever invented for family use. Entirely new principle. It is simplicity itself. There are no wheels, paddles, rockers, cranks or complicated machinery. It revolves on bicycle ball-bearings, making it by far the easiest running washer on the market. No strength required, a child can operate it.

No more stooping, rubbing, boiling of clothes. Hot water and soap all that is needed. It will wash large quantities of clothes no matter how soiled perfectly clean in 6 minutes. Impossible to injure the most delicate fabrics. As the Sup't of the Savannah Yacht Club says:

"It is a wonder. Our washing is very large and we have always had two women on Monday and one on Tuesday. Our cook and the yard boy now do the washing in 4 hours much better than before."

NEWMAN, Ills., July 5, 1900.

I can testify that the 1900 is the best washer and the easiest running machine. It will absolutely clean the clothes, cuffs and bottoms of ladies white skirts better than can be done by hand. The washings that took my wife from 5 to 7 hours to put out by hand, can easily be done in 2 hours. R. A. SKINNER.

KENSEE, Ky., March 21, 1900.

I did a double washing for myself yesterday and made 65 cts. from my boarders, besides all my cooking, milking and housework. It takes less soap with your machine than in the old way. I have no need of the washboard any more. MRS. L. A. BARTON.

ONALASKA, Wis., June 4, 1901.

We are a family of 5 and as I had a 8 weeks wash it was an immense one. Had it all out in 3 hours and never had nicer looking clothes. I did not even put my hands into the water. I cannot too strongly recommend the "1900" washer. MRS. J. M. WILSON.

Write at once for catalogue and full particulars to

"1900" WASHER CO.,
33 S. State Street, BINGHAMTON, N. Y.
References: First National Bank, Binghamton, N. Y.

400,000,000 CHINESE have used Ginseng for medicinal purposes for centuries. Cultivation has just begun in America. sells to American exporters at from $6 to $10 per pound. Immense profits made on roots, young plants and seeds. Patch of only a few yards grows thousands of dollars worth. Is not an opiate; cultivation endorsed by U. S. Government. Easy to grow; hardy anywhere in U. S. and Canada. Immense and constantly increasing demand, supply very limited. We sell cultivated roots and seeds. Investigate this wonderful money-maker. Complete booklet "Ginseng" and current number of magazine." The Ginseng Garden," for two 2-cent stamps to help pay postage.

CHINESE-AMERICAN GINSENG CO.
Dept. C. Scranton, Pennsylvania.

DIAMONDS ON CREDIT

You may have a Diamond handed to you at your own door, and pay for it in such easy monthly amounts that you will hardly miss the money. You simply make a selection from our illustrated catalogue, then we send the Diamond to you with all express charges prepaid. If you are entirely satisfied you keep the Diamond and pay for it in eight equal monthly payments, otherwise return it at our expense and your money will be refunded immediately. We are one of the oldest (Est. 1858) and by far the largest loans in the business and refer to any bank in America. For instance, ask your local bank how we are rated in the Dun or Bradstreet books of commercial ratings. You will be told that we stand at the top in credit, promptness and reliability, and that our representatives may be accepted without question. Beautiful booklet explaining everything and catalogue, sent free. Write today

LOFTIS BROS. & CO. Dept. H 95 92 to 98 State-st
OPPOSITE MARSHALL FIELD & CO. Chicago, Ill., U. S. A.

AGENT'S OUTFIT FREE. Easy sweep Dust Pan. Handled with foot; dirt emptied without litter. Large Catalogue very latest household articles; rapid sellers. Richardson Mfg. Co., Dept. 6, Bath, N.Y.

THE FUTURE TEMPLE

Ezekiel's Vision of the Temple Restored in the Last Days

By Mrs. M. Baxter

VERY significant are the differences between Solomon's Temple and the temple which Ezekiel saw in the vision which he had in Babylon, when all Israel were mourning over the destruction of their beautiful house and longing to see it rebuilt.

The central figure in the tabernacle and in the temple is the high priest; there is no high priest in Ezekiel—the atonement has been already made. The once rejected, but now accepted, King of the Jews is also the High Priest for ever; and he calls the temple "the place of my throne" (Ezek. 43:7). The centre of all in the tabernacle and temple was the ark. There is no ark in Ezekiel's temple, and no need for it; the law which it contained is now to be written on the hearts and minds. In the tabernacle and the temple, the veil hid the Holy of Holies from view; there is no veil in Ezekiel's temple; the way into the holiest has been made manifest. The veil, which is his flesh (Heb. 10:20), has been rent, and cannot as such be restored again. The Shekinah glory, which was hidden behind the veil, now in Ezekiel's vision fills "the house," and can be seen from outside (Ezek. 44:4).

While the Passover, commemorative of the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt, as well as "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world," will be commemorated (Ezek. 45:21-24), and also the feast of tabernacles (verse 25), which has been a prophecy of the Millennial rest, and the observance of the latter will be compulsory on "all the families of the earth" (Zech. 14:16-19)—yet the feast of Pentecost is discontinued. The Church of Christ, his firstfruits, built up and indwelt by the Spirit, will have been taken away.

No mention is made here of the great Day of Atonement; for "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not reckoning unto them their trespasses" (II. Cor. 5:19). The altar of burnt-offering is renewed, and the altar of incense within "the house," but no laver; the candlestick and the table of shewbread are no more; the types decrease as the Antitype manifests himself fully. The sin-offering, the guilt-offerings, the burnt-offering are to be offered in Ezekiel's temple, and also the meat-offerings, drink-offerings, and the peace-offerings (Ezek. 45:17). The daily sacrifice of a lamb is renewed, but it is to be offered "morning by morning," and no mention is made of the evening sacrifice (Ezek. 46:13-15), for Christ is the Evening Sacrifice accomplished.

Let us always keep in mind that Israel is an earthly people, with whom God has made a covenant in their flesh—a people called to an external religion of ritual and ceremonies, ordained of God, which were meant to be a blessing to the whole world. While to God's heavenly people the law is "a copy and shadow of heavenly things" (Heb. 8:5; 10:1), and those things which happened to God's people of old were by way of figure, and they "were written for our admonition upon whom the ends of the ages are come" (I. Cor. 10:11), it does not follow that to the Jews as a nation they are shadows. God has foretold again and again that the sacrifices will be renewed when Israel is restored (Isa. 60:7; Zech. 8:19-22; Mal. 3:3, 4; Ps. 51:19). He even says, "In mine holy mountain . . . there shall all the house of Israel serve me, there will I accept them, and there will I require the firstfruits of your oblations, and all your holy things, and I will accept you" (Ezek. 20:40, 41).

Thus, what Israel has failed to be and has failed to do in the past, they must be and do in the millennium. They must accomplish their mission in the world as an external people, with God visibly their King, and offering him a visible worship. The Church is now called as a hidden people, with an unseen King, to follow our Lord in spirit and in truth, while our life is a constant paradox (II. Cor. 6:3-10). O that we, too, may indeed fulfil our ministry to the world, to which we are crucified, and the world unto us!

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY
BEYMER-BAUMAN
DAVIS-CHAMBERS FAHNESTOCK
ANCHOR
ECKSTEIN
ATLANTIC
BRADLEY
BROOKLYN
JEWETT ULSTER UNION
SOUTHERN SHIPMAN
COLLIER
MISSOURI
RED SEAL
SOUTHERN
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS. CO.
MURLEY
SALEM
CORNELL
KENTUCKY

USE Pure White Lead and Pure Linseed Oil and you will know exactly what you are getting—absolutely the best and most economical paint in existence. Employ a responsible, practical painter to apply it and the result will be satisfactory.

If interested in paint or painting, address

National Lead Co., 100 William Street, New York.

$30 COLORADO AND RETURN

Daily from Chicago to Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo, via the Chicago & North-Western and Union Pacific Railways.

Correspondingly low rates from all points.

One Night to Denver

from Chicago and the Central States, two nights from the Atlantic Seaboard via the Colorado Special, leaving Chicago 6.30 p. m. daily; buffet smoking and library car, dining car, free reclining chair cars and drawing-room sleeping cars through to Denver. A second fast train leaves 11.30 p. m., with additional service of Pullman tourist sleeping cars daily, Chicago to Denver, only $2.50 double berth.

All agents sell tickets via the

CHICAGO, UNION PACIFIC AND NORTH-WESTERN LINE

W. B. KNISKERN, P. T. M., C. & N.-W. Ry. Chicago.
E. L. LOMAX, G. P. & T. A., U. P. R. R. Omaha, Neb.

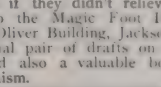
C538

RHEUMATISM

Relieved Through the Feet

Don't Take Medicine, External Remedy Brings Quick Relief. FREE on approval TRY IT.

We want everyone who has rheumatism to send us his or her name. We will send by return mail a pair of Magic Foot Drafts, the wonderful external remedy which has brought more comfort into the United States than any internal remedy ever made. If they give relief, send us One Dollar; if not don't send us a cent.



Magic Foot Drafts are worn on the soles of the feet and relieve by absorbing the poisonous acids in the blood through the large pores. They relieve rheumatism in every part of the body. It must be evident to you that we couldn't afford to send the drafts on approval if they didn't relieve. Write to-day to the Magic Foot Draft Co., RA 22 Oliver Building, Jackson, Mich., for a trial pair of drafts on approval. We send also a valuable booklet on Rheumatism.

There's Money In the Right Kind of Hogs

Get a pair of the famous O. I. C.'s for breeders and you can raise hogs that pay.

O. I. C. HOGS

are in demand both for breeding stock and fattening for market. 30 years devoted to the perfection of this breed without the loss of a single hog through disease. We will ship a single pair on time, giving full pedigree and allow agency to first applicant. Two O. I. C.'s weighed 2,806 lbs. Write to day.

L. B. SILVER CO.,
347 Hog Building, Cleveland, O.

Dr. Lyon's PERFECT Tooth Powder

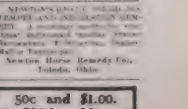
Used by people of refinement for over a quarter of a century

PREPARED BY

J. W. Lyon, D.D.S.

Corns You've been cutting your corns — risking blood-poisoning — and they've been getting bigger and hurting more. End the suffering and danger once for all — use A-CORN SALVE. 15c. at your druggist's or by mail

Giant Chemical Co., Philadelphia.



Newton Horse Remedy Co., Toledo, Ohio.

PRESIDENT SUSPENDERS

Comfort and service. Guaranteed—"All breaks made good." 50c and $1.00.
Any shop or by mail. C. A. EDGARTON MFG. CO., Box 209, Shirley, Mass.

Highland Brand Evaporated Cream

Makes Weak Babies Strong

It is simply the purest of cow's milk, evaporated and sterilized by our special process, which renders it peculiarly fit for use as an infant food.

Write To-day for Free Booklets

Made by the "Originators and Largest Producers of Evaporated Cream."

Helvetia Milk Condensing Co.

Dept. F, HIGHLAND, ILL.

"Where Model Dairy Farms Abound."

MAGAZINE NUMBER

CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
Published 52 Times a Year

NEW YORK, AUGUST 26, 1903

VOL. 26 NO. 34. PRICE 5 CENTS
Offices: Bible House, New York

An Old-Fashioned "Dorcas Party" Making Garments For Our Children's Home

A Doctor's Baby

Thirteen months on

ESKAY'S FOOD

This picture of my baby—one year old—should prove to you, as it has to me, the value of ESKAY'S FOOD.

At birth she weighed 8 3-4 pounds. Four well-known foods were tried, but the child grew thinner and weaker. When ESKAY'S FOOD was substituted, it nourished perfectly, constipation ceased and she began to gain at once. To-day the baby's health is perfect, her digestion splendid and her sleep restful. She weighs 21 1-2 pounds. I consider ESKAY'S FOOD the most perfect substitute for mother's milk, and use it wherever possible in my practice because it is uniformly successful.

R. G. CONTRELL, M. D.,
President Harris Institute Inc., 54 W. 23rd St., New York.

Every mother needs our valuable book, "How to Care for the Baby." It is sent free with samples of ESKAY'S FOOD.

SMITH, KLINE & FRENCH CO., 427 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Early or Late

THERE'S an exhilaration in the early morning spin. Nature is at her best and the Oldsmobile reels off the miles with tireless energy and undiminished speed.

The one essential point in a gasoline motor—the regular supply of a properly proportioned fuel mixture to the cylinder—is taken care of with absolute certainty and exactness by the special Olds Mixer or Carburetter, so there is "Nothing to watch but the road."

The Oldsmobile

"goes," and after a long day's touring is still ready for a quiet moonlight drive—a summer evening's pleasure made possible by the machine that is built to run and does it.

Price $650.00

Any of our selling agencies, established throughout the world, will gladly take you for a trial drive, and show you how easy it is to run the Oldsmobile.

Write for new illustrated catalogue to Dept. O.

Olds Motor Works
Detroit, Mich.

Members of the Association Licensed Automobile Manufacturers.

YOU CAN GET RICH GROWING GINSENG

If you will send two 2-cent stamps to help pay postage, we will mail you immediately our 55-page book telling all about the enormous, easily-earned profit in this wonderful plant, Ginseng, which has been marketed from its wild state for 175 years; cultivation in the United States just beginning; also copy of the current issue of our magazine, "The Ginseng Garden."

Ginseng root brings from $6 to $10 per pound in American market. Seeds and young plants bring splendid profits from American growers. A Missouri man sold $25,000 worth from ½ acre one year, being the accumulation of marketable roots, seeds and young plants for several years.

FIG. 1.—American ginseng.

If you sell your harvest of seeds and young plants each year instead of replanting and enlarging your own patch, a $10 or $25 garden will pay you a handsome profit annually, beginning with the first year. Requires little more care than a turnip patch.

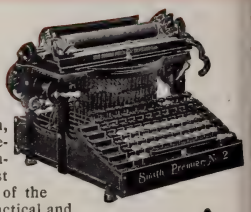
(American Ginseng—Reproduced from Bulletin 16, U. S. Dept. of Agriculture. Shows root, leaves and seed pod.)

We sell stratified seeds and cultivated plants. Our copyrighted directions, fully covering every point of cultivation, sent free with each order. We guarantee safe delivery and prepay express.

Anybody can cultivate it; little time is required. Can be grown either in city garden or on farm; a square rod easily holds 1,000 plants. Hardy anywhere in the United States and Canada. Demand increasing; supply very limited; prices continually advancing. . . . Ginseng is the most profitable crop known. Will soon be one of America's biggest industries. Investigate at once.

Send To-day for Our Complete 55-Page Book. It Tells the Whole Story. Enclose Two 2-Cent Stamps to Help Pay Postage.

CHINESE-AMERICAN GINSENG CO., Dept. C., Scranton, Pa.



The Man and the Machine

Mr. Alexander T. Brown, inventor of the Smith Premier Typewriter, is unquestionably the formost writing machine expert of the world. Besides, he is a practical and successful business man. He built the first

Smith Premier Typewriter

not only for handsome and speedy work but to endure under the severest demands of actual business. The Smith Premier is free from the weaknesses of eccentric, unpractical construction, and to-day embodies the latest demonstrated improvements of this typewriter expert. Mr. Brown as Vice-President of this company will continue to devote his entire time and inventive genius to maintain the Smith Premier where, more than ever, it now stands as

The World's Best Typewriter.

Send to-day for our little book explaining exactly why the Smith Premier is best; or, send to our nearest branch office for the machine itself on a ten days free trial.

The Smith Premier Typewriter Co.

Factory, Syracuse, N. Y. Executive Office, 287 Broadway, N. Y.

FIELD SECRETARIES WANTED

We want to engage men and women in every section of the country, at a liberal compensation, to look after the interests of the Success League, the largest federation of self-help clubs in the world. Write at once for particulars.

THE SUCCESS LEAGUE, Headquarters, Room E, University Building, New York.

1 of 100 Premiums

$10 PREMIUMS GIVEN AWAY WITH $10 ASSORTMENT

Of Laundry and Fine Toilet SOAPS and Perfumes. Our Premiums consist of Couches, Morris Chairs, Beds, Tables, Desks, Stoves, Musical Instruments, etc. In fact, through the LOCKWOOD WAY you can furnish your entire home free. Send your name and address and we will mail you absolutely FREE our beautiful illustrated catalogue containing handsome and useful premiums, also full information regard to our 30 days' FREE TRIAL order.

LOCKWOOD SOAP CO., Dept. 26, KANSAS CITY, MO.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 26, 1903

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

A FAROESE WOMAN IN HOLIDAY ATTIRE — VIEW OF THORSHAVN, THE CAPITAL OF THE FAROE ISLANDS — THE OLD HEAD AT THORSHAVN

A Sojourn Among the Faroe Islanders

In the Islands of Contentment

A Lone Land and a Strange People

By JESSIE ACKERMANN

TO the northeast of Great Britain, far off the usual line of travel, a cluster of twenty islands lift their lofty heads towards the sky, and their rocky coasts at many points form a barrier to the outside world. These are the Faroe Islands, and on them some 15,000 people, the only remaining descendants of the "hardy Norsemen," live in a state of simple contentment and happiness, the like of which I have never seen in any other part of the world.

The steamer carrying me to these islands sailed from Granton, Scotland, touching at the Faroes en route from Denmark to Iceland. It was a small cargo boat, with limited passenger accommodations and devoid of much that constitutes comfort at sea. As we loosed the moorings and put out to sea, a terrific gale, interspersed with thunder and lightning, came down upon us until the very waters seemed to part ready to engulf us. This continued for two days, when we sighted the islands. Toward evening a small boat came alongside, and an old man, bedecked with medals and clad in native dress, took command of the ship, piloting us over the bar, through the narrows and into the bay, where we were sheltered from the swells and blasts of the open sea by towering hills, which completely shut in the small city. For fifty years this skilful navigator has taken ships in and out of the harbor without an accident. As a reward for this faithful service, the King of Denmark sent his own steamer to convey the pilot to his presence, that he might express appreciation of his skill by placing upon him a special medal, which the old man displays with great pride.

HIGH-CLASS FAROESE

There is such a strangeness about the entire setting that description is difficult. During the summer months the hours of light extend far into the night. As winter draws near darkness settles upon the islands, and for months they are wrapped in a mantle of continued night—having, during the shortest days, only three hours of twilight, which is not unlike what is known to us as "early dawn." The men, who are active during the summer, grow restless when darkness comes, and not a few suffer from a mild form of melancholia; others experience the malady in more extreme forms. For them there is but limited occupation during this period. Beside caring for the stock, which is reduced to a small number kept only for breeding purposes, there remains very little for men to do. They are great readers, most of them being familiar with several languages and able to peruse literature in the original.

YOUNG FAROE ISLAND GIRLS AT THEIR HOUSEHOLD DUTIES

The women are not only occupied with household duties, but, cut off from the outside world of supply, their genius is taxed to the last degree, and they become the manufacturers of almost every garment worn by the members of the household, including even the shoes for every-day wear. They knit, spin and weave, for the hum of spindles and the buzz of wheels are all unknown in this land of primitive life and ancient customs. This leaves little time for the women to brood over conditions and surroundings.

It is difficult to imagine that anything could make up for the absence of the sun, yet there was a peculiar fascination about the period of darkness. The great polar stars shone out like young moons. The shimmer upon the snow and ice was intensified by the reflected colors of the great rolling waves of pink, blue, green and yellow lights, that swept across the heavens, trying to outdo each other in speed, and rival one another in splendor. The aurora borealis lends a weird aspect to the Northland. With it, the long night loses much of its loneliness.

It is quite impossible to describe the sensation produced by continued light, in the long summer days. To a busy, rushing American, the very thought suggests more time in which to carry out plans and accomplish many things demanding energy and attention. A few days of light were greatly enjoyed; but very soon the burden of it palled upon me. I hung black curtains to the windows, but vain was the attempt to shut out the light. The most welcome sight of my life was when the kindly hand of nature drew a thin veil over the day, and an hour of twilight softened the glare of an ever present noon-day sun.

The little city of Thorshavn extends from the sides of the hills, covered with small garden patches, to the very water's edge, where the streets, paved with white stones, spread themselves out, limited only by the shores of the bay. This gives the city an unusually clean appearance, as the ebb and flow of the tide carry all litter far out at sea, leaving the stones shining and clean. The space is used in drying and cleaning fish, preparing their chief product for many markets. The houses are very small, built with board frames, turf roofs and stone foundations. During the cold months the cattle are stabled under the house. This is done, not so much for extreme care for the cows, as a matter of aiding to keep the house warm. The upper part of the house consists of one room, in which whole families live with apparent comfort. They are free from dirt or squalor. In the most comfortable houses may be seen a large stove in the centre of the room, otherwise a small pile of stones is put in place, which, without any chimney or pipe, does service in warming and smoking the house, as well as furnishing a means of cooking.

In one of the better-class houses, I found an interesting group of young people, with

CONTINUED ON PAGE 709

THE OLD CHIEF

The American Pulpit

: : Sermon by : :

Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage, D.D.

Heaven

TEXT — I. COR. 15: 49:

"We shall also bear the image of the heavenly"

WHAT is heaven? Some people think that we do not know much about it. I remember how my father, who loved to preach about the "Celestial City," used to say he felt when he described it, that he was looking through "a glass, darkly." Some years ago one of his dear friends, Judge Neilson, was dying. He was Brooklyn's most honored jurist. The last time my father visited him, the judge asked, "What did you preach upon last Sabbath?" "Upon heaven." "Upon heaven!" exclaimed the old judge. "Will you send me the sermon? I would like to read it." "Certainly," said my father. But that afternoon his face wore a sad smile as he came into the house. I asked, "What is the matter, father?" "Why," said he, "I have been down to visit Judge Neilson, who is dying. He asked me to send him my last Sunday's sermon on heaven. I was just thinking that within a few days the old judge will be in heaven. He will go there just after reading my description of it. Then all the grandeur and glories of that celestial city will so eclipse anything that I have ever dreamed of, that he will laugh at me and my sermon, and say what a poor idea Talmage had of what Christ has prepared for us. 'For since the beginning of the world, men have not heard, nor perceived by the ear, neither hath the eye seen, oh God, besides thee, what he hath prepared for him that waiteth for him.' I guess I will not send Neilson my sermon on heaven. It would make me a laughing-stock for him through all eternity."

That is true. No human mind can conceive, no human voice or pen can depict the beauties of the celestial kingdom. There are, however, passages in God's Word which open the pearly gates a little way, so that we catch a glimpse of the supernal grandeur of that city of celestial glory. We can, as it were, pluck a Rose of Sharon, or a Lily of the Valley, and learn in miniature what the fragrance of the heavenly gardens shall be, where every hillside and meadowland are covered with perpetual flora. Through the crevice of that opened gate, we can, as it were, for a moment catch a sight of the redeemed, whose garments are as white as the driven snow, and whose joys are limited only by their own capacity to enjoy the happiness provided for them by their Almighty and all-loving Father. It is for such a glimpse of this heaven to which all true Christians are heading that I would open my Bible to-day, and speak from the text, "As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."

Eternal Life

Heaven is a place of immortal residence. What does that imply? "Why," answers some one, "that means we shall live on millions upon millions of years." It means that long after this earth as a burning star shall flicker and go out, our spiritual existence shall continue. It means a conscious life extending to ages, which dwarf into brevity the longest term even of the inanimate relics of the most remote past. "Immortal!" exclaimed Napoleon Bonaparte, turning to one of his generals who had applied the epithet to a statue of vast antiquity which had been brought from Egypt to the Louvre, in Paris. "Immortal! That is not immortal. What are the three or four thousand years which that statue has existed, in comparison with the immortality which goes on for ever and ever?"

But the immortality of heaven is not to be measured in years alone. It is the immortality of eternal youth. Old age implies weakness of body and of mind. In heaven there will be such a perfect renewal of our powers day by day that the passage of years leaves no trace of decay.

Perfect adjustment of the resurrected body to its celestial surroundings proves there is to be no fight for an immortal existence. Why does the physical body grow tired? Because it is not in perfect accord with its physical surroundings. In order to make the heart pump I must breathe. Yet every time I inhale the air, that oxygen burns up part of my physical being, which must be replaced with food and physical nourishment. Why do the great clouds of smoke ascend from the funnels of the locomotive and the chimneys of the factories? Because those clouds form component parts of wasted energies. Imperfect consumption of fuel implies that the coal must be continually shovelled into the furnaces, or else the machinery will stop. But in that Heavenly land there shall be no need of sleep, because the redeemed body, perfectly adjusted to its celestial surroundings, will never know fatigue. There shall be no need of physicians, because pain, which is the warning signal of infirmity, shall never have any of our joints in its twist. There shall be no need of recreation, because then all things shall be, once for all, perfectly created.

We marvel at the perfect adjustment in the natural world. We wonder at the vast resources of power which can swing the stars in their courses, and make whirling constellations marshal themselves upon the heavenly plains, and yet have no confusion in passing reviews. Once in a while, we are horror-struck when some of the elements seem to balk, and the lightnings, as fractious colts, kick over the traces and start to smash things. We stand aghast when the dark garments of a tornado sweep past us, or two storm-clouds collide and the heavens are ablaze with electricity, and the ear is startled with the crashing of the thunder, and the freshets come and the bridges are swept away. But all the time when these elements are at war, we think of the greater power which holds the moon and the sun off from the earth at arm's length. We think of the greater power of the laws of evaporation, which, with golden pulleys, lifted those waters into the clouds. We think of the law of cohesion or of specific gravity, which holds this old earth together in a compact sphere. We think of the power inherent in vegetable and animal life of sucking up the waters which flow by their sides. We marvel at the great adjustment of nature. Marvel, not only because it works, like the wheels of a perfect automaton, but because it works without friction.

Absolute Harmony

Now, my friends, if we wonder at the seemingly perfect adjustment of the mundane elements, can we not the more marvel at the perfect adjustment of the redeemed body with its heavenly surroundings? Shall we not rejoice over the thought that all our faculties shall be enlarged and developed, and yet keep on enlarging and developing and never grow tired? We have read that for over fifty years John Wesley preached on an average of sixteen sermons per week, or nearly three sermons per day. How vigorous must have been the constitution that could perform that task! But in heaven we shall all have vigorous constitutions. Oh the rapture of that better land in which the services we render will never produce weariness, nor the infinite subjects that will engage our attention ever cause satiety. Our hands grow weary, even though they may be busy in well-doing. But in that "Beautiful Land" we shall never be weary of well-doing. Then our redeemed bodies shall have a perfect eye, a perfect ear, a perfect tongue, a perfect foot, a perfect hand-clasp. Then all our faculties shall not only have the resilience of youth, but the alertness and perfect adjustment of immortality. We shall live and continue to live, because decay and corruption shall flee away when "death the last enemy shall be destroyed."

Heaven is to be a place of progressive enjoyments. If the resurrected brain is to be alert, it must have something to feed upon. So some writers have predicted that in the "Heavenly City" we shall have our music halls, and libraries, and museums, and art galleries, places for intellectual as well as spiritual developments. I personally take no exception to this thought. I believe the musical desire is a God-given desire. The celestial harp or the celestial canvas, or the celestial statue, is not a degradation of the word celestial. But though there may be many intellectual enjoyments of heaven, I believe there shall be two which will most appeal to the denizens of the skies. The first is in studying the wonderful construction of the Celestial City. "Oh," answers some one, "I know now what is the formation of heaven. It is a great walled town. And the length and breadth and the heighth of it are all equal. And the city is made of pure gold, and the foundations of the walls of the city are a collection of precious stones. And the twelve gates of the city are twelve massive pearls. Why, the Book of Revelation describes the city to its minutest detail."

Symbolic Imagery

Do you truly mean what you say? Do you affirm that the streets of heaven are to be literally made out of yellow bricks and the city to be a walled-in town with a lot of precious stones for foundations? Why, the Apostle, in the Book of the Revelation, is merely talking in figurative language, or in the language of earth. He is giving us a description of heaven in figures which we can comprehend. He does not mean that heaven is to have streets of gold any more than he literally means that hell is to be a place of fire. Fire is a symbol of torture. Gold and precious stones are the symbols of unlimited luxuries. Thus the Apostle piles together a great mass of diamonds and sapphires, and emeralds, and topazes, and amethysts, and says, "Heaven is to be like that. Heaven is to be like pearls, like mansions of white, like golden boulevards. Picture to yourself the brightest place you possibly can, and heaven is to be multipotently, infinitely, transcendently more beautiful."

Yet, when at last we reach heaven, all will be so new, so strange, that our minds through all eternity will never tire of exploring the grandeur. We shall take wings in the morning and fly away as a bird, and every place our eye lights upon shall afford extensive and inexhaustible fields of investigation.

But infinitesimal will be the enjoyment of study of the physical construction of heaven, compared with that of studying the beautiful characters of those immortals who will everywhere live about us. Old Samuel Johnson, I think it was, once said, "The grandest cathedrals, or the most wonderful poem in stone, never impressed me so much as the sight of a human being. The reason I am loath to leave London is not on account of its St. Paul's and Westminster Abbey, but because of the endless sea of humanity, every human being of which has for me a strange fascination." The study of the human character is the most interesting of all studies.

Continual Surprises

Now, the more you live with some people, the more you appreciate their love and devotion, and realize their true worth. When you were a little child, you thought you loved your mother. But every year you grew older the more beauty and tenderness you found in her life. When she was old, and her hair silvered, and face wrinkled and form emaciated, she thought that her work was done, and wondered "why God did not come and get her." But she became dearer to you the every day. You said to her just before her death, "Mother, mother, I cannot get along without you. I am just now beginning to appreciate what your love means." Yes, it takes some of us ten, twenty, forty, and fifty years, to fully appreciate the beautiful character of those who have lived by our side. Each month reveals some new sweetness or gentleness. Each year some new worth. So our heaven is to be a place of continual surprises. We shall all be hourly and daily discovering some new manifestation of purity and love in the lives of those with whom we are spending eternity. We shall be continually surprised with their thoughtfulnesses and sacrifices, and tender attentions. When they do us the unexpected kindnesses which only heaven can offer, we shall delightedly exclaim: "Why, Mary, thou I have been living with you now in heaven for a thousand years, I never realized before, how thorough kind you could be." Their spiritual beauties, the noble deeds, their self-sacrificing attentions, shall be a changing kaleidoscope, ever revealing to us new pictures and wonderfully new developments of love.

Heaven is to be a place of manifested gratitude. A place where we can thank those whose self-sacrifice helped save us when we were upon the earth. It will be a place where we can lay at the feet of our benefactors the rich golden sheaves of our lives which can as a result of their seed-planting. It shall be a place where others may rejoice in our Gospel conquests, because their words of advice and their prayers and the examples were the means of first leading us to the foot of the Cross, and starting us forth as Gospel messengers.

The Gospel Seed-Sower's Joy

Heaven must be such a place. Why? Because most Christians never live long enough on earth to see the full results of their services for the Master. But few Gospel workers can say as did Simeon of old, "Lord now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation which thou hast prepared before the face of all people." When my father was born, he was the youngest of thirteen children. My grandmother was well advanced in years. Soon after his birth, she turned to her husband and said, "Oh, David, I am so sorry that we will not in all probability live long enough to see little DeWitt, our baby boy, grow into strong manhood, and consecrate himself as a laborer in the vineyard of the Lord Jesus Christ." As with my grandmother, the regret which nearly all Christians have, is that in a earthly sense we shall not live long enough to see the harvestings of our Gospel seed-planting. We shall not live long enough to see our boys and girls, for whom we have slaved and worked, and prayed, grow up into Christian men and women, and see them as teachers in Christian Sunday Schools, and leaders in evangelistic meetings, and perhaps elders and ministers about the Communion Table of the Lord's Supper. But in heaven we shall know about the glorious results of our Christian labors. In heaven, the redeemed mother shall not only see her children, but her children's children, who have been saved through her prayers and consecration. In heaven there shall be rejoicing everywhere, because we shall there know that through the results of our labors, the "dead are alive again and the lost are found."

CONTINUED ON NEXT PAGE

IN THE ISLANDS OF CONTENTMENT

Continued from page 707

om I talked through my interpreter. They were all nbers of the family, and with the usual absence of ry, they were working and enjoying life at the same e. This house consisted of two rooms. Through open door, I could see that the beds were a portion the house, built into the walls, after the manner of ths in a ship. The men occupy one side of the room, women the other. Two or three wooden benches ended along the sides of the other room, and a small le, standing in front of a window, completed the house d furniture. Several women and one forlorn-looking n, made up the family circle. The girls were knitting ks from coarse, homespun yarn. Housekeeping is a ple matter: mince pie, hot bread and the like, having part in their domestic economy. The school-teacher, o was a very bright man, asked me "what I considered three characteristics of our civilization," and, true to Yankee instinct, I answered his question by asking his opinion on the ject. He promptly lied, "nervous pros- tion, dyspepsia and ns," deadly foes of ich they know little. Their food is all of the inest kind. Because the short summer, it impossible to culti- e any of the grains. heat flour is never d. Bread is made m rye flour, and in the sence of ovens, the ugh is placed in a tin ssel and thoroughly amed. Fruit is un- own on the islands. is reduces their diet gely to fish, bread and few vegetables, and nsequently diminishes degree of labor in oking. They are a rdy race, of simple es, high moral instincts, cleanly habits and pleasing dress.

AN OLD FAROESE MILK-SELLER AN ISLAND FISHERMAN THE ISLANDERS' CHURCH

Many of their customs might be followed with great fit by women who are on the "speedway" of life. matters of dress, these people are especially happy the selection of a picturesque costume, which is lly a national dress. Just think of a well-regulated use, where the presence of the latest fashion book es not distract the woman in her career in trying to ep up to the "latest cut," or bankrupt the man by erdue dressmakers' bills. No wonder an atmosphere contentment pervades all things. The making of a rment is little anxiety, for, after the busy fingers have un the wool and woven the fabric, all that remains r a young woman to do is to borrow her grandmother's dress for a pattern, and set about the easy task of making it by hand. Even a bride need not concern herself about an outfit. If the "cackling season" has been a poor one, and "few sheep have made wool scarce," she has recourse to her grandmother's wardrobe, and, clad in the gown which has probably done service for two or three generations, she takes her place beside the man of her choice, an up-to-date Faroese bride. If a young woman has two dresses, it is quite enough. In the morning and during working hours, a plain, homespun, coarse dress serves all purposes. Every woman helps in all branches of work. When the good man has "toiled all night," and the small craft barely keeps afloat with the weight of the full nets, the fish are thrown out upon the clean stones where the women gather them into the cleaning trays and pack them into the salting tubs. From these they are taken, a few days later, and placed to dry in the sun. When properly cured, the choice ones are packed and shipped, the remainder finding place among the winter stores for family supplies. This done, the women gather in social intercourse in the home of some friend, where spinning or sewing occupy the remaining hours. The latter includes the useful art of shoemaking, for every housewife is shoemaker for the entire family. Shoes are made of goat or seal-skin, and are cut in one piece. From the toe toward the instep, several long stitches give shape and fashion to the shoe. For every-day use they are worn by both men and women.

These people are exceedingly religious, and free from many evil habits that prevail in other lands. There is no drunkenness to speak of. The people are of such a high moral character, that a jail or prison is unnecessary. In a case of crime, there is an high court before which the criminal can have a hearing, crime in any form is very rare. There are no places where men and women resort, and not a drop of liquor is manufactured on the island.

The Faroe Islands are under the rule of Denmark. The present king of Denmark visited the islands some years ago, and a large monument bearing his name has been erected upon the spot where he landed.

The religious history of the Faroes has been odd and stormy, passing from Catholicism to the Lutheran faith by legislative enactment. Several times members of one faith or another have visited the islands, hoping to find a ready field, but as chance assembly brings with it certain civil rights, all churches at different times are found members. On Sundays, men, women and children gather in the large Lutheran Church, where the sermon is read by the minister. The preacher I heard wore a high silk hat, a loose flowing gown, buttoned from chin to hem, and a great white Elizabethan ruff around his neck. In the pulpit, a very unusual thing in connection with robes and gowns, was done several times during the service. On the altar were two great candles, each about a yard long and three inches thick. They seemed to be in the special charge of an old man, who gave out the hymns, and between times snuffed the candles with a fierce looking weapon, doubtless pre-historic, and of ancient date.

There are no other religious gatherings, but the children are remarkably well versed in Bible history. The people are poor and unable to contribute largely to the church support; hence it is necessary that every preacher should become self-supporting, outside of his religious vocation. It is a common thing to see a preacher cutting grass, milking cattle, and even shoeing his horse. A Faroese pastor cannot despise toil and hope to succeed. A free school system has been established, and every child is required to attend school up to a certain age.

The absence of hurry among these people was the most refreshing thing I ever encountered. Their limited wants, prove how the simple life brings the highest degree of contentment and happiness, and the memory of the visit will long remain an inspiration, the like of which could be gathered in no other spot of earth.

HEAVEN — A Sermon by REV. FRANK DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D. — Continued

And oh how many redeemed immortals we shall have thank in that heavenly kingdom! John Todd, you ere dead thirty years before I was born. But I shall heaven thank thee for the yellow leaves of that old ook I found in my father's library, of which you were e author. That book was one of the means used by the oly Spirit of turning my thoughts towards the Chris- an ministry. William H. Milburn, twenty years blind aplain of the United States Senate, thou didst not, in probability, ever hear of my name. With thy sight- ss eyes thou didst make me turn many a grateful ance towards the Christ who in heaven is to-day atching thy rapturous and holy face. I wish to thank ee, oh, redeemed spirit, thou who years ago as a unday School teacher in the old Brooklyn Tabernacle, dst shed many an anxious tear over thy scholars, I ould tell thee that to-day in the sacred ministry, I feel e touch of thy sainted hand, and hear the earnest ne of thy pleading voice. Yes, there are many spirits heaven we would thank for what they did for us when on the earth. We would thank them, that they may joice, as we will rejoice, and that their hosannas of ratitude might be augmented with our hallelujahs.

Delightful Reminiscences

But if heaven is to be a place of manifested gratitude, is also to be a place of glorious reminiscences. At ne camp fires of the Grand Army Reunions, we have eard the old veterans talking over the struggles, the efeats and triumphs of the Civil War. We have heard hat comrades at Shiloh did, and what comrades at tlanta did, and what comrades at Petersburg did. To ne old veterans, the struggle of the Civil War is never n old story. So in the heavenly reunions, the Gospel eterans will love to talk over the struggles of the past.

As Christian comrades, one will say, "Do you remember that time when we started those cottage prayer-meetings? As a result of those prayer meetings what a glorious revival we had. One hundred and twenty souls for Christ." "Yes," says another, "that reminds me of what a hard time we had in starting that mission school down in the slums. Cynics said it would do no good, but it did, it did." "Yes," will answer many voices, "we were converted and saved through those little meetings." Then the pastors and the different congregations will get together and they will have their reminiscences. And the parents and the children will get together and they will talk over again of the blessings which came from their family altars. And the Bible distributors will tell how they were scoffed at, and yet blessed, as they distributed their tracts and sacred leaves. And Francis E. Clark and the Christian Endeavorers will have their separate reunions. We shall be in that "Better Land," living over and over again the Christian joys which we passed through when serving Christ upon the earth. Oh, my friends, if this idea is true, that heaven is to be a place of glorious reminiscences, ought we not all to double and treble our energies in the service of Jesus Christ? Shall we not by the power of the Holy Spirit do more and more for our Saviour, who has done so much for us, in order to be able to drink deep out of this golden chalice of celestial pleasure?

But the greatest celestial joy of all I have reserved until the last. Heaven is to be a place of perpetual worship. "Does that mean," asks some one, "heaven is to be a great cathedral or church, in which all the inhabitants of the New Jerusalem shall assemble, and pray to Him—and pray to Him, and never cease to pray to Him? In which there shall be a service with no doxology and no benediction, for that service shall be without beginning and without end?"

Oh no, my brother. I do not believe you have caught the right idea of the worship of the Celestial City. Heaven is not to be a church, where we shall have stated times for prayers and hymns. Saint John distinctly says in his Apocalypse, "And I saw no temple therein: For the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb, are the temple of it." That means as I take it, instead of having buildings especially dedicated for the worship of the Trinity, we shall always feel, wherever we may be, that we are standing face to face with Christ. And then our hearts shall be so full of gratitude to him for what he has done for us, that our eyes and lips and tongues and hearts will never cease to praise him. It will not be the worship of intercession or of pleading for the pardon of sin, but the worship of adoration and of eternal homage.

The Immanent God

Perhaps my thought may be simply illustrated by a conversation I had with a very dear friend some time ago. This noble Christian man turned to me one day, and said, "Do you know that my ideas of prayer and worship have greatly changed within the last few years? When I used to pray I would make out a long list of petitions for which I would ask God. But now I have begun to see that he loves me better than I love myself. Therefore, instead of saying, 'Oh God give me this or that,' I simply say, 'Oh Christ, thou art so good and pure, suit thyself in reference to my life, and thou wilt suit me. Thy will, oh Lord, and not mine, be done.' So in that heavenly land, we shall have but one prayer and one song: "Thy will, Oh Lord, not mine, be done." We shall sing it on the street. We shall sing it in the green pastures beside the still waters. We shall sing it in chorus with our loved ones. We shall sing it when we are alone. "Thy will, oh God, thy will be done!" In that one song, and that alone, we shall find the perpetual and never-ending worship of heaven.

Thus, my dear Christian friends, I have tried to open for you a little way the gates of the glorious "City of the Redeemed." I have tried to eternally fire our lives with the immortal lives of our dead. Like Christian in Bunyan's Pilgrim Progress, may you continue steadfast to enter into the "Strait Gate." And like the Dowager Queen Victoria, may you hopefully and triumphantly be able to write the same kind of an epitaph upon the tombstones of your loved ones as she inscribed upon the mausoleum of the departed Prince Consort, "I await my beloved. Here at last I will rest with thee. With thee in Christ shall I rise again." Such is the Gospel prophecy for all who love him. Heaven! Heaven! Glorious Heaven! Heaven of the living Christians! Heaven of the Christians who are resurrected! Heaven, eternal and never-ending Heaven?

A WRECKED LIFE ✳ DEATH OF SAUL AND JONATHAN

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR SEPT. 6 I. SAMUEL 31 : 1-13

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

GOLDEN TEXT -- "THERE IS A WAY THAT SEEMETH RIGHT UNTO A MAN, BUT THE END THEREOF ARE THE WAYS OF DEATH." PROV. 14: 12

The Lesson Story

LET us ask Amasai, the chief captain in David's band, what he can tell us about the death of Saul and Jonathan.

"The news came to us at Ziklag. We were camped on the ashes of our homes, to which we had just returned from battle with the Amalekites, who had destroyed the place with fire, and had taken captive our wives and children, and had carried off our cattle and other possessions. We had come back victors, bringing our oxen with us. On the second day of our return, a runner was discovered making for Ziklag. As he drew near we recognized him as the bearer of evil tidings, for his clothes were rent and ashes were upon his head as a sign of mourning. He was brought in by the guard, and stated that he had important news for our leader, David. We were suspicious of him, because he had the appearance of being an Amalekite, and so he was, as he afterwards informed David. Evidently, he had not heard of the ruin that his people had brought upon Ziklag. David asked him, 'Whence comest thou?' The runner replied, 'Out of the camp of Israel am I escaped.' And David asked, 'How went the matter?' He answered, 'The people have fled, save the many who are dead, and Saul and Jonathan are slain.' David's voice was husky with deep feeling as he asked for particulars.

"The man told him that the Philistines, with their chariots and horsemen, had given Saul such close battle that he had taken refuge upon Mount Gilboa. 'I was there, not as a fighter but as an onlooker. I saw the wounded king resting upon his sword, and I came so near to him that he turned about as he heard my step, and asked who I was, and I answered him, 'I am an Amalekite,' and he said to me, 'Take my sword and kill me,' and so I did. The look of horror that came over the face of David seemed to make the man afraid, and he next tried to say something to curry favor. He began fumbling in his garments as if to find something, as he said, 'I took off the king's crown and his bracelet, and have brought them to you.' But he did not produce them, for David commanded that he should be struck down then and there as having slain the Lord's anointed. And the gruesome duty fell upon me. But it turned out that the man was a liar, and his lies had cost him his life, for later there came a runner, an Israelite, who had escaped from Saul's camp, who had authentic information to give—that Saul and Jonathan were indeed dead, but that Saul had taken his own life, after he had failed to induce his armor-bearer to kill him. The Israelite runner also brought word that the bodies of Saul and his sons were taken by the Philistines and hung upon the wall of one of their cities, after they had been stripped of their armor, and their heads cut off to send from city to city, so that the people might know that their enemy had fallen. The runner also told how the brave men of Jabesh-Gilead had gone, when the Philistines were asleep, and taken down the bodies of Saul and his sons and carried their bones to their own city and buried them under a tree.

"Did David rejoice in the death of Saul? Not he! He ordered a season of fasting and mourning. He afterwards composed a most beautiful memorial ode, called 'The Song of the Bow,' which he desired all of tie people should learn to sing and teach their children (II. Samuel 1 : 17-27)." And Amasai added: "We who had been defending David against Saul could but be impressed by the noble and forgiving spirit of our leader."

Illustration and Application

David's steps to the throne, and Samuel's noble life may be left for the regular review, but this is the proper time to review the life of Saul and Jonathan, and Israel's first experiment in king-making, under such themes as the following: 1. God is our rightful King. 2. A Godly young man who makes a good start, may be switched off by some little sin and make a bad end. 3. Envy and jealousy lead to meanness and murder. 4. So good a man as Jonathan, if he does not break altogether with bad companions, even in his own household, will come to grief. 5. When God is lost out of the life, the end must be defeat and hopeless death.

1. God our Rightful King. When Garibaldi had delivered Italy from its oppressors and was standing with his soldiers in the throne room of Francis, of Naples, they gathered about him and said, "You shall be our king. Viva Garibaldi." They tried to push and drag him to the throne, but he said, firmly, "Never will I be king. Washington refused a kingdom. He has been my example thus far, and shall be to the end. It is a very foolish thing to undertake to be a king. I will not even be longer General, now that liberty is secured, but, like Washington, I will resign my commission and take no pay." And he borrowed $20 of a friend to pay his way back to his cottage home. It was doubtless chiefly because he believed the people should rule that he refused the crown, but a higher reason that should have made Saul persist in his unwillingness to be crowned is that God is the only rightful King. That means for us daily, loyal obedience to his laws of love.

A Disappointing Life

2. A good start, but a bad end—why? Christian young men may well take warning when one who started out with so many good qualities as Saul did, who was modest, brave, spiritual (I. Sam. 9: 1, 2, 5; 10: 7-10, 22; 11: 6) develops so many deadly faults (18: 7-11; 19: 10; 20: 30-33; 22: 9-19), and finally comes to a hopeless death (Matt. 7: 22, 23). It was by little sins, step by step, he fell away (I. Sam. 13: 8-14 cf. 14: 18-20), and chiefly by one act of disobedience, prompted by covetousness (I. Sam. 15: 19-23). He lost heaven by trying to take too many fat cattle in his train. During the American Civil War, a fresh regiment of Northern troops, each soldier heavily loaded with half a shell tent, a rubber poncho, woolen blanket, haversack, canteen, knives and forks, and more besides, heard, during a night march, the command, "Open and pass convoy of prisoners." The Confederate prisoners were seasoned soldiers who swung along in the moonlight with the long lope of veterans, and about all the outfit they carried was one blanket for each three men. They noted the heavy loads of the Northern recruits, and one of them shouted out, "You'll have to carry less baggage if you catch the rest of us." Many a young man is trying to carry too much baggage in his march to heaven, and will have to give up some of his beastly ways and selfish indulgences, or fall out by the way, as did Saul. To change the figure, Saul was like a goodly ship that starts out with all sails set and high hopes of success, which is wrecked at last because the compass is diverted or the chart is neglected.

"SO SAUL DIED, AND HIS THREE SONS AND HIS ARMOR-BEARER"

3. Envy and jealousy. When Pacdaretus of Sparta lost an election as one of the three hundred citizens who were to govern, he rejoiced that three hundred better men than he could be found in the city. What a contrast to the jealousy and envy which we see in Saul, as in many others, that never can be at heartsease when they see others honored as much or more than themselves. Saul's envy made him miserable when he might have been as "happy as a king." This recalls an old poem, recently republished, showing how vain it is to seek the dove of happiness in "ambition's craggy hill" or anywhere apart from God.

O tell me where the dove has flown;
To build her downy nest,
And I will rove this world all o'er,
To win her to my breast.

I sought her in the grove of love,
I knew her tender heart;
But she had flown—the pensive dove
Had felt the traitor's dart.

I sought her in the rosy bower,
Where pleasure holds her reign,
But fancy flies from flower to flower—
So there I sought in vain.

Upon ambition's craggy hill,
This pensive bird might stray;
I sought her there, but vainly still—
She never flew that way.

Faith smiled and shed a silent tear,
To see me search around;
Then whispered, "I will tell thee where
The dove may yet be found.

"By meek Religion's humble cot,
She builds her downy nest;
O seek that sweet, secluded spot,
And win her to thy breast."

Recently a Philadelphia daily paper received a letter from a man who has long and vainly hunted clouds under the trees in the parks, supposing that when the rain is "squeezed out" they fall to the ground in a gelatinous state. He desired to know from the omniscient editor of the query column where and how he could get a basketful of old clouds. We can tell him how to find clouds every day, even in the most sunny days. Let him allow envy and jealousy to dwell in his heart, and every man's success and every woman's joy will put a cloud of sticky misery in his soul. It may even, as in Saul's case, become a cloud whose rain is blood.

4. Should Jonathan have left Saul? Jonathan's courageous defense of David be his envious father, and his love for Da who was to displace him, were noble qualit but it is a fair question whether Jonat should not have left his father and joi David when his father persisted in his wic course. Christ speaks of leaving father mother for the truth's sake, and in miss ary lands many have had to do so. In case, it was not for lack of courage that Jo than adhered to his father and died with h

A Nation Great in Men

To young Americans personifying t country as "Brother Jonathan," the term r well recall that Prince of Israel who above the narrow watchword, "My fam right or wrong," and stood for justice, e to his rival, at the peril of his life. It is s "Greathearts" that make a country gr rather than high buildings and broad ac Epictetus said to the Athenians at a time degeneracy, "You Athenians will confer greatest benefit on your city, not by rai the roofs of your dwellings, but by exal the souls of your fellow-citizens; for i better that great souls should live in sr habitations, than that abject slaves shc burrow in great houses."

Not highraised battlement or labored mound
Thick walls or moated gate;
Not cities proud, with spires and turrets crown
Not bays and broad armed ports,
Where, laughing at the storm, rich navies rid
Not starred and spangled courts.
No? Men—high-minded men;
Men who their duties know,
And know their rights, and knowing, dare mai
tain;
Prevent the long aimed blow,
And crush the tyrant, while they rend the cha
These constitute a state.
And sovereign law that, with collected will,
On crowns and globes elate
Sits empress, crowning good, repressing ill.

5. Two kinds of death. During the C War, a company of soldiers defending R man's Point were overpowered by the ener and took possession of a scow, in which cross Tar River. When loaded, it stuck f in the mud. Exposure was certain dea Several soldiers were about to spring from the sheltering sides to push it off, wh a large negro said, "You keep still, and s your life. I can't fight. I can push off boat. If they kill me, it is nothing. You soldiers, and they need you to fight." leaped overboard, pushing the boat into stream, and sprang back pierced by se bullets, a sacrifice to patriotism.

A Significant Death

Saul's death was of another type. God h left him, and eternal death had already beg before he turned to the witch as hell's vance agent to help him in his last bat where, in utter defeat, he significantly fell his own sword, symbol of the fact that character as well as in body he was self- stroyed. The men of Jabesh-Gilead remc bered only his good deed to them (I. Sa 11 : 1-11) and rescued his body from his fo David forgot all Saul's personal attacks, a sang of his nobler qualities in earlier da But history compels us to write on Sau tombstone, "A wrecked life."

If thou could'st in vision see thyself
The man God meant,
Thou never more would'st be the Man thou art content.

Let us not forget that death is a terror ev to good people, where immortality has r been brought to light by the story and wo of Christ. In a Chinese city a native Chi tian summoned the missionary at night see a dying man. He found the sick m surrounded by weeping friends. "Why you weep?" said the missionary. They a swered, "We pity him for he is going out in the dark, and he's so frightened to go." T sick man himself said dying was like goi into the night outside. The missionary to him of the Light of the world. Betwe spasms of pain he heard a few words a said, "It's very good, it's joyful to hear, b it's too late. Why didn't you come before In another case the Word was not too la It was a Chinese boy. He said to the m sionary, who had been sent for, "They wh per to each other that I am dying—going o into the dark, and I am so frightened." T missionary told him day by day of the Go Shepherd and his lambs. Just before he di the boy said to his friends: "I'm not frigh ened now. The Lord Jesus has come fetch me. He's going to carry me up in the light—he who blessed little childre That's why I'm not a bit afraid."

O Land! O Land!
For all the broken-hearted
The mildest herald by our fate allotted,
Beckons, and with inverted torch doth strive
To lead us with a gentle hand
Into the land of the great Departed,
Into the Silent Land!

IN A CHINESE VICEROY'S PRINCELY HOME

By REV. Z. C. BEALS, Missionary

O doubt the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have read more or less about Chinese cials and their homes; yet I feel e they will always be interested to ar something more about them, and pecially about the ancient capital, nking.

This city was taken by the Manchus 1645, who then transferred the pital to Peking. Nanking prospered d grew very rapidly, until the Tai-g rebellion, when it was almost mpletely wrecked by the rebels. It claimed by some that it had a po-lation of one million just before it s destroyed; but now, forty years er, it has not over two hundred and y thousand. Almost all of the autiful temples were destroyed at at time, including the famous Por-lain Tower.

The rebel emperor set up his head-arters in the heart of the city. hese same quarters are now being ed by the Viceroy of the three Ki-g, as the provinces of Kiang-su, An-ei, and Kiang-si are called. The ceroy's Yamen (official residence), laid out very prettily, with parks d artificial pools. In one of these ols is a large stone junk, which is ed by the Viceroy and his family as a private tea-use. It is fitted up very handsomely, and is thor-ghly Oriental. On the lake may be found many easure and flower boats, in which friends and visitors ay spend a pleasant hour at the close of the day.

Just before our new Viceroy H. E. Wei came, all the reigners in Nanking were invited to inspect the ildings and grounds. Many availed themselves of the opportunity, and took some good photos of the place. The old Ming Tombs, where some of the former kings of China are buried, are five miles southeast from Nanking, and outside of the city. Many foreigners visit these tombs yearly.

FLOWER BOATS IN A CHINESE FESTIVAL

Nanking has started again on a new lease of life, since it was opened as a treaty port. A great horse road has been built from the boat landing to the opposite side of the city, and hundreds of "rickshas" are on the go continually.

The new Viceroy, who has just been transferred from Yunan, has always been friendly to mission work, and is a strong supporter of western learning. Mission work has received no set-back in his appointment to this most important position. The outloook for missions were never so hopeful, even though political strife is going on. Our work is in his jurisdiction, and we have now six mission stations—Gospel lighthouses, if you please—in a prosperous condition. On our last journey to Chao Hsien, one of these stations, I baptized ten persons. One was an old lady of eighty-two. She said to me, right after baptism, "I am so glad I have been saved before it was too late."

We praise God for good rulers, but they are very few in China. We are, therefore, very glad that the present Viceroy, although not a Christian, is very friendly to foreigners and western civilization. Z. C. B.

The foregoing letter from Missionary Beals was evidently written before the new movement against the "native reformers" had begun in Peking, and intelligence of it had not yet reached the old capital. According to the calls dispatches, the aged Empress Dowager has ordered the arrest and punishment of a number of leading Chinese who were active in the crusade for the introduction of certain reforms in the government, and who were known to be strongly tainted with "Western ideas." To the Empress Dowager, who abhors all innovation, and who is the most uncompromising advocate of the retention of the old Chinese customs and civilization, the promulgation of such ideas was treason, and she did not hesitate to avow her intention of executing the "reformers" as soon as they should fall into her power. Appeal has been made by the reformers to the foreign legations, and at the present time they are comparatively safe, as the legations have refused to allow them to be delivered up for slaughter. This refusal has rendered the situation in Peking somewhat acute, and it is hinted in the dispatches that disturbances and demonstrations against the "foreigners"—instigated, of course, by the fanatical Chinese who still regard their aged ruler as supreme—are not improbable.

Meanwhile, the situation elsewhere in the Far East is by no means reassuring. Russia is hurrying forward her troops into Manchuria, and has formed the Amur district and Kwangtung into a Viceroyalty under Admiral Alexeiff. That commander is known as one of the most vigorous and aggressive of Russia's representatives in the East to-day, and it is conjectured that he has been selected with a view to emergencies next October, when, according to agreement, Russia is to evacuate Manchuria.

THE NANKING VICEROY'S GARDEN AND POOL

STONE JUNK USED AS A TEA-HOUSE

A SHIPFUL OF HAPPY CHILDREN

UNIQUE and picturesque is the charity which has been established this summer by Mr. John Arbuckle, a well-known merchant of Brooklyn, whose many benefactions to the poor have won him the gratitude of thousands of tenement dwellers in the "City of Churches."

MR. JOHN ARBUCKLE

Some time ago, Mr. Arbuckle conceived the idea of giving a novel excursion for poor mothers and their little ones. One condition was that the children should be under twelve years of age. He chartered a good sized, seaworthy sailing vessel, the Jacob A. Stamler, had it thoroughly cleaned, renovated and refitted in comfortable fashion, and engaged a competent captain and crew to navigate the ship. Then he announced that the "Mothers' and Babies' Floating Hotel" was ready for service.

THE "JACOB A. STAMLER" WITH HER LOAD OF BABIES AND MOTHERS

A great roomy cabin, roofed and well ventilated, is the deck-playground of the little voyagers. Each mother, or caretaker, has the privilege of taking six children. The mothers must bring their own lunches, but coffee, tea, and milk are sold on board at one cent per glass. Hundreds of poor families enjoy this privilege in the hot weather. It is a beautiful sight to see the big ship under canvas, and with her deck load of laughing, merry youngsters, tended by their mothers, slowly moving out to the lower bay, where the day is passed among cooling and invigorating breezes, bringing happiness to all. The ship starts from the dock at foot of Hamilton Avenue, Brooklyn, at 9 A.M., and comes back at 7 P.M.

After discharging its juvenile cargo, which has been a great boon to thousands of children and their mothers who are unable to pay for an outing, the ship is ready again for night service. This time, however, adults, and not children, form the passenger list. Scores of tired working men and women are accommodated in clean, cool quarters, and meals are supplied at a nominal charge. Another vessel, the John Hare, has also been chartered, and the two lie in the lower bay, their loads of weary toilers enjoying a refreshing sleep, amid the rocking of the waves and the cool sea breezes.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, ASSOCIATE EDITOR — LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor — G. H. SANDISON, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscriptions.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter

The Protestant Attitude

VERY significant have been the comments of both secular and religious journals on the election of the new Pope. They indicate a change of attitude and of spirit from that which was prevalent a generation ago. The vulgar abuse and rabid denunciation that were once everywhere heard when the Pope was mentioned, have given place to a spirit of tolerance, and a just recognition of actual facts. We have begun to realize that, bad as Roman Catholicism is, false and superstitious as are many of its dogmas and practices, there are things that are worse. It is better for a man to be a Roman Catholic, than to be an infidel or an anarchist. The man who recognizes that there is a spiritual side of his nature; who realizes that he must one day stand at the bar of God, to give an account of the deeds done in the body, is more likely to lead a clean and orderly life than he who denies that he has a soul, and believes that the grave is the end of his being. It is an important and a beneficent step from materialism to Roman Catholicism, and one that elevates and spiritualizes the man. We wish he would go farther, and would learn that there is but one Mediator between God and man, and that neither Pope nor priest is needed to give him access to his Maker. But we may be thankful for the light he has gained, and pray that more light may be given to him. When we remember that there are scattered over the world two hundred and forty million persons who find in Roman Catholicism the only spiritual guidance they have, we rejoice that they have so much as that, and that the world outside of Protestantism is not given up wholly and utterly to the demon of atheism.

The Protestant faith is really stronger for this recognition. Every man's experience proves that converts are won, not by abuse and denunciation, but by a recognition of things held in common. The progressive stages of development then proceed from a higher level. In leading a man to Christ and the purity of faith in him, if he is a Roman Catholic, we do not have to start with the task of convincing him that there is a God. That task has already been performed, and now we can go forward from the point he has reached.

The Romish Church will be miserably deceived, if it infers, from the kindly comments that have recently been made by Protestant journals, that there is any retreat from the Protestant attitude, or that a truce has been declared in the campaign against the errors and faults of the Romish Church. That campaign will be prosecuted all the more vigorously because of the clearer view of the situation. We know that wherever that church is dominant, spiritual development is at a standstill, and even intellectual progress ceases. Its influence has been like a blight on Spain, on Italy, on Ireland, on Mexico, and we are now realizing how evil it has been in the Philippines. We are, therefore, justified in opposing its progress and exposing its errors. As patriotic citizens, we do right in resisting its insidious encroachments on education and social liberty. But our opposition will be the more effective, if we have a veracious idea of the power against which we contend. We would be just even to our enemy. Not by general and wholesale vituperation, not by ignorant and malevolent defamation, but by intelligent discrimination between the good and the evil in its character, will the Protestant assault on Romanism win its way. It is really, therefore, an encouraging sign that a more tolerant spirit towards the Romish Church on the part of Protestants has appeared.

The Web and Weft of Prayer

IN the Orient, where textures of the most exquisite colors are woven, the most primitive methods are still in use. Two straight palm trees are used for the upright timbers of the loom. The intricate and almost innumerable threads of the warp, are rolled upon great beams of wood. The skilful weaver stands in the shade of the palms and silently plies his shuttle. Children are sitting on the ground at his feet, winding the rich-hued silken thread on little spools which they put into the hands of the weaver. He takes the spools, arranges them, and uses them as he needs them. He puts them into his shuttle and weaves the varied colors into the long warp, and thus works out the design which is painted upon his brain. But as fast as it is woven, it is rolled silently upon the beam and disappears from sight. Not until the whole design is completed is it unrolled to reveal his plan, and to surprise and gladden the eye with its beauty.

We are the children sitting at the weaver's feet, winding our requests in prayer. We place the little spools in the Great Weaver's hands. He receives them, he uses them. Our prayers become the woof that is woven into the eternal warp of his purpose that rolls on silent and invisible. The design is in his mind. At last, when the fullness of time is come, God will stand forth in the light, clothed in his beautiful vesture that has been weaving throughout infinite ages; and somewhere in it, as part of the weft, like threads of purple and gold, will appear our prayers, if we have prayed in faith and fainted not.

The Progress of Temperance

WHEN Hogarth, the famous caricaturist, gave to the world his "Rake's Progress," showing in graphic outline with gifted pencil, the tremendous velocity of a downward career in dissipation and vice, he gave to the men and women of his time one of the most convincing lessons in temperance and morals that society has ever known. In his day, drinking was indulgently regarded as an accomplishment of which the drinker was nowise ashamed. Since then the great temperance movement has arisen and spread to all civilized lands. The reformation so warmly desired and so earnestly striven for, has not yet been realized, it is true; but the whole human race has felt, and is even now feeling the uplift of the temperance cause. Victims of dissipation, of whom Hogarth's "rake" was the prototype, are still abundant in every community; but they are no longer allowed to travel the inclined plane that leads to moral and physical ruin without a helping hand being stretched out to save them. State, municipal and local reform agencies are multiplied in these days, and are doing valorous battle for temperance. That ancient enemy of men, King Alcohol, is still potent for evil; he is still slaying his thousands every year, and breaking hearts and wrecking homes around the globe; but an enlightened civilization is winning back from him, foot by foot, the territory he has held so long under his hateful and blighting dominion.

In the twenty-eighth annual report of the National Temperance Society, just issued, there is a very instructive review of the progress of Temperance throughout the Union. Rhode Island, in 16 out of her 38 towns, is prohibition territory. New Hampshire, too, makes an increasingly strong showing for prohibition. Prohibition rules in 42 counties in Virginia. In Kansas it is saving annually $6,000,000 to the people, and in 44 counties in that State there is not a single pauper! North Carolina and Kentucky are still sadly under the alcoholic harrow; but Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Maryland, South Carolina and Tennessee have all reduced the number of their stills very materially, while Louisiana has but 2, and Florida only 1. In North Dakota, Wisconsin and Minnesota a hot battle between liquor and temperance is progressing. Vermont has local option in the towns and cities, and prohibition in the country districts. Indiana has 400 townships free from the saloon curse, and 150 other townships and city wards have declared their intention to eliminate the traffic. Mississippi has local prohibition in 63 of her 75 counties. Half of Connecticut is "no license." Iowa has now a law, under which hundreds of alcoholic victims are put under restraint. "No license" is steadily gaining ground in Texas; a majority of the counties are Prohibition, and nearly half the State is wholly "dry." In some States, like New York, Pennsylvania and Illinois, the battle is being fiercely waged, but the traffic is still stoutly entrenched, and the day of redemption seems yet a long way off.

All over the globe the same conflict is raging, and though the battle is fierce and the legions of drink are fighting with demoniac frenzy, they are losing ground everywhere. A Christian civilization is strong drink's deadliest foe. As education advances and the people of a nation are enlightened as to the causes that produce human misery or happiness, they struggle to break away from the ancient thraldom that has bound dow the world so long in poverty and ignorance. Tal away drink and you remove the cause of three-fourth of the world's crime, misery and suffering.

Our churches need to be aroused to the extent ar importance of the present campaign against the drin evil. They need to feel more acutely their respon bility. They need to gird on their armor and take th field, not in the rear-guard, but in the van of the te perance hosts. The religion of Christ will make thousandfold more rapid advancement among a sob and prosperous people, than in a community whe drunkenness, misery and crime are permitted to flouris unhindered.

Autumn's Flags of Splendor

AND now they are waving again on hillslope, in va ley, by river and swamp and bayou, autumn banners of splendor. August saw those first gay flag on upland and lowland, golden-rod, sumac, aster, bloom ing, glowing, spangling, starring, covering waysid path, forgotten grave, high road and meadow, wit such color as the angels know how to mingle, and na ture keeps in reserve for her radiant autumn day Magnificent beyond words, grow the forests and copse the thickets and groves as September and Octobe come marching on. An army with banners indeec when oak, elm, maple, chestnut, apple, peach and pea put on the ripened richness of the year's fulfilment. T be alive in the atmosphere of an American autumn is t feel each moment a joy, to know the pulse of a hig exhilaration, to drink a brew that is beaded wit ecstasy.

The pageantry of the passing weeks will be a suc cession of delights. Spicy smells in the air, fruits ir gathered, fields reaped, the tremendous wealth of th great land in its garnered harvests calling for dail praise to our Heavenly Father. What more can we d than to join in the mighty chorus of winds, seas, woods and stars, ascribing glory, power, honor and dominio to Him who sits on the throne, and makes his footstoo so divinely beautiful.

WHAT THEY THINK OF IT

Dear Sirs:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of the Twentieth Century Encyclopedias, which arrived in good condi tion, and for which please accept my thanks. Am very much pleased with them, and they far exceed my expecta tions.

Again thanking you for same, and wishing you continuec success, I remain, Yours very truly, 331 Brandon Ave. E. L. ARTMAN.

Dear Sir:—The twelve volumes of the Twentieth Century World-Wide Encyclopedia received. They are far beyond my expectation in both quality and contents. I have given them quite a severe test, and find they contain subjects not found in other works. I am particularly pleased with the engravings of our statesmen, and find them up to date in all details. I thank you for supplying me with such a valuable work for so small an amount. I am,

Yours truly,

August 10, 1903. F. H. MARTIN.

* * *

The Scholar, the Student, the Professional Man, the Banker, the Merchant, the Mechanic, the Laborer, the Housekeeper, the Mother, the Wife, require Twentieth Century information. The ideas of the last decade will not apply to-day. Things have changed, progress has been made, and an encyclopedia of the Nineteenth Century is as antiquated in the Twentieth as the summer's fashions of 1880 differ from those of 1903.

The set requires shelf-room thirty-three inches long, ten and a-half inches high, and weighs over fifty pounds. This is your greatest opportunity. Embrace it to-day, for to-morrow may be too late. Money refunded if not entirely satisfied.

* * *

Please bear in mind that if you are not entirely pleased—yes, delighted—with this latest and fullest encyclopedia, you may return it within ten days and get your money back. We have only one set for every one hundred subscribers, and only one price to each and all, freight payable by purchaser:

$13 if paid by cash accompanying order.

$14 if paid $2 down and $2 a month for six months.

$15 if paid $1 down and $1 a month for fourteen months.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BOOK DEPARTMENT, Bible House, New York City.

THE BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

A French Subway Disaster

OVER eighty lives have been lost and many persons seriously injured, in a panic on the underground railroad in Paris. Though accounts of the disaster differ in details, the main facts are rly established. It appears that about seven o'clock e evening of August 10, a train passing from the hern district of the city, where the factories are, to eastern section where the workpeople live, was vily laden with passengers. An accident to the tric motor drawing the train, caused a car to take The passengers were ordered to leave it and wait the next train, which was nearly full before it ved. As many boarded it as could find room, and the second train proceeded to push the first before The two trains had gone about a quarter of a mile n the second train caught fire, and the electric lights he tunnel went out. The passengers hurriedly deended from the cars, and tried to walk back to the ion. The tunnel was quite dark, except for the t from the burning cars. Many stumbled and fell, hers were prostrated by uching the live rail, and the mainder reached the staon, only to find the platform owded with passengers who d bought tickets for their meward journey.

EXIT FROM STATION

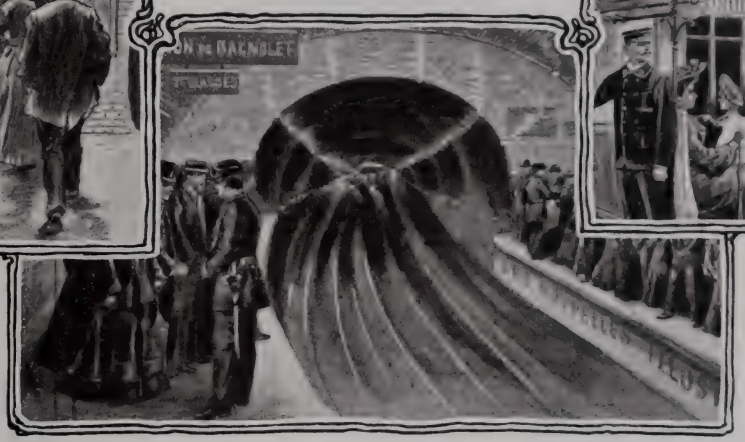
In this crisis, a third heavily den train dashed up, and arning of the wreck ahead sgorged its passengers on e already crowded platform. he only exit to the street was a steep stone stairway. oward this the dense crowd surged until the entrance as choked with a dense mass of struggling humanity. s at the fire in the bazaar in Paris some years ago, hen French aristocrats beat women down with their icks to clear a passage for themselves to the street, so this stairway the Frenchmen showed their characristic brutality. Women and children were thrown own, and the men trampled on them heedlessly in their forts to make their escape. One child, a pretty little rl with her doll in her arms, was trodden so heavily at the finders were not sure at first whether her body as that of a child or an animal. One woman, still olding two children by the hand was battered, and her others torn from her back.

In the meantime the station was filled with the smoke om the burning cars, and there being little ventilation, sphyxiation soon added to the horrors, and doubtless ercifully ended the suffering of some of the tortured nd downtrodden women. The burning cars made the nnel so hot that it was after midnight before the rench firemen ventured into it to remove the dead. hen they found bodies on the tracks and on the station latform in heaps. Most of the railroad officials had ade good their escape, as had several soldiers and alwart workmen. The bodies were chiefly those of omen and children and the weaker men. There had vidently been a typical French panic, in which every ne sought safety for himself without regard for anyne else. It was on the platform of the station that the largest number of deaths occurred, and all these might have saved their lives if they had not made so desperate a struggle by which they choked the stairway with prostrate bodies. In physical life as in the spiritual life Christ's principle applies:

Whosoever would save his life shall lose it: but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it (Luke 9: 24).



PART OF THE PARIS TUNNEL IN WHICH THE DISASTER OCCURRED

INTERIOR OF CAR

Accidental Imprisonment

The secretary of a philanthropic society in New York had an amusing experience in the Morrisania courthouse recently. He had been prosecuting a case in the court, and at its conclusion was about to go home, when he was told that the president of the society wished to speak with him over the telephone. He went to the telephone booth, which was in a rear room, and answered the call. The noise of so many people leaving the court disturbed the conversation, so he turned and pulled the door of the booth close. It shut with a snap and in quiet the two officials finished their talk. The secretary then discovered that he was a prisoner. The inside handle had been removed from the lock on the door during some repairs and he had no way of opening it. He struggled hard and rapped on the glass, but the noise he made was not heard by the retreating passers-by. He grew alarmed at last, as the air in the booth became vitiated and as no one was likely to use the phone before the next morning. It occurred to him then to use the telephone to effect his escape. He called up police headquarters, several miles away, and asked the sergeant in charge to send to the officer in the police office on the floor below to let him out. The sergeant complied, and a policeman in the next room to the imprisoned man, obeying the order from headquarters, entered and released him. The significant fact about it was that his deliverance came not by the direct appeals to the people near him, but by an appeal to an authority several miles away. How often has the deliverance of a soul come in like way! As in the case of the centurion to whom Peter was sent, many a man has found help in answer to prayer:

Arise, therefore, and get thee down and go with them for I have sent them (Acts 10: 20).

A Thrilling Rescue

One of New York's gallant firemen saved the life of a working girl on August 14 by a skilful expedient. She was on the sixth floor of a factory in Centre street when a fire broke out on the first story. The elevator shaft, the stairways and the passage to the roof, which the other employees had made use of in escaping, were choked with blinding smoke and flame before the girl, who had been busy in a rear room, realized her danger. Finding every avenue to safety closed against her, she opened a window and stepped out on the sill. The smoke followed in a dense gust through the opened window, and made her dizzy and almost suffocated her. She stooped down and clung with her hands to the sill, with a clear drop of six stories below her, to the areaway below. She screamed for help, and a fireman who was on the fifth floor, heard her. Looking up through a window he saw her peril, and called to her to look on. He settled himself firmly astride the window, having his hands and arms free. Measuring the distance with his eye, and seeing that the girl's strength was failing, he bade her let go. One glance downward at the fireman's extended arms, encircled her. She loosed the ledge and fell into the fireman's arms, which held her tight. The weight and shock of her fall nearly overbalanced the man, but not quite. He held her, and carried her through the window, and so by the fire escape in the front to the sidewalk, where a crowd which had witnessed his deed of daring chanted the most fulsome praise in his praise. What confidence that woman must have had in the fireman's strength and skill to have let go her hold on the sill—for if he had failed to catch and hold her, she must have known she would have been dashed to pieces. Ministers and Christian workers have often a difficult task to persuading souls cannot un working out their own salvation, to put such trust in Christ

To him that worketh not, but believeth on Him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness (Rom. 4: 5).

An Unanswered Love Letter

In a cable message to the New York Herald from its correspondent in England, comes a curious explanation of a mystery which had affected the lives of two families. More than half a century ago, a young Englishman traveling in this country fell in love with a beautiful girl. He wrote her an impassioned letter declaring his affection, and saying that if she returned it he would hope for a speedy answer. If she rejected his proposal he would understand it by her not replying. To this letter he received no answer, and so disappointed was he that from that time until his death, which occurred recently, he shut himself up in his home refusing to pay or receive any visits, and lived like a hermit. Most of his time was spent in reading, and the day after his funeral the heirs began to search the books in his library, for they thought it quite possible that the eccentric old man might have hidden some bank notes in them. They found none, but in a tattered old pamphlet they found another kind of note, the love letter which was written fifty years ago, and which the writer in his agitation had omitted to mail. How thankful we ought to be that our desires and petitions to God cannot fail, through any such inadvertence of our own!

Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of before ye ask him (Matt. 6: 8).

BRIEF NOTES

Our readers will be gratified to learn that a European sovereign has graciously proposed to confer a decoration on the proprietor of this journal, in recognition of his services in the cause of the famine-stricken and afflicted people in many lands. While Dr. Klopsch fully appreciates the honor his Majesty intended to confer, and is well aware that such decorations are highly esteemed in Europe, he has felt it necessary, as an American citizen, to decline the offer, especially as the services he was able to render in the cause of humanity were rendered possible only by the liberality of the readers of this journal, to whom the honor properly belongs.

The university at Foggia Bay, Santa Lucca, is said to be the smallest in the world. A few years ago it had but twelve students and five professors.

The YOUNG MAN'S STRUGGLE

Qualities that Help to Win Success, and Defects that Hinder It

By DR. O. S. MARDEN

TWENTY years ago, five boys entered the employment of a great firm. One, while doing his work fairly well, seemed satisfied with his place, and refused to take time from pleasure for study to gain promotion. The other four studied, and in odd moments of working time learned about other branches of their business. The first boy is still a driver in the employ of the same firm, earning eleven dollars a week. Of the other four, two are in business for themselves, and two have risen to positions of importance with the firm they began work for. It was not luck that made the difference between the driver who remained a driver, and those who got to be something better. It lay within the personal power of those boys to rise or to stay at the bottom of the ladder.

The causes of success that lie within oneself are infinite in number, for every good quality and its every shade has a hand in it. Each successful man will lay stress more on one quality than on another. In each success, a different element stands out more distinctly than the others. However, some general truths stand out from a consideration of these many opinions, and if one may not follow all the advice, enough of it is essential to make noting it useful.

* * *

"THE longer I live," said Sir Folwell Buxton, "the more deeply am I convinced that that which makes the difference between one man and another—between the weak and the powerful, the great and the insignificant, is energy — a purpose once formed, and then—death or victory!"

Dr. Scott F. Hershey says the difference between the unsuccessful and the successful man is that the latter "wins his way with men," knows how to impress and influence rightly those with whom he deals. Undoubtedly, many can ascribe their success to their winning manners and tact. That was one of the prominent traits of the late President McKinley. Contrary examples can, however, easily be found, where something else counteracted and made up for lack of this quality.

* * *

WE must strive after accuracy as we would after wisdom, or hidden treasures or anything we would attain. Determine to form exact business habits. Avoid slipshod methods as you would the plague. Careless and indifferent habits bring ultimate ruin. Nearly every very successful man is accurate and painstaking. Accuracy means character and character means power.

Most recipes for success can be boiled down to this: Intelligent hard work. Yet thousands of men who have failed in life, have done drudgery enough in half-a-dozen different occupations to enable them to attain marked success had their energy been expended in one direction. Comparatively few have the power of holding on, persisting in one thing, until they bring it to a successful issue.

Persistency is characteristic of all who have accomplished anything great. They may lack in some other particular, but not in this. Persistency makes others believe in you. The man with small ability will succeed if he has persistence, where a genius without would fail.

"WHO first consults wisely, then resolves firmly, and then executes his purpose with inflexible perseverance, undismayed by those petty trifles which daunt a weaker spirit—that man can advance to eminence in any line," said William Wirt. Enthusiasm, and an absorbing interest, are great aids to persistency, and are too often coupled with inconstancy. Enthusiasm as a motor for firm resolve, will push a man to any height. "Experience shows," said Charles Buxton, "that success is due less to ability than to zeal. The winner is he who gives himself to his work—who gives himself body and soul."

It is solid faith in one's mission that marks the heroic spirit, that leads an Agassiz to the Amazon, a Pliny to Vesuvius. Vernet's enthusiasm set him to sketching even the waves that threatened to engulf him. It was enthusiasm that sent Phil Sheridan dashing down the Shenandoah valley; that held Edison for months to the task of making his crude phonograph repeat the letter "s"; that sent Fulton's Folly up the Hudson. The contagious zeal of an old man, Peter the Hermit, rolled the Christian chivalry against the Moslem hordes.

DR. O. S. MARDEN

Indeed, what has enthusiasm not accomplished? It has painted the great pictures, written the great books, inspired the great poems, performed the great engineering feats, built the great bridges, tunneled mountains and built cities. It has founded colleges and universities, built hospitals and asylums, founded newspapers, and invented the machines that almost think.

* * *

NO young man to-day can succeed to any great extent, who is not enthusiastic in his business or occupation. If you have no enthusiasm about your business and do not inspire it in your clerks or employees, you will not make your business go. Everybody admires enthusiasm, and likes to deal with a man who is enthusiastic in his work or business. No one likes to go into a store where everybody seems indifferent, and where the proprietor goes about his place of business as if he were out of place.

What the world wants to-day is young men, like Grant, who "propose to move immediately upon the enemy," and to "fight it out upon this line if it takes all summer;" young men who can devote themselves to one purpose, one unwavering aim, with an exclusiveness of application, a firmness of attachment to the occupation or profession which will make them forget, for the time being, that any other career could possibly be desirable.

There is bread and success for every youth under the American flag who has energy and ability enough to seize his opportunity. Give a boy good health and the alphabet, and it rests with him what the future shall be. Those who wait for luck and legacies never amount to much. Who ever knew of a man becoming wise or good by luck? Those who have failed in life usually believe in luck, fate or destiny. They will cite numerous examples of men who made "lucky hits," or who have been "lucky dogs."

"No," said James Whitcomb Riley in an interview, "fortune does not happen. It may seem to come all at once, but has been arriving for years. Kipling, at the age of about twenty-two, blazed out upon the world, and men gazed and wondered. Then it was discovered that in far-away India, Kipling, from early boyhood, had been drudging, dreaming, yearning, hoping, groping in the dark, unseen, unknown, at his literary tasks. Ay, he blazed out, but the fires had smouldered in his heart, and with sweat of brow and grimy face, diligently, patiently had he fed them."

* * *

IN the present organization of affairs, the large view of things counts more than the small. The man who can do the essentials, block out the great projects and set others to carrying out the details, is most apt to rise to prominence. This trait stood Theodore Roosevelt in good stead when he was getting his "rough riders" equipped, and the incident had possibly a determining bearing on his subsequent career. The first regiment of cowboy warriors recruited was Colonel Griggsby's. If he had had Roosevelt's knack of doing the important thing, he would have gone to Cuba, and Roosevelt would perhaps never have been a Cuban war hero. Colonel Griggsby attended personally to the recruiting and organization of his regiment. When he came on to Washington to arrange for arming his men, he found only old-style army rifles on hand. They were sent to Atlanta, where the regiment was, and the men were so disappointed that the colonel returned to Washington and arranged to exchange the old-style rifles for the first Krag-Jorgensens that could be turned out.

Roosevelt had remained in Washington while his subordinates recruited his regiment, and thus secured the only available Krag-Jorgensens before Griggsby arrived the first time. The Roosevelt regiment was thus the first in the field, though Griggsby's was the first recruited. It was the only rough rider regiment sent to Cuba.

* * *

A MAN who would succeed in the Twentieth Century, must keep his body in such condition that his mind will be able to sustain the high pressure of an intense civilization. Health is an essential requirement for those who would succeed. Many a youth wrecks his future by imprudence in his preparatory stage. The much-discussed problem of education, how much or how little, is pretty well summ up in the reply of a successful man to R Charles Townsend. He said: "While so men have been very successful with very tle education, the best average results doubtless obtained by means of a liberal e cation with special preparation for special c ings. Practical experience, accompanied w proper mental training, brings better resu than either alone."

In the great race of life, common sense h the right of way. Wealth, a diploma, a pe gree, talent, genius, without tact and comm sense, cut but a small figure. The incapab and the impracticables, though loaded w diplomas and degrees, are left behind. N what do you know, but what can you do, is t interrogation of the century. Professor Stow definition of common sense comes near bei the universal formula for success: "Ability see things as they are, and the knack of doi things as they ought to be done."

* * *

"THERE is always a way," said Gene Thomas T. Eckert, ex-President of t Western Union Telegraph Company. "Ma a study of men, especially self-made men. fool never went to bed to wake and find hi self famous. Be thrifty, but not parsimoniou charitable, but just. Make your word as go as your bond, and both above par."

General Eckert's successor as head of t Western Union, Colonel Robert C. Clow bears out the truth of the above declaratic His rise from a messenger to his prese position is a good example of the possibiliti that lie before every American boy.

* * *

AMONG the successful must be number not only the famous, the rich, the we known and much-advertised people, but t far greater number who are, perhaps, n known outside their counties, but who a prosperous in their life-work, happy in th family relations, and useful to the communi about them. Knowledge, industry, energ tact, and all their sister qualities were use only ambition was not so over-masterin enterprise stopped short of gigantic scheme quiet tastes preferred a narrow circle to wider and more troubled life.

The only success worthy of the name is th which comes from a consciousness of growi wider, deeper, higher in mental and mor power as the years go on. To feel the faculti expanding and unfolding, to feel the leaven truth permeating the whole being—this is th only life worth living.

"Talent helps a man to obtain success says Max O'Rell, "but it is character whic secures it for him. A man will succeed wi character and very little talent, and will nev succeed without character, whatever talent h may have at his disposal. By character mean honesty, steadiness of purpose, tac perseverance, industry, sobriety, self-contro reliability and strict punctuality."

At a reception given by the town Danvers to its grand former citizen, Geor Peabody, he said, "Bear in mind that to t truly great it is not necessary that you ga wealth and importance. Steadfast and und viating truth, fearless and straightforwa integrity, and an honor never unsullied by a unworthy word or action, make their po sessor greater than worldly success or pro perity. These qualities constitute greatness

THE CALL OF MOSES*

A Duty of Extraordinary Difficulty Demanding Faith and Courage

WHY was it that God did not deliver the people of Israel from their Egyptian oppressors himself? He said: "I am come down to deliver them." Yet he calls Moses to the task. That is how God has always worked in dealing with our race. He appoints a mediator. There must be someone to become the channel of communication. The only time that God did communicate directly with the people they were afraid, and begged that the experience might not be repeated. So he has been sending his servants with his messages, and even to this day, it is by human agency that his Gospel is preached. It is God who delivers men from sin, but the message of salvation is proclaimed by human lips. We know not why it is so. Sufficient for us, is the fact that it is God's method of working.

We are not surprised that Moses shrank from the task to which God called him. It was a bold demand that Moses was required to make. More than six hundred men were toiling on the buildings, relieving Egyptians of labor, and relieving the Egyptian treasury of all payments for wages. To demand the emancipation of all those slaves, was to arouse the indignation and animosity of Pharaoh and his people. We know how our own abolitionists were treated. That Moses went at all on the errand is a striking proof of his trust in God.

Moses has left every Christian a marvelous example of faith. How many a man shocked by the power of evil in a community has been moved to denounce and destroy it. The voice of God has been heard in his soul, but the task seems too great. The very victims, like the Hebrew slaves, oppose him and entreat to be left alone. Yet we have had reformers. Some, too, like Moses, die before the mission is performed, but of this we are sure, that though the worker die, the work will be done.

*Topic of the Epworth League for Sept. 6. Ex. 3: 1-12.

RELIGIOUS CO-OPERATION

The Duty of Effecting an Alliance of the Forces of Righteousness

HOW long it is since Christ offered his pathetic prayer for his followers, that they all might be one, and yet his desire is not even yet fulfilled. Acknowledging the same Lord, professing the same object, looking forward to the same eternal home, they have been rivals and too often enemies rather than allies. Infinitesimal differences of dogma and of church government have been suffered to divide them and keep them apart. Even now, when a basis has been found on which a large number of churches could co-operate, there is a reluctance in many communions to associate with others in Christian work. No attempt has been made to induce a church to surrender its principles or its individuality, but only to combine with other churches in efforts for the extension of Christ's kingdom.

Some years ago a public speaker pr sented this disunion in a vivid light. H said, in effect: Suppose one of our munic palities should return to Paganism, an restore the old deities and their abomi able worship. Suppose that they decree that on a certain day a young woma should be offered in sacrifice to Venus an that a young man should be sacrificed t Bacchus. In the interval between the pas ing of the decree and the day set for th sacrifice, what an effort there would be o the part of good citizens to save those tw victims! Every church, every public-spiri ed society and all good men would com together to memorialize Congress, to ap peal to the courts, to enter a united protes and there would be a combined movemen to prevent the outrage. Yet the churche know that many girls are daily losing thei souls; many young men are daily bein sacrificed to the demon of drink, and n such combined effort is being made to sav them. Miserable disputes over trifles kee the churches apart—each goes its own way neglecting all the advantages which com from alliance and combined operation.

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society and Baptist Young People's Union for September 6, John 17: 20-23; I. Cor. 1: 10-13.

What is Woman's Natural Sphere?

A Problem in the Solution of which all "Christian Herald" Readers are Cordially Invited to Aid

IS the average American Young Woman undergoing an evolution, which is taking her out of her natural and proper sphere? Is the change in feminine education, training and choice of vocation an advantage, or the reverse, to the sex, to society and to the nation, as a whole? These questions constitute one of the most important problems of the present day. Young women are entering into many fields formerly occupied exclusively by men. In proportion as they do so, the home life and domestic training, with much, if not all of the preparation for wifehood and motherhood, are necessarily neglected. The gentle art of housewifery is in danger of becoming a "lost art" in America. Work that is inseparable from the Home is coming to be regarded as drudgery, and is relegated to paid help.

Society's foundation pillars are the Home. Upon the character of its Home life, the stability of a nation largely depends. Everything that concerns it is worth while; its slightest detail should be invested with dignity. Any development which would transform this Home life into something else, or which would detract from the dignity of Home occupations, cannot be regarded with indifference.

Mrs. Frederic Cunningham, Jr., a Boston lady, addressing an audience of working girls and their friends in that city, recently, discussed this new development. She said:

"That our educational system, as applied to girls and young women, is not altogether satisfactory, is well agreed; in fact, in certain ways, it fails lamentably. If it were possible to put the finger on the sore spot, it would soon receive radical treatment, but the trouble cannot be laid simply to the school, nor to the home.

"In order that a training for the line of life which each individual must lead, shall be assured, school and home must co-operate. There is no training comparable to that of the home, where the mother governs well her family, supplemented by the public school. But suppose the mother does not bring up her children well, then the school has to bear the whole training, a task which it was not planned to perform. One of the results of this one-sided training is the dislike of our girls for the natural occupations of women, and an inculcation of the love of pursuits which take them out into the world.

"How short-sighted is this policy, even from the girls' point of view! For what is the real and natural anticipation of the true young woman! It should be marriage and motherhood. The girl may be lovable, and have the making of a fine woman; but she has had no education fitting her for married life. She has been busy earning a living since she left school.

"We are perceiving our mistakes, but it takes time to rectify them and overcome prejudices. Perhaps we must look to the higher educational institutions to lead the way, for the American girl is nothing if not ambitious, and quick to catch the sentiment of those to whom she looks up. It is this spirit which makes her what she is—ever alert and desirous to raise herself.

"The varied work of the household, in family life, is the most natural and practical training that a girl can have. That this training should have fallen into contempt is one of the greatest losses to womanhood. What amount of mere book-learning can ever compensate for it? When we picture to ourselves our ideal woman, is she one who is seen about town and who can excel a man at his own work? It is rather the woman who can do things in her own sphere: who can make her home life happy and pure and simple. 'But,' you say, 'so many women must earn a living, and they cannot do it at home.' This has been unfortunately true. There are, however, indications of a coming change. The growth of the arts and crafts idea, which is spreading in the country as well as in the city, is one of them. Manual labor is being appreciated. No one can do their best work unless they love it, and how can one love and strive to put that best into a work which they know will be but temporary, if the desire of the heart is fulfilled—I mean marriage and a home of one's own. Because a woman has a divided aim when she engages in a business, her services are not as valuable as a man's. Business is not going to be her life's work unless she is willing to acknowledge that she is an 'old maid.'

"There is one department of life which is woman's especial province, but in this country at least she has chosen to discard it as beneath her capabilities. That is, the house and family, and the industries and employments growing out of them.

"In talking with the graduates of our grammar schools, how many do we find who have any idea of staying at home to 'help mother,' or make themselves adepts in any department pertaining to the house, in spite of its great value to an all-round woman, as the probable wife and provider for a family?

"It must be confessed the conditions of domestic service have not been such as to attract her; in fact, they have repelled her. There must be reasons for such an universal abhorrence of domestic work.

"With a stupid conservatism, old customs have been retained, which make it well nigh impossible for the girl brought up under the education given in our public schools, to be willing to work under them. Education and employment must fit in together. The time has passed when the idea of providing for the family wants entirely from the inside of the establishment is considered the correct and only way. Let us frankly acknowledge it, and set about adjusting ourselves to changed conditions. In the first place, the hours of household labor must be definite. Again, much of the service must come from the outside. When the relation between mistress and maid is fixed in justice to both, there will come that closer tie between the two, so rare of late years—when the one honors the other for her ready sympathy, consideration, patience and help, and in return is valued for her devotion, willing service, and discretion in family affairs. It is a relationship in which the money consideration will be but a part.

"Let us hasten to disabuse ourselves of the idea that housework is degrading. It is a great educator, and one much needed to-day. Let the rich and independent see to it that their daughters do not miss it, but that it shall be one of their accomplishments. It would be a leaven to purge society of many ills arising from a sluggish conscience and a full purse.

"The seed of common-sense is growing. We have in Boston a course covering a year's time in 'Home Making,' which is designed to teach young girls the principles necessary for the good government of the family. We have also a new business company which works on an original plan, instructing women in housework, engaging and paying them for all their time, five-eight hours a week, and subletting it to one household.

"By this new plan a woman keeps her independence, returning at night to her own room, which she hires of the company in their central house, and doing her housework as a business, in which, too, there is a constant chance to rise and receive better pay. There is a wide field here which waits only for the clever and educated woman to advance and occupy with profit to herself, by filling wants which society hardly dares to own, because it has felt them so far from being realized."

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD invites from its readers a frank and general expression of opinion on this most interesting letter. Let those who write to us confine themselves to these two points:

1. Is the present system of educating girls for business careers, considered broadly, an advantage or otherwise, and why?
2. If the home life be the ideal vocation for woman, what is needed to make it more attractive and congenial to American girls than it is at present?

Answers should not exceed 100 words. Address "Home Problem," THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, New York.

.... A Great Baby Festival Beside the Sea ....

AN ORNAMENTAL "FLOAT" IN THE BABY PARADE

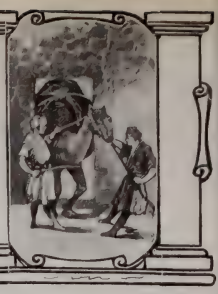
A CELEBRATION which has become one of the most notable of the summer season, is the August "Baby Parade," at Asbury Park and Ocean Grove. The idea has become so popular, that hundreds of infants now take part, and the unique procession is sometimes witnessed by a throng of no less than 50,000 people. Attired in becoming frocks, or in fanciful dress, the infants are trundled up and down the beach front promenade, in baby carriages and ornamental floats, decorated with flowers and ribbons. The promenade is reserved for them, and for the proud mothers who usually accompany them. The little occupants of the carriages are liberally applauded by the spectators. The parade this year takes the form of a summer carnival, a queen being selected to preside at the exercises. In a gaily decorated pavilion, she is attended by her maids of honor and distributes the prizes awarded by the judges for the most artistically ornamented carriage, the most unique design in floats, and for the prettiest infant. Some of the designs are very elaborate, representing scenes in mythology, temples, and chariots.

ONE OF THE FLOWER-DECKED LITTLE CARRIAGES

THE NARROW GATE

by REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON, D.D.

Author of "IN HIS STEPS,"



CHAPTER IV.—Continued

DOUGLAS went back to the office after this talk, with his soul aflame to do with the Beacon all that could be done for the cause of human rights.

As the weeks went on, and September came, various events plunged Douglas into experiences that kept his life in a whirl of excitement and change, and his entrance into life through the Narrow Gate was signalized more than once by the mental and moral struggle that tried his growing young manhood to the extreme limit of endurance.

Among the experiences that made the year memorable to him, was his responsibility for Quits.

For two weeks, Quits worked on the Beacon steadily. Douglas took him to Mrs. Wycoff's, secured him another suit of clothes, and kept constant watch of him. At the end of the two weeks, Quits began to exhibit signs of restlessness. Douglas knew he was thinking of the saloons, and talked with him about it.

"I can't stand it much longer, Mr. Douglas. This morning when we went by Jake's place, I most broke away. I know you're watching me. That's all right. But you can't keep me in sight always. Tell you what I wish you would do. Get a chain, and tie me to the press while I'm in the office. Then you'll know where I am."

He said it firmly, without a suspicion of a smile. If Douglas had taken him at his word, he would probably have felt relieved. But Douglas, not knowing what he had undertaken to do, determined, that if it lay in his power, Quits should not enter a saloon or get a drink.

But it was a physical impossibility to watch Quits day and night, and when the trial came off the second week in September, Douglas, as the principal witness for the State, was obliged to be absent from the office for the larger part of three days. During all that time, however, greatly to the relief of Douglas, Quits kept steadily at work and there was a good prospect of getting out the paper as usual.

When the trial closed at the end of the third day Douglas left the court-room completely worn out by the strain. Mr. Vernon's predictions as to the line of defence on the part of Rider's lawyer's was exactly true. They entered a plea of self-defence, and one of the country's famous criminal lawyers spoke for three hours, moving the jury to tears with his eloquent appeal for the acquittal of the prisoner.

The jury went out and the court waited for its verdict. Douglas anticipating what it would be went over to the office. It was then about six.

The moment he entered, he knew from the boy's looks that Quits was gone.

"I couldn't keep him," George wailed. "I tried to get word to you, but nobody could get near the court-house door, there was such a jam."

"Which way did he go?" asked Douglas.

"Up to the Wayside."

Douglas instantly started out. As he went up the street, he heard cheering over toward the court-house. Someone overtook him.

"Heard the verdict? Rider's acquitted. The jury was out only ten minutes. That speech did the business. My! But wasn't it great!"

"Great, indeed," Douglas thought, as he hurried on. Every saloon man in Colby would hold jubilation to-night. The jury was impaneled by the county attorney. They were twelve "tried men and true," according to the law, yet Douglas clenched his hands as he called up that double row of men, and saw faces there that he had seen in the saloons, habitual frequenters, on that night when the shooting occurred. Mr. Vernon's prophecy seemed to be coming true. Would the county go for license also? His heart sank as he went on, borne down by the sense of sin's great load, and of evil's great power.

When Douglas entered the Wayside Inn, an excited crowd was lined up at the bar drinking Rider's health. Quits was not there. Douglas satisfied himself of that fact, and went out to the other saloons, but did not find him. Then, impelled by some strange impulse, he went over to his little room at his boarding place, and found Quits dead drunk on the bed.

When Quits recovered from his drunk next morning he was sick for three days. Douglas nursed him, but said not one word. At the end of the last day Quits went down on his knees, and with groans, and tears, and unearthly cries, begged Douglas to go out and get him a bottle of whiskey. Douglas locked the door, asked Mrs. Wycoff to watch the windows, and went out to get Mr. Vernon.

The minister came, and for two hours prayed and worked over Quits, who raved and cursed like a lost soul. At the end of that time he became quiet, and before Mr. Vernon went away he had fallen asleep.

He slept for twelve hours, and when he awoke he asked to see Mr. Vernon again.

When the minister came, Quits said, while his face expressed unutterable longing: "Mr. Vernon, do you believe Jesus Christ can save a man like me?"

"He is able to save to the uttermost, brother."

"But I'm too far gone."

"'He came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance.' Whosoever will may come."

"But nothing can save me from the power of drink! When I go by the saloons it seems as if all the imps of hell were reaching after me."

"But listen to what Jesus says, my brother, 'My sheep hear My voice and they follow Me, and I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish, and no one shall snatch them out of my hand. My Father who has given them unto me, is greater than all, and no one is able to snatch them out of the Father's hand.' Do you believe that? Do you believe Jesus spoke the truth?"

"Yes, yes," replied Quits, while his face worked convulsively. "But do you really think he can keep me? Me, Mr. Vernon?"

"'Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest.' 'The Lord is not slack concerning his promises as some men count slackness, but is long suffering to usward, not wishing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance.' The Lord has saved greater sinners than you. Why cannot he save you?"

"Then you really think he can?"

"I know it. There is no limit to his forgiving power."

Quits put his face in his hands. The tears ran down his cheeks.

"Pray for me, Mr. Vernon!" he sobbed.

"I'll pray with you, brother;" Mr. Vernon answered gently.

When he was half through a prayer of great tenderness, Quits got down on his knees; Vernon went over beside him, putting an arm over his shoulder. Quits gradually grew quiet. After a silence, he said, "Mr. Vernon, I believe."

Vernon thanked God. Then he took Quits by the hand. The tramp printer was really a new creature. As the days and weeks went by, and Douglas hardly dared to believe in the wonderful event, Quits gave evidence of a sound conversion, which even George regarded with awed astonishment. It was the repetition of the world-old miracle, next to the resurrection the greatest miracle that the world will ever know. The saloon reached out its greedy fingers after Quits as before, but by the grace of God he had overcome. His whole soul was now stirred to save the men and boys who were in the hell from which he himself had just escaped.

All that is a story which Douglas must himself tell, sometime. Meanwhile, Quits proved a blessing to the Beacon, which was making good friends and enemies with each successive edition.

With the opening of school term in Colby, came Esther Harris, to begin her term with the High School, and to delight Mr. and Mrs. Edwards with her glad, earnest, wholesome enthusiasm. What more natural than they should invite Douglas to come and take tea, and meet his old college classmate? And what more natural than for that to happen which, perhaps, had already happened as far as Douglas was concerned. At any rate, as the fall months came on, and the eventful election drew near, Douglas knew very well that Esther Harris was oftener in his thoughts than anyone or anything else. He tried to forget her in the work of the paper. It was a critical period with him. The dropping of the medicine ads, together with the loss of several other local merchants' displays that the Bartlett organ had captured, had brought him face to face with a real crisis. It was becoming a serious question with him, whether he could make the Beacon pay expenses. The party paper appealed to partisan prejudices of many years standing. Many persons who had subscribed for the Beacon had not paid, and Douglas feared to push them, for fear of losing them altogether.

The election that was now so near, contained issues that appealed to every interest of righteous enthusiasm in him, and his spirit rose many times a day to meet the opportunities those issues presented. And yet, in spite of all this, which should have absorbed his life at this time, it is the truth that nothing could shut out the face of the new schoolma'am of the Colby High School. Even George detected the change that had come over the editor, and spoke of it to Quits.

"What's the matter with the old man? That last editorial had a piece of poetry in it that was as sweet as custard pie. But it looked to me as if he got it out of the wrong font. It had no more to do with the campaign than a panhandler has to do with a Sunday School class. Say, Quits! Do you suppose Mr. Douglas is in love with the new school-teacher? Isn't she pretty? She come in here the other day when you were out and brought some copy for a High School Debating Society programme. Mr. Douglas was awful polite and particular about it. He read the proof on it fifteen times or I'm a barnstormer. He's boarding up at Edward's now, almost, isn't he?"

Quits smiled gravely and said nothing, but George kept his own counsel while he read the editorials in the Beacon with continued suspicion, and admired the new school-teacher at a distance, and in his heart wanted to tell Douglas that in his opinion, judging from the way the school-teacher looked at the editor when she brought in the copy, his chances were not so desperate as they might be. But being a somewhat wise boy in some directions, he kept silence during the development of that beautiful romance which had invaded the dingy office of the Beacon, and mingled the poesy of rhythm with the stern denunciations of the political reformer in the editorial columns.

When the election came, it found Anderson county divided between its allegiance to old party principles and the independent movement championed by the Beacon and by most of the churches. An attempt had been made to run an independent candidate for county attorney, but Douglas and the friends of reform had finally abandoned that, owing to the strong opposition, and the campaign had narrowed to the one issue of saloon or no saloon. On this issue it seemed to Douglas, Edwards, Vernon, Quits, and others, that all good citizens must unite; yet, as the election went on that November day, there were very many signs of victory for the other side.

"It will be close, I think," Edwards ventured to predict. "But I do not dare hope we can beat the machine. It's too well organized. The Mayor and his crowd have too much money. And it is the old story of party spirit degenerated into party slavery. Douglas has not had the Beacon long enough to make changes in political old-timers or create a new constituency from the young crowd."

Vernon agreed with Edwards. All three men went to the polls that day with a feeling of depression they could not throw off. Douglas had printed several thousand leaflets on the issue of the election, which he had distributed all over the town the day before. He had done his best, and had no apologies to make for the Beacon, but, like Mr. Vernon, he could not avoid a feeling of despair.

When the returns began to come in the result was at first in doubt. But towards morning, when the towns outside of Colby began to send in their returns, the three friends, who had stayed up to get the news, came away from the office knowing that the people of Anderson county and Colby had deliberately voted to license saloons for two years more. The machine and the saloon had joined hands and were victorious. Jake's place was double-lighted, and the Wayside and all the other places were crowded with men and boys, even at that early morning hour, carousing over the result.

"Come up to the house and get a lunch," said Edwards to Douglas and Vernon. "You come, too," he added, speaking to Quits, who had stayed with the others. "Mrs. Edwards and Esther have planned to have something for us, and you look specially fagged out." He spoke, and looked at Douglas, whose face was haggard and worn, with the strain not only of that one night's vigil but with the entire campaign.

So the men went up to the house, and found the two women waiting sympathetically. Mrs. Edwards took Douglas' two hands in her own.

"You poor boy!" she exclaimed, "I know how terribly disappointed you must be! But don't get discouraged; you did your duty. The Beacon has been a success in every way. The people seem ungrateful, but time will show different results. Don't you believe so, Mr. Vernon?"

The minister waited a moment. "Yes," he answered slowly. "This is not the end, it's only the beginning! Two years from now, if the Beacon isn't bankrupt, and if my church and the others do not drive us out, I predict another result. I haven't lost hope. But I think every Christian in America ought to get on his knees to pray and on his feet to work, that this government may go out of the saloon business; and I know God will not crown our labors with victory until the men of our churches have had a new Pentecost, which shall baptize them with the holy fire of consecration to the kingdom of God, before allegiance to any party claims their first attention."

TO BE CONTINUED NEXT WEEK

Copyright, 1903, by Charles M Sheldon.

Our Household Circle

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

LIFE'S SEAMY SIDE IN THE CITY

ONCE in a while the curtain that hides from the eyes of the comfortable and respectable portion of the community is blown aside by some wind of fate. Then we catch a glimpse of lurid depths, of infamy, wretchedness and want, by which Dante's Inferno palls. One August night, for instance, a woman twenty-five years old, houseless, homeless, steeped in sin and drowning her misery with ten cents worth of vile whisky, suddenly grew tired of it all, and threw herself from the roof of a six-story apartment house. She and another young woman of her own age, having no place to sleep, were in the habit of creeping into any vacant room or hole they could find, and there crouching, like hunted animals, until morning. Had Kate Walsh been the idolized daughter of a happy household, her headlong plunge into space from the roof six stories high would certainly have killed her. But she, poor creature, courting death, did not find it. She fell into a cistern, whence she was pulled out, bruised and with a broken ankle, but likely to live for many years.

Some of us have been reading a very vividly-written book about East London life. The Samaritans is an intense arraignment of modern Christianity, in that it permits the horrors of tenement life in the world's great metropolis, and no student of sociological problems can pass it by unread, or read it without feeling the clutch of a sob at his throat. "We have nothing so hideous on this side the ocean," said one who laid down The Samaritans, with a sigh. Have we not? Is New York, or Chicago, or St. Louis, or San Francisco free from its own plague-spots, which breed a ruin as terrible, a horror as black, as anything London can show? We have public schools, and churches, and institutions without number, settlements, rescue homes, and associations for the aid of every one, yet Kate Walsh, at twenty-five, lost to virtue, lost to purity, lost to hope, hungry, drunken, abandoned by God and man, flings herself from the top of a house, and curses her destiny, because she still has breath in her battered body. Civilization has, indeed, its seamy side.

The Salvation Army does what it can for such poor waifs, the flotsam and jetsam of life's shores; beneficent sisterhoods do what they can, and most of us fancy that we are doing all we ought when we are sorry. In extreme cases we slip our hands into our pockets and give something. But what can we do? The answer is, alas, very little. Seldom is a lost woman, lost as this poor soul, restored. To save the children is the obvious duty pressing on most of us. Save the child of four, of five, six, seven and ten years. Childhood can be redeemed. Little dark-eyed, curly-headed Kates and Maggies and Johnnies can be guided into the right path and kept there. Grown-up Kates and Maggies and Johns find their resort behind prison bars or in the engulfing waves of our deeply-flowing rivers.

* * *

MONT-LAWN, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S peerlessly beautiful home for children, all summer long has kept open house for the little folk who need saving. Coming from those wide doors, those white beds, that abundant table, that atmosphere of love and praise and prayer, the Mont-Lawn children are well started on the road to clean living. And the blessing of God must surely come in rich measure to the man whose big heart and loving sympathy have made Mont-Lawn so great an annual success.

Manliness in Boys

(Some weeks ago, in this department, we asked our readers to give their views on the subject of peaceful or warlike behavior in boys. Shall boys fight or not, was the question discussed. The following expression of opinion from a thoughtful friend of boys is worth considering with attention.)

MANLINESS IN BOYS.

Self-control is the most important thing to be taught a high-strung boy, for after all it is only an occasional wrong that can be righted by force, and there is always the possibility of committing a greater wrong when force is employed than one has received. Let the boy understand that true dignity of demeanor and a strong character go infinitely further in securing one's rights than any amount of bluster and brute force. It must also be taught that there is no resource but to endure many wrongs just as God patiently submitted to man's infringements of his laws and is ever willing to forgive. To the boy who studies history may be cited the fact that the Boers of South Africa inflicted upon themselves and the British people unspeakable wrong through their policy of resistance; while in contrast to their action may be noted the quiet submission of the Dutch of New York two hundred and fifty years ago, by which those people were assured a much greater degree of freedom and happiness than they would have enjoyed if otherwise unmolested.

* * *

The old idea that the more hard knocks a boy receives the greater will be his manliness of character ought to be combated, for it induces many a boy to thrust himself recklessly into situations where he has no right to go, and where he may expect only imposition and wrong. The author of Hypatia allows his hero to receive enough thumps and blows to have knocked half a dozen lives out of an ordinary young man. Besides, the boy who is thus instructed also imbibes the idea that what is fair for others is fair for himself, and so endeavors to give as much as he receives.

* * *

Let boys be taught the grandeur of mental and spiritual, as contrasted with physical achievement. Few men have the right ideas on this subject. Even a dog-fight, in which there is a display of physical energy, will attract a greater crowd of men than a debate between two mental giants engaged in the discussion of some weighty question. Boys should be taught that mere brute force is a despicable thing, and that the mental and spiritual are infinitely above it. The proper enforcement of the laws is a great object-lesson for boys. A drunken ruffian lately attacked a young minister for some fancied wrong, and was let off with a nominal fine. Boys who saw the inadequate character of the punishment were apt to think, "There is no resource in such cases but for a man to defend himself." Often the remark is made in certain communities: "The law doesn't amount to anything, a man must fight or be trodden under foot."

I believe our lax methods of administering justice are responsible for much wrong sentiment on this subject.

La Grange, N. C. L. T. RIGHTSELL.

SYMPATHY

Tired out, and not another step
The weary feet can take;
But here's a friend too faithful,
The wanderers to forsake;
And good old Lion's company,
Soothes many a lone heartache.

A Happy Thought

The invitations to a silver wedding in a Western town, recently, embodied this suggestive request, "Instead of personal gifts we kindly ask our friends for a free-will cash offering, which will be used for the purchase of much needed suitable library books for the Bible Schools of ——. Donors will receive a report of the offerings."

This original plan for providing something needed by and for the direct good of the community, had the merit of a rare unselfishness. It could have given offense to none, and very probably it resulted in a generous aggregate. As a happy thought we pass it along. Certainly such a plan would detract from the gayety of no social gathering.

SCARS

O wounds that were made without cause,
Or carelessly given, that were meant
To exert pain to no living heart!
Of hardening tones that left a smart—
May I atone Love cannot them, when
Love stoops to the grief of the sons of men.

Scars marring the heart's open face
Dashed with tears in the early grace
Of home and joy, scars branded deep
Where good and holy things would keep,—
And all for want of a moment's thought—
Christ pity the woe by such evil wrought!

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

To the Tired Housewife

In these summer days, it is the privilege of the tired housewife now and then to take a rest. Some good but weary arm, the capable hands of sister or daughter, and some fine day start to Cousin Mary or Aunt Ann, to a home she knew when she was a girl, or to a place that has the allurement of novelty. Wherever it may be, she will eat breakfasts and dinners that she does not cook, and not get worried. She will put on her best gown in the middle of a week afternoon and go out to tea. She will take drives, not to sell butter and eggs or to meet laundress at the train, but to see views from mountain side or river bank, to be refreshed and rejuvenated by recreation and a cessation of her every day routine.

May I speak a word by way of caution, dear, tired friend? Do not wear yourself out with preparations before you start. Freshen up the old gown with a bit of lace, or a white cording in the neck, just a little garniture that costs next to nothing—but make the old gown do. Women who half kill themselves to get their clothes ready for a summer outing, are equally successful when the question is of personally going away, they survey their wardrobes with discouraged eyes, for everything looks shabby if not rusty and threadbare. "What are they to do," they say, "if they are treated out while away from home?" What indeed? Why, cease to fancy that dress is of the first importance, and just go as they are. Love that love them will not see imperfections in clothing, and as for eyes that do not love them, they will survey with indifference the finest creations of the dressmaker. The fact is, that most of us think far too much about our clothes, and get far too weary over our sewing. The part of reason is, when we are fortunate enough to have an agreeable outing, to go just as we are, and, if any excuse, not to court nervous prostration by too elaborate preparations.

The tired housewife cannot always be spared from home. I have often thought what a kindness it would be in a neighbor or kinswoman, to step in and see not then for a week or a fortnight, assuming all the humdrum round of cooking, dish washing and scrubbing, while the mother and wife who has been so busy, goes away on a vacation. There is a field here for a sort of home missionary effort, and it is worth cultivation by those who long for an opportunity of usefulness. When a woman cannot leave her home, let her beware of the sin of overwork. There are always parts of the housekeeping that can be omitted. The table may be very simple, the weekly washing and ironing reduced to their lowest terms, and many little details ordinarily a pleasure, minimized for the moment. A lady told me the other day that she had put away for the season all her bric a brac, vases and small dust-collecting articles, and taken down every curtain that needed washing or ironing, leaving only shades that could be rolled to the top of the window and kept out of the way.

Let your boys help you if you have no girls, and even if they have sisters, do not forbid them to take a hand in the housework. They will be better husbands in days to come if they learn a little of what work is, by a fair experience. The tired housekeeper owes it to her family not to tire herself into her grave.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—EUNICE. Pretty belts are woven of linen shoestrings, washed and ironed at the end. A dozen long shoestrings are needed to make a belt.

—SAMUEL. The girl to whom you have been engaged sometime asks you to release her. You cannot complain, and succeed often end in this way.

—TERENCE. Too much candor is abhorrent to many people. It proves as ill-temper. Don't find fault or be captious about the opinions unnecessarily.

—MARY. Serve your scalloped fish in fresh cooking cups to those which cost only a few cents apiece. In these days a dollar must be daintily set at a trifling expense.

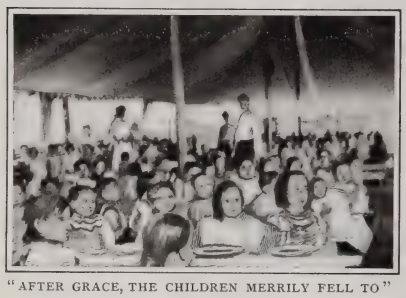
—MARY AGATHA. Needlework is very appropriate for Christmas. A mend is a story. The Bible and the Concordance books, whether they are new or second-hand, are valuable.

—LETTY. A simple dinner should have one entrée, fish, roast, salad, and dessert. Consult your mother about the soup, or you may find other courses to those I give more elaborate.

A VISITOR'S IMPRESSIONS of MONT-LAWN

"THE CHILDREN FORMED IN LINE"

"ROOMY DORMITORIES, WELL VENTILATED"



"AFTER GRACE, THE CHILDREN MERRILY FELL TO"

By Rev. G. E. Talmage

IT was my privilege to visit THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Children's Home on one of the Saturdays of August, in company with Dr. Klopsch, and the pleasant memories of the day will be lasting. "The half has not been told" of the kind provision that has been made, or of the good that is being done.

A few impressions may be in order. The first impression was made upon the eye, when we first caught sight of the large dining-tent nestling among the hills, and it continued to grow throughout the day with every new vision of the fields, and trees, and hills, and buildings. Memory does not dwarf it. It is enough to call it an ideal spot, ideally arranged for its purpose.

. . .

The second impression came to the ears, when a couple of hundred children shouted their welcome. There was no method in their madness; it was purely spontaneous, and the affection of the children for their congenial host was manifest all through the day. They followed him, they held his hand, they confided in him.

. . .

The third impression assailed the nostrils. It was the savory food. The children gathered at the sound of a gong, formed in line, marched into the tent, and, after singing grace, merrily fell to. The dinner was suitable, probably more than their home allowance, and quite likely served in a better manner, but of the same order—pot roast, boiled potatoes, hot gravy, stringed beans, rice pudding, bread and butter, and that without limit.

During dinner letters were distributed, some without surnames or signatures, other than "Mamma," but they all found their rightful owners.

. . .

The fourth impression was made upon the hygienic sense. Roomy dormitories, well ventilated, clean bedding, separate lockers, tasty lobbies, homelike teachers' rooms! The latest is the best, the new porter's lodge and dormitory combined must have a lasting effect upon all who are permitted to sleep under its roof.

The sense of fun was appealed to in the regular Saturday afternoon sports. This is the order of the day. Dr. Klopsch is resting himself by playing with his large family, and merrily they enter upon their races, and games, and swimming, while the hand-organ discourses East-side melodies.

The last impression is made by the faithful and loving service of the corps of teachers, who enter into the lives and hearts of their charges.

God bless the Children's Home and its promoter and supporters!

G. E. T.

"THEY MARCHED INTO THE BIG TENT"

"THE HOMELIKE TEACHERS' ROOMS"

"PLAYING WITH HIS LARGE FAMILY"

A touching incident came to the attention of the teachers at the Home last week, showing how pitiful are some of the straits to which the mothers of our little waifs are driven to provide the necessaries of life. A wee little lad, frailer than his companions, came to the Home. His arms and legs were so thin that it was thought best to keep him overtime, and see what plenty to eat and fresh air would do for him. He was kept as long as possible. Sometime after his arrival at Mont-Lawn he wrote home, telling his mother that his shoes were wearing out. Meantime, he was provided with a pair, and also with a new suit of clothes by the Home. On the day he left for home, a pair of shoes arrived from his mother. Housemother Collins then wrote to the mother, telling her she would keep the shoes, and send her the money instead, if it would be more satisfactory. The poor mother replied that she would be grateful for this favor. She had tried hard to get the shoes sooner, but had at last to resort to pawning her wedding-ring, in order to obtain them, and she would be so pleased if she could have it back again.

Every reader is invited to have a share in the Mont-Lawn work. $3 sends a tenement child to our Fresh-Air Home for ten days. Contributions should be addressed to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible Bible House, New York City.

PEGGY'S eyes were luminous and her breath came short and quick. The hot, dusty street seemed to fade away, and in its place Peggy saw a broad, green field, dotted with dasies and buttercups. Oh—if she could but go!

It was the ecstatic description of Nannie Simpson's, that had set Peggy's heart to beating with envious longings. Nannie had said that, miles and miles away from New York, there was a wonderful place with green grass, made to walk on, and with bright flowers made to pick. Nannie had been one of the fortunate children selected to be taken to Mont-Lawn, the summer before, and since then, she had not ceased to tell of the charms and wonders of the beautiful vacation Home.

Peggy knew that it was Nannie's Sunday School superintendent who had sent in her name for this delightful outing, and she knew that it was the kind contributions of many, many noble-hearted people, that had made possible for Nannie, and for others like Nannie, these ten days in the country. But just how to bring herself into this much-blessed circle she did not know. As for Nannie, she was interested, sympathetic, and resourceful.

"Why don't ye git some one ter send in your name?" she suggested.

Peggy slowly shook her head.

"Yer teacher, or some one," still persisted Nannie.

"There's—there's Miss Newcomb, my mission-teacher," began Peggy, hopefully; then a sudden red showed in her cheek; "but I—I hate ter ask!"

Nannie shrugged her bits of shoulders and tossed her head. "Hump!" she ejaculated. She was silent for a moment, then her face beamed. "Say, Peggy," she began, enthusiastically, "I'll tell ye what! It costed just three dollars for ev'ry one what went last summer—Maggie Dolan said so. She said how that folks—lots o' folks—good folks, ye know—sent money, jest so as poor folks, like us could go; an' say, Peggy, why don't ye earn 'em an' go yerself?"

"Oh Nannie, could I? Would they let me?"

"'Course," affirmed Nannie, airily, quite unaware that no child, or its parents, or its immediate friends, ever paid anything toward the Mont-Lawn outing; that all the money came from kind-hearted people the country over, who longed to give the poor little tenement dwellers a taste of God's blessed country air and sunshine.

"'Course they'd let ye," reiterated Nannie.

Peggy drew a long breath. "I — I'm agoin' to earn 'em, Nannie; I am—truly I am," she said, almost reverently.

For a blissful moment, the problem seemed to be solved; then the old woe returned to Peggy's heart as the magnitude of the task she had set for herself dawned upon her.

It was now December. She had perhaps six months in which to accomplish this thing. With a bit of brown paper and an old pencil stub she laboriously put the matter into plain figures. Peggy's schooling had been limited, and it was fully half an hour before she was able to write the final solution on a fresh bit of paper. It read:

"I got to earn 3 dolers in six months.

"I got to earn 50 sents ev'ry month.

"I got to earn 12 sents and half a sent ev'ry week."

That wasn't so bad, after all. Surely, she ought to be able to do that! Twelve cents and half a cent every week—that half-cent troubled Peggy a little. She finally dismissed it with the resolution to earn thirteen cents a week, and thus be sure to have enough.

When Peggy first told her mother of this wonderful plan to earn money for a Mont-Lawn outing, Mrs. Delano shook her head.

"Mebbe they won't let ye," she cautioned.

"Nannie said I could," declared Peggy.

"Well, mebbe, but——if they would, there ain't much show that you c'n git it, dearie."

"I know——it's an awful lot," acknowledged Peggy with a sigh.

"An' I——I can't help ye none," added the woman, a little catch in her voice.

"'Course not!" declared Peggy in sudden scorn. "Do ye s'pose I'd let yer, mumsie dear?"

Into Mrs. Delano's eyes came a flash of courage from her bygone youth, though she shook her head and said:

"But ye got ter git three dollars, dearie: just think——three whole dollars!"

Peggy's arms relaxed and her face fell.

"But I do wanter go so, mumsie. Jest

CONTINUED ON PAGE 719

49¢ MERCERIZED SILK WAIST AND 10¢ for POSTAGE

Our Fashion Catalogue No. 79 is now ready. MAILED FREE. Contains all the Newest Effects in Jackets, Capes, Suits, Skirts, Petticoats Waists and Furs

86440 Tastefully trimmed with rows of cording and finished with feather stitching, detachable standing collar, new style sleeves with cuffs. Wears better than silk. Colors, Black, Old Rose, Garnet, Light Blue. Sizes, 32 to 44 inches bust measure.

$4.98 Skirt No. 84840 Broadcloth skirt, trimmed with silk straps and silk embroidered medallions in grape design, unlined. Comes in Black or Blue.

$4.98 No. 84840

49¢ No. 86440

Send $1.00 and both of the above garments or skirt only will be sent C. O. D. with privilege of examination for balance. Orders for waist alone must be accompanied by cash in full. Agents Wanted. WRITE FOR PARTICULARS. An Exceedingly Attractive Proposition for Energetic Women.

EDWARD B. GROSSMAN & CO. 170-172 STATE ST. CHICAGO. THE GREAT MAIL ORDER CLOAK HOUSE

It's the Hair—not the Hat That makes a woman attractive

Any woman may possess bountiful, soft, silky hair, by frequently shampooing with

Seven Sutherland Sisters' SCALP CLEANER

It is cleansing, soothing, antiseptic, health producing. It contains nothing but what is good for the hair and scalp. Our Hair Grower is an ideal tonic—prevents loss of hair—restores vigor. Ask your dealer about it.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

Pozzoni's COMPLEXION POWDER.

Beautifies with absolute safety, being prepared entirely of purest materials and free from all injurious ingredients. The wooden box preserves the delicate perfume. Sold everywhere.

Full sized box sent on receipt of 50c.

J. A. POZZONI CO., Chicago, Ill.

CLEAN CUT CAKE TIN

FREE TO AGENTS

First time a tin cuts loaves as it should cuts. $2 Outfit free Exp. prepaid. Dept 1. HOUSEHOLD NOVELTY WORKS, Chicago, Ill., or Buffalo, N.Y.

Peggy Delano's Vacation

Continued from Page 718

think: there's the grass an' the trees an' the flowers an', O mumsie, the sky—such a great big sky!"

Mrs. Delano's eyes shifted from her daughter's face to the tiny square of blue in the foot above the girl's head.

"Yes—a great big sky!" she echoed.

"An' there are the little white beds, an' the things ter eat, an' the singin' an' the games—O mumsie, I've jest got ter go!"

For a moment Mrs. Delano was silent; then her shoulders moved convulsively and her head sank into her upraised, open palms.

"O Peggy, Peggy! an' I can't give them things to ye—I can't—I jest can't!"

Peggy's face grew a remorseful red and her forehead drew itself into anxious lines.

"There, there, mumsie, 'course ye can't. An' I don't want ye to—I don't want ye to," she reiterated earnestly. "I—don't care so awful much, anyhow, if I don't get it. There ain't no sense in my goin', anyhow, mumsie—no sense 'tall!" she declared with a watery smile; but—I'm goin' ter try ter go," she finished, somewhat illogically.

Bright and early on that first Monday morning of that first week, Peggy brushed and scrubbed to a state of threadbare spotlessness, entered the race for wealth. By night she had run three errands, at a cent each, and had brought her funds up to five cents by taking care of the Smith baby across the street for two long hours.

A hasty calculation told her that on this, the first day, almost half of her weekly allotment was in her hands. Her heart swelled triumphantly, and she looked ahead with scornful assurance—this task was not so impossible after all. But when the second and third day passed, and the five cents had not added unto itself one penny, Peggy began to look anxious. On Thursday, after a wearisome succession of disappointments, her heart was gladdened by a bright round nickel, which came as a reward for picking up a fallen parcel for a lady on Broadway. Two more errands on Friday swelled her treasure to twelve cents; but the last bit necessary to her complete happiness did not come until late Saturday afternoon, when, stumbling home, disappointed and weary, she spied through her tear-dimmed eyes, the flash of a new copper cent in the gutter. That night Peggy slept with a smile of content.

That first week was but a sample of those which were to follow. Sometimes the thirteen cents were not forthcoming by Saturday night, but they were sure to be fully made up during the next seven days, though to accomplish it Peggy's ingenuity and powers of endurance were taxed to the utmost.

Peggy's neighbors on this narrow, ill-smelling street off the Bowery, had few coppers to bestow for services rendered, however kind their hearts might be, and Peggy was forced to wander far afield for the most of her earnings. But there came day when all errands, both necessary and unnecessary, failed to present themselves, and when no babies seemed to need tending. Dropped parcels were few and stray pennies fewer, and Peggy was all but discouraged. It was then that her services were offered (and gladly accepted) in return for bits of calico and gingham. These she made into holders, tramping the streets for hours at a time in order to sell her wares.

January, February and March passed. In a corner of the garret, under the old straw mattress on which Peggy slept, lay a little heap of pennies, nickels and dimes. On the first day of April Peggy sat counting her wealth. A dollar and eighty-two cents was arranged in tiny pyramid-like piles on the floor, causing her eyes to sparkle.

"I'm gittin' it, I'm gittin' it—I really am!" she cried aloud, then her face went suddenly white—the sound of shuffling steps had come to her ears. With a bang the door opened, and her father stood before her. His bleary eyes flashed with greed as he gave a drunken lurch toward her.

"What ye got?" he demanded thickly. "Give it here—give it here, I say!"

With a sweep of her two hands Peggy gathered her treasure into the skirt of her dress and sprang to her feet. Evading his ill-directed blow, she darted across the room and stood at bay in the corner.

Brother Tom and her mother were out. Susie and Kitty, her little sisters, had fled to the shelter of the table, and their four frightened eyes were peering out from beneath it.

Round and round the room circled Peggy, her father in close, but unskilful, pursuit. Peggy's very silence seemed to enrage the man, and his voice was raised in a frenzy of wrathful invectives when the door flew open, and Mrs. Delano, pale and horrified, burst into the room.

"Max!—Max!—Peggy!" she cried.

The man stopped and looked stupidly into her face. Peggy slipped through the open door and half tumbled, half ran down the rickety stairways. Ten minutes later, she rang the bell at the modest home of her Mission Sunday School teacher.

"If yer please, ma'am, won't ye keep it for me?" she urged breathlessly, emptying her dress on the floor at the lady's feet; then, turning, with a frightened glance over her shoulder, she sped out into the dark again.

Miss Newcomb smiled as she gathered up the bits of copper and silver, but there was a tear in the smile, and her hands shook a little. Afterwards, when Peggy had told her the history of the money and that she wanted it for a wonderful secret something, Miss Newcomb counted every penny that Peggy brought her almost as enthusiastically as did Peggy herself, and, like Peggy, she gloried in its steady increase as the weeks passed by.

Toward the last of April Susie sickened with the long fever that left her white and weak—a mere shadow of her old, laughing self, and all through May, Peggy watched and cared for the frail little sister whom she loved so dearly. Peggy did not work so hard over her money these days. Through the kind help of Miss Newcomb, other ways for earning the three dollars had been opened, and by May thirtieth the sum was complete. So Peggy had more time, and this time was all for Susie. Together they talked of the wonderful things Peggy was so soon to see, and planned what Peggy would do.

But as the days passed Susie still lay on the little straw bed in the corner, and her face grew yet more thin and white. Mrs. Delano's watchful eyes noted and her mother heart beat with a new pain. Thus it came about that Peggy found a tall, black-bearded stranger at Susie's bedside one day.

"She needs air, light, sunshine, nourishing food," he was saying, his eyes roving disapprovingly around the stuffy room. "She needs no medicine—unless it be a mild tonic," he continued, reaching for his hat, "but with out fresh air, sun, good food, she cannot live. She should go to the country for the summer."

Peggy's heart seemed to stand still. Her mother had dropped into a chair with that white, tired look that Peggy always dreaded.

With a little cry Peggy shook herself from the numbness that had stolen over her, and dashed through the door and down the stairs after the doctor, who loomed ahead of her out of the shadows.

"Would—would ten days do any good?" she stammered.

"What? What's that?" he asked, peering down at the quivering little face.

"Would ten days of—of the country do any good for—for Susie, yer know?"

"Susie?"

"My sister—she's sick—up stairs, yer know," Peggy exclaimed, anxiously.

"Eh? Oh—yes, to be sure, I remember. Ten days? Why, yes, better than nothing, my dear—better than nothing," he smiled, patting her head kindly, and turning away.

Peggy fled swiftly up the stairs, but she sat a long time outside her door in the dark, before she ventured to go into the room. Then, for a weary hour she wrote and rewrote, on bits of brown paper in the corner.

It was very early the next morning that Peggy rang the bell at Miss Newcomb's.

"I've come for the money—the—my money," she said, huskily.

"Certainly dear; I'll get it for you right away," replied Miss Newcomb, puzzling a little over the expression on Peggy's face. "There, dear," she added, putting into Peggy's hands a pasteboard box whose contents clinked suggestively.

A bright red flamed into Peggy's cheeks. "It—it was for Mont-Lawn. I was goin' ter pay my own way," she blurted out hurriedly. "But—but Susie's goin' now. She—she'll die if she don't," finished Peggy with a quivering little moan, turning swiftly and hurrying down the street.

"The dear child—so that is what it was for. Why didn't she tell me," murmured Miss Newcomb. "Of course they will never take it—besides, it was only yesterday that I handed in her name myself for this very trip to Mont-Lawn," and hastened in the direction Peggy had taken.

When Peggy entered the busy office in the Bible House, she hesitated an irresolute moment, then stumbled across the room, laid a small pasteboard box on the desk without speaking, and almost ran out of the door. The attendant looked up in surprise. On top of the box lay a brown paper note, with Susie's name and address, and the words:

"Three dollars for Mont-Lawn, please."

. . . .

Three minutes later, Miss Newcomb entered the office.

"Did a little girl bring a pasteboard box of money in here a short time ago?" she asked.

"Yes, she has just gone, dear child, we can't take her money, of course. We never take money from the children.

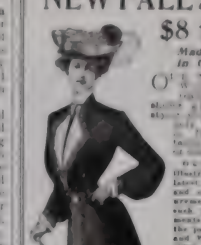
When Miss Newcomb finished her story, the other's eyes were moist, and her fingers were caressing Peggy's brown paper note as though Peggy's own brown little head could feel the touch.

"The dear little thing" she murmured huskily. "I—I think we can manage it. You tell her—both shall go!"

A minute later Miss Newcomb left the office, clasped tightly in her hand was a small pasteboard box, whose jingling contents kept time with her jubilant steps as she went in search of Peggy. ELEANOR H. PORTER.

Infants Thrive on cow's milk that is not subject to any change of composition. Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk is always the same in all climates and at all seasons. As a general household milk it is superior and is always available.

NEW FALL SUITS, $8 to $40.



Made to Order in One Week.

Our New Catalogue illustrates 128 of the Latest New York styles, and our improved measurement diagram insures each perfect fitting garments that you will find the purchase of your Fall and Winter outfit a decided pleasure. We can save you all the usual Custom Tailor profits.

We carry a full line of Cloths, Trimmings, Linings, Etc., and can furnish you with the exact goods used in the garments illustrated in our Catalogue, at the prices quoted. Samples sent free on request.

We pay express charges to any part of the U. S.

Our Catalogue Illustrates:

TAILORED SUITS, $8 to $40. Suitable for all occasions and in both long and short coat effects—the newest Paris models.

CHURCH AND VISITING COSTUMES, $12 to $40. Exquisite and dainty creations, in designs never before shown.

NEW STYLE SKIRTS, $4 to $20. From Walking Skirts for every-day wear, up to the Dressy Skirts for Special occasions.

FALL AND WINTER JACKETS, $8 to $35. In every approved style and length.

WE PAY EXPRESS CHARGES TO ANY PART OF THE U. S.

All letters answered by young women of taste and experience in matters of dress, who will, if you desire, aid you in selecting styles most becoming. When your goods are received, if they look after all, when in the privacy of your own homes, and you are not entirely satisfied that it would have been more becoming, return them at once and we will refund your money in exchange for others more suitable.

The Catalogue and a large assortment of the newest samples will be sent FREE on request. Be sure to say you wish the New Fall Catalogue No. 58. Stating whether you wish samples for Suits or Cloaks, and about the colors you desire, and we will send a full line of exactly what you wish.

NATIONAL CLOAK AND SUIT COMPANY 119 and 121 West 23d Street, New York.

Garland's Garments go everywhere.

THIS WAIST $1.39

Our Fall and Winter Fashion Book and Catalogue illustrates the smartest styles in ladies' ready-to-wear Suits, Skirts, Waists, Jackets, Furs etc., comes off the press soon. Write for it to-day; there is never enough to go 'round.

This Shirt Waist, No. 1000, is our foremost achievement in the U. S. or Canada for $1.39. If you think it worth more than $2 return it and money will be refunded.

It is tailor made of all-wool Henrietta, in cream-white or black; has broad shoulders, French pleated back and clusters of pleats, as illustrated.

MAILED FREE IN UNITED STATES AND CANADA.

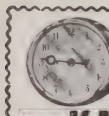
Garland's LADIES' CLOTHING STORE Dept. F ST. LOUIS, MO.

SALESMEN & AGENTS WANTED. NEW INVENTION. Big Wages to men and women at home or traveling, selling and appointing agents. Wonderful seller. Everybody buys. Nine sales or more per retails $24.00. Mr. Gross, with sales $1.50, paid Mrs. Howard $27.00 one week. Sent FREE. WORLD MFG. CO., 943 World Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

The World's Greatest Paintings

10 Fine Photo-Reproductions. Size 6x8 Sent for 8 cts. in Stamps

We have made from 50 of the world's masterpieces of art, including the Sistine Madonna, Angelus, Last Supper, Christ Before Pilate, Ecce Homo, The Doubting Thomas, Head of Christ, Christ Blessing Little Children, Christ at the Door, Christ and the Rich Young Ruler, Christ Healing the Sick, Christ Walking on the Sea, Christ Crowned with Thorns, Christ Bearing the Cross, Christ Crucified, Christ Rising from the Dead, Christ Ascending into Heaven, Christ Enthroned, Christ Before Caiaphas, Christ Before Herod, Christ Before Pilate, Christ Scourged, Christ Mocked, Christ Carrying



All Kalamazoo ranges and cook stoves are equipped with patent oven thermometer. Makes baking sure and easy.

The KALAMAZOO

A better stove or range than you can get from any other source. A saving of from 25% to 40% in price. Prompt shipment from factory to user. Factory prices—no dealers' profits. Freight prepaid by us. 360 days approval test. Guarantee backed by $20,000 bank bond.

KALAMAZOO

Stoves and Ranges

are manufactured by us in our own factory. We know they are all right "clear through." Don't confuse them with cheap mail order goods.

We are the only stove manufacturers in the world selling their entire product direct from their own factory to the user.

There isn't a better stove or range at any price and by eliminating all dealers' and middlemen's profits we save you easily 25% to 40%. Moreover we give you a 360 Days Approval Test. If your purchase is not satisfactory in every way, return the goods at our expense. We have a complete line of ranges, cook stoves and heaters for fuel of all kinds. All stoves blacked, polished and ready for business.

It will pay you to investigate.

Send for catalog No. 103 and prices, freight prepaid.

THE KALAMAZOO STOVE CO., Manufacturers, Kalamazoo, Michigan.

Monarch

The "Stay Satisfactory" Range.

"The top of a range does four-fifths of the work. It is always in use. The Monarch top being made of malleable iron, heats so quickly that the work is done without burning out the fire box and wasting fuel. It will not crack, break nor warp with even three times the abuse that would destroy other kinds."

TO INTENDING PURCHASERS ONLY: Postal Card us for our new booklet, "Hints for Range Buyers, or how to cut kitchen work in two. It's worth reading. If you state about how soon expect to purchase a range we will send you free a Toy Monarch Range; 6 inches high, 5½ inches wide, 2¾ inches front to back. Address

MALLEABLE IRON RANGE COMPANY,
(Formerly of St. Louis, Mo.) 107 Lake St., Beaver Dam, Wis.

A Valuable Book—FREE

The 32 page book of The Toledo Cooker Co. tells all there is to know about steam cookers round or square, single or double doors.

IDEAL STEAM COOKERS

Prices from $1.75 to $11.25 are the best possible to produce. Cook a complete meal over One Burner of any stove. Whistle Blows 20 minutes before water is needed. Need no attention—do not heat or steam the kitchen; no odor of cooking can escape. Holds 12 to 18 quart jars for canning fruit. Write for Free Book right now. Agents Wanted. The Toledo Cooker Co. 2318 Albion St., Toledo, O.

Our Mail-Bag

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Subscriber, Kalamazoo. 1. Where do the Roman Catholics find in the Bible authority for saying prayers for the dead or for the repose of souls after death? 2. If the Pope is "infallible" why should mass be said for his soul? 3. Have we any reason to suppose that no rainbows were seen in the clouds before the Deluge, as the laws of light and refraction were the same then as now? See Gen. 12:18.

1. Prayer for the dead is a custom which arose in the church at a very early period. Tertullian, Origen, Arnobius, Cyril of Jerusalem, Chrysostom and others of the early fathers, each mention the practice in terms of commendation. It was a custom borrowed from the ancient liturgies. There is no authority for it in the Bible. Besides, the early custom of prayers for the dead included no reference to a purgatory. Indeed, such prayers were "little more than a thanksgiving, a commendation of the souls of the deceased to the Divine mercy." The idea of purgatory arose in the Roman church long afterward. 2. Perhaps they think that even an infallible Pope is undergoing the process of purification.

THE SEWING CIRCLE AT THE NEW YORK GOSPEL SETTLEMENT

Through the kindness of Mrs. Sarah T. Bird, the "Mother of the Bowery Boys," and founder of the Gospel Settlement, No. 211 Clinton street, New York, the Settlement Sewing Circle devoted a day lately to the work of making and mending little garments for our Mont-Lawn waifs. Mrs. Bird writes:

It was suggested that we get together some of the members of our Mother's Club, and form a "Dorcas Society." Our good housekeeper soon suggested a "tea meeting," inviting about twenty mothers to come, bringing their thimbles, prepared to give two hours to sewing upon tiny garments, suitable for little girls from seven to twelve years. At the appointed time in the afternoon, our doorbell rang continually and every woman came with a smiling face—but behold—each of these guests had not only a babe in arms, but two or three little chicks hanging to their skirts. Well, here was a problem! No Dorcas Society ever had so many babies in attendance before, and they supplied the music for the afternoon. I wish our photographer had taken in the babies—the floor was fairly carpeted with them. We have many plans in mind for holding a Dorcas meeting in the tenements the coming winter.

Our artist has shown in the first-page illustration, a scene, the modern counterpart of which is taking place in many localities where warm hearts and loving hands take thought for the wee tenement children at our Fresh-Air Home. In many a quiet country home, and in city homes also, mothers and daughters have labored for the waifs this summer with needle and thread, putting their love into every stitch, and sending their prayers and good wishes with every garment.

3. It has been claimed by some scientific writers that the earth in its early stages, when it was not yet thoroughly cooled, is described in Gen. 2:5 and 6. No rain had yet fallen; the mist that "went up from the earth" was the mist of evaporation which, condensing, was made to water the face of the ground. This condition was unchanged until the Flood, when atmospheric changes took place; the mists were rolled up, and, for the first time, the new earth saw the sun. Until that time, it is obvious that there could be no rainbow visible from the surface of the earth.

Subscriber, Boston, Mass. (1) How many ancestors did any person now living have a thousand years ago? It is plain enough that I had two parents, four grand-parents, eight great-grand-parents, and so on, each generation doubling the number of ancestors. But when carried back a thousand years, the figures are so vast as to be incredible, and at length the number would exceed the total population of the world at the time. My query is, when does this doubling of ancestors cease?

You say that it is plain enough that each generation doubles the number of ancestors. There may be cases of that kind, but it is not quite so plain as you say. You can see this by reversing the calculation. Say that in the year 1600 there are four couples on an island. Each couple has four children who, growing up, intermarry, and each couple again has four children. That would be thirty-two in the third generation. Let them intermarry, and again each couple have four children. The fourth generation would be sixty-four. Continue the process to the year 1900, at the same rate of progression. Reckoning, as usual, three generations to a century, you would now have the ninth generation numbering 2,048. Would a child of the present generation have an incredible number of ancestors in the first? As a matter of fact, he could not have had more than eight. That, of course, is an extreme case, used only for illustration; but you may be sure that there has been a great deal of unconscious intermarrying. Millions of husbands have only to trace their pedigree and that of their wives far enough back, to find that their wives are their cousins many times removed. To take a Biblical illustration: It is supposed that the number of people who came out of Egypt under Moses was about two millions. According to your mode of reckoning how many ancestors must they have had in the generation before Abraham? If they kept their marriages as carefully to the race as they boasted of doing, instead of an incredible number there were simply Terah and his wife, from whom Isaac and Jacob and their wives were all descended.

Emma H., Wardner, Idaho. After reading in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of the "Soul-Winning World Tour" of Dr. Torrey, I cannot resist the temptation of saying, O that we might only have some such men to visit these mining camps—some one who could reach these miners that have to work seven days in the week. Hundreds of them never hear the Word of God. Young men leave good homes and come here and are ruined. If we could have some soul-winner, what a harvest he might reap.

We advise you to write to the Secretary, Y. M. C. A., New York City, on the subject. The organization has many workers at remote points, and might be induced to place one in your neighborhood.

M. A. S., Falls, Pa. When, where, and by whom, and under what circumstances was the Young Women's Christian Association organized?

It was founded by Mrs. Caroline D. Roberts of New York, in 1870, and incorporated in 1873. Its first meetings were held in the top floor of a warehouse at University Place and Eleventh street, New York, under the charge

CONTINUED ON PAGE 721

A New Potato Receipt

CORN STARCH TALK

By MRS. HELEN ARMSTRONG.

The success of many vegetable dishes depends largely upon the sauce in which these articles are served. A smooth and delicate white sauce will make the plainest of vegetable dishes worthy of interest.

A fine, white sauce is obtained when Kingsford's Oswego Corn Starch is used. This brand guarantees a pure and wholesome starch and perfect results when rightly used. Fifty-five years' use has proven its superiority.

The average cook considers a sauce done when it is smooth and thick, but several minutes of actual boiling are necessary for perfection.

For variety in serving potatoes the receipt here given is well worthy of trial, but remember that for the best results it is essential that Kingsford's Oswego Corn Starch be used.

POTATOES FINNEGAN.

Make a white sauce by melting two rounding tablespoons of butter, add one rounding tablespoon of Kingsford's Oswego Corn Starch, and when smooth and frothy pour in a scant pint of rich milk. Let this boil several minutes, stirring constantly, and season with salt, pepper and a little onion juice.

Have in readiness a quart of cooked potatoes cut into dice and a cupful of young carrots coarsely chopped; mix these with the sauce while hot, and sprinkle lightly with mixed parsley when ready to serve.

(CORN STARCH TALKS TO BE CONTINUED.)

How much Coal this Winter will you needlessly burn?

IDEAL Boilers and AMERICAN Radiators

pay for themselves in fuel economy and produce a healthful, uniform warmth throughout the home.

The apparatus is now simply and cheaply erected in old homes without in any way altering the house. Made in sizes to fit 3-room cottages to 90-room public buildings, etc. Send today for valuable information (free).

AMERICAN RADIATOR COMPANY

Makers of IDEAL Boilers and AMERICAN Radiators — Dept. E CHICAGO

Our Mail-Bag

CONTINUED FROM PRECEDING PAGE

of Mrs. Roberts and a number of other godly ladies, who labored earnestly to make the work permanent. The present headquarters are at No. 7 East Fifteenth street. Write to the superintendent for full information as to present extent of its work and its numerous branches.

A. W., Binghamton, N. Y. I would like to ask why the present Pope is called Pius X., instead of Leo XIV., and what is the significance of the titles "Pius" and "Leo"?

The new Pontiff, at his election, has the privilege of choosing the name or title under which he will serve. He usually chooses a name already borne by a predecessor whom he admires. The first Pope to exercise this privilege, and to change his name on ascending the Papal throne, was John XII. (in the tenth century), and the custom has continued ever since. "Pius" means literally "pious," and "Leo" means "the lion."

L. McD., Reading, Pa. What is the origin of the myth of the phœnix?

It is lost in antiquity, being, probably, one of the most ancient myths in the world. It probably originated in the temples, as a type of the immortality of the soul. Even in the time of Job, it seems to have been a well-known tradition in Arabia. The Jewish Rabbins have a legend which says that, "when Eve ate of the forbidden fruit, all the birds also ate of it, except the phœnix, and as a reward, it was made immortal. It lived five hundred years in the desert, then making a nest of spices, it was consumed by fire; and from the ashes sprang a worm, which grew into a new phœnix."

C. M. B., Tullahoma, Tenn. Please give the name of five places where large electrical powers are being established?

The Electrical World and Engineer, published in New York City, to whose editor we referred the question, replies as follows:

"Five places where large power plants are being installed are York, Pa.; Spiers Falls, Hudson River, N. Y.; Niagara Falls, N. Y.; New Milford, Conn., and Los Angeles Cal."

S. W., Walden, Mass. Is not your reply to Subscriber, Zeeland Mich., in a recent issue of THE MAIL-BAG, in direct conflict with Heb. 10:26, 27, which says positively that there is no hope for one who sins wilfully and deliberately after his conversion?

No, we do not believe our answer conflicts with that passage. If the writer of the Epistle intended to convey such a meaning as you suggest, he would be in conflict with other Bible writers, and even with Christ himself (see Mark 3:28). It would be, as one theologian has observed, "subversive of the whole Christian system." The obvious meaning of the passage is that there is no hope of salvation for a man who wilfully and deliberately continues in sin, because the only way of salvation is to quit sin. Christ does not save people in their sins, allowing them to stay in them; but from their sins, which they must renounce. For a man to continue sinning after having the light, and yet hope that in some way after death he will be saved, is to cherish a false hope. There is no more sacrifice, and he who does not yield to Christ's terms is lost. There is a great difference between a fall under temptation and living in habitual sin.

Annie P., Plum Run, Pa. See the sermon on suicide by Rev. Frank DeWitt Talmage, in CHRISTIAN HERALD, issue of July 15. It will answer all the inquiries in your letter.

Winfield S. M., Hastings, N. Y. 1. How deep is the ocean at its greatest depth? 2. What is the Pope's income?

1. The deepest sea soundings are said to have touched ocean valleys nearly five miles beneath the surface of the sea. 2. The Pope has no fixed income, but receives the general contributions, which are known as "Peter's Pence." These must be very large, however, for when the late Pope died, several millions of dollars were found in his treasure chest by his executors.

A friend of our Mont-Lawn work, who is supporting a cot, writes as follows:

I never knew of the Children's Home at Mont-Lawn until this year, and I am happy to know that a few little ones will be benefited by my gift. I think it well spent. I will endeavor to support this cot each year. I take great pleasure in reading the account of the doings of the little ones. I have two little boys of my own. MRS. S. G. C.

Shingle House, Pa.

$21 endows a cot at Mont-Lawn for an entire season. We will allot cots to any of our readers who desire to become endowing patrons.

Miscellaneous Questions

J. P., Tipton, Ia. He finds no proof of it anywhere in the Bible. The claim is purely a personal assumption.

S. F., Ventura, Calif. The coal miners, as a result of the strike, secured higher wages, and at least semi-official recognition of the Union. The greater part are now at work.

T. C. I., Hustontown, Pa. 1. Osteopathy is the treatment of bone disease by rubbing, pressure or adjustment. 2. We should very much doubt the genuineness of such a claim.

E. S., Wrights, Calif. The liquor business is a vile and accursed one in all its branches. It debauches and ruins body and soul, and no one who is engaged in it can be a consistent Christian.

Subscriber, Central City, Iowa. We cannot set limits to the power of God, nor boundaries to his love.

There's a wideness in God's mercy
Like the wideness of the sea.

He is able and willing to serve to the uttermost.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

Mrs. W. S. P., Dorchester, Mass. "I want to acknowledge that my dear Heavenly Father has heard and answered my prayers. I know that every day he hears the petitions of his loved ones."

C. A. E. "I wish to acknowledge that God heard and answered my prayer when I was in distress, even above what I could in reason expect. I thank God for many, many answers to my prayers."

Old Subscriber, Pennsylvania. "I had a distressing trouble. I prayed, if it was God's will, that I might soon be relieved. My prayer was answered."

Mrs. H. W. B., Torrington, Conn. "I desire to acknowledge several answers to prayer received within the past six months. Praise God!"

M. J. W., State Farm, Ga. "I have had special prayers answered."

L. W., New York. "I should like to acknowledge God's goodness to me. He has answered my prayers many times when in trouble and sickness near unto death."

Mrs. L. H., Springdale, Conn. "Our Father has answered my prayer. I was in deep distress, and only God could help. He heard and answered, even better than I expected. Praise his name."

Mrs. G. A. G., Marion, N. C. "I thankfully acknowledge, that God has mercifully restored my three children—Eurene, Cecil, and Louis, and myself, to health."

Mrs. M. M. I., Ann Arbor, Mich. "I wish to acknowledge a very recent answer to prayer. I feel like exclaiming, 'praise be to His Holy Name forever!'"

Reader, Pa. "I have been greatly comforted by the 'Answered Prayers.' I know that God hears and answers prayer, for I have received answers to my prayers. I have a great sorrow; but I have committed all to the Lord, and trust in him to bring it all right."

Mrs. M., Richmond, Va. "In my distress I cried unto the Lord and he heard my voice. I wish to acknowledge God's goodness in answering my prayer."

Mrs. C. B. C., Minn. "I wish to acknowledge how many times God has answered prayers for me when I ask in faith."

R. H. C., Pittsburg, Pa. "I acknowledge my deep gratitude to God for his blessed answer to my prayer. I prayed earnestly for the conversion of my husband. God heard and answered. 'Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son.'"

Mrs. W. A., Middlesboro, Ky. "God has wonderfully answered a recent prayer for me, and I wish to acknowledge it."

D. V., McDowell, Va. "I believe the Lord hears and answers prayers. I prayed earnestly and sincerely for two things, and he answered."

P. M., Ontario. "I believe that God answers prayers. He has answered my feeble petitions; praise to his name."

Constant Reader, Allegheny, Pa. "I want to acknowledge God's love and kindness to me in answering prayer. He never fails."

M. B. S., Opelousas, La. "Our Father has answered my prayers so many times that I cannot number all."

Subscriber, Beatrice, Neb. "I acknowledge a wonderful answer to prayer. An unlooked-for trouble came upon us. It seemed impossible that it could be removed. I cried unto the Lord to fight our battles for us. He most wonderfully and speedily answered. Praise his name."

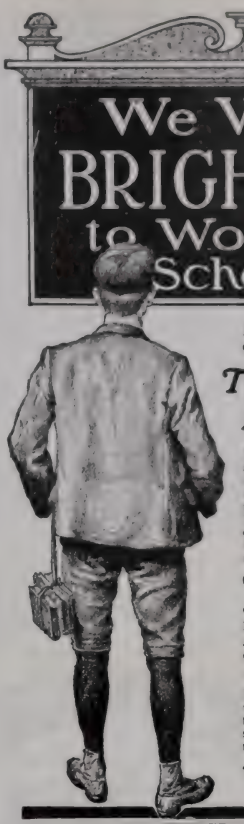
N. H. G., Newtonville, Mass. "For years I have taken the so-called 'little things of life,' to God in prayer. Lately we needed special help, and in answer to prayer, God sent it. 'Call upon me . . . I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me.' I know God hears and answers prayer."

G. R. R., Allegheny, Pa. "On several occasions I have had answer to special petitions."

Reader, New York City. "I was very much troubled about two friends who were bad friends. I prayed to the Lord about it, and the answer came."

R. G. Brookville, Pa. "I acknowledge a recent answer to prayer. Many times, God has comforted me when tried with the worries of life."

Letters acknowledging answers to prayers have also been received from Mrs. E. E. J., Columbus, O.; B. P., Lancaster Co., Pa.; Miss R. R. Stevens, Rockingham, Va.; Subscriber, Stanton, Tenn.; Mrs. L. K., West Sutton, Mass.; Mother, Ill.; J. L. W., Jacksonville, Ill.; A Constant Reader, N. Y.; Reader, Florida; Howard Paddock, Albany, N. Y.; Reader, Philipsburg, Pa.; P. Guelph, Ontario, Canada; A. B. S., Rock Island, Ill.



We Want a BRIGHT BOY to Work after School Hours

Any bright boy who reads this advertisement can start in business next week selling

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

He can do it after school hours on Fridays and on Saturdays. The work is pleasant as well as profitable. The only qualification necessary is a willingness to work—no money needed. We provide the capital. Ten copies of the magazine are furnished free of charge the first week. These are sold at Five Cents a copy and provide the necessary money to order the next week's supply.

$225 IN EXTRA CASH PRIZES WILL BE DISTRIBUTED NEXT MONTH AMONG BOYS WHO SELL 5 OR MORE COPIES WEEKLY

If you are willing to try it, we will send next week's supply and everything necessary for making a success, including booklet showing photographs and describing methods of successful boy agents.

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING CO.
403 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

SENT ON APPROVAL
TO RESPONSIBLE PEOPLE

Laughlin Fountain Pen

Guaranteed Finest Grade 14k. SOLID GOLD PEN

To test the merits of

The Christian Herald

as an advertising medium we offer, your choice of These Two Popular Styles For Only $1.00 Postpaid to any Address.

(By registered mail 2 cents extra.

Holder is made of finest quality hard rubber, in four smooth parts, fitted with very highest grade, large size 14k gold pen, any flexibility desired, ink feeding device perfect.

Either Style Richly Gold Mounted for presentation purposes, $1.40 extra.

Grand Special Offer

You may try the pen a week; if you do not find it as represented, fully as fine a value as you can secure for three times the price in any other coupon, if not satisfactory in every respect, return it and we will send you $1.10 for it—the extra 10c is to pay for your trouble in writing us and to show our confidence in our pens.

Illustration on left is full size of Ladies' style; on right, Gentlemen's style.

Lay this Herald down and write NOW

Safety Pocket Pen Holder sent free of charge with each pen.

Address

Laughlin Mfg. Co.

100 Griswold St., DETROIT, MICH.

THE NORTH-WESTERN LINE

The Black Hills Yellowstone Park

and a score of other places of interest to the tourist are reached by the complete train service of the Chicago & North-Western Ry. Especially low rates now in effect from Chicago and all points east for the summer season.

St. Paul Minneapolis

Four trains daily from Chicago, rate of $16 round trip throughout the summer; $20 round trip Chicago to Duluth.

Excellent daily train service to the various summer resorts of Wisconsin, Northern Michigan and Minnesota, the Hot Springs of South Dakota, the mountain resorts of Colorado and Utah, and to Yellowstone National Park, California, Oregon, Washington and Alaska.

Summer tourist rates in effect from Chicago and all points east. A series of handsome books, of which is descriptive of [illegible] tourists for 1903, [illegible] regarding rates, routes and [illegible] will be promptly mailed upon application to

W. B. KNISKERN,
PASSENGER TRAFFIC MANAGER C. & N.-W. RY.,
CHICAGO, ILL.

End of a Useful Career

Mr. William Earl Dodge, famous Merchant and Philanthropist passes away

HOW men of wealth may make their lives a blessing to the community, and win the respect and esteem instead of the envy and hatred of their fellows, they may learn from a study of the life of Mr. William Earl Dodge, who died on August 9. The men who mourn his death most, are not the recipients of charitable gifts, nor a crowd of beggars who find dependence on a rich man's bounty a more comfortable and more lucrative life than honest work, but men who needed help in their efforts to advance themselves, and public-spirited citizens who saw how wise and judicious were the gifts which Mr. Dodge made to philanthropic causes. It is the personal worker, the man who will take trouble to find out the actual facts, who can do the most effective work in aiding those who need help, and if he, as in this case, has wealth at command, his power is increased enormously. None know how much Mr. Dodge gave away, because he was unostentatious in giving, but enough is known from the testimony of people whose gratitude would not let them be silent, to make it sure that the total of his benefactions must have been very large.

THE LATE WILLIAM EARL DODGE

Mr. Dodge's name was not a new one in religious and philanthropic circles. His father, who died in 1883, was one of the hardest workers and most liberal givers in New York City. Not only the Presbyterian Church to which he belonged, but Christians of all denominations found a friend in him, and during his long life he was the helper of every cause which had for its object the benefit of the people of the city. For many years, his regular subscriptions to religious and benevolent causes aggregated a quarter of a million a year, besides special gifts. The son whose death has just occurred was associated with his father in business, and inherited with his wealth his philanthropic spirit.

In the humble home his parents occupied in New York City, when his father, then a struggling merchant twenty-four years of age, was beginning to make his way, William Earle Dodge was born, in February, 1832. He received a common school education, and was early taken into the store of the firm in which his father was a partner, to begin a commercial career. He showed an intelligence rare at his years, and soon became a valuable and efficient employee. His interest in religious work and in public movements developed early. During the war he took an active part in the work of the Christian Commission. An incident related of him at that period of his career proves that he had personal courage of a high order. The draft riots had raged for a day and a night, and New York was looking forward to more terrible scenes, for the militia, who held the armories, had no ammunition. In the emergency, the young man went with a wagon to the Navy Yard and packed it with all the cartridges the commandant could spare. No one could be found to drive the wagon through the furious crowd of rioters who were terrorizing the city, so Mr. Dodge mounted to the driver's seat, and himself piloted the wagon to the armories. There is no doubt that by this deed of daring he contributed materially to the suppression of the riots.

After his father's death, Mr. Dodge took up the philanthropic work in which he was engaged, and endeavored, as far as possible, to fill the place left vacant. Although a very busy man, having on his hands directorates in many companies, which his father had been glad during his advancing years to transfer to him, he found time to attend to the duties of President of the Young Men's Christian Association, and to other kindred institutions. He built and endowed a Y. M. C. A. on Governor's Island for the use of the troops, and erected a building at Columbia College for the use of the students. He also gave liberally to the endowment of Cooper Union and of Union Theological Seminary, in the prosperity of which he had taken a deep interest. Of late years, as his wealth largely increased, his benefactions kept pace with it. During the early weeks of this year his health began to fail, but he still continued his activities. He was looking forward to a few weeks at his favorite resort at Bar Harbor, Me., to recuperate, but he had been there only a short time when the call from service to reward came, and his useful career on earth ended.

Good for Any Library

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I have received and perused with great pleasure, the volume, The Speaking Oak. Its three hundred short stories are replete with interest and instruction. It is a valuable addition to any library. HENRY R. LAMAR.
Boston, Mass.

MELLIN'S FOOD FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS

Sweet sleep comes to the baby who is properly fed with a proper food. Mellin's Food babies sleep well.

A postal request will bring a sample of Mellin's Food right to your home.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

ANNUITIES AND FIXED INCOMES

If you have $500 or more to invest annually, or $10,000 and upward immediately, let me show you the way to ease and comfort for life. Full particulars can be had concerning the ANNUITIES sold by the

Strongest Financial Institution

in the world. Also, by the same Company, a new

FOUR PER CENT. INCOME BOND,

which runs during the life of the purchaser and twenty years thereafter. Purchased outright (no installment or insurance plan), delivered immediately; bearing interest at once; safe as government bonds.

WM. MILL BUTLER, Investment Specialist, 471 Bullitt Building, Philadelphia.

FAY STOCKINGS for Women, Boys and Girls.

Something Good. Protect Health.

Prevent sickness, summer or winter. Button at waist. No supporters. Fit fine—Feel fine. Never wrinkle or come down. Fine for dress. Strong for play. The ideal stocking for all. Best yarns, best dyes. Prices low. Satisfaction or money back. Sent, postage paid, where not sold by dealers. Write for circulars to-day, or try a pair.

THE FAY STOCKING COMPANY, 31 T Street, Elyria, Ohio.

NEW YORK UNIVERSITY LAW SCHOOL

Sixty-ninth year opens Oct. 1, 1903. Day Classes with sessions from 8.30 to 6 P. M. Evening Classes, sessions 8 to 10 P. M. Graduate classes lead to LL.M. and J.D. Tuition $100. For circulars address

L. J. TOMPKINS, Registrar, WASHINGTON SQ., NEW YORK.

BE A PROOFREADER

Women receive same salaries as men, $15 to $35 a week. Proofreaders always in demand. Send for free booklet, it tells how. NATIONAL PRESS ASSOCIATION, 47 The Baldwin, Indianapolis.

Individual Communion Cups

Send for FREE catalogue and list of 2,000 churches now using our cups.

Sanitary Communion Outfit Co., Dept. 7 Rochester, N.Y.

CHURCH FURNITURE. Pews, Assembly Chairs, Pulpits, S. S. Seating. Let the Largest Line, Latest Styles, Free Catalogue. Mfd. at GRAND RAPIDS SCHOOL FURNITURE WORKS, Salesroom, 22 West 19th Street, New York.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR, ECKSTEIN Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC, BRADLEY, BROOKLYN, JEWETT, ULSTER, UNION New York.
SOUTHERN, SHIPMAN, COLLIER Chicago.
MISSOURI, RED SEAL, SOUTHERN St. Louis.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

YOU may have had occasion to use White Lead in one, two, three or five pound cans and found it unsatisfactory.

If so, it was because it was not Pure White Lead, but some Mixture of Zinc and Barytes (principally Barytes) labeled "White Lead." If you want Pure White Lead be sure the package bears one of the brands named in the list.

If interested in paint or painting, address

National Lead Co., 100 William Street, New York.

"A sublime spectacle."

NIAGARA FALLS

One of the natural wonders of the world. A charming place at any season of the year, reached from every direction by the

NEW YORK CENTRAL LINES

A visit to the Falls is an object lesson in geography; an exhibition of landscapes that no painter can equal, and a glimpse of the latest developments of the industrial world.

A copy of "America's Summer Resorts," will be sent free, postpaid, on receipt of a postage stamp, by George H. Daniels, General Passenger Agent, New York Central & Hudson River Railroad, Grand Central Station, New York.

6% THE OLD AND RELIABLE HARBOR & SUBURBAN 6%

New York's Home Company,

Organized 1888

Offers to small and large investors its 6 per cent. guaranteed investments.

It pays 6 per cent. because all its funds are actively employed, and invested wholly in Greater New York.

By corresponding with us we will give facts and methods of doing business.

6 per cent. per annum PAID SEMI-ANNUALLY, BY CHECK. Under the DIRECT SUPERVISION of the NEW YORK BANKING DEPARTMENT.

Assets. $200,000.00
Guarantee Fund and Surplus, 94,000.00

HARBOR & SUBURBAN BUILDING & SAVINGS ASSOCIATION, 21 East Fourteenth St., New York. 6%

WIRE. New two and four point Galvanized Barbed Wire. Per 100 lbs., $2.90. Painted, per 100 lbs., $2.60.

Smooth Galvanized Wire Shorts, guages 12, 13 and 14, per 100 lbs., $1.40. We have all kinds of wire for sale. Write for free Catalogue No. 373. CHICAGO HOUSE WRECKING CO., West 35th and Iron Streets, Chicago.

BE A WRITER.

Learn Journalism and Story-Writing by mail. Send for free booklet "Writing for Profit" tells how to succeed as writer, and how we sell and syndicate MSS. on commission.

NATIONAL PRESS ASSOCIATION, 47 The Baldwin, Indianapolis

I Print My Own Cards

Circulars, Newspaper, Press $5. Largest size, $15. Money saver. Big profits printing for others. Type-setting easy, rules sent. Write for catalog, presses, type, paper, &c., to factory.

THE PRESS CO., Meriden, Conn.

LEARN PROOFREADING

If you possess a fair education, why not utilize it at a genteel and uncrowded profession paying $15 to $35 weekly. Situations always obtainable. We are the original instructors by mail.

HOME CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL PHILADELPHIA

LOOKING FOR SAFE INVESTMENTS

Will remind you of the WILLIAM R. COMPTON 5 per cent. Mortgages. Recommended by financiers of national reputation. Book free.

Address, No. 5 WARDELL BUILDING, MACON, MO.

ARTISTIC MONUMENTS

Cost No More than Plain Ones in

White Bronze

Marble is entirely out of date. Granite soon gets moss-grown, discolored, requires constant expense and care, and eventually crumbles back to Mother Earth. Besides it is very expensive.

White Bronze is strictly everlasting. It cannot crumble with the action of frost. Moss-growth is an impossibility. It is more artistic than any stone. Then why not investigate it? It has been adopted for more than a hundred public monuments and by thousands of delighted customers in all parts of the country. Many granite dealers have used White Bronze in preference to granite for their own burial plots. We have designs from $100 to $50,000. Write at once for free designs and information, stating about what expense you anticipate. It puts you under no obligations. We deal direct and deliver everywhere.

Over $90,000 worth of work sold to Christian Herald readers in the last few years. Agents Wanted.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO. 70-90 Howard Ave., Bridgeport, Conn.

DEAFNESS

The Morley Ear-Drum

is the most recent and most effective invisible device for the relief of DEAFNESS.

It is easily adjusted, comfortable and safe. Send for descriptive booklet.

The Morley Company, Dept. E, 19 South 16th Street, Philadelphia.

A GRAND INVENTION!

Famous Puritan Water Still. Over 72,000 already sold. Placed over the kitchen fire, purifies the foulest water. Removes every impurity. Furnishes delicious distilled Pure Water. Boon to Citizens. Saves lives and Dr. bills. Prevents Typhoid Malaria, other fevers, sickness. Only safe water for children. Write for Booklet and testimonials free. Agents Wanted—Men and Women—Big Wages.

Harrison Mfg. Co., 667 Harrison Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

PREPARED ROOFING FELTS.

We can save you money on your wants in this line. We offer you Two-Ply Tarred Roofing Felt, 108 square feet to the roll, complete with caps, nails and cement, per roll, $1.15. Three-ply complete, per roll, $1.85. Vulcanite, the highest grade on the market, complete as above, price per roll, $1.50. We have all kinds of Roofing. Write for Free Catalogue No. 373 on material bought from Sheriffs' and Receivers' Sales. CHICAGO HOUSE WRECKING CO., W. 35th and Iron Streets, Chicago.

ADDICTED TO THE DRUG HABIT?

If so, you can be relieved. Our Sanatorium was established in 1875, for the treatment of Drug and Alcoholic Addictions. Relief Guaranteed.

HOME TREATMENT IF DESIRED.

We have relieved thousands that have failed elsewhere. The Dr. J. L. Stephens Co., Dept. R 5, Lebanon, Ohio.

BIBLE STUDY COURSE

At home by mail. This book "Home Bible Study" free if you enroll now. Terms easy. For free catalog write C. J. BURTON, President Iowa Christian College, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SONGS OF PRAISE

Suit all the People. 25 cents per copy. 270 songs, new and familiar.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

The care of the teeth

Should begin in infancy. Strong teeth and healthy gums insure good digestion and consequent good health:

RUBIFOAM

does it; hardens the gums, keeps the mouth sweet and clean. Easy for children to use. 25c. per bottle at Druggists.

Valuable booklet on the Care of the Teeth.

Address
E. W. HOYT & CO., - LOWELL, MASS.

NEW PRACTICAL SANOLEUM
WASHABLE WALL COVERING

WATERPROOF, germ and insect proof ornamental and sanitary, made in attractive designs for all rooms of the modern house. SANOLEUM is not paper, but is readily hung as wall paper; can be washed at pleasure, is inexpensive and everlasting. Every roll is warranted. By using SANOLEUM the walls are kept sweet, clean and in hygienic condition. Send two cent stamp for samples and full information.

THE SANOLEUM COMPANY,
Akron, O.
BOX 736, DEPT. A, NEW YORK CITY.

55 CTS. SAVED through using Knox's Gelatine is 55 cents earned for some other pleasure

Two packages of Knox's Gelatine, total cost 25 cents, make one gallon of the most delicious dessert, while it takes eight of the ordinary sweetened 10-cent Packages, cost 80 cents, to make the same amount of poorer jelly. Knox's alone is made from absolutely pure calves' stock, and is ready to serve in one hour. Enough for four large portions, 25 cts. Made in cleanest gelatine factory in the world.

Free Pint Sample and Instructive Cook Book sent for 4 cents in stamps to cover packing and postage. Full ½ gallon package 15 cents, 2 for 25 cents. Include your grocer's name and address. Money refunded if unsatisfactory.

Chas. B. Knox, 55 Knox Ave., Johnstown, N. Y.

Rider Agents Wanted
in each town to ride and exhibit sample bicycle
'03 Models high grade $9 to $15
1901 & '02 Models, best makes $7 to $10
500 2ND - HAND WHEELS
all makes and models, good as new $3 to $8.
Great Factory Clearing Sale. We ship on approval and 10 day's trial without a cent in advance.
EARN A BICYCLE taking orders for us. Write at once for bargain list and our wonderful special offer to agents.
Tires, equipment, sundries, half price.
AUTOMOBILES Bargains in new and second-hand Autos and Motor Cycles. All makes and styles. If interested write for Automobile Catalogue.
MEAD CYCLE COMPANY, Dept. 64X CHICAGO, ILL.

Dwiggins Clever Designs for lawns, parks, cemeteries, etc. Fine specimens of intelligent fence architecture, good material for a lifetime of first-class service.
Catalog showing styles 10c. to 50c. a ft., FREE.
Dwiggins Wire Fence Co., 12 Dwiggins Ave., Anderson, Ind.

STARK TREES best by Test—78 Years LARGEST Nursery.
FRUIT BOOK free. We PAY CASH
WANT MORE SALESMEN PAY Weekly
STARK BRO'S, Louisiana, Mo.; Dansville, N. Y.; Etc

David's Magnanimity

His Grief Over the Death of his Foe

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

THERE are no such cowards as those who have had some dealing with God, but whose wills have never been broken, and who know that God is not with them, for they do not will with him. Saul, in his better days, had "put away those that had familiar spirits, and the wizards out of the land." It is time that such a clearance were made in many so-called Christian lands at this day, where these practices of commerce with spirits are largely and increasingly exercised, in defiance of the Word and will of God, who tells us that "all that do these things are an abomination unto the Lord," and because of these abominations, God drove out the Canaanites before Israel (Deut. 18: 12). But now Saul sought in vain for a word from the Lord. He had trifled with God when God did make known his mind to him, and now he could get no word from him; "neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets," and Samuel, who had anointed him, was dead. Now, in his desperation, this miserable man adds to his other sins (I. Chron. 10: 13, 14), by committing that which he knew was abomination in the sight of the Lord, and sought, by the agency of a woman who lent herself to evil spirits, to obtain some light upon his immediate future.

The message was only judgment, and only a confirmation of God's words to Saul by Samuel before. "The Lord hath rent the kingdom out of thine hand, and hath given it to thy neighbor, even to David. Because thou obeyedst not the voice of the Lord, nor executedst his fierce wrath upon Amalek, therefore hath the Lord done this thing unto thee this day. Moreover, the Lord shall deliver Israel with thee into the hand of the Philistines, and to-morrow thou and thy sons shall be with me." All was lost for Saul, in time and hereafter. No hope was held out for him. He had shown himself opposed to God, and to the man of his choice, and now he must eat the fruit of his own way. Oh that those who live only for themselves would take warning by the fate of this unhappy man!

Meanwhile, David had his trials. First, a spirit of discouragement, which was very unlike him. One is surprised to hear him saying in his heart, "I shall one day perish by the hand of Saul," and to find that he actually thought of, and carried out the plan, to flee to Achish, king of Gath. David was not in communion with God or this could not have happened. He seemed to tire of his constant persecution by Saul. Let us not tire of the trial of our faith (I. Pet. 4: 12; Rom. 8: 28). In order to maintain his untenable position as a pretended friend of the Philistines, the enemies of God's people, David had recourse to a systematic deceit, utterly unworthy of a man of God (I. Sam. 27). But no man of God can put himself into a false position without finding himself inextricably involved. The Philistines were gathering their forces for the great assault upon Israel, in which Saul and his sons lost their lives. Achish determined that David should go with him to battle against Israel, and he would give him a high position: "keeper of mine head forever." What should David do? God in mercy and in judgment intervened and plucked his feet out of the net.

The lords of the Philistines had not as much confidence in David as Achish had, and they refused to receive David as an ally; so that Achish very reluctantly dismissed him, and thus God delivered his servant. But not without severe trial. When David and his men returned to Ziklag—the city which Achish had given to David as his dwelling place—he found that the Amalekites had made a raid upon Ziklag, burned it with fire, and had taken away the wives and children of David, and of all his men. This was far worse than David's trials with Saul, and the people spoke of stoning David because of their deep grief. But now, once again, David turns fully to the Lord; he "encouraged himself in the Lord his God." He had not inquired of the Lord whether he should go down to Achish.

Every hour, if needful
In office - store - home or hotel. Over in a few minutes. Wash handkerchiefs - fancy collars, cuffs, edging etc. with Pearline, in basin-rinse well stretch on Mirror, Window, or Marble Slab. Will quickly dry and come off like new.

Backelors
Maidens
Clerks
Stenographers
Typewriters
Travelers
Visitors
etc - etc.

keep a package of Pearline in Office - Room - Valise -

For
Washing delicate things
Quick Washing - see above - Bathing
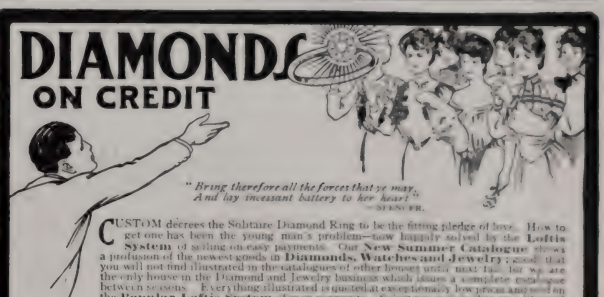
Shampooing
Cleansing spots
etc - etc.

Pearline is best and handiest

DIAMONDS ON CREDIT



"Bring therefore all the forces that ye may,
And lay incessant battery to her heart"
SHAKESPEARE.

CUSTOM decrees the Solitaire Diamond Ring to be the fitting pledge of love. How to get one has been the young man's problem—now happily solved by the Loftis System of selling on easy payments. Our New Summer Catalogue shows a profusion of the newest goods in Diamonds, Watches and Jewelry; and that you will not find illustrated in the catalogues of other houses until next fall. For we are the only house in the Diamond and Jewelry business which issues a complete catalogue between seasons. Everything illustrated is quoted at exceptionally low prices and sold on the Popular Loftis System of easy payments. Select any article that you like and it will be delivered at your door with all express charges paid. Only one-fifth of the price need be paid at first; the balance being arranged in a series of small monthly payments extending over eight months. No security is required; no interest is charged and no publicity is created when you buy on our Confidential Charge Account System. If you make a selection it will be upon the distinct understanding that your money will be promptly returned in case you decide not to purchase. We are the largest concern in the business and sell only the finest genuine goods, and at prices ranging from ten to twenty per cent below those of other houses. Every Diamond is sold under a written guarantee of quality and value and may be exchanged at any time in the future for other goods or a larger stone at the full original price. Our Confidential Credit System is open to all honest persons without regard to their financial worth; but if you prefer to buy for spot cash we make the most startling and liberal offer ever made. It is no less than guaranteeing the return of all money paid at any time within one year—less ten per cent, the reasonable cost of doing business. We are one of the oldest houses in the trade. Est. 1858. We refer to any bank in America—for instance, ask your local banker to consult his Law or Bradstreet book of commercial ratings and he will tell you that we stand at the top in credit, reliability and promptness. We have a number of attractive booklets that we will be glad to send you if you write promptly for our New Summer Catalogue.

LOFTIS BROS. & CO. Diamond Importers and Manufacturing Jewelers
Dept. H 95 92 to 98 State St. CHICAGO, ILL.
Opposite Marshall Field & Company

Many a reputation for punctuality rests upon the

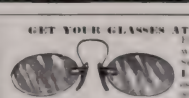
ELGIN WATCH

Every Elgin Watch is fully guaranteed. All jewelers have Elgin Watches. "Timemakers and Timekeepers," an illustrated history of the watch, sent free upon request to

ELGIN NATIONAL WATCH CO., ELGIN, ILL.

THE "BEST" LIGHT
is a portable 100 candle power light, costing only 1½ cts per week. Makes and burns its own gas. Brighter than electric lights or gas at 1/10 the cost. Cheaper than kerosene. No dirt. No grease. No odor. Every lamp guaranteed. Every lamp warranted. Agents Wanted Everywhere.
THE BEST LIGHT CO.,
3-70 E. 5th St., Canton, Ohio.

GET YOUR GLASSES AT WHOLESALE



Examine your own eyes with our self adjusting eye test, save the middleman's profits, and get our WHOLESALE LARGE OPE. at one-quarter of the prices you now pay. SENT FREE with our beautiful illustrated catalogue of spectacles and eyeglasses. MAIL ORDER ONLY. Send today.
GRAND RAPIDS WHOLESALE OPTICIANS.
Dept. 6, 40-46 Louis St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

PRESIDENT SUSPENDERS Comfort and service. Guaranteed—"All breaks made good." 50c and $1.00. Any shop or by mail. C. A. EDGARTON MFG. CO., Box 209, Shirley, Mass.

Ralston PURINA MILLER

The Miller in a Playful Mood:

"Children, attention! Give the countersign."—"Ralston Purina." "How does it come?"—"In 'Checkerboard' packages." "Answer to the roll call: Ralston Breakfast Food"—"Here." "Ralston Barley Food"—"Here." "Ralston Health Oats"—"Here." "Ralston Hominy Grits"—"Here." "Ralston Kornkins"—"Here." "Ralston Cereal Coffee"—"Here." "Ralston Health Crisps"—"Here." "Ralston Baking Powder"—"Here." "Ralston Health Gelatine"—"Here." "Purina Pankake Flour"—"Here." "Purina Whole Wheat Flour"—"Here." "Purina Pankake Syrup"—"Here." "Good. My compliments to your mothers, and tell them if you just live up to Checkerboard Foods you'll be good children."

Ralston Purina Company

"Where Purity is Paramount"

St. Louis

How to get any $1.00 Magazine FREE for One Year: You'll find a Magazine Coupon in every package of Ralston Purina Foods. Just buy a package of Ralston Breakfast Food, or Ralston Crisps, and find out about this—the most liberal offer we've ever made. No chance—if you buy the variety you get your choice of any $1.00 Magazine FREE for one year.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
Published 52 Times a Year

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 2, 1903

VOL. 26 NO. 35. PRICE 5 CENTS
Offices: Bible House, New York

SEE PAGE 732

Wandering Bedouins Halting Amid the Ruins of Petra in the Land of Edom

Contributions for the Bowery Mission Received Prior to Aug. 11

New York

Abbe, H A G..... 3 00
Adams, Mrs Jas 2 00
Adams, Mrs T M..10 00
Agens, T V..... 1 00
Alexander, J H..... 1 00
Am Leather Co... 5 00
Anderson, C W.... 5 00
Armstrong, John H10 00
Arnold, Mrs H... 1 00
Astor, Mr & Mrs John Jacob 10 00
Ayers, M V..... 1 00
Bahr, H M..... 1 00
Baker, C W..... 1 00
Baker & Co, Hi... 5 00
Baker, Mary K... 5 00
Baldwin, Miss E P 1 00
Barbey, Henry...25 00
Barclay, C B.... 5 00
Barlow, Annie H.... 1 00
Barnes, Mrs J M. 2 50
Battin, Mrs A....10 00
Bauer, A C..... 5 00
Bauer, Maria L.... 2 00
Baxter, Mrs M A 1 00
Belford, J A..... 1 00
Beller, Wm F..... 5 00
Beller, Wm P..... 5 00
Benedict, M P..... 3 00
Berge, Mrs..... 5 00
Bigalow, Levi....10 00
Billard, Mrs R T. 1 00
Billings, Mrs F....10 00
Billings, Mrs F.... 5 00
Bird, Mrs S J..... 1 00
Blair, Mrs D C...25 00
Blodgood, J H....10 00
Bloodgood, J H....10 00
Bogert, E C.....50 00
Bostwick, Mr & Mrs Geo W..... 10 00
Bowers, Mrs David 1 00
Bradstreet Co, The 5 00
Brandeis, Mrs L... 5 00
Brauer, M T..... 1 00
Brown, Archer 5 00
Brown, M B.....100 00
Brown, S S..... 1 00
Brownell, T K..... 1 00
Brush, Mrs Ida.... 1 00
Buck, A C..... 50
Buckbee, Sela..... 5 00
Burbank, A N Esq10 00
Burghard, Ed M... 5 00
Burns, Mrs W W 1 00
Burrell, Rev D A. 1 00
Butler, Mrs R.... 5 00
Buttlar, R..... 5 00
Byler, Miss E.... 2 00
Calloway, S R.... 5 00
Calvelli, Dr G.... 2 50
Card, Fred N..... 1 00
Carpenter, Mrs AD 1 00
Carr, Mrs Wm H.. 1 00
Carter, Jas C...20 00
Carter, Jas L..... 5 00
Castree, Miss L....10 00
Chatin & Co, H.B.20 00
Clark, C G..... 1 00
Clark, Mrs E..... 1 00
Clarke, Miss S F. 1 00
Clayton, Eliz 1 00
Cole, E H..... 5 00
Colwell, M A..... 1 00
Conger, Henry C.. 5 00
Cook, C & M.... 2 00
Cooklin, L H..... 1 50
Cooklin, Mrs T.... 1 00
Copeland, Mrs P W 1 00
Cornmack, Mrs M 1 00
Cornelius, Mrs J.. 1 15
Cornell, Jennie 1 00
Cox, Mrs Davies.100 00
Cryer, Mrs M..... 1 00
Currier, Ed W.... 5 00
Curtis, Warren 5 00
Davison, Mrs C.... 1 00
Dean, Mrs Belle.. 1 00
DeForest, Mrs M.. 1 00
DeKlyn, B F....10 00
DeVoe, Mrs L.... 2 00
Dewey, Mrs M B 1 00
Dexter, E N..... 2 00
Dodge, D Stuart..25 00
Drake, Mrs A M.. 1 02
Drake, Mrs Lillian 1 00
Dunn, Mrs Danl.. 1 00
Dunn, R G & Co...25 00
Dutton, E P..... 5 00
Duvall, Mrs M B 1 00
Duvall, Mrs M B. 1 00
Duvall, Mrs M E. 1 00
Earl, John C.... 1 00
Edmonds, Mrs R T. 1 00
Elmendorf, Rev J 5 00
Ernst, G T..... 1 00
Everett, Mrs A D 2 00
Fall, Mrs T..... 1 00
Farquharson, Mrs S M 1 00
Fernie, B L..... 1 00
Finch, Mary A.... 1 00
Fisher, Mrs E A.. 1 00
Flower, Mary 1 00
Forrester, Geo B.. 5 00
Foster, Pliamon.. 5 00
Fowler, Alma D.. 1 00
Fraser, Alex W.... 5 00
Freer, Effie Brace. 1 00
French, Mary 1 00
Frich, Miss E H.... 1 00
Frisbee, Mr & Mrs E P 2 00
Gallup, Ralph J.W 1 00
Garre, Miss J.... 1 00
Gentle, Mrs Janet 5 00
Gibson, Mrs D W. 1 00
Gibson, Mrs Jas.. 1 00
Gladwin, I F..... 1 00
Gledhill, Mrs E.. 1 00
Glover, Mrs R H 1 00
Godfrey, Mrs A.... 1 00
Goodsell, Mrs C.. 2 50
Goose, Mrs Danl.. 1 00
Gough, J 1 00
Graham, Mrs John. 2 00
Gratz, Mrs Wm.... 5 00
Greensword, M L.. 1 00
Hallimond, Mrs A 1 00
Hallimond, J G.... 1 00
Hammerschlag & d Schlemmer Co.. 5 00
Harkness, Mrs S V20 00
Harnier, Henry .. 2 00
Harrison, Mrs M L10 00
Haviland, Mrs & Miss 2 00
Henry, Wm 5 00
Herman, Miss E.. 1 00
Herrman, Miss E.10 00
Hewitt, A S..... 5 00
Hinman, Mrs W A 1 00
Hirt, Elis 5 00
Hoe, R & Co....10 00
Holcomb, Geo P.. 1 00
Holley, W S..... 2 00
Holley, Mrs M..20 00
Hughes, Mr 2 00
Hunter, Chas S.... 1 00
Hunter, Chas S.... 1 00
Huntley, Frances.25 00
Hurst, Mrs E H.. 1 00
Hutchison, W A.... 5 00
Hyde, F Francis.. 5 00
Hyslop, Mrs K.... 1 00
Insley, Mrs Eliza..10 00
Jacobs, Rev F H.. 2 00
Jaeger, Louisa 10 00
Jenkins, J W..... 5 00
Jennings, N L.... 1 00
Jensen, Mrs Carl.. 1 00
Jeremiah, Mrs T..10 00
Jessup, Morris K..50 00
Johnson, Mrs H.... 1 00
Johnson, Mrs H.... 10
Johnston, Charlotte 1 00
Johnston, Mrs R.. 1 00
Keasbey, Robt A.... 5 00
Keem, W M..... 1 00
Keene, Mrs F M.... 50
Kennedy, Wm A.... 5 00
Kimball, H G....25 00
Kimber, Rev A C.. 5 00
King, Rev F L.... 5 00
Knight, Mary A.... 1 00
Knight, Rachel A.. 5 00
Knowles, Estella.. 1 00
Kolln, Mrs A..... 1 00
Kuhnhardt, Mrs C.. 1 00
LaMunion, Mrs E.. 2 00
Lee, Mrs Ralph.... 1 00
Lyman, Mrs T A.... 1 00
Lynch, Eliz 5 00
McKinney, Mrs W W 1 00
Mallory, H H..... 1 00
Mallory, Mrs M E. 1 00
Maxfield, J B..... 1 00
Maxon, P J..... 1 00
Mead, C..... 1 00
Mead, Wm Ellis.. 1 00
Meigs, Ferris J....10 00
Merrill, Mrs M.... 1 00
Merritt, Mrs S.... 1 00
Miller, Mrs Henry 1 00
Milne, Mrs A..... 1 00
Mix, R J.....10 00
Moger, Mrs H W E 1 00
Moore, Mrs Wm.... 5 00
Moody, H A.....10 00
Morton, Frank S.. 2 00
Mullen, W D..... 1 00
Myers, C F..... 1 00
Myers, C S..... 1 00
Myrick, C E..... 1 00
Nash, L H..... 1 00
Newbury, B 5 00
Newbury, B 5 00
Nichols, Mrs C.... 1 00
Nichols, Mrs H.... 1 00
Norman, Miss E.... 1 00
Niles, J O..... 1 50
Oakley, Mrs H E.. 50
Orewocker, Mrs G. 1 00
Osborn, Mrs D A.. 2 00
Parker & McIntyre 5 00
Payne, Mrs W O.. 1 00
Peckham, Silas 2 00
Pelton, Mrs E M.. 1 00
Perkins, Goodwin & Co 5 00
Peters, John 1 00
Pierson, Mrs Jas.. 1 00
Planten, J R....10 00
Powers, Jennie T.. 2 00
Powers, Mrs J T.. 2 00
Ray, E Clay..... 50
Reeve, Mrs C M.... 1 00
Rellim, A H..... 1 50
Rhodes, Mrs John.. 50
Rhodes, Mr Lottie.. 1 00
Rigel, F C..... 1 00
Rimeck, Ida..... 1 00
Robbins, A S..... 5 00
Roberts, Miss M P 5 00
Robertson, Mrs J.. 5 00
Rushmore, Mrs R.. 3 00
Russo, A A..... 5 00
Russell, Jennie M.. 1 00
Sackett, Hy W.... 5 00
Sandison, Geo H.... 1 00
Sayer, Corwin B.. 1 00
Schott, Chas M....10 00
Scudder, Jas B.... 65
Shakelton, Mrs C.. 50
Shapley, Dora C.... 1 00
Shapley, Mrs Kate.. 1 00
Shapley, Mrs M B 1 00
Shaw, Mrs F..... 1 00
Sheldon, Mrs H M 1 00
Sheldon, Miss M.. 1 00
Shmead, Carrie 1 00
Shoemaker, Mr & Mrs L 2 00
Shotwell, H B....50 00
Simonds, Miss S A 1 00
Simons, Mrs E M 1 00
Singer, Mfg Co, N Y 25 00
—, Haverstraw 50
—, New Dorp 1 00
—, N Y C..... 2 00
Smith, Mrs Ella.... 1 00
Smith, Elias D....10 00
Smith, Mrs J P.... 2 00
Spinning, Mrs M A 50
Stannard, Mrs C.... 1 00
Stamford Mfg Co.10 00
Sterry, Geo E....10 00
Stewart, Mrs A.... 50
Stiles, Mrs Wm.... 1 00
Stickney, Jos 10 00
Storm, Mrs Annie 1 00
Stratton, Mrs O.... 1 00
Strong, Harriet E.10 00
Strong, Harriet E.10 00
Taylor, F S.....10 00
Terry, I T..... 5 00
Thompson, Chas H 1 00
Thompson, Mrs E. 1 00
Thorne, S, Jr.... 5 00
Tiffany & Co.....10 00
Tobey, Mrs John.... 1 00
Toothe, Wm 5 00
Twiss, Mrs J R.... 5 00
Twiss, Mrs J R.... 2 00
Vandkach, Miss W10 00
VanBuskirk, Mr.... 1 00
Watt, A M.....10 00
Walker, Isabel C.. 1 00
Washburn, H C.... 5 00
Washburn, John H25 00
Waterman, H L..50 00
Westfall, Mrs J H 1 00
Wheeler, Lydia 1 00
Wheeler, Mrs M.... 1 00
Ward, Mrs E H.... 1 00
Wolfe, Mrs Jno.... 1 00
Williams, Mrs G P 5 00
Williams, Mrs L..50 00
Wilson, Emma 1 00
Woolverton, Mrs W H 5 00
Young, H R..... 1 00
Zimmerman, M E.. 5 00
R & G Corset Co 5 00
Amerine, Mrs A.... 2 00
Dorothea, N Y C.. 1 00
Eliza, City 1 00
Ewelid, Gnondaga.. 1 00
Hidge 11 50
—, J H 25 00
J W M, Oswego.. 1 00
J W P, Penn Yan 1 00
K H, Albany 5 00
M A, Circleville.. 2 00
M D, Middletown. 1 00
M M B, Bklyn..... 1 00
M S, M & B, Bklyn 2 00
T R, Flushing.... 5 00
—, Batavia....25 00
—, Haverstraw 50
—, New Dorp 1 00
—, N Y C..... 2 00
Smith, Mrs Ella.... 1 00
For Christs Sake... 1 00
For Christs Sake, N Y City 1 00
For Christs Sake, N Y City..... 1 00
For Christs Sake, N Y City..... 1 00
For Christs Sake, N Y City

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 2, 1903

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

A BATTALION OF THRESHERS ON A FARM IN NORTHERN OKLAHOMA

Our · New · Claimant · for · Statehood

OKLAHOMA, "THE BEAUTIFUL LAND," ABOUT TO APPEAL FOR ADMISSION

SEVEN hundred thousand people will this year join in the appeal to Congress that Oklahoma be converted into a State. As a sufficient reason that it should be a part of the Union, with a power of franchise, the territory of Oklahoma offers this evidence:

Crops raised in 1903: Wheat, 50,000,000 bushels; cotton, 130,000 bales; corn, 75,000 bushels. Total value of the farm products in Oklahoma in 1903, $50,000,000.

Less than fourteen years ago, the entire tract of twenty-five million acres, now comprising Oklahoma, "The Beautiful Land," was a barren waste, over which the buffalo and the Indian roamed. No one wanted Oklahoma in the beginning, while hundreds of thousands are clamoring for its farms and its town property these days. Immigration has turned in that direction, and the three trunk lines entering the territory — Frisco System, Rock Island and Santa Fe—are running semi-monthly "homeseekers' excursions" into Oklahoma. The Union station at St. Louis is always crowded with those who are looking for homes out in the new territory.

Oklahoma is making, and has been making for five years, a strenuous fight for statehood. Political ambitions till now have hindered the territory from reaching that goal. Now, the masses have joined in the request that Oklahoma be admitted to the sisterhood of our commonwealths, and the request cannot much longer be denied.

Oklahoma was first opened to settlement April 22, 1889, and since that time several additional openings have occurred, increasing the territory in size and wealth. Last to be opened was the Kiowa and Comanche lands. Another free land rush will take place next year, with the opening of the pasture reserve, now leased to the cattle syndicates.

The growth of the territory has been so rapid, and its products so numerous and of such great value, that the actual facts about Oklahoma are apt to excite an expression of doubt. But to take a trip across the territory in harvest-time, and see the army of busy farmers gathering in the sheaves, would forever relieve one of such an impression. The population of Oklahoma in 1890 was 61,000; ten years later it reached 385,000, and to-day it is 700,000, and still growing. It is expected that the number of immigrants that will settle in Oklahoma this fall will reach 5,000. During the past year six hundred miles of new railroads have been built in the territory, making a total mileage of 2,000 miles. The railways have opened to commerce thousands of valuable farms, and placed the products of millions of acres near the marts of trade. One of the railroad branches is known as the "Alfalfa Route," as it goes through a section of central Oklahoma where a great deal of Alfalfa hay is grown.

There are over two hundred banks in the territory. In some towns in the grain belt, containing less than 300 people, there are two banks. These are needed to pay for the grain that is shipped to market. When the old Oklahoma country was thrown open to settlement in 1889, it was inadequate to accommodate the settlers. Oklahoma is to-day larger than Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New Jersey and Delaware combined. The territory contains 24,778,000 acres. A large number of the streams empty into the Arkansas and Red Rivers, and all flow from the northwest to the southeast. These streams are fed by springs and run during the entire year. The Red River, the South Canadian and Arkansas Rivers are all sandy beds During mid-day, in the hot summer months, the water disappears from the bed of the stream, but should a cloud hover over the sun an hour or so the streams run again, while at night they often run "bed full." A great deal of the farming land adjacent to these rivers has water beneath the surface at a depth of three or four feet. Much of the soil in Oklahoma is rich, black loam. It is roughly estimated that four-fifths of the soil is tillable. Most of the unavailable farming land lies in and around the Wichita mountains and the gypsum section of Greer county. But while Greer county contains 1,500,000 acres of land, only a little of it is filled with gypsum beds—the rest grows wheat at the rate of thirty-five bushels to the acre. In the new country—Kiowa and Comanche counties—many lumber yards have been opened recently and large quantities of walnut logs are shipped out of Anadarko. Some of these walnut logs are sold for $125 apiece. The timber found along the streams consists of walnut, oak, cedar, pecan, hickory and cottonwood. The nights are always cool and the heat of the day causes no fatalities or suffering. Sunstrokes are rare. The warmest days are in July. Hot days are always followed by cool nights.

Oklahoma farmers not only raise a great variety of products on their diversified farms, but they work twelve months in the year, putting in and gathering their crops. A farmer in Oklahoma can till just twice the same amount of ground he could cultivate in the East, and he can get his crops to market one month earlier. After the harvest, the wheat fields are usually sown to kaffir corn, which is cut and used as forage during the winter. Wheat is drilled into the fields after the kaffir corn has been cut, which is often as late as November 25. Cotton and wheat often are seen growing side by side, and both do well.

Considerable mineral is found throughout the territory, some of it very profitable, along the Wichita mountains. Coal is mined in the northern section; and oil has been discovered and is being removed by the hundreds of barrels, from holes from sixty to two hundred feet deep, near Hobart.

Photo by Missouri Pacific Railway Co.

CLEARING UP THE LAST LOAD OF THE SEASON

The Wichita mountains, famous in history, are steadily becoming popular as a summer resort for Oklahomans. Several small summer resorts have sprung up in the well-wooded mountains, beside cool streams, and these are patronized by Oklahoma farmers and business men in the midsummer season. Farmers travel

CONCLUDED ON PAGE 729

The American Pulpit

INTELLECTUAL CHRISTIANITY

A Sermon by Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, D.D.

OF TOPEKA, KANS.

TEXT—"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy mind." LUKE 10: 27

THE word intellectual is not found in the Bible, but the word "mind" occurs many times. We will use the word intellectual in this sermon as the Bible uses the word mind, in the sense of the power of thought and judgment and knowledge which is so applied to our earthly condition as to become real wisdom. Intellectual strength in the development of a Christian life is necessary, and we will try to show how the Christian may strengthen the powers of his mind so as to glorify his Saviour and increase the greatness of his kingdom. In the annunciation of different ways of increasing intellectual strength let us consider two points: 1. The intellectual strength of Jesus. 2. The need of intellectual strength in Jesus' disciples.

(1) The intellectual strength of Jesus. One of the most interesting things said of Jesus is this: "And Jesus advanced in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man." There was certainly a very early beginning in Jesus of human wisdom. The incident of his debate with the doctors in the temple when he was only twelve years old shows this. But the evidence of it is found in his teaching more than anywhere else. The subtlest, strongest minds of his time faced him repeatedly with hard questions, tried to entangle him in his talk, and he always triumphed. They were amazed at his teaching. They said he taught with authority, and not as the scribes. They exclaimed, "How hath this man this wisdom, having never learned?" It was said on one occasion, "And no man after that durst ask him any question," because he had so completely silenced all objections.

Christ's intellectual strength may also be measured by his ability to address such mixed multitudes of people and hold them astonished at his words. On one occasion his enemies sent soldiers to arrest him. But when they came to the place where he was delivering an address, they were so carried away with his eloquence that they not only did not arrest him, they actually went back to his enemies and gave as an excuse, "never man so spake."

But the greatest proof of Jesus' intellectual strength lies in the fact that the strongest minds of history have respected him, and have been willing to acknowledge his greatness. It is not alone the goodness of Jesus that men like Gladstone and Napoleon admire. It is the high quality of intellect that Jesus possessed that excites these men's respect. Christianity has powerfully influenced art, science, discovery, literature, statesmanship, music, and every great activity of civilized man. This would not be a fact if Jesus had been an ignorant good man. It is because the Master was a master mind that the world of mind has been willing to kneel at his feet and call him Master. And we may define intellectual strength as not a knowledge of facts, but the habit of thinking rightly on great subjects, and then acting rightly on them. No one ever approached Jesus in this particular power. His mind was always clear and always doing the right thing. The intelligence of Jesus was the intelligence of right thinking on all subjects.

(2) The need of intellectual strength on the part of Jesus' disciples. In the first place, there is need of intellectual strength to study and interpret aright the great truths of revelation. Even Paul's mind was not great enough to sound the depths of the Gospel. The subjects that centre about the Cross of Christ tax the powers of the most gifted intellects. The Christian needs to be able to state the teachings of Jesus with accuracy and clearness. In this connection the Christians in our Sunday Schools need to be able to understand and teach with intelligence and lucidity the Bible as a text-book. Here is where being good is not enough to qualify a teacher. A man might be very good and agreeable, but if he did not know Latin from Hebrew, he would not be the man to teach Latin in school. And a disciple of Christ might be very devout, but if he did not study the Bible and understand its teachings he would not be the proper person to teach the Bible. There never was greater need than right now, that Christians be able to state clearly and intelligently the reasons for their faith. And the Christian faith is not a shallow but a profound thing. Christianity needs brains on the part of its followers in order to exhibit its greatest glory.

Then again, the Christian needs intellectual strength to meet the problems of social life that await solution. It is useless for us to attempt to evade the fact that some of the most serious, we might even say all of the great questions of the age wait for the action of Christian people. The question of temperance legislation and settlements between employers and employed, the question of foreign population and race difficulties, and municipal reform, all depend upon the action of Christian people. And here is where the largest possible intelligence is needed. These questions call for the wisest leadership. It is not enough to be good; men must be wise, also, in order to shape the policy of a Christian nation. The enemy has brains. There is plenty of shrewdness and intelligence among the whisky men, the political bosses, the enemies of Christian order. An inferior sort of intelligence will not answer. We need strong, able, profound men intellectually in Congress and State legislatures and in city councils. The Christian is not fighting feeble opposition. He needs all his armor on. He needs to know as well as to believe. He needs to be able to beat Satan on his own ground.

"Finally be strong in the Lord and in the strength of his might. Put on the whole armor of God that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For our wrestling is not against flesh and blood but against the principalities, against the powers, against the world rulers of this darkness, against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places."

We are ready, now that we have considered the fact of Jesus' great intellectual strength and our own need of the same, to ask, How shall we increase our intelligence? What are some of the ways in which we may equip our minds and strengthen our faculties so as to be intellectually strong as Christians. It must be understood in what follows that I am not attempting to announce a set of cast-iron rules by which a person may become a great scholar or statesman or orator. But I am simply suggesting a variety of methods within reach of all of us by which we may help ourselves to strengthen the minds which God gave us to use to his honor. I mention, first, as one of the ways open to us to gain intellectual strength—

PASTOR SHELDON'S CHURCH AT TOPEKA, KANS.

1. A right use of reading. In the beginning, I firmly believe that the foundation of every young man's or woman's reading should rest on solid structure of familiarity of the great books of the world. A good deal depends upon this. The formation of habits of right thinking, and writing and speech, may be traced to a knowledge of the great fountains of thought and expression. Foremost among the great books of the world I would place the Bible. Not because I am a minister, but because I am a man. Charles Dana, editor of the New York Sun, in an address on qualifications for success in newspaper work, placed the Bible first, as necessary to a correct and thorough knowledge of English, and said "every reporter and newspaper worker ought to read it and know it, for its style and variety." The Bible, is the first and best, and most necessary book in the world. It stands at the head of any true list of the world's great books. But there are other great books we ought to know. Shakespeare's works, not all of them, but some, may truly be counted foundation stones in the structure of good reading. Plays like "King Lear," and "Macbeth," and "Richard the Third," and "Othello," contain so much that is a part of the fibre of humanity, that we ought to know them. Shakespeare needs to be read with discrimination. Some of the plays attributed to him, bound up in his complete works, are not helpful. I would not advise any young reader to sit down to the reading of all he could find in such a volume. But Shakespeare as a part of our English tongue and thought, is foundation matter in reading.

Milton's Paradise Lost, and poems, easily claims a large place in the groundwork of reading for all young life; as well as Victor Hugo's masterpiece, Les Miserables, which is a world in itself, and when read with the love of God and man in the heart, is almost an education in itself. Translations of Faust, and the Divina Commedia are to be had, so that they can be read by those who cannot translate the originals for themselves. I do not mean to be understood as saying that every reader ought to go through these great works, word for word; but I mean that, as a good solid basis for future reading, it is almost necessary to know something of the Bible, Shakespeare, Milton, Victor Hugo, Goethe, Dante, Wordsworth, Tennyson and Whittier, and the like. The master minds in literature are easily determined by their revelation of humanity; and whatever else we read, or do not read, we ought to know at least the greatest minds, as those minds have gone into the printed page.

What of present-day books? Supposing we have drunk deep draughts from the fountain sources of good thought, what shall we read of the vast amount of printed matter to be found to-day?

Shall we read the newspapers? By all means. But with discrimination and judgment. In my opinion, it would be a very great damage to any young man's or woman's mind, for example, to read every week some of the great metropolitan dailies, especially Sunday editions. I am expressing myself plainly, because of need of practical illustrations. The reading of such newspapers, with their accompanying horrible (in many cases indecent), pictures, cannot but be productive of evil results on the mind. A person who has any desire for intellectual strength, cannot read such a mass of all sorts of "stuff" (there is no other word to use by which to characterize this Sunday paper-writing), without weakening his mind and soiling his thought. The news of the world, information that adds something to our real stock of knowledge, whatever will strengthen and purify our minds, that is what we have the right to demand from the press. And it has no right to give the public anything that will harm or debase the reader. We need to learn the careful reader's habit of choice or discrimination, and read only that matter in the papers that will be of service to us, avoiding the prize fights and the long detailed accounts of crime and scandal that fill many of our newspapers, which seem like great sewers, bearing pollution and disease and death out of the cesspools of the world right into Christian homes, and saturating with their reeking filth the meal-time, the conversation of the family, and even the hour of family devotion on Sunday morning. Let the Christian young people of this country protest with indignation against the besotted "enterprise" of the modern newspaper (in too many instances) where it outrages every sense of refinement and intellectual strength of purpose by catering to what it calls the "public demand." And let us insist upon a higher, purer, more Christian standard of newspaper matter and manner. There never was a wider field open to the brave intelligence of modern times than is open to-day in journalism. There never was a field where power and enthusiasm could do either more harm or good.

What of the magazines? Their name is legion. Read only the best. The money that a good many young people spend for chewing gum in a year would put into their hands half a dozen of the best magazines. It is astonishing what can be bought for ten cents. A large number of these magazines very often contain the very latest and best articles in science or discovery, or art, written by good, vigorous, capable men and women. Many a boy and girl in this city is spending foolishly for candy, or some other physical pleasure that is not necessary to happiness, enough money to subscribe to half a dozen magazines for a year. Many of them of a really high literary and artistic value? The cigars that boys often smoke would purchase a good beginning for a splendid magazine library. The cigars certainly do not add anything to the intellectual strength of the mind. In a great many cases they stupify and lower the stimulus of a first-rate intelligence. It seems great pity that with such easy ways of helping ourselves in this age of cheap printing to an intelligent nowledge of the world's best literature, we should go ithout what we might have, and too often get what is ot necessary and even harmful. I know workingmen who do not take anything to read but one daily paper. They will not subscribe to a magazine on account of the xpense. Yet they smoke away half a dozen good maga ines every year in a dirty pipe. There are young men who think it is paying out a good deal to give $2 or $3 or a year's subscription to a respectable and very inter sting monthly, who have on their tables boxes of tobacco hat cost twice as much.

The Religious Weekly

There are Christian families, too, where the daily apers constitute all the reading matter for the entire amily. No religious or Christian weekly paper is ever aken. And often it is thought to be too much expense. et in most cases a wise saving of unnecessaries would ut at least one good journal besides the daily into the ome. Intellectual strength certainly must feed upon omething stronger and better than a daily paper. A oy or girl brought up on daily paper, and not much of nything else, will be lacking the stimulus which always omes from a knowledge of the best writers of modern ife. By all means, my friends, let us be something nore than newspaper, or even magazine, readers. I don't hink there is much difficulty in telling what is whole ome in the printed matter of the day. What we vant when we read may be instruction, recreation, nspiration; but in all cases it must be pure, strong, well written, helpful, leaving the mind better, and giving it larger, more useful power.

What about modern fiction? Shall we read it? By all means. It is an age of story-telling, and much of it s beautifully done. Such books as Beside the Bonny Briar Bush, and Little Rivers, and The Stickit Minister, and A Window in Thrums, and Jack the Fisherman, and The Bird's Christmas Carol, and The Story of Patsy and Titus, and others like them, are stories that have added to the tenderness and love and thoughtfulness of the world. Nowhere, as in the reading of genuine stories, do our minds obtain such lasting impressions. Jesus taught, very often using the story form. The Prodigal Son, The Rich Man and Lazarus, The Marriage Feast, The Wise and Foolish Virgins, are all brief stories that are told to make impressive and vivid the great truths at their centre. Hall Caine's novels all deal with some great truth of life, notably the truth of retribution. The Christian and The Manxman will live in the lives of thousands long after Trilby has been forgotten, like some popular Bowery tune that, with its catchy rattle and jingle, is whistled by a bootblack for a week only to be succeeded by the next jingle. Here is where the reader who is reading the best books will learn to judge aright of their value. It is true that certain books appeal peculiarly to certain minds. But the really great and good books of any age contain something of value and interest to all healthy minds alike. And may be found in this. Does the reading of this story leave me purer, stronger, more interested in the world, with wider, nobler ambitions, with more love for human kind, with higher aspirations for daily toil. That is not too severe a test to apply to our reading of modern fiction. I believe a book that does not answer such a test as that will in time cease to be of any real value to a healthy intellect.

The Test of Modern Fiction

But in the world of books we cannot linger too long in one thought of what will make us stronger men and women intellectually. Only, as we leave this point, just this word. Read the best, and read a great deal. But read with thought and judgment and a definite purpose. Life is too short here and too long hereafter to spoil it with pouring through the mind the silly, weak, foolish, harmful little sentimental love stories that flood the market, and too often drown out the rich life of the boy or girl who gets caught in its whirl. It is right and wholesome to read love stories, and people will write them and others will read them as long as intelligence and printing presses endure. But read the best, the strongest, the purest. For there are such. Bacon says that "Reading maketh a full man." But there is a great difference between a bag bulging out with dirty rags and a bag that is bulging with gold nuggets. If you fill your mind fill it with the golden thought of both past and present.

2. Another help to intellectual strength is writing. I don't mean keeping a diary and putting in it an account of your feelings. I wonder if any boy or girl does that nowadays. I do not know of any. Yet even that kind of writing has its value, and many of the useful strong minds of the world have kept such journals and owed much to the habit of expressing themselves in writing even when it was not intended for the public eye. But I mean writing as if you meant it for publication. Nothing is quite so stimulating to a healthful mind as writing out one's thoughts in a readable form. Sometimes you hear authors talking as if the main object of writing was to appear in print and get large sums for articles. Whereas the intellectual delight of constructing an article, an essay, or a story may be one of the purest joys a young man or woman ever knows.

Rules for Conversation

3. Another help to intellectual strength, is public speech. Under this head I would place conversation. Good talkers are rare. The habit of cultivating conversation, is a habit stimulating and strengthening to the mind. It is astonishing how small is the range of subjects most of us possess. What has been called the art of conversation is very little studied. It really belongs to the arts that please, for good conversation is an unselfish attempt to be agreeable, put others at ease, as well as enlarge the sweep of one's own gifts. But the practice of public speech for the purpose of persuading people, or informing them, or even entertaining them, is a practice full of intellectual strength. The members of the Endeavor Society have a splendid opportunity here to help themselves to a power which may prove to be of untold value in after life. There are certain good rules to obey in public speech which we do well to remember. First, have something to say. This is absolutely necessary. Second, say it because you believe it and want others to believe it with you. And third, after saying it, stop. As in writing, almost the entire value to the strength of the mind in speaking consists in the fact that one has a real message to deliver to an audience. I know of nothing quite equal to the joy of looking humanity in the face, and giving it a message that burns to be spoken because the speaker is not able to keep silent over a truth which he wants the world to feel with him. And such a joy always carries with it an intellectual growth. The mind of man never rose to higher levels of thought or feeling than when exercising itself in the divine exercise of persuading humanity to a higher life.

4. Another aid to intellectual strength is good companionship. If it is true that "a man is known by the company he keeps," it certainly is true that the intellectual vigor of any person is increased by the best companionship. An athlete never learns to excel in any sport until he contends with either his equals or his superiors. It is good to hear the best lecturers and orators, to meet as many noble people as you possibly can in a lifetime. And the choice of friends, which is often a voluntary choice with young men and women, is something which may influence all the after life.

In the great companionship of man and wife, the man should be careful to see something besides fine clothes and society manners. We are all more or less dependent on our surroundings for our growth and it stands to reason that the difference between success and failure between happiness and bitterness lies in the friends and companions who are to be so much to us in the way of daily influence. Strong minds always energize others who are in sympathy. Put great men in one another's company and they will become still greater. More than half the real value of a college course consists in the companionship of students who are an inspiration to one another. In the classroom, in the debating society, in the contests, at the contact of mind with mind that gives added strength to all. One of the great sources of intellectual growth is

Friendship with Strength

The close companionship of fishermen and day laborers with the Master mind of the universe brought an uneducated group of men into a knowledge of life and an ability to grasp the greatest truths of the universe. Such mastery came to them through their personal knowledge of Jesus, and so far as we can see could have come to them in no other way.

We have not attempted to touch on all the ways of gaining intellectual strength. The reading, the writing, the speaking, the friendship are but a few ways of making up the fullgrown man. Healthful study in all the great lives of research and thought which have lasted men's busy minds all through the ages will always strengthen the mind of the Christian. But after we have named all the possible ways in which men may add to his intellectual strength we must add the continual habit of right thinking. Right thinking always puts God at the head of the universe, and always considers the Kingdom of God first in all affairs. "The fear of the Lord is wisdom and the knowledge of God is understanding." Intellectual strength is not simply knowing things. It is thinking right on all that fill the world of a loving God. And the Christian, of all men, is one who rises into the fullgrown man as he rises into the thought of loving his Father with all his mind. The man who thinks right loves God. And the man who loves God is intellectually a giant, no matter how little he may know of some things. Let us strengthen our intellects by all the means in our reach. They are all divinely given us to use. But let us remember that after we have done all is to love God with all our mind. The Christian is the strongest man intellectually because Christ was the greatest mind of the world. And he was the greatest mind because all his intellectual powers were obedient to one law—it was the law of love to the Father.

The Object of It All

What can we do better than to close with Paul's thought of what constitutes human wisdom. These words may well stand for all young life as the key to all intellectual strength. "For the word of the Cross is to them that are perishing, foolishness; but unto us who are being saved it is the power of God. For it is written I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and the prudence of the prudent will I reject. Where is the wise? Where is the scribe? Where is the disputer of this world? For seeing that in the wisdom of God the world through its wisdom knew not God, it was God's good pleasure through the foolishness of the preaching to save them that believe. Seeing that Jews ask for signs and Greeks seek after wisdom [i. e., human knowledge]: but we preach Christ crucified unto the Jews a stumbling block and unto Gentiles foolishness; but unto them that are called both Jews and Greeks Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God."

The intellect that does not love God as the supremest limit of its exercise is foolish. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy mind."

CUTTING WHEAT WITH A HEADER IN WOODS COUNTY

A HERD OF CATTLE ON AN OKLAHOMA STOCK FARM

OUR NEW CLAIMANT FOR STATEHOOD

Continued from Page 727

a great deal after the harvest in early July. A novel mountain industry is raising pure-bred Angora goats for the market. Herds of these goats may be seen on the mountain sides.

Ranching in Oklahoma has changed greatly, and while the herds number about 1,000,000 head this year, there are no vast ranges as of old. Each farmer raises from fifty to two hundred steers, and fattens them on the forage he grows, and sells them at a net profit of fifty per cent. Farmers are rapidly tearing away the old shacks that were their homes in pioneer times, and new modern frame dwellings are seen all over the territory. In the towns, one sees many neat houses, some of brick and stone, that would do credit to any Eastern city. Quanah Parker, a chief of the Comanche Indians, living near Lawton, has a home containing fifteen rooms, water-works and steam heating. Many small orchards have already commenced to bear. In old Oklahoma—the first portion of the territory opened—there are thousands of acres of apples, pears, peaches and grapes. Watermelons are raised and shipped out by the carload from Guthrie, the capital. Peanuts and canteloups are a special crop in Lincoln county, and one farmer near Ingalls raised 350 acres of watermelons this year for the seeds. The day of the "bad man" and the outlaws has passed away in Oklahoma. "Bad" Indians, too, have disappeared, and the great territory, lately an unknown land, is rapidly becoming one of the prosperous garden spots of our land.

WILLIAM R. DRAPER.

It is the Black Belt's Best Hope

IN the "Black Belt," of Georgia, is found the largest colored population of any section of the Union. The negro population of Georgia is 1,043,813, which is larger than the aggregate negro population of all the Northern States. In the seacoast counties of Georgia is found the largest proportion of negroes to whites. This is the "Black Belt," and here is situated the Georgia State Industrial College, five miles from Savannah, the only city in Georgia having over half its population negroes. For almost thirty years after the Emancipation Proclamation, there was no industrial or normal school in this section.

PROF. R. R. WRIGHT

Established in 1891, the Georgia State Industrial College opened with only eight students. It grew rapidly, and soon had to limit the number of students, because of lack of accommodations. At present it has 534 students, but last year it refused admission to more than a hundred. Notwithstanding the fact that in this Black Belt the women outnumber the men, there is no adequate provision for girls in this institution. They were excluded for many years, and in the past four years have been admitted simply as day students.

In this unique Black Belt College, instruction is given in carpentry, blacksmithing, wheel-wrighting, painting, sign-writing, glazing, bricklaying, plastering, shoemaking, tailoring, dairying, mechanical drawing, farming and gardening, all for boys. The aim is to educate the negro to be a good, self-supporting citizen. The college has already sent out a number of mechanics and farmers throughout Georgia and adjoining States. Among its graduates are a wheelwright and blacksmith in Albany, a carpenter and contractor in Savannah, a coach painter in St. Augustine, Fla., a bricklayer in De Witt, a blacksmith and a shoemaker in Jacksonville, Fla., a tailor in Girard, Ala., and another in Brunswick, Ga. One graduate teaches painting in the Florida State School, another recently superintended the construction of a brick building costing $18,000. On the college campus, three residences have been built by the students themselves, also an auditorium seating a thousand persons, and a two-story industrial building. From all over the district in which the school is located, work constantly comes in, giving the students practical training, and offering admirable opportunities for self-help. Much work is done by senior students under personal contract, and this has extended from the building of shelves for books to the erection of a neat village church and parsonage.

For the limited number of girls who obtain admission under the present straitened circumstances, training in dairying, dressmaking and plain sewing is given. Every student is expected to learn a trade, so that he may be able to support himself, and thus be of positive use to the community and the State.

The college now finds the need of two other industrial departments—cooking and laundering. In the South, fully nine-tenths of the cooking, and practically all of the laundering is done by the negroes. The old Southern cook became famous many years ago, and now the complaint is often heard that as these old mothers or fathers of ante-bellum training pass away, no one arises to take their place. It is for this reason that President Wright is anxious to add these departments. As the number of students increases this demand becomes more imperative.

Besides its industrial branches, the Georgia College also has a literary course, and from its normal department have graduated about a hundred young men and women, who, with few exceptions, are now teaching in the common schools of Georgia, striving to uplift their fellows. Others are in business and a few are in the pulpit. The whole tone of the college is religious, but not sectarian. Since its establishment there has been but one student to graduate who was not a Christian.

President R. R. Wright, the head of the Industrial College, is now in New York, endeavoring to raise funds to enlarge and better equip the work, so that it may in a greater measure meet the demands of the negroes of Southeast Georgia, who are practically confined to this one institution.

Dr. Wright is endorsed by many of the leading men of his own and other States, including the present and two former Governors of Georgia, Mr. George Foster Peabody of New York and others, besides many prominent advocates of negro education throughout the country. Any reader of this journal who desires to aid this most deserving cause or to secure further information on the subject, should address President Wright, Georgia State Industrial College, Savannah, Ga., who will reply to all inquiries and acknowledge all contributions.

COLORED STUDENTS BUILDING THEIR OWN SCHOOLHOUSE

GIDEONS IN CONVENTION

THE fourth annual Convention of the Gideons was held in Indianapolis recently, and was largely attended. As the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD already know, the Gideons are Christian "commercial travelers." The only conditions of membership are that each must be a member of some regular orthodox church, wear the emblematic Gideon button, and pay a nominal membership fee. The object of the Order is purely philanthropic and may be expressed in a few words: influence all for righteousness, scatter seeds of kindness, and assist fellow-traveling men to lives of honesty, purity and love.

Delegates were present at the Convention from nearly every State in the Union, many coming thousands of miles. The Chicago delegation chartered a special car, and instead of the trip being monopolized by "drummers' yarns," song services were held, and a number of stirring speeches wrought the fellowship and kindred feelings to the highest pitch.

The first day's session was devoted to business, closing in the evening with a song, prayer and thanksgiving service for Gideons and the auxiliary (Gideons' wives and families only). This service was full of power, there being from six to ten on their feet at a time, all waiting to speak for Christ.

Next day reports were received from the secretary, treasurer, publisher, auditing committee, field workers in different States and Territories and national superintendents. President F. A. Garlick, of Chicago, delivered the annual address, the revised constitution was adopted and the annual election held.

Evening sessions were held in the Roberts Park M. E. Church. One feature of these was the "Gideon" social. Each Gideon was allowed half a minute to testify. Not a second was wasted, large numbers standing awaiting their turn. On Sunday, practically all the pulpits of the Protestant churches of Indianapolis were thrown open to the Gideons, who delivered talks and addresses that were well received, and clearly demonstrated that the grace of God in the heart "will enable a commercial traveler to hold his position, his customers and his audience as well." In all fifty-eight pulpits were filled and a number of missions and street meetings supplied with speakers.

The number taking voluntary part in these services exceeded any previous meeting. One man was so impressed that he said, "If Christian commercial travelers could enjoy such seasons of refreshing, I want to enlist in the Lord's work at once." Another said to one of the Gideons: "What is this? I have heard of commercial men being drummers, drunkards, and what not, but never have I seen a religious meeting of such power being conducted by traveling men. It is wonderful." The Gideon replied: "It is very easily explained—it is the grace of God in the heart that makes the difference."

The closing service in Indianapolis was held in Tomlinson Hall, and was a monster demonstration, nearly all the churches dispensing with their evening services so as to allow their people to attend. The vast audience listened with delight to the two sweet Gospel singers, Messrs. Louthain, of Chicago, and Card, of St. Louis, who had charmed every day of the Convention by their music. Two addresses of twenty minutes each by Gideons were followed by the charge to the new officers-elect, six trustees, president, vice-president and treasurer, and the president's address of acceptance. In the concluding service all Gideons and auxiliaries joined hands, forming a circle reaching all around the hall, and sang "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," and "God Be With You Till We Meet Again."

The Convention adjourned to meet at Minneapolis in October, 1904.

A Mother's Gift

I have renewed my subscription so as to be able to present your precious Red-Letter Bible as a gift to an unconverted only son. This will be the third Red-Letter Bible I have had the privilege of presenting as gifts. I am thankful for the many good and precious benefits derived from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. M. L. Y.

New York.

The Red-Letter Bible, with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD one year, $3.

A Little Girl's Gift to Mont-Lawn

I am a little girl, ten years' old. My name is Lucille Pool. I live in the country, and have a big lawn to play on. I am going to send three dollars for one poor little girl to go to Mont-Lawn, and have a good time. I got fifty cents for being a good girl, for not whispering in school. I wear my old hat to Sunday School this summer, so I could get enough money to send one poor little girl to Mont-Lawn. Next year I will try to save enough money for two little girls. Please send me the little girl's name and I will write to her.

Upper Sandusky, O. LUCILLE POOL.

"THE TEMPLE OF THE MUSES"

"ALTARS OF THE HIGH PLACE," PETRA

AN IDOLATROUS PILLAR AT PETRA

TRADITIONAL TOMB OF AARON

MY VISIT TO PETRA'S TEMPLES

By PROF. GEORGE L. ROBINSON, PH.D.

OUR journey of thirty-three days through the Peninsula of Sinai (fully described in previous articles), being successfully accomplished, my two companions tarried in Jerusalem while I made a trip of nineteen days to Petra. It required no little courage to start out again after the narrow escapes of the desert, and especially to do so alone, through what is known to be the most dangerous portion of the East. Nevertheless, something impelled me to make the attempt. No one of the native dragomans available at the time was willing to escort me; but fortunately the Rev. Archibald Forder of Jerusalem, who had formerly labored as a missionary seven years in Moab, consented to go along, provided that I would adapt myself to the native mode of travel, leave all unnecessary equipment behind, and throw myself with him upon the hospitality of the Arabs. I consented, and we hastily made the few necessary preparations for the journey and were off.

. . . .

We left Jerusalem at half-past one o'clock, April 24, 1900, crossed the Kedron, passed around the brow of the Mount of Olives, and followed the newly built carriage road down to Jericho. There we spent the night in the modest but comfortable "Jordan Hotel." The next morning we bade farewell to the last vestige of civilization, crossed the Jordan by the bridge a short distance above the fords, turned southeast across the plain of Shittim, and began the ascent of Pisgah's slopes in the direction of Mount Nebo. At five o'clock we were near the summit, from which Moses viewed the Promised Land, and an hour later we had arrived at Medeba, a place mentioned five times in the Old Testament (cf. Num. 21:30, Josh. 13:9, 16, I. Chron. 19:17, Isa. 15:2). This city has recently become famous because of the discovery, in 1895, of a large and richly colored mosaic map of Egypt, Sinai, Palestine and Mesopotamia, which is thought to date from as early as the fifth century, A. D. We were housed by a good Christian man, belonging to the Greek orthodox faith, named Khalil, who did everything within his power to make us comfortable, but, unfortunately for us, his house was alive with insects, and we slept but little.

The next day we struck out in an easterly direction across the Haji, or Pilgrim's route, from Damascus to Mecca, in order to visit a most beautiful, but only partially completed palace at Mashita, which was probably built by some Persian prince after the time of Mohammed. Its architecture is unique, resembling that of the Alhambra in Spain. Mashita is situated about four hours' distance from Medeba. En route we saw an admirable illustration of Joel's vision of the locusts. Swarms had settled down by the millions upon the standing grain. The Fellaheen of Moab were out trying to drive them away, but their efforts were futile. When we came back an immense flock of storks had gathered, and were eagerly devouring the pest. The Arabs call the stork Abu Hasad, or "Father of the Harvest," and so they are.

A second and almost sleepless night was spent at the home of Khalil, and the following morning we set out in a southerly direction from Medeba toward the Arnon. This is one of the deepest and broadest and grandest watercourses in all Palestine. "Few boundary lines," says Canon Tristram in his Land of Moab (p. 125), "are more clearly laid down than that of the Arnon dividing Reuben and Moab" (Num. 21:26). Luxuriant oleanders grow in rich profusion along the stream, while the stream itself is literally alive with fish. We passed the night in the open upon its right bank, and slept unmolested by insects or robbers.

Another day brought us across the rich, high table-land of Moab to Kerak, its capital city—the ancient Kir of Scripture. This city is most admirably situated for self-defense, being surrounded practically on every side by a deep wady, or valley, the only neck of land which connects it with the neighboring hills being artificially intercepted by a deep and impassable moat. Two well-preserved castles, dating from the period of the Crusades, stand at opposite ends of the city. The three original tunnel entrances, which were cut through the mother rock and used in ancient times as the only means of approach, are still employed by the inhabitants as entrances to the city. We spent a Sabbath at Kerak and attended Divine service at the Church of England mission.

Through the tact of Mr. Forder and the kindness of his Turkish friend, the Pasha of Damascus, who had sent official advice to the Kaimakam, or Governor, of Kerak, we were supplied with two Ottoman soldiers, who were commanded to escort us on our journey through the dangerous region of Edom. These soldiers were an immense satisfaction, as they protected us against the ruthless Arabs of Petra, who usually plunder all those who venture to visit their district. We even escaped blackmail, and were permitted to stay at Petra as long as we chose.

Leaving Kerak, the first day brought us across the brook Zered to Tafile, or Tophel of Deut. 1:1. On the second, we passed near Bozrah, and were reminded of that familiar passage in Isa. 63:1, "Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah?" That night we slept in the valley below Shobek, a little walled city perched on a hill-top and reminding one of an Arab fez. Another good half-day's traveling brought us to the Rock City of Petra, the capital of the sons of Esau, the depressed rock fortress of Mount Seir.

There is but one Petra. The Arabs call it Wady Musa, or "Valley of Moses," because of its supposed associations with the great Sheikh of the Exodus. A little stream of water flows down through the valley, having cut for itself a deep gorge, called the Sik, which is the remarkable natural feature of the place. This gorge provides the only easy approach to Petra. It is over a mile long, bounded symmetrically on both sides by almost perpendicular rocks of the most exquisite coloring, from one to two hundred feet high, which, at certain points, are scarcely more than twelve feet apart.

On coming out into the open depression where the city is situated, which is about three quarters of a mile long from north to south, by a quarter of a mile broad from east to west, the first object to greet the eye is the famous Khuzneh, or Temple of the Muses, which is cut out of the deep rose and chocolate colored rocks, and stands about seventy-five feet high from the ground to the urn which adorns its apex. A little farther down the Wady, after passing many curiously carved porticos to rock dwellings and tomb-like caverns, there is an immense theatre with thirty-three tiers of seats and capable of accommodating at least three thousand spectators. The valley at this point begins to broaden.

In a few minutes the whole depression is visible, its sandy bottom scattered here and there with the ruins of an ancient palace, a church, a triumphal arch, bridges and temples. About one mile northwest of these and situated considerably higher up, there is the so-called Deir, or monastery, rock hewn, from the roof of which it is possible to obtain a good view of Jebel Haroun, or Mount Hor, three miles to the southwest, the traditional burial place of Aaron, the high priest. The entire depression, bounded by honeycombed rocks of red and pink sandstone towering from two to six hundred feet above the valley, was strangely weird, yet fascinating, for here once lived the Troglodytes or cave dwellers of Edom, the sons of Esau, against whom Isaiah, Jeremiah and Obadiah directed so many prophetic warnings.

Before leaving Petra it was our good fortune to make a discovery. On the top of one of the highest peaks surrounding the city, we found what seems to have been the principal "high place" or sanctuary of the Sons of Esau. It consists of a court lying on the points of the compass, 47 x 20 feet in size, cut out of the solid rock: two altars: a pool or laver of purification: a rock-cut stairway as an approach, and two pillars—all in a most perfect state of preservation, and confirming the only two hints which the Old Testament give us of Edom's religious practices, viz., that they worshiped more than one God (cf. I. Kings 11:1, II. Chron. 25:14,20). (For a fuller description of this discovery, see the Biblical World for January, 1901.)

On our return from Petra to Jerusalem we were disposed to cross the Arabah, or deep hollow which separates East Palestine from Palestine proper, at the south end of the Dead Sea. This was another hazardous undertaking, as here are situated the "slime pits" spoken of in the Bible. About thirty little rivulets empty themselves into the south end of the Dead Sea, whose beds are so soft and wary that it is next to impossible to cross them, especially for burdened animals. Donkeys have been known to sink so deeply into these mud pits that they could not be recovered, going down and never again coming up. It was only after several hours of hard experiences that we reached the Hebron side of the Arabah depression. We were devoutly thankful for our deliverance, but now appreciate better the Bible statements contained in Gen. 14, wherein we read of Chedorlaomer's victory over the kings of Sodom and Gomorrah, who fell in the slime pits of the vale of Siddim (see also Josh. 10:10-11, and II. Sam. 8:13, which records David's victory over 18,000 Syrians in the Valley of Salt, and II. Kings 14:7 in which Amaziah is reported to have slain 10,000 Edomites in the same valley.

THE CORINTHIAN TOMB AT PETRA KHALIL, OUR HOST "COURT OF THE HIGH PLACE"

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIÉ, ASSOCIATE EDITOR — LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor — G. H. SANDISON, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.60 a year, in advance.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Expiration of Subscriptions.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter

The Leaven of Righteousness

TOLSTOI, the old Russian cynic-philosopher, utters some wholesome, if bitter, truths concerning America. From certain indications, which he apparently accepts as infallible, he concludes that the great Western Republic is traveling fast on the road to disruption. His pessimism will permit him to discover little hope in any direction for the future of this country.

Tolstoi judges us from what he reads about us, and from what he learns by contact with Americans traveling in Europe. This sort of knowledge really conveys no reliable basis. It tells little or nothing of Americans as a people; nor does it afford the observer sufficient ground to form an intelligent idea of the mind of the great body of American citizens, who, in the last resort, are the real ruling power in this nation, and who, if they will, can sweep away all obstacles that may stand in the way of national progress. It is doubtful if any outsider, who has never lived here, can understand the intense love of our people for the Republic, and their devotion to the principles upon which it was founded. This patriotism does not decline with the passing generations. Education fosters the love of liberty, and there is no better safeguard against tyranny than an educated and patriotic common people.

It is pointed out by those European critics, that the fact that we have no distinctive national art, or music, or literature, is corroborative evidence of national decline. If we may judge from the history of other nations, it indicates the reverse. We simply have not reached that stage of development. In the coming years, when we are nearer to commercial and industrial maturity, the love of art and culture will find opportunity for growth and expansion. In other lands these have arisen only through centuries of slow and assiduous cultivation.

We must look in another direction to find the real dangers to the republic. Among these are the prevalence of official corruption in State and nation; the growth of an aristocracy of the "idle rich," living lives of shallowness and folly; the increase of the drink traffic among both sexes and all conditions of society, and the characteristic extravagance of people of all classes, which impels them to a mad scramble for money to supply the reckless waste. But we do not regard as justifiable, in any sense, the charge that the American people, as a nation, are worshipers of the golden Moloch, the money-god, whose service demands the sacrifice of much that is noble in national and individual character. There is, fortunately, a very large proportion of Americans who have never "bowed the knee" to mammon-worship—a vast contingent of well-doers, who live clean, honorable, simple, helpful lives, and who are full of quick sympathy for others. We speak of what we and many others know, when we say that there is in this land, a great host of God's true people, who stand ever ready to do his will.

This is the "leaven of righteousness" that will save the nation, and through whose influence, under the Divine blessing, the ultimate reformation in national character will yet be accomplished.

Reverence for Man

THE most careless of us is apt to be impressed by magnitude and rarity. When we see the great vine at Hampton Court, and begin to take count of its innumerable clusters; or that great rose-tree in Holland, which has been known to bear six thousand roses in one season, we say, "how wonderful it is!" and make memorandum of it in our note-book. In the same way we pick out some soldier or statesman, or philanthropist, some author or musician, and salute his name with astonishment and admiration. It is an easy thing to persuade ourselves that we have a real reverence for man when we select our man, and take care to select only the rare and noble products of the race. But Christ's reverence for man was not confined to picked specimens, he reverenced the common man.

Have we learned that lesson? Do we look upon the man or woman who serves us, and instead of calculating how much labor the human machine can be made to do for us, at how low a price, do we begin to think of the divine image that confronts us there? Do we not too often permit ourselves to think with indifference, almost with contempt, of lowly men and women, just as most people think of lowly flowers, and so miss altogether the divine miracle that is visible in the commonest human creature?

Let us be sure of this—contempt for man, cynical distrust and indifference towards men because they are lowly and common, is the sin that Christ finds it hardest to forgive. It is the sin that is most hostile to his spirit. And there will be no real salvation for society in the building up of a juster and better world, no real coming of the Kingdom of God on earth, till we learn reverence for man as man, and see, as Christ saw, in extremest lowliness and commonest life the elements of possible divinity and glory.

Keep the Body Under

IF any man feels that in any direction the low, the animal of his nature is beginning to lift itself up against the intellectual and the moral, there is but one thing for him to do: Let him at once, by all that he holds dear in the prospects of earth and the hopes of heaven, gather up his strength—in the strength of God—and crush it.

Let him be man enough to prove the meaning of that wonder-working word, "I will."

What an inspiring story that is which is told of Alfieri, the founder of Italian tragedy. When his literary ambition was effectually aroused, the greatest obstacle to progress was a worthless companion. Such was the sorcery of this man's society that books and vows withstood in vain, and scholarship, patriotism, literary distinction would all have been ignobly forfeited, had it not been for the iron will which a noble incentive supplied. He had himself chained to his desk or chair, and with his hair cropped so as to cut off any possible communion with the fashionable world, he pursued his studies. In a few weeks the frenzy was conquered. Hard was the fight, but it was the laurel crown.

"Keep the body under," a greater than Alfieri has taught us the word, and in the tongue which he employed it is one of the strongest terms borrowed from pugilistic combat. It means literally to smite under the eyes, to beat black and blue. Thus it was he treated his fleshly appetites, restraining them, crushing them down, bringing them into complete subjection to his higher will.

The wisdom of Siddartha is also heavenly wisdom:

Enter the path—
No pains like passions, no deceit like sense; far hath he gone whose feet
Treads down one fond offence.
Enter the path! There spring the healing streams,
Quenching all thirst; there bloom the immortal flowers,
Carpeting all the way with joy. There throng
Swiftest and sweetest hours.

Not by Might, Nor by Power

EVERYWHERE in this age of organization and machinery, the peril of the church is the temptation to "sacrifice unto their net and burn incense unto their drag"; to lose sight of the fact that nets are nothing and drags are nothing—weak and worthless as the shimmering webs woven over the grass on a dewy morning—if they be not cast in the power of the Spirit. The blessing of full and mighty spiritual life in churches and individuals, is not won by any amount of outward energy and activity, any number of great schemes and weighty influences.

Out in the East somewhere, a man was found beating a stone over a pool with another heavy stone. The missionary asked him what he was doing, and he said, "I am beating the water out of the stone;" and sure enough, in a little while, some water came. The missionary suspected there must be an intermittent spring under the stone. He engaged the man in conversation, and the pounding stopped, yet, in a little while, the water began to pour out without the pounding.

The water from the great fountain of God's love and strength will come welling up into our little pool, not by organized, aggressive efforts, but from hidden sources, through the springs of faith, and humble, loving submission to the impulses of the indwelling Spirit.

Interesting Specimen Testimonials

Dear Sirs:—I beg to inform you that I received the books in good condition on last Saturday, the 8th inst., and am well pleased.

Thanking you for such a grand set of works for so low a price, I am, Very respectfully yours,
Aug. 10, 1903. W. H. BOWMAN.

The Encyclopedia reached me safely, and I am pleased to add such a gem to my library. I have examined it thoroughly, and find it equal to some of the high-priced sets that sell for three times the cost of this set. G. W. SNYDER.
Aug. 16, 1903.

The Encyclopedia came to hand this day, and I have looked over Volume I. Am well pleased with it. I consider it a fine work and very cheap. Thank you.
Aug. 20, 1903. C. W. HINMAN.

Dear Friend:—I received the books yesterday, O. K. I cannot see for the life of me, how you can publish such books for the money you ask. Every family ought to have a set of the Twentieth Century Encyclopedia. They are printed from clear type, with fine engravings, and nicely bound, at a price so cheap that it places them in the reach of poor people. I would not take any sum of money for my set, if I could not get another. I thank you for your kindness in making the payments so that I am able to enjoy a set of these books of world wide knowledge. REV. A. LEWIS.

* * *

The Scholar, the Student, the Professional Man, the Banker, the Merchant, the Mechanic, the Laborer, the Housekeeper, the Mother, the Wife, require Twentieth Century information. The ideas of the last decade will not apply to-day. Things have changed, progress has been made, and an encyclopedia of the Nineteenth Century is as antiquated in the Twentieth as the summer's fashions of 1880 differ from those of 1903.

The set requires shelf-room thirty-three inches long, ten and a-half inches high, and weighs over fifty pounds. This is your greatest opportunity. Embrace it to-day, for to-morrow may be too late. Money refunded if not entirely satisfied.

* * *

Please bear in mind that if you are not entirely pleased—yes, delighted—with this latest and fullest encyclopedia, you may return it within ten days and get your money back. We have only one set for every one hundred subscribers, and only one price to each and all, freight payable by purchaser:

$13 if paid by cash accompanying order.
$14 if paid $2 down and $2 a month for six months.
$15 if paid $1 down and $1 a month for fourteen months.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BOOK DEPARTMENT, Bible House, New York City.

AMID THE RUINS OF PETRA

See illustration on first page of this issue

PROFESSOR ROBINSON'S article, which appears on another page, contains much that is interesting and instructive regarding Petra, the ancient templed city of the Land of Edom. Our first-page illustration presents a realistic scene from the same locality. A group of natives are resting near the ruins of what has in some long-past age been a triumphal arch. Among the relics of the arch lies a large stone, bearing a figure with expanded wings, which probably occupied a place on the arch. From the pilasters and the fragments scattered round, the whole structure seems to have been loaded with ornament. This profusion, and the character of the sculptured fronts, render it probable that the city was the object of considerable decoration by its Western masters, from the second century, when it first became a Roman province. But the Roman style was unfit to mingle with the original Petræan. Both were lavish of ornament; but the former was often lavish without luxuriance, and costly without grandeur. The latter, alike from the magnitude of its scale and scene, was never rich without being superb, nor simple without being sublime.

This extraordinary and once beautiful city has now as its only habitants the Fellaheen, or Arabs, who haunt its cliffs and chasms. The camel and wild goat graze there; the eagle soars above its colored pinnacles; partridges and pigeons wing the lower air; the note of the blackbird and many of the smaller songsters is heard; and in the season of flowers the sheltered chasms and the sides of the rocks are covered with bloom and filled with fragrance. But the inhabitants are the savage and the robber, and the superb civilization which once flourished there is gone forever.

Among the Workers

—EVANGELIST E. C. BOSWORTH writes that the series of meetings now being held in Rochester are largely attended and have been spiritually successful from the start.

—THE WAYSIDE MISSION of Providence, R. I., was founded and is conducted by Albert E. Vining. It has been the means of leading many wandering souls into the light. The Mission, which is at No. 7 College street, is supported by voluntary contributions.

THE BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

Royalty in Ireland

WHEN the announcement was first made that King Edward proposed to visit Ireland, there were loud warnings and ominous predictions of danger. It was prophesied that he would be insulted, and that the long cherished hatred of English rule would find expression in a way that would be very unpleasant to His Majesty. All these predictions have been falsified by the result. The King not only visited the strongest Nationalist centres, but took the Queen with him, and both received the most cordial and enthusiastic welcome. The royal party landed at Kingstown, and thence proceeded to Dublin, where they were received by the Lord Lieutenant. After a series of receptions, at which dignitaries attended who had previously ostentatiously absented themselves from State functions, their Majesties visited points of historic interest in the Irish capital, not forgetting the hospitals. Thence, after a ride to various towns in the vicinity, they went to Belfast, where they were sure of a hearty reception; The city was full of enthusiasm, and presented loyal addresses, to which the King returned tactful answers. The route then took the visitors to Londonderry, and afterwards to Connemara; they visited Galway, Kenmare, and Derreen, and then sailed for Queenstown. The last place on the programme, and the most critical, was Cork. Contrary to expectation, the welcome of that city was hearty and cordial in the extreme. The Lord Mayor, himself presented a loyal address, to which the King replied that he "had gained a clearer insight into some conditions of Irish life than he possessed before, and hoped that his visit would be productive of practical benefit to the country." Here, as at other places, during his twelve days' stay in the country, the King referred to the Irish bill for the relief of the tenants, and expressed his earnest sympathy with its provisions, and his hope that it would bring about more prosperous times. It was noticed that the crowds in the cities which assembled to watch the procession, cheered heartily and spontaneously, and nowhere was there a single disloyal utterance. In the country districts the royal party had some strange experiences. Once or twice their carriage broke down on the rough roads, but the people good-humoredly came to the rescue, and showed genuine delight at the royal visit. In Connemara, on the road to Recess, there was a particularly stiff hill, and the horses, a poor and ill-matched team, had a difficulty in climbing it. The peasants seemed glad of the opportunity to show their good-will, and proudly pushed the vehicle to the top of the hill. They were much pleased with the thanks that both King and Queen uttered, for their help. The visit has evidently improved the relations between England and Ireland, and the King and his Irish subjects are on better terms than was ever anticipated. It certainly seems probable that what Coercion Bills and repressive legislation have failed to accomplish, may have been achieved by the kindliness and geniality that the King and Queen displayed during their visit, and so the prophet's recipe for popular discontent may be effective.

In mercy shall the throne be established (Isa. 16: 5).

IRISH PEASANTS HELPING KING EDWARD UPHILL IN CONNEMARA

Discovery of an Old Deed

A firm of attorneys in Baltimore, Md., has taken the preliminary steps to establish the claim of a client to fifteen thousand acres of rich coal land in West Virginia. The land is at present held by a railroad company, which has taken out enormous quantities of coal, but believes that a much larger quantity remains to be mined. The new claim to ownership developed unexpectedly. A citizen of Maryland, who died about a year ago, had always manifested a delight in speculation in mines. He had frequently been ridiculed by his family and friends for his purchases of this class of securities. Latterly, when he had invested in mining stock, he had said nothing about it, so that no one knew what his holdings were. After his death, his son, searching among the deeds in his safe, found the deed of transfer for the West Virginia mining lands. He was advised to consult a lawyer skilled in such claims, and to him he submitted the deed. It appears to be in regular order from 1795 when Governor Robert Brook had executed the transfer in the first instance. The subsequent transfers are recorded, and the lawyer avers that the present holders must have worked the mines without title. That assertion, of course, will be tested in the courts. If the son does establish his claim, it will be by acting on the deed he so strangely discovered among his father's papers. He was wiser than are some Christians who are familiar with the promises in their heavenly Father's word, but do not claim their fulfilment.

Ye have not because ye ask not (James 4: 2).

A Double Personality

The New York police made an arrest last week, which solves a mystery that has been puzzling them for four or five months. Houses of wealthy citizens on Fifth avenue and the cross streets, have been plundered by a skilful burglar, who left little trace of his work. He had been somewhat fastidious about his plunder. Silver plate or jewelry was his specialty, but failing that, he would take clothing if it was valuable and not too bulky. The houses chosen for his depredations belonged chiefly to persons who were out of town, and as neither doors nor windows had been forced, the fact that they had been entered was not discovered for some time. The solution of the puzzle came when a man was seen on the roof of a house, and was not caught until a bullet from a policeman's pistol struck his knee, and prevented his running farther. In the hospital, to which he was taken, he confessed that he had robbed over thirty houses. His plan had been to hire an expensive flat at the top of a fine house; thence he reached the roof and could pass to other roofs by means of a rope ladder, and descend by the scuttle. He always dressed well, and his rooms were well furnished. He had a well-selected and extensive library, the books of which showed marks of use, and many of them were classics. His manners and education made him a welcome guest in good families, and there was nothing in his bearing or conversation to excite suspicion. He declared that even his own wife had no idea that he was a burglar. In the daytime he was, to all appearance, a cultured and refined gentleman, and only at night did he show his real character. How strange that a man of education and refinement should be found robbing houses! It shows how incongruous are the two parts of human nature. Every man has in him the germs of both natures, and he needs the Holy Spirit's help for the development of the spiritual, otherwise the lower nature will master it.

For the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh, and these are contrary the one to the other (Gal. 5: 17).

Singing Sands

The strange phenomenon of vocal sands observed at Manchester, Mass., and some other places in this country and in Europe, was the subject of a lecture given recently by Prof. J. H. Sears of the Peabody Academy of Sciences. He referred to the superstitious portents prevalent, which assigned weird meanings to the musical sounds given out at intervals by the sands of the coast at Manchester, and said that he had discovered the real cause. He had found it by a careful analysis of the sand. It showed, besides ordinary constituents, minute particles of tourmaline and zircon in addition to the quartz and feldspar which it contained. His theory is that the two minerals present hard points, from which their covering of quartz or feldspar has receded. As the sand settles under pressure of the foot, or from the wash of a wave, or even when the wind passes over it, these hard points grate on the particles of sand, their action causing in combination an audible tone, strong or faint according to the pressure. It is strange that music can come from such a source; but nature has more materials for making harmony than we suspect. It is more than probable that, as the poets say, there is a music of the spheres, and so the patriarch's conception may be an actual fact.

The morning stars sang together (Job 38: 7).

Money Sent Through Space

Passengers on the Cunard steamer Campania during her last voyage here, witnessed a remarkable evidence of the efficiency of the Marconi system of telegraphing. One of the passengers, a young man, was on board, coming over to meet his mother in New York. While waiting in Liverpool for the departure of the vessel, he had the misfortune to lose his money. He was greatly troubled about it, but consoled himself with the thought that when he reached New York his mother would supply his deficiencies. That hope, however, was taken away by a cable message he received from his mother just as he was going on board, saying that she had taken passage for England on the Lucania. He at first decided not to proceed, but having urgent business here, finally determined to make the voyage. During the voyage he spoke to some of the passengers of his pecuniary difficulty, and they advised him to apply to the Marconi operator on board. The situation of the Lucania was calculated as near as possible, and when it was supposed to be within telegraphing distance, a message was sent into space from the young man on the Campania to his mother on the Lucania. In a short time the operator received a message in reply from the operator on the Lucania, directing him to pay the young man forty dollars, which the operator had collected from his mother. Our fathers would have laughed to scorn a statement of this kind, but we know now that it may be true. If scoffers knew more of God's resources they would not be so incredulous when they are told that the prayers of his children reach his ears and bring them help in their troubles.

This poor man cried, and the Lord heard him, and saved him out of all his troubles (Ps. 34: 6).

BRIEF NOTES

A tent meeting of Seventh Day Adventists in Jersey City was compelled to abandon its services one night recently, for the entrance of a cloud of mosquitoes. Even the entrance of prayer lines failed to drive the pests out. After had an hour's struggle the meeting had to be closed.

The report of the Presbyterian Church furnished to the New York Observer by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, shows that the number of communicants added last year to the church rolls was 62,597. Deducting losses by death, removal, etc., the net increase was 22,130. The increase in the number of ministers was eighty seven.

English taxpayers who are refusing to pay the [illegible] tax levied under the new Education Act are [illegible] distrained. Bailiffs take possession of the [illegible] which are not intrinsically valuable but the loss of which will be [illegible] such as portraits, heirlooms, the [illegible] cases the populace denounces the outrage and goes [illegible] the sufferers.

A report of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S [illegible] support and education of five thousand [illegible] now ready, and will be mailed free to any [illegible] It contains letters from missionaries of all [illegible] and the progress of the orphans, [illegible] expense of readers of this journal. It is [illegible] the children of the orphans and some of the [illegible] and contains also a map of India, showing the location of the [illegible].

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

A. B., Ridgeway, Ont. I see that the late Pope Leo was called "The Prisoner of the Vatican." Was he really a prisoner?

No, he could go out of his palace at any time, and the King of Italy assured him that he would be protected from harm or insult. The Pope, however, insisted that rightfully all Rome was under his sovereignty, and that the king had done a wicked thing in taking possession of the city. He reasoned that if he drove through Rome under the protection of the royal guards, he would be practically acknowledging the sovereignty of the king, and he resolved never to do that. So he remained within the walls surrounding the Vatican palace and called himself a prisoner. The only obstacle to his going out, was his own principles. So he was a voluntary prisoner.

S. E. M., Germantown, Pa. I have seen somewhere a statement that certain animals have been admitted into heaven. Do you know what the legend is?

You probably refer to a Mohammedan legend, which is the only one we know of relating to the subject. They were: Al Borak, the horse said to have carried the soul of Mohammed to heaven; the ram substituted for Isaac at the sacrifice; Balaam's ass; Jonah's whale; the sacred camel of Saleb; and an ox on which Moses rode from the burning bush. We are not sure that the list is complete.

F. B. L. Did God really give Job into the hands of Satan to be tempted?

Tempted is scarcely the word to use in that case. Job was tried or tested. The question was what his motive was in serving God. Satan with his natural doubt about any one having pure motives, asserted that Job served God only for what he gained by it, and that if his property was taken away from him, he would curse God. So Job was put to the proof, to see what he would do under trial, and whether he was really as disinterested as God believed him to be. The object of the author appears to have been to correct a false view of adversity, which view was prevalent in his time. People had the idea that severe calamities were punishments dealt out by God because of sin. When a man of good moral character, therefore, was in trouble, people suspected that he had sinned secretly, and that God was punishing him for it. It was often a cruel and unjust suspicion. In writing this description, the author evidently was trying to eradicate it. After reading such a book, a man who saw another in trouble, instead of despising him as a sinner, might say, "Perhaps he is being tried as Job was," and so might sympathize instead of blaming him. Our concern should be to learn the lesson the book was designed to teach, rather than to discuss the question whether it is history or parable, for that question cannot now be authoritatively answered.

Reader Chicago, Ill. Has any one finished the story of Edwin Drood, which Charles Dickens began but left uncompleted?

Several persons have attempted the task, but it was obviously impossible to do so satisfactorily, as Dickens left no memorandum of the way in which he intended to work out the plot. The only clue that could be obtained, was that he had instructed his artist to make a picture of Jasper in the condemned cell, from which we may infer that he intended to bring Jasper to trial for the murder of his nephew and have him executed. Probably the detective with white hair fastened the crime on him.

Inquirer, Hoboken, N. J. Is the Isthmus of Panama likely to be severed? If so, by what route?

There is no doubt that the work will be done eventually. It seemed probable, a few months ago, that the direct route through Colombia would be taken. Our Government came to agreement with the French Company, which has already done some of the work, and purchased the concession and the company's rights, subject to the possibility of making satisfactory arrangements with the Government of Colombia for American rights over the canal. Our ideas were embodied in a treaty with that Government, by which we covenanted to pay ten million dollars, for which sum we were to receive absolute control over the territory through which the canal would be cut. This treaty has been rejected by the Colombian Senate. It is now open to our Government to make a new treaty, or to open negotiations for the Nicaragua route. In view of the opposition of the Colombian people, the Nicaragua route will probably be chosen.

Reader, Madison, Wis. How does the temperature in the Antarctic regions compare with the Arctic?

The records now received from the expedition which went out on the Discovery show that the mercury seldom falls quite so low in the Antarctic as in the Arctic, but the cold is more continuous. Even at midsummer it does not often rise above freezing, while in the Arctic, it rises to a moderate warmth. Thus the average temperature in the Antarctic is lower than in the Arctic, though the extremes are not so great.

Student, Philadelphia, Pa. Is it true that our national escutcheon was designed by an Englishman?

Suggested not designed. The suggestion is said to have been made by Sir John Prestwitch, a famous student of heraldry, in a conversation with John Adams, while he was in England on a diplomatic mission. The conversation turned on the national coats-of-arms, and Sir John showed Adams a large sheet, on which he had drawn the escutcheons of every European nation. On Adams remarking that the United States had not adopted one, Sir John sat down and sketched an eagle, with a shield on its breast bearing thirteen stars and thirteen perpendicular bars, "How would that do?" he asked. Adams sent the sketch to the President, and it became the basis of the escutcheon subsequently adopted.

R. S. A., Topeka, Kans. What is the life plant to which reference is made in a book I have been reading? Is it a myth, if not, where does it grow?

There is a plant of that name in the West Indies. It appears, from description, to belong to the orchid species. If a sprig of it is hung up, it will grow and put forth tendrils though it may not touch soil. Botanists say that a specimen has actually grown after being fastened on a card in a herbarium.

Ellen R., Montclair, N. J. What is the cause of those peculiar antipathies to certain flowers, fruits and other things which certain people show?

They may be referable to certain nervous conditions, or to pre-natal causes. Medical science does not fully explain them. We have known some persons who were made sick by the taste of an orange; others who could not bear to eat chicken. Lusitanius, an old-time author, mentions a monk who fainted when ever he saw a rose, and one of Scaliger's relatives experienced the same sensation on seeing lilies. To some minds the sweetest music is discord. Hippocrates mentions a man who swooned on hearing a flute. We might multiply such instances from reliable sources, but they would not help to explain the mystery.

E. S. D. Can you give me the author and where I may find the following quotation? "In speaking of death the author says, 'My friend has retired to his room, while I remain to bury up the embers and then to follow.'"

Can any of our readers furnish the desired information?

C. I., Odin, Ill. 1. Can we come to Christ at any time we wish? 2. How can one become a Christian? 3. What constitutes a Christian? 4. Ought a Christian to join a church?

1. You can come to Christ now; but it would be in the last degree foolish to argue that any future time will do, and that it will be possible to come to him whenever you may wish. Many things may interfere. The disposition to come may wane. Sudden death or insanity or agonizing illness, that prevents the intelligent operation of the mind, may intervene. The only safe course is to use the present opportunity. 2. By putting yourself without reserve into Christ's hands; trusting implicitly in him to save you, and taking him for your teacher and king as well as your Saviour. 3. Having the mind and spirit of Christ. Giving yourself unreservedly into his keeping, and yielding yourself to the Holy Spirit's influence to be sanctified and rescued, not only from the commission of sin, but from the desire for it and the love of it. Trusting Christ, loving him, serving him, making him your model, and trying your utmost in his strength to lead others to Christ. 4. Yes, it is helpful to the Christian, and is the recognized way of confessing Christ before men, which is the Christian's duty.

A Reader, Kent, O. How ought a Christian to treat a man or woman, who has fallen from purity, and shows no signs of repentance?

The first and most important step is to endeavor to bring about repentance. The surest course is one of kindness. Such persons are generally hardened by any sign of contempt or aversion. They know they are outcasts—at least the women do—and put on a bold front, returning scorn with scorn. Talking kindly and seriously with such a person, generally produces a more tractable frame of mind. There should be no expression implying that the Christian condones the sin, or regards it in any way but with horror and loathing. But for the sinner there should be compassion, and help to a better life. There is usually a conviction on the part of the sinner, that restoration is impossible, and that frequently produces the feeling that it is useless to repent and reform. An important step has been gained when the sinner realizes that repentance will lead to forgiveness by God and man. Prayer must not be neglected. That is a most important agency. The Holy Spirit can melt the hardest heart, and can give the Christian the right words to use in dealing with this most difficult of all cases.

M. G., Madison, Ind. Is it right to allow children to play games of Bible Authors on the Lord's Day.

It is not an ideal employment. If the mother or father could tell Bible stories to the children, or interest them in some other way in religious truth, it would be better. Failing that, however, and remembering how dull the Lord's Day may become for a child, the game of Bible Authors might be introduced. It should be so conducted as to familiarize the child with the books of the Bible and their contents. It may tend to prevent associations being formed in the child's mind of Sunday as a day of intolerable boredom, which often clings to it in later life.

Miss M. M. B., Fairfield, Conn., writes:

Speaking of hoop snakes, I heard my father tell of a fearful experience he once had with one. It came directly across his pathway in the form of an immense hoop, coming very swiftly, raising its head as it rolled as high as his own, and as it passed him it struck him directly in the face. He was so terrified, that he did not know at the time whether it bit him or not; but as no serious consequences followed, he concluded it must have been only a blow.

E. C., Exeter, Can. Frances Willard died as she had lived, a true Christian.

The NORTHLAND GRATEFUL for Our BENEVOLENCE

Letters that Tell of the Deep Appreciation of America's Work for the Famine Sufferers in Finland, Norway and Sweden

Letter from the United States Minister at Stockholm, Hon. W. W. Thomas, to the Norwegian Cabinet Minister:

UNITED STATES LEGATION,
STOCKHOLM, July 14, 1903.

DEAR DR. IBSEN:—I am sure you will recollect when Dr. Klopsch was at Stockholm last spring, and made his magnificent gift of 100,000 crowns to the famine-stricken people of Northern Sweden, that I had the honor of suggesting that he should also give 20,000 crowns to the distressed people of Northern Norway, that Dr. Klopsch gladly complied with my suggestion, and presented the 20,000 crowns through your good self. Well, it seems now that I "builded better than I knew," for I have just received a letter from Dr. Klopsch, enclosing a check for a second sum of 20,000 crowns, pleasantly stating that he makes the check payable to my order, and sends it through me, because I first interested him in Norway, and requesting that I make over the check to you, "to be used by the Norwegian Ministry for the relief of distressed people in Norway."

I have the honor to enclose herewith the check for $5,360, the equivalent of 20,000 crowns, endorsed by me payable to your order.

Dr. Klopsch has now presented to the famine-stricken people of Northern Europe the following sums:

To Finland .....500,000 marks.
To Sweden.....100,000 crowns.
To Norway.....40,000 crowns.

When we reflect that these grand benefactions are not the gifts of millionaires, but the contributions of people of small means, that these large sums all come from the little savings of the 1,000,000 Americans who read THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, of New York, it seems to me that these noble gifts constitute an act of Christian benevolence, which, both in kind and amount, are, perhaps, without a parallel in history.

All honor to Dr. Klopsch, the little man with a great heart, who has organized and carried out this good and great work.

As for myself, I assure you it is one of the pleasantest incidents of my diplomatic career, that I have been instrumental, in ever so small a way, in causing a portion of the benevolence of my countrymen to be placed where it will relieve suffering in Norway, a country whose grand nature I admire, and whose heroic and warm-hearted people I have learned to respect and love. With sentiments of high personal esteem, I remain, my dear Dr. Ibsen, very sincerely yours, WILLIAM W. THOMAS,
American Minister to Sweden and Norway.
To the Norwegian Cabinet Minister,
DR. SIGURD IBSEN, Christiania, Norway.

Reply of the Norwegian Cabinet Minister, Dr. Sigurd Ibsen, to the American Minister:

HOTEL WESTMINSTER,
KRISTIANIA, den 19 Juli, 1903.

HERR MINISTER:—Jeg har havt den ære at modtage den skrivelse af den 14 ds., hvormed De har havt den godhed at oversende mig en anvisning for $5,360, svarende til Kr. 20,000, med hvilket beløb dr. Klopsch nu for anden gang har betænkt de nödlidende i Norge.

Jeg behöver vel ikke at fremhäve, hvilket indtryk dette fornyede bevis på storartet godgjörenhed vil efterlade hertillands.

Jeg beder Dem på mine kollegers og egne vegne at bringe dr. Klopsch vor dybtfölte tak og samtidig selv at modtage udtrykket for vor erkjendtlighed for den andel, De har havt i denne sag.

Med udmärket höjagtelse er jeg, Herr Minister, Deres ärbödigst forbundne, SIGURD IBSEN.

HERR AMERIKAUSKE MINISTER WILLIAM W. THOMAS, Stockholm, Sweden

[TRANSLATION OF THE ABOVE LETTER]

HOTEL WESTMINSTER,
CHRISTIANIA, July 19, 1903.

MR MINISTER: I have had the honor to receive the letter of the 14th instant, in which you had the kindness to transmit to me a check for $5,360, corresponding to 20,000 crowns, with which sum Dr. Klopsch, now for the second time, has remembered the oistressed people of Norway.

I do not need to emphasize what an impression this renewed proof of grand benevolence will leave in this country.

I beg you, in the name of my colleagues and on my own behalf, to present to Dr. Klopsch our deep-felt gratitude, and at the same time to accept for yourself the expression of our recognition of the part you have had in this matter.

With great esteem, I am, Mr. Minister,
Yours, under much obligation,
SIGURD IBSEN.

THE AMERICAN MINISTER WILLIAM W THOMAS, Stockholm, Sweden.

Can you tell me where to find the following quotation? "Speaking of death the author says, 'My friend has retired to his room, while I remain to bury up the embers and then to follow.'"

Can any of our readers furnish the desired information?

C. I., Odin, Ill. 1. Can we come to Christ at any time we wish? 2. How can one become a Christian? 3. What constitutes a Christian? 4. Ought a Christian to join a church?

1. You can come to Christ now; but it would be in the last degree foolish to argue that any future time will do, and that it will be possible to come to him whenever you may wish. Many things may interfere. The disposition to come may wane. Sudden death or insanity or agonizing illness, that prevents the intelligent operation of the mind, may intervene. The only safe course is to use the present opportunity. 2. By putting yourself without reserve into Christ's hands; trusting implicitly in him to save you, and taking him for your teacher and king as well as your Saviour. 3. Having the mind and spirit of Christ. Giving yourself unreservedly into his keeping, and yielding yourself to the Holy Spirit's influence to be sanctified and rescued, not only from the commission of sin, but from the desire for it and the love of it. Trusting Christ, loving him, serving him, making him your model, and trying your utmost in his strength to lead others to Christ. 4. Yes, it is helpful to the Christian, and is the recognized way of confessing Christ before men, which is the Christian's duty.

A Reader, Kent, O. How ought a Christian to treat a man or woman, who has fallen from purity, and shows no signs of repentance?

The first and most important step is to endeavor to bring about repentance. The surest course is one of kindness. Such persons are generally hardened by any sign of contempt or aversion. They know they are outcasts—at least the women do—and put on a bold front, returning scorn with scorn. Talking kindly and seriously with such a person, generally produces a more tractable frame of mind. There should be no expression implying that the Christian condones the sin, or regards it in any way but with horror and loathing. But for the sinner there should be compassion, and help to a better life. There is usually a conviction on the part of the sinner, that restoration is impossible, and that frequently produces the feeling that it is useless to repent and reform. An important step has been gained when the sinner realizes that repentance will lead to forgiveness by God and man. Prayer must not be neglected. That is a most important agency. The Holy Spirit can melt the hardest heart, and can give the Christian the right words to use in dealing with this most difficult of all cases.

M. G., Madison, Ind. Is it right to allow children to play games of Bible Authors on the Lord's Day.

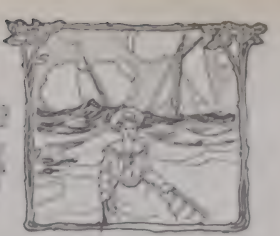
It is not an ideal employment. If the mother or father could tell Bible stories to the children, or interest them in some other way in religious truth, it would be better. Failing that, however, and remembering how dull the Lord's Day may become for a child, the game of Bible Authors might be introduced. It should be so conducted as to familiarize the child with the books of the Bible and their contents. It may tend to prevent associations being formed in the child's mind of Sunday as a day of intolerable boredom, which often clings to it in later life.

Miss M. M. B., Fairfield, Conn., writes:

Speaking of hoop snakes, I heard my father tell of a fearful experience he once had with one. It came directly across his pathway in the form of an immense hoop, coming very swiftly, raising its head as it rolled as high as his own, and as it passed him it struck him directly in the face. He was so terrified, that he did not know at the time whether it bit him or not; but as no serious consequences followed, he concluded it must have been only a blow.

E. C., Exeter, Can. Frances Willard died as she had lived, a true Christian.

Our Household Circle



By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

The Trouble With Elvira

ELVIRA BENSON!"

"Yes, Aunty."

"You surely are not going out now. And why are you wearing your best gown in the iddle of the week, just to call on Milly Payne, whom ou see every day. Take it off directly and put on your nk muslin. That foulard will be all in a string before ou are a month older. I should think you could stay ome to-day, Elvira."

"But why, Aunt Tilda?"

"Oh, well, I don't like to see girls forever gadding. o use being in the street all the time. Is Milly Payne xpecting you?"

"She has a cousin from the city visiting her, and she's sked some of the girls in, to have a cup of tea."

"Tea? At four o'clock in the afternoon! What folly!"

While Aunt Tilda was talking, she was busily mend- g the trousers of her eldest boy. Her mother, also lvira's grandmother, who had been placidly knitting by he window, now looked up.

"Run along Virey dear," she said. "Don't change your ress. Pick some of those lilies as ou pass the bed, and take them to liss Lilla Payne. She likes lilies, nd she's ill. I think tea's good any me o' day, 'specially along in the fternoon. This is a fashion that's ome up since I was young. It's ot sense under it."

When Elvira's figure had dis- ppeared around the turn of the oad, the old lady spoke seriously o her daughter. Mrs. Slocum was woman of positive opinions, and xtremely old-fashioned. She had rought up an orphan niece as lov- ngly as if she had been her own hild, and with as little outward emonstration. But she and Elvira id not get on smoothly. They ere always jaring over trifles. ittle things caused friction. Mrs. locum enjoyed being consulted. lvira was independent. Mrs. Slo- um was thriftily careful of good lothes. Elvira wanted to wear ers, not only on Sundays, and on reat occasions, but, as her aunt xpressed it, at every tack and urn; Mrs. Slocum delighted in taying at home, and Elvira was lways on the wing.

"The trouble with Elvira is, she as no ballast," said Mrs. Slocum, haking her head as she glanced fter the girl's retreating form.

"Tilda," replied the old lady, the trouble isn't with Virey, it's ith you. She's a girl; she's full f fun and youth. You were always ery mature, even as a child, and ou don't realize two things: One is, hat Virey's got a right to her own ife; and the other, that Virey is grown up. When a oung woman is twenty, she has a right, surely, to vear her best gown any day she likes without asking ermission."

"You may be sure Elvira'll take her own way," was he reply. "She's like the Slocum kindred, she's hard o hold."

"Then Tilda, don't you try to hold her; let her have er way. The longer I live, the more I appreciate the act, that the trouble with most folks in home life is, hat they won't allow others any freedom. And freedom bout little things is so easy to grant. Just because it's asy, we go on refusing it."

Mrs. Slocum sighed. She knew that her mother's isdom could be trusted, but the habit of years was mperious.

"Do you think I interfere too much, mother?"

"I wouldn't say that, dear, but I'd try to be less no- icing, if I were you. Let the child wear out her gloves nd her frocks. When she finds that she has to do ithout them, she'll turn over a new leaf."

"I suspect I've been nagging her too much." Mrs. Slocum was bending over her patch as she made the confession. Then she went on, with a little laugh, "But 'll try to be different."

"You were always a good child, Tilda," said the old nother, contentedly.

Under the new regime the trouble with Elvira les- ened daily, and finally, there was no trouble at all. The friction disappeared. The younger and the older woman learned mutual sympathy.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—AUNTY. Learn to slight your sewing. Why hem a dish-towel as if you were hemstitching a lady's gown?

—JENNIE. Do not engage in any recreation concerning which you are in doubt, keep on the safe side and follow your conscience.

—CLARA. Authorship is not so easy as you fancy. A successful writer has to work very hard. May I add, that there must be natural ability, and that one cannot be a writer at will.

—PARENT. A daughter whose defect of character is laziness should be compelled to do some useful work every day. Are you sure the young girl is well? She may have outgrown her strength. Send her to learn a trade, if she refuses to help her mother at home.

Some Things a Daughter May Do

Mother may prefer to keep house herself. Yet daughter Bertha may find some ways of helping her which will be peculiarly her own.

She may undertake the weekly sorting of clothing for the wash, separating the fine things from the coarse, and seeing that none of the small pieces are overlooked.

She may do the weekly mending when clothes are washed and ironed.

She may keep her own room in thorough order.

She may attend to the daily dusting. If flowers are used in decorating the parlor or dining-room, Bertha's task may be to have them always fresh.

She may take care of the pets.

She may write most of the letters, acting as her mother's secretary.

She may visit friends of the family who are ill, and for whom inquiry should be made.

She may see that the salads and desserts are duly prepared.

She may play and sing for her father in the evening.

She may be an object lesson in neatness and a pattern of amiability to her younger brothers and sisters.

She may, in brief, be a darling, and the pride and joy of her home.

COMING FROM THE ORCHARD

Bringing home the apples,
Sweet and full of spice;
Good to spread the winter board,
In days of snow and ice.

Summer's breath is in them,
Summer's richest wealth
Crowns the rosy apple,
Fruit of joy and health.

COMMIT THY WAY UNTO THE LORD

OH, the sweetness of the Word,
As it thrills from days of old!
Oh, the blessedness of reading
In the Book, those lines of gold!
In the dawnlight, at His feet,
Learning with Him, all the way,
Just committing to His guidance,
Every moment of the day.

Never feeling any worry,
Never bowed with any care,
Doing what the dear Lord sets you,
Going with Him everywhere,
Ready, instant, at His orders,
Listening for His least command,
Just obeying, as the soldier,
Though you may not understand.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

HOMING THINGS

Bees go home with honey,
Lambs the flock would find,
Birds go flying to the nest,
So with human kind.

Home we seek and mother,
Whether feet or wings
Lead us there, no matter,
We are homing things.

A Letter to Tom

BEIER TOWER, August —, 1904.

DEAR TOM—I am writing to my boys as they seem to be scattered here and there. I cannot blame them. I'm up in the mountains myself, fishing in a brook and climbing steep hills, tramping miles across country, and having a fine vacation. We'll all be back, please God, in one piece I hope, in a few weeks from this time. Meanwhile I'm taking an opportunity to say some things on paper that I never have had a good chance to say to the fellows by word of mouth. And as I've visited in your home, Tom, I have a specially good reason for writing confidentially and candidly to you. Tear my letter up if you like when you've read it. I never did believe in hoarding letters till they grew yellow and old. But read it, Tom, and pardon me if I am frank.

I never would have believed that you belonged to the company of the quarrelsome if I had not seen how quick you were to take offense when your little sister made that passing remark about your being late for breakfast: "Good afternoon, Tom," he said with a laughing look and a finger pointing to the clock, and you, instead of laughing back and explaining that you had overslept, just glowered at him as black as a thunder cloud. Do you know what glower means? It is to express crossness and threats and to temper all in one brief disagreeable look. Your quarrelsome mood was infectious and it upset the peace of the family, making your father angry and vexing your dear, patient mother. The queer thing about ill-humor is that it spreads so fast, straight from the oldest to the youngest, till a whole group of people, who ought to be friendly and amiable, are misunderstanding one another, saying the wrong things, and falling deeper into a slough of trouble every minute.

You know how it is in your Club? Everything goes on smoothly and finely when Louis Grissom isn't there. But just as sure as Louis appears the atmosphere changes. He is always on the opposite side of everything. He makes us think of a man I once heard of who shouted across a room, "I disagree with you altogether. What was it you said?" There are times when people should stand up bravely for questions of right, and trample bravely on anything known to be wrong. But to pick flaws, to balance unreasonably, to take umbrage at every careless word, in short to be quarrelsome, is to show one's self petty and unfit for mingling with one's fellows.

First pure, then peaceable, is a good rule for boys who are soon going to be men. People may tell you that it is a fine thing to fight, and so in some circumstances it is. For one should have some worth while cause for hoping to fight for, not some wound to one's vanity, or some foolish joke or sneer, that is beneath notice. A boy or a man may well fight for his country if she is in peril. He may fight, if there is no other way, to defend a weaker and younger boy, or a woman, or a dumb animal. In certain circumstances the most peacefully inclined men will fight, and will scorn retreat. That is one thing, and a very different thing from squabbling over an election you did not win, or mauling another boy with your fists because you and he cannot agree, or indulging in that sort of stupid quarreling which bothers you to speak to a neighbor, and sends you scowling past him when you happen to meet.

I very much long to see the day when in every town and countryside there will be boys whose ideals shall be so high that they will exercise a controlling influence over their companions; boys who will live according to the rules laid down by the Man of Nazareth; boys who will be true and manly themselves, boys who will stand strongly together for all that is good and disdain all that is paltry. Such boys will not be quarrelsome. They will be strong to overcome in every right enterprise. And four to four, shoulder to shoulder, when they are men, they will challenge [illegible] and corruption and everything that menaces the peace and good will which Jesus brought to the world and to that light they will conquer. Now, there are a few more things I want to say, but they will keep for a next time. I trust you are having as good a holiday as I am, and in much affection I sign myself Your teacher and comrade. RALPH BROWN.

OFFICE is OPPORTUNITY ✳ David Becomes King

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR SEPT. 13
II. SAMUEL 2: 1-10

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

GOLDEN TEXT—"Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." PSA. 133: 1

IT is David's crowning day in the old city of Hebron, where more than eight hundred years before, Abraham had dwelt. How did it come to be chosen as the place of David's coronation? The Lord himself appointed it there, when David inquired of him where the ceremony should take place. There was a peculiar fitness in the selection, for David's exaltation was in fulfilment of the promise God made to Abraham on that spot, that his seed should inherit the land. It was there also that God had entered into the blood covenant with Abraham (Gen. 15:9-21), by which richest blessings were assured to him. David was the fourteenth generation from Abraham, and in his coronation the promise that in Abraham's seed all nations of the earth should be blest drew near fulfilment. Fourteen generations beyond David, was to be born upon the earth the Saviour of the world, often called "the Son of David."

The faithful and tried bodyguard of six hundred men came with David to the coronation. The six hundred brought their households with them, for their homes in Ziklag were in ashes. Five hundred thousand other valiant men who drew the sword, came also to David's coronation. They were the warriors of the tribe of Judah. The elders, the wise old men of Judah, also came.

For ten years or more David had bided his time as God's anointed. He was now thirty years old. And where in Hebron did the coronation take place? We are not told, but we venture the opinion that it might have been under "Abraham's oak."

It would have been a fitting canopy for the coronation, with its majestic branches, 275 feet in circumference, while its great trunk, thirty-two feet about, would have made a fitting emblem of the promised stability of David's kingdom. Its gracious shade was typical of the influence that was to emanate from David as king over Judah. His first act as king was a message of gratitude to the men of Jabesh-gilead, who had bravely gone into the enemy's camp to take away the remains of Saul and his sons and bury them in friendly soil.

Was there any cloud on David's coronation day? Yes, for the ten tribes of Israel held aloof. And while David was fulfilling the part of a king at Hebron a rival king was crowned not more than forty miles away at Mahanaim, namely Ishbosheth, the oldest surviving son of Saul, set up by Abner, the former war chief of Saul. The circumstance probably gave no uneasy thoughts to David, for he knew that God would bring it to naught. And so he did, for in two years Ishbosheth was dead, and all Israel came by tens of thousands to crown David king, not in Hebron, but in Jerusalem. The coronation feast lasted three days, and "there was joy in Israel."

Illustration and Application

The ten years of trial during which David waited for his promised crown are a beautiful illustration of the Christian looking forward through a life of trial to the crown of life, promised to all who are faithful unto death. Anointed but not yet crowned! Is not that the position of every Christian in this world? And shall we not as patiently as David meet the afflictions that come to us, knowing that no man can take our crown, not even Satan, who plays the part of Saul in seeking to destroy us? Can we not see in David's ten years of persecution ten years of schooling for true kingship? So life is schooling us.

A tone of pride or petulance repressed,
A selfish inclination firmly fought,
A shadow of annoyance set at naught,
A measure of disquietude suppressed;
A peace in importunity possessed,
A reconcilement generously sought,
A purpose put aside—a banished thought,
A word of self-explaining unexpressed;
Trifles they seem, these petty soul-restraints,
Yet he who proves them so must needs possess
A constancy and courage grand and bold,
They are the trifles that have made the saints.
Give me to practice them in humbleness,
And nobler power than mine doth no man hold.

But the most direct teaching of this story is that office is not a selfish honor, but opportunity for service. Offices are so numerous, when we include not only civil offices, but those in church and school and society, that almost every grown person, and even many boys and girls have held some office, and those who have not will be elected to something, if they live earnestly—so that it becomes a matter well worth a lesson to consider how the Christian should look upon the offices to which he has been or shall be called. Let no one even think, much less talk, of office as an "honor." The word is selfish, and belittles the office. No one should ever be elected as an "honor," but all for service. On every commission the motto might well be placed, "Office is opportunity." "Opportunity" to enrich oneself would seem to be its meaning from many recent revelations of malfeasance, not alone in public service, but also in industrial organizations. Noblesse oblige, the obligation of opportunity, should be the spirit in which one accepts a crown or any other office from God or man. The theory that office is for the service of God and man is embalmed in many of our official terms. Ambassadors are "ministers," that is, servants. The highest officers of government are cabinet ministers. The whole company of civil officers are known as "the public service," the "civil service." Even the President is rightly spoken of as our chief public servant. Office is not to enrich or honor us, but to enable us to be of service to God and man.

The spirit that would use humbly a high office enables one to accept cheerfully a lowly office that is not regarded as an office at all, much less an honor. Here is a noble case, told by Mrs. Harriet E. Monroe, who writes: "I once visited the Indian school at Albuquerque, New Mexico. Professor Bryan was then at the head of it. At table I was trying to find from each teacher his share in the great work they were doing. Opposite me sat a bright-faced German, looking the wisest person at the table. As I came to him I said, 'And you, professor?' 'Madam, I am the cook.' Whether my face flushed with surprise, or not, I do not know. No one smiled. After a somewhat embarrassing moment for me, he said, 'Madam, since I was a little boy I have desired to be a missionary to the Indians. I received a good education, graduated at Berlin University, took a course in theology at a seminary in Germany, then came here, where I found that my imperfect English was an insurmountable barrier to religious work among the Indians. We had no cook. Some of our best teachers were ill nearly all the time, so I became the cook, and I do it unto God, beheving that every soul saved by these devoted workers whose health I have improved, is part of my work. Do you approve?' 'Do I approve?' I said. 'Why, every pot and kettle becomes a sanctified implement in your hand. The Master said, 'And whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be servant of all. For even the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.'"

Alexander, the Great, in the course of his victorious career, advanced with a great army against Jerusalem. He had conquered the world, and all men trembled before him. Jaddua was high priest at that time. Suddenly the gate of Jerusalem nearest to Alexander's army was thrown open, and the high priest advanced to meet the great conqueror. Jaddua was clothed in his priestly robes. He wore an upper garment of purple embroidered with gold; on his breast was a golden plate whereon the name of God was inscribed. Alexander was so impressed by the sight that he fell to the ground and did reverence to the high priest of Jehovah. Would that every one who wears the robes of office in government or in the church wore them with such reverence as the representative of God, in whom is all power and of whom all officers are representative, that wicked men might be halted in their evil courses and led to bow in submission to God.

A rumor was in circulation in India shortly before the recent great functions of Lord Curzon, the Viceroy, that in his archæological researches he had discovered the veritable throne of King Solomon, and would sit on it during the Durbar, in connection with which the Mohammedans therefore expected some supernatural event. What is needed by all who hold office, even in the Sunday School, is a sense of being ever in the presence of the Great White Throne that rules the universe, from which all officers get their authority, and to which all officers owe their allegiance. More than mortal influence shall flow from every officer who receives power from the "Greater than Solomon," who rules the world with truth and grace. Scientists have recently discovered several radiating minerals, but the radiating man is far more important, the man who receives regal influences from the King of kings and radiates them from whatever position he holds among men.

Out of the lowliest ranks of life men may rise to great usefulness, to be an inspiration for others to do likewise. On the centenary of the birth of Robert Stephenson, there was a very large demonstration at Newcastle. The town was paraded by a vast procession, who carried banners in honor of the distinguished engineer. In the procession there was a band of peasants, who carried a little banner of very ordinary appearance, but bearing the words, "He was one of us." David had so risen from the sheepfold, and David's greater Son, to whom David's kingship descende and by whom it was extended, was also o of whom the poorest can say, "He was o of us."

A preacher in South London once descri ed the offices of Christ. He said that Jes Christ was the Teacher

Christ's Crown and Kingdom

men. He went on show that he was t Great High Priest. explained further that Jesus was the King Saints. Then he began to marshal patriarc and kings, prophets and apostles, martyrs ar confessors of every age and every nation, ar painted in glowing words a scene where they came and owned Jesus Christ King, ar placed the insignia of royalty upon his he as King of the universe. The congregatic followed the sermon with breathless interes Suddenly the preacher began to sing, "A hail the power of Jesus name." The peop started to their feet and sang with new mea ing the hymn, and with a volume of sour which made passers-by stand and wonder.

Crown Christ Lord of your own life. Hel to make him Lord of our city, our State, o country, of the world. Let not this "inter national lesson" stop short of that great pu pose.

Ruskin says profoundly that th worst profanity is asking for wh we do not want, praying for God kingdom to come, for God's law t prevail, when we do not really wis it. "But if you do, you must do mo than pray for it, you must work for i And to work for it you must kno what it is."

* * *

Some one on being asked, "What i the Kingdom of God?" answered, wit one hand on his heart and the othe uplifted to heaven, "It is somethin here and something yonder." It i also something between the Christia heart and heaven, namely, the doin of God's will on earth as it is done i heaven—the real, though not perfec dominance of Christ's law, the puttin of service above salary, the christian zation of society in its business, it politics and its pleasures.

* * *

American Protestants should not b prevented by any false code abou

The Change of Popes

speaking only g o o of the dead from usin the great illustratio afforded by the recen change of Popes, of "how not to d it," in civil and religious elections both of which are represented in ever election of a Pope, who claims to b the supreme ruler of both Church an State. We need not raise the ques tion of sincerity. It is hard to under stand how an intelligent man, with th Bible in his hand, could accept th pretended miracles of Lourdes an other superstitions and encourage th worship of Mary and the saints; bu great and good men have sincerely ac cepted some very absurd beliefs, an as sincerity is a matter of which onl God can know absolutely, that ques tion may well be waived. But o Papal errors we can speak positively 1. All Protestants believe that th Church should not, by Popes or othe wise, control the State, as was actuall done in the Middle Ages, when king must be approved by the Pope, which i still the theory of Romanism. 2. American Pro estants just as firmly believe that the Stat should not by kings or otherwise control th Church, as is done in even such Protestan countries as Great Britain and Germany where church officers are appointed by th Crown. The meddling of Protestant mon archs in a Papal election is especially abhor rent to us. 3. American Protestants believ that officers of the Church and of the Stat should be separate and independent, but tha each is responsible to the King of kings. Sec tarian appropriations are in effect a union o Church and State, and should be resisted, bu legislation to protect the right to a Day o rest is not. There is much ignorant outcr against union of Church and State, whe there is no effort to adopt or support any de nomination, and no proposal for church of ficers to appoint or control State officers.

* * *

The Papacy rests on a misinterpretation o a text spoken not to Peter only, but at an other time to all the apostles and to all Chris tians about the gift of the "keys," which i the gift to every Christian, in his allegiance t God, of such an inward life that what he fo bids himself will be what God forbids, an what he permits will be what God permits Let us all elect ourselves to such power.

"AND THE MEN OF JUDAH CAME AND THERE THEY ANOINTED DAVID KING"

THE NARROW GATE

by REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON, D.D.
Author of "In His Steps."

CHAPTER IV—Continued

DOUGLAS and Esther were talking quietly at the other end of the table. The lunch was all served, and Esther and Mrs. Edwards had sat down with the others.

"Are you very much disappointed?" he asked. And Douglas was pleased at the deep marks of interested sympathy in her face.

"Very much so. How can I help it?"

"But you made a good fight."

"The other people made a better one."

"Do you think so? I should say theirs was a bad fight."

"They won out," said Douglas despondently. "Votes count."

"Are you going to give up?" she asked, and Douglas detected a feeling of disappointment in her tone.

"No, not as long as I can get money enough to print the Beacon! I'm going to stay here and fight as long as Mrs. Edwards will furnish 'coffee and grub,' to quote George," answered Douglas with a flash.

"That sounds more like as you used to be," said Esther, smiling.

"Do you ever think of the old college times?" asked Douglas. Mr. Edwards was engaged in an animated discussion with the minister, and being a very energetic talker it was necessary for him to thump the table quite often. Mrs. Edwards was at the other end of the table with Quits.

"Yes, indeed. I shall never forget Baccalaureate Sunday," Esther's eyes twinkled.

"You were very good to help me out of that difficulty. I need some one to help me out quite often," Douglas said very awkwardly.

"You've got Quits and George," said Esther hurriedly. "They must be a great help to you on the paper, aren't they? I took a great liking to that boy when I was in the office the other day. Isn't he funny? Is he always covered with ink that way? How does he manage it? But he is a loyal fellow. You ought to have heard him talk about you. He believes the Beacon is the biggest paper in the state. And he told me he would work on the Beacon for nothing just to help you. I call that a victory. As long as you've one friend like that you don't need to get discouraged. And then there's Quits. You've made a life-long friend of him. He told me that morning I came to get the programmes that he owed you more than any other person. I call that fine. You ought not to get discouraged. The Beacon has made friends. It represents an idea. It's something worth while."

Douglas suddenly raised his eyes to hers. They glowed with a quick resolve.

"Do you care, Esther, whether the Beacon succeeds or fails," he asked in a low tone. And although Mr. Edwards smote the table a blow that moment that jarred all the silver, Esther heard the question. "Yes, I care," she answered.

"Do you care any more than George or Quits?"

"Yes, a good deal more," Esther replied hastily, and Douglas did not think it was at all necessary for her to ask him at that moment. "Won't you have some more coffee?"

"Thank you, dear," Douglas said, under the cover of another gesture made by Edwards, "I have all I want," and Mrs. Edwards looked over at Esther at that moment and said to Quits "Did you ever see a prettier girl than Esther? I declare she grows more beautiful every day."

A few days later Esther told Mr. and Mrs. Edwards that she had promised to marry the editor of the Beacon.

"The morning after the election when he came up to lunch, I saw he was terribly disappointed, I had been learning to love him all through college. When I watched his fight with the saloon and all that, I grew to care more and more. I saw he needed comfort just at what he has told me since was a crisis with him. Do you think it was bold of me to let him know I cared for him, just as I did?"

Mr. Edwards broke in.

"It's just what Mrs. Edwards did for me. I was getting discouraged over my looks. She hinted one day that mine and hers together would make more than a fair average, and I've been the happiest man you ever saw since."

"I'm rejoiced for you, dear," said Mrs. Edwards. "Mr. Douglas is a splendid fellow. We shall insist on your making your home with us for a little while at least."

"We are not to be married until next spring," said Esther.

"DO YOU CARE, ESTHER, WHETHER THE 'BEACON' SUCCEEDS OR FAILS?"

"Just like these pretty school-teachers," growled Mr. Edwards, who was one of the school board. "Just when we get one settled to teach, somebody else gets her. The board is going to pick out homely people after this. I suppose you'll go into the office and read proof."

"I shall help on the Beacon in some way," said Esther, dreamily. "I believe in the Beacon."

A few weeks after the election, Quits startled George one day by saying soberly, "Mr. Douglas has got some one to take our place."

George almost dropped a form and pied it.

"What! Take our place! Not much! How can the Beacon run without me! It'll go to smash if I don't steer it right."

"I hear the school-teacher is going to take your place," said Quits with his grave smile. "She's going to take both our places."

"Huh!" said George with a grin. "You most gave me palpitation of the brain. That's all right. When the ghost walks it I don't get her the finest bouquet in Colby. But we'll have to watch the editorials from now on. There'll be too much poetry in 'em. Mr. Douglas better turn the editorials over to you or me until he's married. I don't care, though, if the school-teacher does come on to the staff of the Beacon. I like her."

"Who's that you like?" asked Douglas, who came in just in time to hear the last three words.

"The new associate editor of the Beacon, Mr. Douglas."

"Who? Who's that?" asked Douglas, who had during the last few weeks lapsed into his old college habit of absent-mindedness.

"He means the schoolma'am," said Quits, who was absolutely void of imagination.

"Oh," Douglas blushed, then laughed. "It will be some time yet. The Beacon will have to be more than self-supporting."

He spoke the words lightly, yet when he went to his desk and sat down that morning to go over his mail, he experienced almost a feeling of terror at the prospect that faced the Beacon.

Since the election subscriptions had fallen off. He could not account for some of the letters he had received. Most of them were depressing to him. The dropping of the questionable patent medicine ads. as fast as their contracts expired, had reduced his regular income so seriously that even this morning he actually faced the disagreeable fact that unless he could get some money from some source he could not pay Quits and George at the end of the week.

As he sat at his desk he began to reproach himself with his yielding to the feelings which had forced him to ask Esther Harris to be his wife. What had he to offer her? He was penniless, and might in a short time be bankrupt.

He began to open his mail. The first five letters contained requests from subscribers asking that the Beacon be discontinued. The next ten were from merchants in Anderson County, declining to renew the ads. they had been using in the paper. The remaining list of letters were for the most part abusive, and complaining of some little mistakes made in mailing out papers to subscribers, who had moved from one town to another without notifying him of the fact.

The editor of the Beacon had apparently reached a place in his career where something must be done. Never in all his life had he felt so disheartened. At the other end of the office George was whistling as he rattled away at the press, putting it into shape for the afternoon's work. Quits was, in his usual grave, silent fashion, standing at the case. And just then Douglas was startled at the entrance of Esther with Mrs. Edwards. It was half past eight, and the office of the Beacon was on the way to the High School. As the two women came in Douglas rose to greet them. He had never seen Esther looking more serious. He brought two chairs for his visitors, and anxiously waited to know the reason for their call.

CHAPTER V.

"ESTHER has had bad news this morning," Mrs. Edwards said, as Douglas gave his visitors a questioning look.

Douglas glanced at Esther.

"A telegram from father says that mother is very ill. I must start for home at once," Esther said.

"I'll go to the train with you," Douglas volunteered, as he picked up his hat. Instantly his whole thought was diverted from his own troubles to Esther's.

"Mrs. Edwards is going home with me," Esther was saying as they went out of the Beacon office down to the little station, where the morning train was due in half an hour. "You know mother and she were classmates and friends in school years ago. It will be a great comfort to me to have her with me."

"I'm going to be all the help I can." Mrs. Edwards spoke, in her usual cheerful, hopeful fashion.

"I wish I might do something," Douglas spoke rather doubtfully. Esther had always been so self-reliant and buoyant in disposition, that it was a new experience for him to see her carrying the marks of anxiety in her bright face.

"I am hoping for the best," Esther said, bravely.

Douglas saw to tickets and baggage, and in the few minutes before train time, walked up and down the platform with Esther.

"You will write or telegraph me in case—" he said, as the train was drawing up to the station.

"Yes."

"I shall want to know as soon as possible."

"And you must write and tell me all about the Beacon. If mother's illness is of long duration—I do not want to be selfish in the matter"—she turned her face to him, and he kissed her good-by and helped Mrs. Edwards aboard the train. As Esther followed, she handed Douglas a letter, saying, "Read it when you get back to the office. Good-by. Don't work too hard."

"Good-by, dear. God keep you!" Douglas replied.

He went back to the office, and the minute he was seated at the well-worn desk he opened the letter.

"Dear Frank" (the letter had been written that morning, after the news of the illness of Esther's mother) a telegram has just come summoning me home on account of mother's sudden illness. I do not know any more than the telegram says, but I have a misgiving that this is very serious, for father warned me when I left home that something of the kind might happen. Whatever it is I am going to hope for the best, and believe in God through it all.

Copyright, 1903, by Charles M. Sheldon.

"I am going to ask a favor of you, which I hope you will grant without any question or hesitation. I want you to take the enclosed check, and apply it for me on the expenses of the Beacon." Douglas mechanically picked up the little slip of yellow paper, which had fluttered out of the letter when he opened it, and read the amount. It was $125. "I have saved this amount and a little more from my salary, and I want to have a real share with you, Frank, in your life work. I am sure from what I know of the struggle you are having, that you will soon need money to keep the Beacon going. I believe in you and in your purpose with all my heart, which is yours, and you should have no hesitation about letting me share now, as I am going to always, in the work of your life. Mr. and Mrs. Edwards do not know anything about this I am doing, but I do not have any doubts about it. If you send the money back, or feel reluctant to use it, I shall take it as a sign that you do not love me. Remember, the Beacon represents something more than a little country paper in Anderson county, published by a struggling and ambitious young editor not yet a year out of college. The Beacon represents a cause. The cause of Right against Wrong. It is the only voice in the whole county, aside from the pulpit, that regularly and with influence speaks out against the saloon. I am not in any need of the money. Father is able to help me, and I know he and mother would both approve my course. So take it like a good boy, and don't be so absent-minded thinking about it that you throw it into the waste basket, or pay it to George for his week's salary. Your life work is mine also. You trust me for that, don't you? I have the greatest faith in you. And I am very happy in the thought of sharing with you in every part of the struggle you are making. Your sweetheart, ESTHER."

The editor of The Beacon raised this remarkable missive to his lips and kissed the last three words of it. Then he said out loud, but softly:

"Esther Harris, if I don't make a success of the Beacon—" He did not say what would follow the "if," but as he raised his eyes, George was standing by the desk.

"Say, Mr. Douglas, Quits wants some copy. There's nothing on the hook."

"All right. Here you are!" Douglas answered absent-mindedly, picking up the check and handing it over to George.

George took it, looked at it and whistled.

"Say! Mr. Douglas! Do you give a stem-winding nickel-plated hair brush with this, or a set of the World's Famous Orations bound in whole calf?"

"What! How's that!" the editor of the Beacon came back to earth suddenly and snatched the check away from the grinning George.

"Tell Quits I'll have some copy for him in a few minutes," he said, blushing furiously.

He seized a pencil and dashed into one of the strongest editorials he had ever written. George went over to Quits.

"The old man's got money to burn," he said confidentially to the quiet, grave-faced Quits. "I never approved of his shaking them Cemetery ads." (George always spoke thus of the patent medicine displays) "but if the associate editor of the Beacon is going to furnish butter for the bread like this, we'll have pie to eat every meal after awhile."

When the editorial appeared, George gave it his approval.

"It's all right," he said to Quits, while that individual nodded a strong assent. "If I knew some nice girl, I'd fall in love to improve my style. That's all I lack now."

TO BE CONTINUED NEXT WEEK

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

PATIENCE REWARDED

David a Model of Submission, Waiting on God's Will

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

THE greatest characteristic of David's life was his obedience; he, although on several occasions falling into grave sin, was, in the purpose of his life, fully yielded up to God; conscious of his own great unworthiness and sinfulness, of his need of strength, and of direction from on high; he was ever seeking to know the will of God, that he might do it. "I have found David, the son of Jesse, a man after mine own heart, who shall fulfil all my will" (Acts 13:22). Always in the habit of recognizing God, he lived a life in habitual communion with God, and therefore of trust in him; and he attributed all which he was able to accomplish to the Lord, and not to any power of his own. Although anointed by Samuel, under the direction of the Lord, he made no effort whatever to secure the throne, but waited patiently until God should appear in his behalf, and indicate his choice of him, by causing the people to proclaim him king. Thus, even when Saul was dead, David waited on, trustingly.

But he sought for definite direction: "Shall I go up into any of the cities of Judah?" he inquired. "And the Lord said unto him, 'Go up.' And David said, 'Whither shall I go up?' And he said, Unto Hebron.'" Such was the intimate intercourse between the Lord and his servant.

It was not a question with David as to what place of habitation would suit him best, would agree with his health, or fall into his plans; the bounds of his habitation were marked only by the known will of God. God chose for him, Hebron, a name that means fellowship. Fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ (I. John 1:3), is a wondrous place of habitation. So David took up his residence in Hebron; the only other place where he had for a time settled down, was Ziklag, where, from fear of Saul, he had escaped for a time. Without any direction from God, he had made his sojourn there in the midst of Israel's enemies (1 Sam. 27:1-3). Now God found him rest, and he with his household, and his men with their households, dwelt in the cities of Hebron. And the Lord, after his long waiting, intervened on his behalf, and stirred up the men of Judah to anoint him king.

David's first kingly act was to acknowledge the action of the men of Jabesh-gilead, in having buried the remains of Saul and his sons, and he called down blessing upon them, and told them also that the men of Judah had anointed him king. But David had yet to wait on, before he should have the endorsement of all Israel, to the election and anointing of the Lord by Samuel, so many years ago. Abner, Saul's field-marshal, took Ishbosheth, the son of Saul, whose name is never mentioned till now, and made him king over Israel. Abner knew that God had chosen David, and yet he clung to the dynasty of Saul, and perhaps to his own position over the army of Israel. Ishbosheth seems to have been only the tool of Abner, and to have taken no active part in the government. Abner's move from Mahanaim to Gibeon (II. Sam. 2:12), seems to have been understood by Joab as a challenge to the army of Judah; and the feat of arms, in which twelve young men of Judah, and twelve of Israel lost their lives, was only the beginning of the campaign, during which David waxed stronger and stronger, and the house of Saul, weaker and weaker.

All this time there was no self-assertion of his position as king, on the part of David. He took and used for God, all the power which he had over the tribe of Judah, and patiently waited on. How like the reign of our holy and unseen King, who shall so soon come again and establish his kingdom as "King over all the earth" (Zech. 14:9); who "shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously" (Isa. 24:23). Then he shall reign visibly; but now he reigns over a hidden kingdom of those who are dead, crucified with Christ, but whose life is hid with Christ in God (Col. 3:3). All the time he is bearing patiently with a world which says in all its actions, "We will not have this man to reign over us" (Luke 19:14). But all this time God was letting things ripen, until Israel should be eager to submit to the man of his choice.

The Expert Cleaner.

There are a score of things about the house that you will not undertake to clean. You fear that they would be ruined by soap and you intend to send them to an expert cleaner, an idea that comes down from a time before pure soap was made. The manufacturers of Ivory Soap are constantly asked if they know how beautifully this or that material can be cleaned with Ivory Soap. The uses of Ivory Soap are too numerous to be told; with it anything may be cleaned that will stand the application of water. You can be your own expert cleaner.

Karo Corn Syrup is a new, delicious table delicacy made from corn, with the food value of the grain retained. On griddle cakes of all makes it adds a relish that will sharpen the poorest appetite. Karo Corn Syrup is not a molasses, but a pure, wholesome, nutritious syrup. Sold in airtight, friction-top tins, which keep its goodness good. 10c, 25c and 50c, at all grocers.
Karo
CORN SYRUP
The Great Spread for Daily Bread.
CORN PRODUCTS CO., New York and Chicago.

NEW FALL SUITS, $8 to $40

Made to Order in One Week.

THE coming season will show greater changes in styles and fabrics than have occurred in many years, and the lady who would be fashionably gowned must necessarily order a new suit or cloak.

Our New Fall and Winter Catalogue is now ready. It shows 136 of the most fascinating styles of Paris and New York, all of which are handsomely illustrated and fully described.

We cater to ladies who are particular and who wish to be relieved of the usual dressmaking troubles. We keep no ready-made garments, but make everything to order. Our improved measurement diagram insures such perfect-fitting garments that our customers will find the purchase of their new Fall outfit a decided pleasure.

We carry a stock of over 400 materials from which you may select. They are the choicest products of foreign and domestic mills. We guarantee every one to give good service and be of exceptional value.

If you wish something decidedly new and entirely different from ready-made suits (which are seen everywhere) we can be of service to you. We employ only skilled cutters and tailors, and our garments are fashionably cut and made. There is a character to every garment—an air that distinguishes the wearer at once.

Should we send you anything that does not please you in every way, return it promptly and we will cheerfully refund your money, or make up a new garment, whichever you prefer.

Our Catalogue Illustrates:

Tailored Suits, $8 to $40. Suitable for all occasions, and in both long and short coat effects—the newest Paris models.

Church and Visiting Costumes, $12 to $40. Exquisite and dainty creations, in designs never before shown.

New Style Skirts, $1 to $20. From Walking Skirts for everyday wear, up to the Dressy Skirts for special occasions.

Fall and Winter Jackets, $8 to $35. In every approved style and length.

WE PAY EXPRESS CHARGES TO ANY PART OF THE U.S.

All letters answered by young women of taste and experience in matters of dress, who will, if you desire, aid you in selecting styles and materials. When you send us an order, they will look after it while it is in the cutter's and tailor's hands, and will give it the same care and attention that it would receive if it were made under your own eyes by your own dressmaker.

The Catalogue and a large assortment of the newest samples will be sent FREE on request. Be sure to say you wish the New Fall Catalogue No. 50. Mention whether you wish samples for Suits or Cloaks, and about the colors you desire, and we will send a full line of exactly what you wish.

NATIONAL CLOAK AND SUIT COMPANY
119 and 121 West 23d Street, New York.

CAWSTON'S CALIFORNIA OSTRICH FEATHERS

Are sold at producer's prices, and are far superior to any found in stores.

SOUVENIR FASHION BOOKLET

Write to-day for our new Catalog, which is a souvenir of California and a fashion delineator. Contains pictures of ostrich farm scenes and our fashionable ostrich goods—tips, plumes, boas, stoles, fans, aigrettes and novelties. Sent free for 2 cent postage.

For $2.00 we send prepaid a handsome Amazon plume, 15 inches long and 6 inches wide, made in the straight style, beautifully curled, black or white. Better than is sold for $3.00 in stores.

Great Curiosity FREE.—Natural feather, just as taken from the ostrich, sent free with every order.

CAWSTON OSTRICH FARM
The Original Home of the Ostrich in America
P. O. Box 2, South Pasadena Cal.

HOME BIBLE STUDY BY MAIL

This Book, "Home Bible Study," FREE if you write and enroll at once. Course covers the whole Bible and leads to diploma and degree. You can take this course at home by mail. Terms easy. Best testimonials. For free catalog write

C. J. BURTON,
Pres. Iowa Chris. College, Oskaloosa, Iowa

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

OUR HOME MUSIC CLASS

Sight-Singing in 12 Lessons

Prepared Especially for The Christian Herald
By B. C. UNSELD

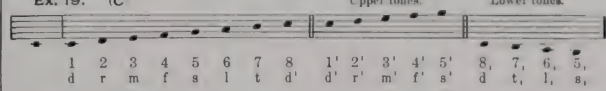
LESSON IV.

Pitch.—As you sing up or down the scale, you will notice that each tone is higher or lower than the others. Re is higher than Do and lower than Mi. Fa is higher than Mi and lower than So, and so on. This highness or lowness of tones is called Pitch. Each tone of the scale, then, differs from the others in pitch. Observe, also, that each tone differs from the others in its individual character, as it were. For instance, Do may be called a strong, firm tone, Mi a calm, gentle tone, So a clear, bright tone. As you practice the exercises, notice the effect of the tones and determine for yourself the character or individuality of each.

Pitch-Names.—In addition to the numeral names and the syllables, tones are also designated by the names of the letters C, D, E, F, G, A, B, C. These names are applied to certain definite pitches, and are called the pitch-names. They are the names by which tones are known on instruments. Get a friend to show you how these letter-names are applied to the keys of the piano or organ, or to the strings of a violin or guitar. This is not important at this stage of study, but it will help you to understand their use in later lessons.

The Scale Extended.—All voices can sing both higher and lower than the eight tones comprised in the scale. When we wish to sing higher, we take the eighth tone (upper Do) as the beginning of an upper scale; to sing the lower tones we take the first tone (One or Do) as the eighth of a lower scale. Do is One to the tones above it, and Eight to the tones below it. Example 19 illustrates these points. The eighth tone above or below any given tone has the same name, and is treated to some extent as the same tone. They are called octaves, one of the other. The little mark at the top of a letter or figure indicates the upper octave of a tone; a mark at the bottom of a letter or figure means the lower octave. Do not strain your voice trying to reach the higher tones; sing them softly.

Ex. 19. (C



Clefs.—We have learned that any degree of the staff may be taken to represent Do. In Examples 15 to 18, the degree taken for Do was shown by a square mark. That was only a temporary expedient; we must now learn the usual signs by which the place of Do is indicated. The first one is the character called the Treble Clef (also called the G clef); the second is the Bass Clef (or F clef). Each clef has several meanings, but the only meaning we attach to either of them just now, is that they tell us where to find Do on the staff. The treble clef shows that Do is on the added line below, its octave on the third space; the bass clef shows that Do is on the second space, its octave on the added line above. In vocal music the treble clef is used mostly for female voices, the bass clef for male voices, but all pupils should learn to read from each clef. The staff with either clef upon it represents the key of C. Much more might be taught concerning the clefs, but this is all you need to know at present.

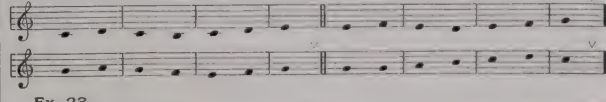
Having in mind the relative positions on the staff of Do, Mi and So we can use them as guides to the places of Re, Fa, La and Ti. Do is the guide to Re and Ti; Re is next above Do, Ti next below. So is the guide to La and Fa; La is next above So, Fa is next below. Next above Mi is Fa, next below is Re.

Ex. 20. Treble clef: Do on the added line below, and third space, key of C. The white notes are d m s d'; the black notes show the relative positions to them of r f l t. Exs. 20 and 21 are not intended to be sung; merely "read" them by naming the syllables.

Ex. 21. Base clef: Do on the second space and added line above; key of C.

Ex. 22. First "read" the syllables slowly, as you point to them; then sing them; then sing the exercises to la.

Ex. 23.



As a test exercise, copy the following in notes on both the treble and base staves; then sing it from the staff copies.

Ex. 24. Key C.

| d r | m r | d m | s v | s f | m s | d' t | d' ||

Taking the above as models "make up" exercises of your own and practice them. Any such exercises (to a limited number) sent in by pupils, will be examined and commented upon. Address B. C. Unseld, care of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Copyright, 1903, by B. C. Unseld

A Blind Woman's Joy

While I am now very old, being in my eighty-second year and blind, I do enjoy THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and the Red Letter Bible so much. My daughter reads them both to me constantly. She can select the words of Christ quickly, they being in red. They prove such a great help and comfort to me. I could not be without THE HERALD one week. I look for it as for an old friend.

Lynchburg, Va. M. J. L.

The Red Letter Bible, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD one year, $3.

"A Regular Treat"

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—I want to say that your "Family Art Gallery" is a regular treat, and no paper in the world, except the greatest one—THE CHRISTIAN HERALD—could offer such a splendid gift. The pictures are all fine. I voice the sentiment of my entire family when I say, "Thank you." We wish for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the greatest year in its history. TOM W. CARPENTER.

Nashville, Tenn.

The "Family Art Gallery" free to every subscriber.

Fleisher's Yarns

are made from selected wools, carefully spun, and have an even, lofty elastic thread. Dyed in a full line of beautiful shades which can always be matched.

An article knitted or crocheted of Fleisher's Yarns will always hold its shape and yet be soft and elastic. Every skein of the genuine bears the trade-mark ticket.

New Knitting and Crocheting Manual will be sent to the dainty sex by S. B. & B. W. Fleisher, Inc., Philadelphia, Pa., on receipt of 5 leaves taken from their yarns and 2 cents for postage.

S. B. & B. W. Fleisher, Inc.
DEPARTMENT B.
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Gainsboro' Pattern Hat
Worth $5 00
Only
$1.95

Write for our new catalog of ladies' fashions.

This stunning French model is the most becoming hat seen this season. Beautifully hand made of rich, silk finish ribeline felt, effectively arranged around brim and forming a fringed drape at back. Large bird of paradise with natural plumes trims the top. Bird and bandeau of velvet and cut steel ornaments raises brim slightly at left side. Ostrich crown near back is a fine and yet ornamental feature of closely curled ostrich fibre completes the charming Parisian effect. Made on a buckram frame. Black and all the newest shades.

FREE: Our complete illustrated fashion catalogue of ladies' hats, jackets, suits, furs, waists, etc., shows a large and attractive variety of the latest fashions at manufacturers' prices. Be sure and write for it to-day.

254 POST SQ CINCINNATI, O
Tennenbaum Lesser Co

PRAYERS For Public Worship Private Devotion and Personal Ministry.

By Charles C. Mansfield. A New and Unique Book. Special Days. The Invocation. Prayers for Special Occasions. Prayers for all seasons and needs. Prayers for Young People. Prayers for Missionary Meetings. Prayers for Sunday-schools. Prayers for Prayer-meetings. Prayers for Social Occasions. Prayers for Christian Workers. A Complete Guide to Devotion. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Cloth, gilt top, 75 cents. Half Morocco, gilt top, $1.00. Full Morocco, gilt edges, $1.50.

M. E. Munson, Pub., 77 Bible House, New York

PARKER'S Arctic Socks (TRADE MARK)

J. B. Parker, Dept. K. 25 James St., Malden, Mass.

"REVERSIBLE" Linene Collars & Cuffs.

MANY ADVANTAGES.

Perfect in fit, never ragged or uncomfortable. Very convenient, stylish, economical. Made of fine cloth and exactly resemble linen goods. Turn down collars are reversible and give double service.

NO LAUNDRY WORK

When soiled, discard. Ten collars or five pairs of cuffs, 25c. By mail, 30c. Send 6c. in U. S. stamps for sample collar or pair of cuffs. Name size and style.

REVERSIBLE COLLAR CO., Dept. P, Boston

LABLACHE FACE POWDER

GOLF GIRLS

Open air sports make rough skin and try the finest complexions. Use the perfect

LABLACHE

Face Powder to counteract the ravages of sun and wind. It clears, freshens and softens the skin; it preserves a beautiful complexion; it restores a faded one. An exquisite toilet necessity for over thirty years. Flesh, White, Pink, Cream Tints. 50c. per box. Druggists or by mail. Take no other.

BEN LEVY & CO., French Perfumers, 125 Kingston St., Boston

Dr. Lyon's

PERFECT

Tooth Powder

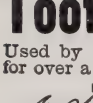
Used by people of refinement for over a quarter of a century

PREPARED BY

J. W. Lyon, D.D.S.

We Carpet Your Floor for $3

To introduce our new, serviceable and beautiful



BRUSSELETTE ART RUGS

Attractive and artistic patterns, woven on both sides and in all colors and sizes. Easily kept clean and warranted to outwear higher-priced carpets. Sent prepaid to any point east of the Rocky Mountains. Money refunded if not satisfactory. Illustrated catalogue showing rugs in actual colors sent free.

Sanitary Mfg. Co. (Inc.) Dept. 3, 200 E. Allegheny Ave., Philadelphia, Pa.

STUDY LAW At Home

Our way of teaching law by mail has prepared our students for practice in every State, for success in business and public life. The original school, established 13 years. Write for catalogue

SPRAGUE CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF LAW, 322 Majestic Bldg, Detroit, Mich.

LOOKING FOR SAFE INVESTMENTS

Will remind you of the WILLIAM R. COMPTON 5 per cent. Mortgages. Recommended by financiers of national reputation. Book free.

Address, No. 5 WARDELL BUILDING, MACON, MO.

STARK TREES best by Test—78 Years LARGEST Nursery. Fruit Book free. We PAY CASH Want MORE SALESMEN Weekly STARK BROS, Louisiana, Mo.; Dansville, N. Y.; Etc

7 SUTHERLAND SISTERS Hair Grower and Scalp Cleaner keep the hair and scalp in healthy condition.

DISTINCTIVELY a S. S. Book 80c. postpaid, GEMS OF SONG THE MIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

LIGHT ON JEWISH LIFE*

A Valuable Work on the Jewish People, Their Beliefs, Customs and History

THE third of the twelve volumes of the Jewish Encyclopedia fully maintains the high estimate of the work formed on the first two volumes already noticed in these columns. As this volume includes only part of the third letter of the alphabet, one naturally wonders how the remaining twenty-three can be covered in the other nine volumes, but the experience Messrs. Funk & Wagnalls have had, and the skill and care they have displayed so far in this monumental undertaking may be trusted to bring the plan within the scope they have assigned to it. As in the former two volumes the letter press is excellent, and the illustrations of exceptional interest. The reproductions of pages from old Bibles are triumphs of art. Very valuable, too, are the pictures from Egyptian monuments representing captives employed in brick-making. The Assyrian illustrations, also, shed light on the conditions of the captivity. Pictures of quaint betrothal, marriage and burial customs will be studied with profit by all Bible readers. Besides these, are pictures of the Laver and the candlesticks, and other furniture of Solomon's Temple, of ancient coins, bottles and artistic bookplates, all of which helps to a better understanding of the Old Testament.

It is worthy of notice that, although this volume contains articles on the blood accusation, which at various times has involved the Jews in cruel and unjust persecution, there is an absence of the bitterness which their sufferings might have been expected to engender. The Jewish scholars who contribute to its pages are evidently men of well-balanced minds, capable of discriminating the character of Christians who deserve the name, and not confusing them with the malignant mob, who, under the name of Christians, act with unchristian malevolence. Every allusion to Christianity is respectful and remarkably fair, and shows a better acquaintance with Christian doctrines than might have been looked for in Jewish Rabbis. The example of courtesy that they set might well be followed by Christian writers in dealing with one another.

The most important article in this volume is that on the Bible, which occupies sixty pages, covering the origin, history and interpretation of the Jewish Scriptures, their relation to Mohammedan literature and other cognate topics. Of special interest is a table showing the various arrangements of the group of Bible books to which the Jews give the name of Hagiographa. The Talmudic form, it appears, was as follows: Ruth, Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Canticles, Lamentations, Daniel, Esther, Ezra, Nehemiah, Chronicles. Of the other arrangements three put Chronicles first and two the Psalms, and Ruth in one case precedes Canticles and in another follows it. An amusing section of this group of articles on the Bible, is that dealing with the superstitious uses to which portions of the Psalms have been put. It appears that there was a popular idea among the uneducated Jews that the second Psalm was good against a storm at sea; the 105th against a quartan ague; verses from the 119th Psalm for diseases of the spleen and kidneys; the 141st Psalm against heart disease; the 143d against lumbago; while the 144th would help to heal a dislocated wrist.

The article on Cain contains much information that will interest those among our readers who are concerned about his wife, the mark that was set upon him, etc. The Jews believed, it appears, that he married his sister, as indeed, if the Biblical account is accepted as literal history, he had to do, if he married at all. Many traditions are quoted about him, one of which is that in every one of the seven centuries of his life a new and different punishment was inflicted upon him Articles on betrothals, with copious illustrations, on the sacred bread, on the High Priest's breastplate, on burnt-offerings and on the Cabalists, with an immense number of biographical notices, combine to make this volume a mine of valuable information.

*The Jewish Encyclopedia, Vol. III. A descriptive record of the history, religion, literature, and customs of the Jewish people from the earliest times to the present day. Seven hundred pages, 180 illustrations, 1,236 articles Prepared by more than four hundred scholars and specialists, to be completed in twelve volumes. Published by Funk & Wagnalls, New York and London.

A Sunny-Faced Philosopher*

WHETHER Aunt Abby was really sunny-faced or not I do not know, but her writings make you picture her smiling. Her placid eyes look out into her little world, and old-fashioned quaint thoughts come to her. It is as though she took you into a shaded garden and pointed out to you beautiful flowers, favorites so long ago, that their colors and their fragrance have a sense of strangeness to you.

AUNT ABBY'S IDEA OF A HOLIDAY

"No, I don't go away summers. I've got a way of my own of having a vacation. Maybe you'll smile when I tell you where I go, and what kind of a place it is. It's nothing in the world but a pasture, with a rock in it.

"Some days I'll be so tired I can't do a mortal thing but just stretch myself full-length out on the grass and keep still, and then'll come into my head that verse out of mother's favorite psalm—I guess it was your mother's too, 'tis most folks mothers—about 'He maketh me to lie down in green pastures.' Deary me! I don't want a better sermon; and again I'll get to looking at the grass. There's red-top and timothy and a little herd's grass there, and it looks so pretty shaking in the wind. And I recollect how our Lord took notice of such little things. 'If God so clothe the grass of the field' you know, and before I know it that's led me off into the most comforting, beautiful thinking.

"And then there's the rock; I can't hardly talk much about that, but you know what I mean—I believe I get more points out of that boulder than I do out of the pasture."

AUNT ABBY ON FRIENDSHIP.

"It's better to be a friend than to have a friend, I hold; but they come to the same thing after all. Don't call yourself a friend, and be thinking the everlasting time what the other side of the friendship can do for you. But be a friend for the sake of what you can do for the other, what you can give or give up, what sorrow you can bear for him, what sacrifice you can make, what good to his body or, more than all, to his soul."

AUNT ABBY ON SECTS AND HEAVEN

"I'll go a little further, though this time I don't expect many folks to agree with me. It's my own idea; one of those things that appear to come into my head of themselves, as far as I know, and come to stay. This is it. I sort of believe there'll be different churches or societies or companies, whatever you may call them, up in heaven. You needn't look so scared, that isn't as bad as it sounds. They won't be run just as they are down here, and there won't be so much—well, friction's a good word, mebbe, not to use a stronger one. Somehow to me it's a real, comfortable, nice idea, the folks of the different organizations that used to hold by each other and love their own church so, with its own own ways, down below on earth, their meeting once in a while, at anv rate, all by themselves up there, and talking about the old days; yes, even, mebbe, singing some of the old hymns."

*From Aunt Abby's Neighbors by Annie Trumbull Slosson. Fleming H. Revel Co., New York. Price $2.00.

WARNER'S Rust-proof Corsets

Every Pair Guaranteed

"The Cream is Sour, Mum"

"Oh, Bridget, what shall we do?" How familiar such a conversation is to many a housewife! The dinner arrangement will never be upset by sour cream or milk if is used. It never sours—is always handy. Simply full-cream cow's milk, evaporated, sterilized and canned. Absolutely takes the place of milk and cream for all purposes. Try it in your coffee or on your breakfast food. Most grocers sell it. If yours does not, give us his name and we will send you a sample can free.

Highland Brand Evaporated Cream

HELVETIA MILK CONDENSING CO.

Dept. F,
Highland, Illinois.

"Where Model Dairy Farms Abound."

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN 5% PER ANNUM

Proper Caution is Compatible with Earnings of 5%

THIS COMPANY is well established and well known. Its patrons are conservative, cautious men. They know the Company's record of 10 years' growth, its present strength, indicated by

Capital and Surplus, . $1,100,000
Assets, . . $1,600,000

They know that, operating under State Banking Dept. supervision, we pay promptly (quarterly, by check) 5 per cent. on all sums, for every day we have the money; and it is withdrawable at pleasure. Let us give you full particulars. WRITE US.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO., 1131 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

CHAIRS for INVALIDS

TRICYCLES FOR CRIPPLES

Invalids enjoy the supreme comfort and restfulness of our Street and House Chairs. Simple, strong and thorough in construction. Easily adjusted, light running, noiseless. Our catalogue shows the most

Improved Models

in tricycles and chairs especially designed for the comfort and benefit of cripples and invalids however afflicted. Sent free on request. Address THE WORTHINGTON MFG. CO., Dept. A Elyria, O. [Successor to Fay Tricycle and Invalid Chair Co.]

GOV'T REVOLVERS, GUNS, SWORDS Military Goods, NEW and old, auctioned to F. Bannerman, 579 B'w'y, N.Y. 15c Cat'l'g m'l'd 6.

Popping of lamp-chimneys is music to grocers.

MACBETH.

If you use a wrong chimney, you lose a good deal of both light and comfort, and waste a dollar or two a year a lamp on chimneys.

Do you want the Index? Write me.

MACBETH, Pittsburgh.

There's Money In the Right Kind of Hogs

Get a pair of the famous O. I. C.'s for breeders and you can raise hogs that pay.

O. I. C. HOGS

are in demand both for breeding stock and fattening for market. 39 years devoted to the perfection of this breed without the loss of a single hog through disease. We will ship a sample pair on time, giving full pedigree and allow agency to first applicant. Two O. I. C.'s weighed 2,806 lbs. Write to-day.

L. B. SILVER CO.,
347 Hog Building, Cleveland, O.

GINSENG

Put in a Ginseng bed. Amazing profits: easily grown; hardy anywhere in the United States and Canada. Immense demand; meagre supply. Grown either on farm or in small garden. Michigan man took $15,000 worth off ⅓ acre last year.

IS WORTH $40,000

We sell cultivated seed and plants. Send 4c in stamps for 55-page Book on enormous, easily-earned profit in Ginseng, and current issue of magazine, "The Ginseng Garden."

CHINESE-AMERICAN GINSENG CO.
Dept. C Scranton, Pennsylvania.

AN ACRE

$45 TOLMAN RANGES $23.75

with reservoir and high closet. Great Foundry Sale. We ship range for examination without a cent in advance. If you like it, pay $23.75 and freight, and take range for

30 Days FREE Trial Test

Just as represented to be—agree to refund your money. Oven 17½x21 in., six 8 in holes. Tolman Ranges are made of best wrought steel. Best bakers and roasters on earth. Burn anything. Asbestos lined fires.

Guaranteed 5 Years

Will save their cost in fuel in One Year. 10 other styles $19.75 to $37.75. Catalogue free.

JUDSON A. TOLMAN COMPANY
Dept. C. 66 Lake Street, Chicago.

$22.75 BUYS A GENUINE LACLEDE RANGE

during our factory sale. New 1903 model, nickel trimmed, 6 holes, high closet, and white enamel lined reservoir. Equal to ranges sold by others for $40 and $50. This is one of the most handsome big wrought steel ranges ever made. Latest design; has all the good points of the highest priced ranges. Finest nickel bands, asbestos lined. Best roaster and cooker ever made. Burns wood or coal. Guaranteed in every way. Sixty days free trial in your own home. We can save you from $10 to $25 on any range. Write at once for our free catalogue.

STEWART BROS.
463 High St. Columbus, O.

SAVE ½ YOUR FUEL

or get all the heat you pay for. When you use a Rochester Radiator you do.

Fully Guaranteed. Write for booklet of heating houses.

Rochester Radiator Co.,
16 Furnace St., Rochester, N. Y.

OUR HAPPY COLONY AT MONT-LAWN

OUR "Children's Eden" at beautiful Mont-Lawn has had many visitors this summer. Readers of this journal, friends of the work, have come from far and near to see the wonderful colony of happy children, which we have planted on the picturesque Rockland hills, overlooking the noble Hudson, and have been astonished and delighted. Not a few have come from distant cities, a considerable journey, and they, like all the rest, have departed full of enthusiasm and admiration for this most beautiful of charities, which has for its beneficiaries the neglected children of the New York tenements. The cordial approval of these friends has been very grateful and encouraging to the conductors of the Mont-Lawn work.

Year after year, our Children's Home has been steadily growing, and the demands upon its accommodations have been increasing every season. Crowds of little children from the very poorest of tenement homes, come to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD offices in the Bible House, pleading with the workers to take them "to the country." Although the neediest and most deserving are always taken, there are many others to whom an outing would be a novel and blessed experience. If our readers could only listen to their shrill, childish voices, in pitiful appeal, with the frequently repeated, "Won't you take me?" "Can't I go?"—we believe that many hearts would be touched, and that the number of generous friends who would help to give these pale little waifs a brief season of health-giving recreation among the fields and woods of Mont-Lawn would be multiplied.

* * *

Our children's garden at Mont-Lawn is now an exquisite mass of bloom, the variegated colors making it a rainbow corner of our children's "paradise." The little folks take pleasure in keeping it free from weeds.

Fritz, a wee gardener, when he first saw the flower-beds, stood on the edge of the garden and looked on so much beauty with longing eyes, hardly daring to think of ever going near enough to inspect the beautiful forms and inhale the fragrance. When the teacher took hold of his hand and led him in between the beds, he exclaimed:

"Yer not going to take me in there, are yer? Won't someone drive us off?"

He began to look suspiciously around.

"No, Fritz," was the reply, "and if you are a good boy and pull all the grass out of this bed, I will give you one of those pretty flowers."

Fritz wanted to know right away if the flower would keep until he goes home, as he wanted his mother to see a flower like that.

"Can I take some of the grass home and plant it in a box, so we will have some grass 'round our house, like some o' the houses up-town have? There's no grass nor nothin' green in our street, an' you can only see a tiny little bit of blue sky 'way, 'way up over yer head; but not on the sides of yer head."

He begins to weed with a zest that characterizes the child who has found a new pleasure in novel employment. Fritz still retains this zeal as he is taken each day to the garden. He wants to know where and when the weeds are to be planted again—not the grass but "the ones that have pretty leaves," and he asks what kind of blossoms they have. He is told that they are thrown away, and he is also told in a simple way how we must all cultivate the good deeds in our hearts, like the real flowers in the garden, and throw out all the weeds.

A CORNER IN THE LAUNDRY

With his frail little body bent over the bed, he works diligently, asking a great many questions. "What kind of a plant is it? What makes the leaves grow that way? What makes it that color? Why do they stay in a dirty bed, an' wouldn't it be nice if they had clean, white beds like my little cot?" He adds, "I don't have no nice one like that home tho'. It's all dark in the room, no winders for light to come through, an' the walls is so close up none'd come in anyway an' most always one wall is for two houses."

With an expression of satisfaction at what he has accomplished he says, "Teacher, isn't that clean?" As the teacher looks at the little figure, dressed in a clean pair of overalls furnished by the Home, and sees the wee man looking like a diminutive farmer already, she gives a nod of approval and hands him the promised flower, telling him to pin it on, and she will give him one to take home, also.

Fritz walks off, with head up, showing each little child he meets what he has earned, and telling how the teacher said he might weed again to-morrow. He is one of many children of the tenements to whom the flower-beds afford a large amount of enjoyment, while keeping the little hands and minds busy in profitable employment.

Many are the quaint sayings of the children that are remembered by the teachers. A little lad, who had received a letter from home telling him how lonesome his mother was without him, was asked by the teacher if he wasn't lonesome, too, when he was away from his mother.

"Why, I see her in my head," he answered.

The teacher laughed at his odd reply.

"But, I can see her in my head," he persisted. "I see her just now."

What a wonderful truth, that we really can carry the image of our loved ones about with us, and can see them even when absent from them. May we have such a vision of Him that he will constantly be present with us, and in our hearts.

* * *

Contributions in aid of our Children's Home should be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, New York. $3 provides a ten days' outing for a little tenement boy or girl. Every gift will be acknowledged in these columns.

MELLIN'S FOOD

FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS

TRADE MARK

Sweet sleep comes to the baby who is properly fed with a proper food. Mellin's Food babies sleep well.

A postal request will bring a sample of Mellin's Food right to your home.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

CHEAP RATES and Through Service to Washington, Colifornia, Colorado, Oregon. Write for rates. Map of California Free. TRANS-CONTINENTAL FREIGHT CO., M. 325 Dearborn St., Chicago.

Agent's Outfit Free.—Delight, Biscuit, Cake and Doughnut Cutter, Apple Corer, and Steamer. 5 articles in one. Sells on sight. Large Catalog free. RICHARDSON MFG. CO., Dept. 6, BATH, N.Y.

PARKER

"LUCKY CURVE"

Fountain Pen

I am writing to the stenographer of the Parker "Lucky Curve" Fountain Pen to say that I have used it for [illegible] and I am pleased to say that it is the best pen I have ever had. I have used it for [illegible] and it has never failed me in any way. I can write with it as fast as I can think, and it never skips or scratches. I have recommended it to many of my friends, and they all say the same thing. I am sure that if you will send me a pen I will be able to get you many orders. I am a traveling salesman, and I am always looking for a good pen to sell. I have tried many pens, but this is the best I have ever had. I am sure that if you will send me a pen I will be able to get you many orders. I am a traveling salesman, and I am always looking for a good pen to sell. I have tried many pens, but this is the best I have ever had. I am sure that if you will send me a pen I will be able to get you many orders. I am a traveling salesman, and I am always looking for a good pen to sell. I have tried many pens, but this is the best I have ever had.

I would like to have you write me today.

GEO. S. PARKER
The Parker Pen Co
16 Mill St. Janesville, Wis.

RHEUMATISM

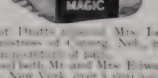
(Chronic or Acute)

Relieved Free

Wonderful Discovery of Michigan Man Relieves

Without Medicine

Taking medicine usually the beginning of trouble. Don't do it. Nature provided means of purging her through pores and impurities of [illegible]. You must make those pores do their work. Magic Foot Drafts open pores and draw the [illegible] in the body and eliminate the poisons [illegible] system to be thrown off. Millions of [illegible] will be sent free on approval to prove it. If you are satisfied with the help they give send One Dollar. If not, keep your money. Don't ask it back.



Magic Foot Drafts [illegible] Mrs. Leah Bramhaugh, Postmistress of [illegible], Neb., in 1901, and there has been no return of pain.

They relieved both Mr. and Mrs. Edward Lowndes of Rochester, New York, over a year ago. No pain since.

They permanently relieved A. J. Keenan, a New Orleans grocer.

They relieved Calvin Hersome, of Boston, after being laid up seven months.

R. D. Campaigne, of Fort Worth, writes: "I have never had a [illegible] since I used Magic Foot Drafts last June (1902).

Many thousands of others are enjoying ever comfort brought by Magic Foot Drafts. Send for and write to-day for Magic Foot Drafts free on approval to MAGIC FOOT DRAFT CO. 365 Oliver Bldg., Jackson, Mich. They will relieve you.

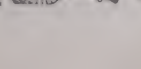
$200. A MONTH

One reliable man or woman in each county as manager to exhibit and take orders and appoint agents for Harrison's Old Gas Stoves for cooking and heating. Wonderful invention. Astonishingly cheap. Our agent [illegible] Miniature Gas Works. Absolutely safe. Everywhere delighted. Thousands needed now. Cheapest, cleanest, safest fuel. Customers delighted. Catalogue FREE. Write today.

World Mfg. Co., 6076 World Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

I Can Sell Your Real Estate no matter where it is or what it is worth. Send description and price and learn my [illegible] plan. Don't delay. Write to-day.

W. M. OSTRANDER
North American Building, PHILADELPHIA



Newton Horse Remedy Co., Toledo, Ohio.

Sundry Charities

THE following contributions, sent in by our readers, for the various good causes mentioned below, are hereby acknowledged:

Span.-Amer.Gospel Fd, Porto Rico, Mr.Woods

Reader of C H, Harrisburg, Pa..... 1 00
J H Keeler..... 1 00
Maj F W Fairbanks.. 25
Mrs A W Wells..... 25
Ernest Christner..... 25
Mrs Stanley Gibson..... 25
Mrs Underhill..... 1 00
Anna J Hanford..... 25
Mrs Herman Hoag... 3 00
John Palmer..... 2 00
C E Soc, Centre Valley, Pa..... 4 50
St John's Reformed C E Soc, Freeland, Pa. 1 50
Mrs D L Stephenson. 30
Ella Reidy..... 25
Carrie Jones..... 75
Mrs Norman..... 1 00
Ruth, Lacon, Cal..... 1 00
Mrs M Cummings..... 25
Mrs R Wilson..... 25
Herbert Spencer..... 26
Cora P Wells..... 26
Gustav Scholz..... 26
Anna Ovelgoenner... 25
Mrs L A Childs..... 25
P Brotin..... 50
Wilson H Moyer..... 1 00
Geo G Kreidler..... 25
H S Ferris..... 25
C W Hinman..... 25
Rev W R Smidt..... 25
Ella E Steadman..... 25
Geo R Green..... 25
One who loves the Master, Ayers Flat, Can..... 5 00
Mrs Augusta Peele.. 25
Mrs A Rankin..... 25
Mrs G L Baxter..... 25
Mrs C H Manning... 1 00
Mrs Geo McKay..... 26
Mrs F Elliott..... 25
J Steinmetz, Jr..... 25
Miss W L Cleare..... 25
H M Baile..... 25
Miss H B Davidson... 25
J G Davidson..... 25
Miss Mary S Davidson 25
Miss Annis Barnette. 25
Mrs W A Alexander. 25
Miss E R Hayes..... 25
Mary Pease..... 25
F H Gay..... 25
R D Bumstead..... 25
Eliza M Howe..... 25
——, ——..... 25
Rachel Heald..... 25
J S Nichols..... 25
Mrs E Goodin..... 2 50
Jeanette Ibsen..... 50

Kansas Flood Sufferers

Mrs and Mr E P Frisbee..... 2 00
Franklin Union S Sch, Harrisburg, Va.... 11 55
E L Guard..... 50
Horace Martin..... 5 00
Mrs Wm Ide..... 1 00
Rev and Mrs Jos H Owen..... 5 00
Reader of C H, Opelika, Ala..... 1 00
C M H, Binghamton, N Y..... 1 00
Mrs R E Pugh..... 2 00
J L Grant..... 2 00
Lavinia March..... 1 00
——, Jefferson, O.... 1 00
J R Simmons..... 3 00
Edw D Gitt..... 2 00
A Friend, Lancaster, Pa..... 1 00
——, Vale, Oreg..... 20 00
Mrs M A Gibbs..... 2 00
J D McGregor..... 2 00
Mrs R G Mason..... 3 00
Geo W Brainard..... 2 00
H Kindermann..... 5 00
E L M, Brooklyn, N Y 3 00
L M, Montrose, Md.. 1 00
Jane A Warner..... 1 00
Mrs Walter Smithson 50
Plymouth Cong'l Ch, Corvallis, Oreg..... 2 94
First Cong'l Ch, Corvallis, Oreg..... 1 77
W S Lawry..... 3 00
I H N, Beverly, Mass 2 00
N M Gillespie..... 1 00
Mrs J A Wheelwright 2 00
Willis Gregory..... 1 00
A Smith..... 1 00
Mrs J Bateson, Jr... 5 00
F H Miller..... 20 00
Mrs Jane Noble..... 5 00
Subr, Oronoco, Minn. 1 00
——, New Jersey. 25
Mrs J L McGhee.... 2 00
Jonathan Bisel..... 1 00
S R Dimock..... 2 50
Gladys, Floyd and Esther McDonald.. 7 00
G H School..... 1 00
Eugene Torrey..... 1 00
Alice Loy..... 1 00
Mrs S P Kinney..... 1 00
Nora Davisson..... 2 00
Dr F A Eison..... 2 00
Frances A King..... 2 00
Elias Monday..... 2 00
Mrs M Wilson and S E Lagan..... 5 00
Mrs Chas Kamlin.... 1 50
Mrs S L Hendrick... 1 00
Mrs H H Chittendon 6 34
Franklin Union Chapel, Caldwell, N J..... 6 09
S Pederson..... 1 00
Mrs James Grover.... 1 00

Topeka Flood Sufferers

Mrs Mary A Gibbs.... 2 00
—— Vale, Oreg..... 20 00
C A Lelean..... 5 00
Louella Merrick..... 5 00
——, Blackwell, Okla 1 00
N E in Christ, Los Gatos, Calif..... 10 00

Dutch Leper Colony, Surinam, So.America

Friends Fairfield, Conn..... 1 00
W A M, Providence, R I..... 2 00
Birdie Oliver..... 3 00
Mrs Ann Morris..... 1 00
N E in Christ, Los Gatos, Calif..... 10 00

Rev. E. H. Richards, East Africa

Chas W Naw..... 1 00
Wm Schober..... 4 50

Soc. for the Prevention of Vice (A. Comstock)

F H Keeler..... 1 00
F Brown..... 50
Miss E Mekemson.... 20
Virgie Moss..... 75

Spanish-American Gospel Fund, Philippines

Sarah E Carey..... 48

Medical Missionary Student

——, Zanesville, O.. 1 00
Edith Murray..... 3 00
Charles Phillips.... 11 02
Mary Rankin..... 5 00
——, Champoeg, Oreg. 5 00
L J Little..... 1 00
S G Parke..... 6 00
John W Sibley..... 5 00
H N Niles..... 5 00
Mrs E F Barry..... 1 00
H W Brinckerkoff... 4 00
Ruth, Lacon, Calif. 5 00
Mrs J C Francis..... 2 00
S P Kane..... 1 00
C W Johnson..... 2 00
——, Zanesville, O.... 1 00

Spanish-American Gospel Fund

——, Champoeg, Oreg 1 00
Mrs J O Jones..... 25
Mrs Spindler..... 26
Mrs S E Sones..... 24
J B. Hodgdon, Me.... 26
Sadie A Maxted..... 25

Any Good Cause

Mrs W L Scales..... 1 00
Mrs James T Lane... 25
Mary Dunkeld..... 25
George E Parish.... 10 00
B F McLain..... 1 00
A Friend, Bloomfield, N J..... 1 00
Mrs R W and S W Hover..... 4 00

Door of Hope

Mrs O E Burrell..... 50

Mrs. Rose H. Lathrop

Mrs J Reber..... 4 00

Home Missions

Flora Schenck..... 1 00

Foreign Missions

——, Vale, Oreg..... 50 00
Union S Sch, No Caldwell, N J..... 10 00

Mayesville Institute

Miss M E Upham.... 15 00
Miss Helen C Butler. 25 00

Miss Shattuck's Orphan Work

Union Park Church Ladies, Chicago, Ill. 45 00
Miss Frances B Wells 35 00
Mrs B Hancock..... 30 00
Kate B Sturgess..... 60 00
Mrs C E Burrell..... 50
Missy Dept of Woman's Union, First Cong'l Ch, Mt Vernon, N Y..... 30 00
Womans' Foreign Missionary Soc., 1st Cong'l Ch., Evanston, Ill..... 23 00
Mrs L W Curtiss..... 30 00

Pundita Ramabai India

G L Cook..... 5 00

Bishop Hartzell, Africa

One of the Lord's Sheep, Philadelphia 5 00
Miss A M Carr..... 3 00
C F Vandewater..... 10 00
Mrs S N Wallinger.. 2 00
Herbert F Tyhurst.. 3 00

Dr. W. T. Grenfell, St. John, N. F.

I H N, Newark, N. J. 5 00

George Hickok

John Williams..... 1 50

Rev. R. D. Schoonmaker's School, N. C.

Horace Martin..... 2 00
L A Lelean..... 5 00

Mrs. Mary A. Allen, Liberia, W. A.

R W Crichton..... 5 00

American Bible Society

Kerrhill Pres Ch, Titusville, Pa..... 3 92
Mrs E. Goodin..... 2 50

Jews in Russia

School District No 129, Stearns County, N D 10 00
Harriet Banbury..... 50

Argentine Flood Sufferers

Eliz S Bachmann..... 1 50

Rev. N. Zamora, P. I.

R B, Baltimore, Md.. 5 00
Mrs E A Billings..... 5 00

THE CALL OF ISAIAH*

A Messenger Needed to Proclaim the Holiness of God and His Requirements.

EVEN more difficult than the task committed to Moses was that to which Isaiah was called. Moses had a right to expect that a people so oppressed as Israel was in Egypt, would welcome one who came to deliver them. Experience undeceived him, but when the call came to him, he would naturally associate the obstacles to be encountered with Pharaoh and not with the enslaved Israelites. Isaiah, on the other hand, knew that his message would be unpopular and unwelcome. Later there would come a time for good cheer and encouragement, when the messenger of the Lord could say, "Comfort ye, comfort ye, my people." But when he saw that strange and impressive vision, and heard the question, "Whom shall I send?" he knew well enough how sad was the mission to be undertaken.

The vision became the key of the message. Then, as it is now, people had mistaken the character of God. They had the idea that he was a Being who could be pacified with rites, and ceremonies, and offerings. They thought that they might live corrupt lives and no harm would come of it if they paid their tithes and attended to the outward observances of religion. It is a common and most persistent error. Men to this day need to hear the message that Isaiah was commissioned to deliver. If they heeded it they would not diminish their gifts to religion and philanthropy—they would probably increase them, but they would set about the prior and more important duty of cleaning up their lives. Isaiah was taken into the presence of God, and the revelation was not as might have been expected of an angry and fierce Being resolute on destruction; but of one so holy that the angelic beings surrounding him veiled their faces. The message was there embodied and Isaiah understood it. Even he, the chosen messenger, realized his impurity. Holiness being the essence of the Divine nature, how must he look on the conduct of his people? The same God rules now, and his messengers have to bear the same testimony.

*Topic of the Epworth League for Sept. 13. Isa. 6: 1-8.

Grateful Hindoo Orphans

READERS of this journal who have made sacrifices to support orphans in India, will be pleased to learn from the following letter from Rev. James Smith, of Ahmednagar, that their Christ-like work for the poor and friendless is appreciated:

"My school is known as the Sir D. M. Petit School of Industrial Arts, after a beneficent Indian gentleman who founded it. Instruction is given by sixteen good masters, in carpentry, cabinet-making, wood-carving, rug-making and hammered metal work in brass, copper and silver. Fifty of the children under my care are being supported by readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

"One of the greatest pleasures these little fellows have is to come into my office and look at the photographs of their patrons. This delight is generally reserved for Sunday, and after Sunday School is over the photos are demanded, and the pleasure appears to grow with each inspection. It touches their affectionate little hearts to know that in far-off America there are boys, girls, and even grown-up men and women, who care for them, and when letters come from the patrons, which is very often, their joy knows no bounds. On a recent Sunday I found a little lad 'doing puja,' that is, making the most profound salaams to a photo which he was admiring.

"It would do our patrons good to see how happy and intelligent these orphans are. Their lot is a hundred times happier than it would have been with parents. Here are hundreds of them together and a case of discipline is rare. Sickness is almost as rare. The terrible plague has carried off one-tenth of the population of the city of Ahmednagar this season, and among our boys there has been but a single case, and he recovered. With my best thanks for what you are doing to bring light and gladness into these innocent little souls,

"Yours very truly, JAMES SMITH."

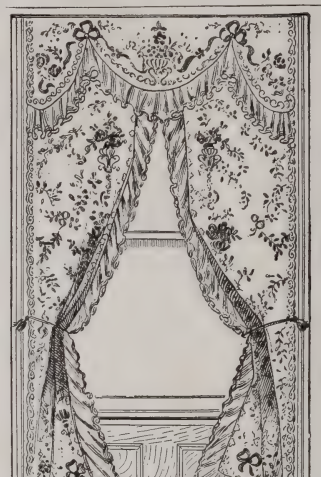
ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR, ECKSTEIN } Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC, BRADLEY, BROOKLYN, JEWETT, ULSTER, UNION } New York.
SOUTHERN, SHIPMAN, COLLIER } Chicago.
MISSOURI, RED SEAL, SOUTHERN } St. Louis.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

CONSUMERS should bear in mind that there are many brands of White Lead (so called) which are claimed to be "just as good" or better than Pure White Lead, which contain little, if any, White Lead but are simply mixtures of Zinc Whiting and Barytes, or other cheap, inferior materials.

Make sure that the brand is right. Those named in list are genuine.

If interested in paint or painting, address

National Lead Co., 100 William Street, New York.



FREE

Two Pairs of Lambric Lace Curtains like picture—furnish two windows; 3 inches wide, 3¼ yards long, for using a few minutes of your time.

No Money Required

All we ask is that you send us your name and address and allow us to send you on 30 days trial

1 Dozen Hold-Fast Skirt Supporters that retail at 25c each. Sell them to your friends, send us the money you get for them, and the curtains will be sent at once, express charges prepaid.

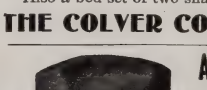
You take no risk—we take back all you do not sell. We offer over 100 premiums besides the curtains. Catalog sent with each order. Over two million Hold-Fast Skirt Supporters have been sold by the ladies of the United States.

Every woman needs one. Send today and you will have these beautiful curtains in a few days. Be the first to order in your locality.

Also a bed set of two shams and lace spread to match—for selling one dozen

THE COLVER CO., Dept. S, 811 Schiller Bldg., CHICAGO

A 50-Cent Hat by Mail



MEN'S HAT NO. 1

In soft, rough finish. Colors: Gray Mix, Brown Mix, and Black Mix.

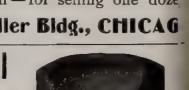
Either of these hats sent, postpaid, on receipt of 50 cents in cash, postal order or stamps. Money back if not satisfactory. We refer to The First National Bank of Middletown, N.Y. We are hat manufacturers and make the following offer to introduce these hats and our other lines of Men's, Boys', and Women's Hats in every town in the United States. Send for catalogue.

If your hat band has become soiled, send to us for a new all-silk one, made up, ready to sew on, at the following prices, postage prepaid: 5-8 in. and 1 in. wide, 25 cts.; 1 3-4 in. wide, 50 cts. Colors: Black, Dark Gray, and Beaver. If binding is wanted to go with bands, 15 cts. extra.



MEN'S HAT NO. 2

In smooth finish. Colors: Black, Brown, Maple, Steel, and Pearl.

MIDDLETOWN HAT COMPANY, 44 Mill St., Middletown, N. Y.

$11.98 Modern Gem SIX HOLE Range

Less Reservoir and High Closet. $17.98 with Reservoir and High Closet High grade Range direct from factory at less half the price your dealer asks for similar Range

Ten Days Free Trial

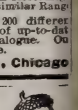
We make over 200 different styles and sizes of up-to-date Cooks, Ranges and Heaters. Don't buy until you have seen our catalogue. Our bargains the greatest. Any stove unsatisfactory returned at our expense.

MODERN STOVE MFG. CO., 238 Teutonic Bldg., Chicago

Your Real Estate Sell it yourself. Our monthly U. S. Real Estate Journal will show you how, by giving you the ADDRESSES of CASH BUYERS and EXCHANGERS throughout AMERICA. Yearly subscriptions, One Dollar. Send now. The first Journal may make or save you many dollars. Send description and price of property. Sample Journals, 25 cents.

U. S. Real Estate Journal, 105 W. Brighton Ave., Syracuse, N.Y.

CORNS The only way to remove them is to take them out by the roots. That's how A-CORN SALVE does it. No pain or poison, and results are quick, sure, and permanent. 15c. at your druggist's or by mail.



Giant Chemical Co., Philadelphia.

"Don't hide your light under a bushel." That's just why we talk about SAPOLIO

LEAN SOULS*

dulgence of the Flesh Debilitating the Spiritual Nature

EVER the same problem confronts human beings. How can the demands of the flesh be controlled, and the spirit rule within, as it ght to do? The philosophers have estled with the problem, and in all ages e leaders in the world of thought have ed to devise means of restoring the ghtful ruler to the throne that has been urped. The victims now, as in days of re, resolve that they will not yield, that ey will subdue their bestial passions, d when temptation assails them, or nen the flesh becomes clamorous, they eld as they did before their resolutions ere registered. And the sad feature of is recurrent yielding is the "leanness," e weakness of soul, that it produces. very fall is a double loss, because it rengthens the enemy and debilitates the ul. And the converse is true, that ery victory weakens the enemy and ves added vigor to the soul. Every art knows its own bitterness and its vn vulnerable points, but every one has e battle to fight in one form or another. ith some it is gluttony, with others unkenness, with others lust; but with ery one the necessity exists of bringing e flesh into subjection, if we are to be en and not brutes.

It is well that the particular vice set own for the topic should be kept promi- nt. It is not the whole, but it is chief, id it is the prolific mother of all evil. here it holds sway, where as we say, e man drinks, we may be sure that in her ways he is a bad man. Drink is e traitor that opens the gates which a ost of enemies are besieging. "He is a nd husband and father when he is sober, t—" is the pathetic testimony of the eaten and abused wives daily in our ourts. Think, too, that these good men rned into beasts by liquor were once ood and chivalrous youths, who never reamed that they could sink so low. hat is why the duty of impressing absti- nce on the children is so imperative. here is no other course that has in it e promise of success. The future of is country, the safety of the next gene- ation hangs upon this, that every boy and irl be trained to abstain from intoxicants.

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society and aptist Young People's Union for September 13. x. 16: 2-5; Ps. 106: 13-15.

ndia Orphan Fund Contributions

Prior to August 12

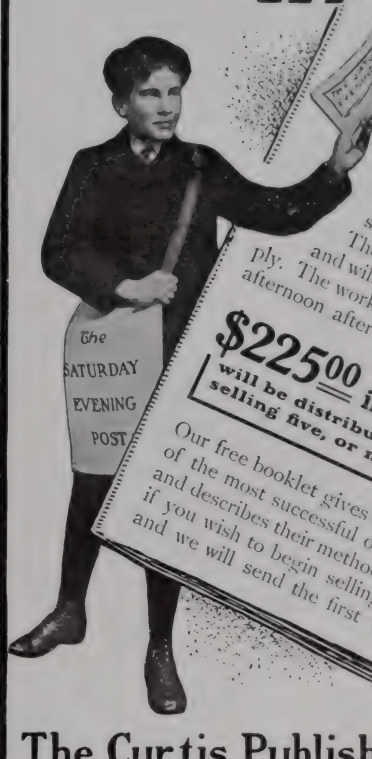
ronson, L E	2 75	Shailer, Mrs M M	5 00
ailey, Jane	4 00	Smith, Mrs E L (thro)	2 00
aldwin, M W	25	Spither, Mrs J M	10
enjamin, Mrs H	1 00	Tappe, F E	3 00
rown, Eliz	50	Vail, E O	10 00
ampbell, E W	25 00	Vail, E O	10 00
ampbell, F W	25 00	Walker, John	10 00
ampbell, E W	25 00	White, Daniel	10 00
adwick, J E	2 00	Zell, Miss Mary	1 00
ark, Mrs W D	10 00	W H and F M Soc.
ough, Mrs A B	5 00	Rockland, Me	450 00
ornstock, Mrs M E	2 50	Cong'l Sch, Princeton, Ill	4 83
onkling, Mrs M M	50	C E Soc, So Lake Weir, Fla	5 00
llis, Mrs E and Tom	50	Junior C E Soc, Sturley, Mass	1 00
agaman, C A	2 02	Sewing Soc, through Sister Shold, Bridebick, Wash	10 00
agaman, C A	2 02	J W W, New York City	2 00
ill, S M	5 00	L H F, Allerton, Ia	5 00
olcomb, Eliz	3 00	—, Toronto	1 00
unte, Miss Eliz	5 00	—, Berrington Ctr.	3 00
ackson, James	50	Two Sympathizers	3 00
ohnston, E E	2 00	Two Believers in Christ	1 00
einhart, Mrs G K	1 00	One Who Loves Jesus	2 00
ucas, L B	1 00	Friend, Middletown	4 00
cGregor, James D	3 00	Friend, Elmadina	1 00
acklem, C (through)	1 00	Friend, Middletown	2 00
acklem C (through)	5 00	Friend, N Y City	10
acklem C (through)	3 00
acklem C (through)	4 00
orrison, E T	5 00
unsted, Rev W J	1 30
armley, Mrs J M	5 00
orter, Warley P	7 00
egister, R F	20 00

ndia Famine Fund Contributions

Prior to August 12

arnes, Mrs S	5 00	Philips, C	60 10
aumann, F A	5 00	Polk, Miss C	5 00
ayne, Mrs M	1 00	Powell, Helen	5 00
ennings, L A H	5 00	Pratt, Clara E	4 00
awkes, L	5 00	Purdy, Emma C	10 00
raden, Mrs A	65 00	Rose, Eliza	1 00
ullard, Mrs F K	30 00	Sloman, Mr A	4 88
yrnes, Mrs E K	19 00	Smith, M Lillian	1 00
hisholm, A Sr	20 00	Stevens, C F	5 00
hurch, Mrs I L	1 00	Stevens, Mr & Mrs A B	20 02
ollins, H S	50 00	Terry, Mrs H M	5 00
rawford, Rachel	1 00	Van Osdell, C M	1 00
odd, D J	2 00	Webster, J	2 00
eld, F	1 00	Wilber, Mrs S	5 00
ay, R H	5 00	Friend, Palmetto	1 00
agerman, C	1 02	" N Y City	10
owland, Mrs F B	5 00	"	10
ing, Mrs G	1 00	"	10
irkham, R	1 00	I H N, Ashland	5 00
andon, Mary J	15 00	B, Baltimore	1 00
cNeff, G	3 00	WH & FMS, Rockland	170 00
acklem, C through	113 25	Victory Un SS Pitts'g	8 00
axon, F J	1 00	For training medical missionaries in India
idon, A	1 00	Philips, Rev C	600 00
elson, S W	1 00	Johnson, C W	26 00
assmore, Mrs L	10 00

We will start any bright boy in business



ANY AMBITIOUS BOY CAN begin at once to establish a business that will pay well by selling

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

No money required. We will mail absolutely FREE 10 copies the first week. These can be sold for five cents each, and will provide the capital for the next supply. The work is easy. Can be done on Friday afternoon after school hours, and on Saturday.

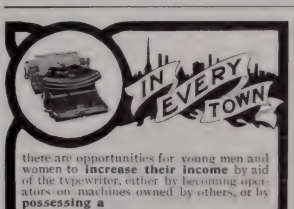
$225.00 in Extra Cash Prizes will be distributed next month to boys selling five, or more, copies weekly

Our free booklet gives the photographs of some of the most successful of our 3000 boy agents, and describes their methods. Send for it. State if you wish to begin selling magazines at once, and we will send the first week's free supply.

403 ARCH STREET

The Curtis Publishing Co. Phila. Pa.



there are opportunities for young men and women to increase their income by aid of the typewriter, either by becoming operators on machines owned by others, or by possessing a

WELLINGTON TYPEWRITER

If you own a typewriter you can make more money by doing work at home. The work is light and pleasant as well as instructive. The price of the Wellington is $50, but any person giving satisfactory references can obtain a new Wellington typewriter upon an advance payment of $25 and $10 a month until paid for. The machine is delivered upon receipt of first payment.

THE WELLINGTON

is a standard machine possessing all the best features of the high-priced typewriters without their defects. Universal keyboard; quick responsive touch; powerful manifolder; perfect alignment; light, compact and portable.

Send for descriptive catalogue and further details.

THE WILLIAMS MANUFACTURING CO. Limited,
20 Wellington St., Plattsburg, N. Y.

ONEITA ELASTIC RIBBED Union Suits

cover the entire body like an additional skin. [illegible] and ribbed processes. Made [illegible] comfortable-wearing garment. Most convenient [illegible] ing, being cut [illegible] and drawers are [illegible] gussets. With no other kind of underwear can [illegible] Sold by best dealers everywhere. Send for Illustrated Booklet.

ONEITA MILLS, DEPT T, 1 Greene Street, N. Y.

Are You Deaf?

Wednesday 25 KINDS OF INSTRUMENTS TO ASSIST HEARING Sent on approval Write for catalogue WM. V. WILLIS & CO. 124 South Fifth Street, Philadelphia

PRICES CUT IN HALF

PRICE $1.00

This superb, mercerized, silk finished, black sateen

MELBA Underskirt

Sent on Approval

SEND US 25 CENTS [illegible] underskirt of quality [illegible] do not keep the skirt, [illegible] Melba underskirt. Do not delay. Order today.

This liberal offer [illegible]

CHICAGO ART CO. 28-50 W Jackson Blvd. Chicago

COUPON

CHICAGO ART COMPANY, Chicago.

I accept your offer to send me a Melba underskirt, black sateen, for examination. If I keep the skirt I will send you $1.00 in payment. If I do not keep the skirt I will return it to you.

Name _____

Town _____ State _____

A Sustaining Food-Drink

HORLICK'S MALTED MILK

A delicious, refreshing food-beverage for those who are "run down" or mentally and physically fatigued. Nourishing, easily digested, and invigorating. The maximum of nutrition with the least strain upon the digestion. Tempting to the appetite; no distressed feeling after a meal.

Horlick's Malted Milk is pure, rich milk with an extract of choice malted grain, partially predigested and concentrated to powder form. Instantly prepared for use by stirring in hot or cold water. Needs no cooking nor further addition of milk.

In Tablet form, also, with either natural or chocolate flavor. For invalids the Tablets are often extremely convenient, as slowly dissolving in the mouth they supply nourishment.

Trial package free upon request.

At all Druggists.

Horlick's Food Co., Racine, Wis., U. S. A.
London, England. Established 1873. Montreal, Canada.

The Remington Typewriter represents the result of more study, more effort, more labor and more practical experience in typewriter manufacture than all other makes of writing machines combined.

It ought to be the best and IT IS.

REMINGTON TYPEWRITER CO.
327 Broadway, New York.

"Standard of Highest Merit"

FISCHER PIANOS.

THE NEW SCALE Fischer yields a wonderfully pure quality of Tone, combined with great power and durability; it stamps the Fischer Piano with an individuality that no other Piano possesses.

63 Years Established

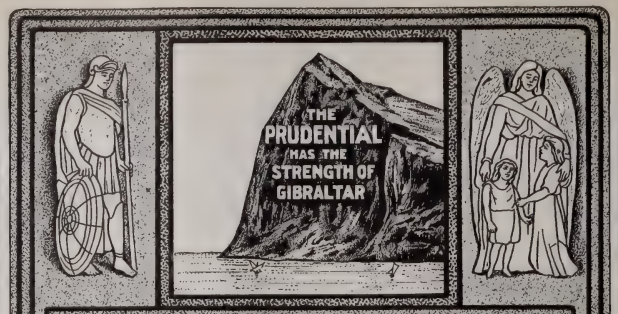
Over 110,000 Sold

BY OUR NEW METHOD of Easy Payments, every home is at once enabled to possess and enjoy a High Grade Piano. Pianos delivered to all parts of the United States. Write for catalogue, terms and all particulars.

J. & C. FISCHER
104 Fifth Ave. New York, N. Y.

SOLID SILVER

FREE. This heart is Solid Sterling Silver 925-1000 fine warranted. Pin has a turquoise stone in center. We will send one sample FREE to each family in the United States who sends a two-cent stamp to pay postage. Address LYNN & CO., 48 Bond St., New York.



PRUDENCE-STRENGTH-PROTECTION

PRUDENCE Dictates PROTECTION for the Family Through Life Insurance in a Company With the STRENGTH and the Determination to Fulfil its Contracts to the Letter. Such a Company is

THE PRUDENTIAL

Insurance Company of America

JOHN F. DRYDEN, Pres. Write for Information, Dept. 70 HOME OFFICE, Newark, N. J.

TRADE Flinch MARK REGISTERED

More simple than authors — more scientific than whist.

Last year 60,000,000 Flinch cards were in service and yet we couldn't half supply the demand.

It is now made in the largest card factories in the world, having become the great American game. Everybody plays it. Do you?

Sample card and instructions FREE.

The reigning game of the year. Price

50 cents

for pack of 150 finest quality cards.

Gilt edge $1.00

Sold everywhere or prepaid by us if your dealer doesn't keep it.

Flinch is sweeping the country.—Boston Globe.

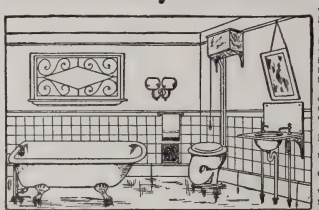
BOURSE—the Stock Exchange game. Bright—as good as Flinch. Ask for Sample.
FLINCH CARD COMPANY, 125 Burdick St., Kalamazoo, Mich., also Box 572 Toronto, Ont.

$37.50 Buys a Bath Room Outfit Complete



IT IS ALL BRAND NEW

We will furnish you all of the plumbing material in the above illustration, consisting of a bath tub of graceful shape, solid white porcelain enamel, five feet long, made in one piece of cast-iron, with nickel-plated bath cocks, connected waste and overflow, supply pipes, rubber plug and chain, and 4 fancy designed feet.

A perfectly sanitary water closet, consisting of a porcelain closet bowl, with hardwood seat and tank, fitted with all necessary appliances, including nickel-plated flush and supply pipes, chain and pull.

An elaborate marble lavatory with porcelain bowl, nickel-plated basin cocks, supply pipes, rubber plug and chain.

It is strictly new, and as good as anything on the market that would cost you over twice as much.

We will deliver all this material loaded on board car at Chicago, properly packed, for $37.50.

We carry an enormous stock of NEW PLUMBING MATERIAL. WE BUY OUR GOODS AT SHERIFFS' AND RECEIVERS' SALES. WRITE FOR OUR CATALOGUE 373 on plumbing material, household goods, etc.

CHICAGO HOUSE WRECKING CO., WEST 35TH and IRON STREETS, CHICAGO.

Twenty Dollars Easily Earned by buying the CENTURY Steel Range direct from the factory, saving the dealers' profit.

Prices from $18.00 up and we guarantee the CENTURY to be the best range ever made for the money.

Sold for cash or on monthly payments; if not satisfactory after six months' trial, CENTURY Ranges may be returned, and we will refund your money and pay freight charges.

We manufacture all our own ranges and have done so for twenty years. That's why we know they are good and can guarantee them.

Write for complete Catalog of all styles and sizes.

THE CENTURY MFG. CO., 64 State Street, Cleveland, Ohio.

MORRIS CHAIRS FREE

ALSO OVER 300 OTHER HANDSOME ARTICLES OF HOME FURNISHINGS—Clocks, Watches, Silverware, Rugs, Lace Curtains, Sewing Machines, Furniture, Bicycles and Colonial Grand Pianos—all given ABSOLUTELY FREE with the well-known RACINE HOSIERY, RACINE FEET and RACINE UNDERWEAR. We are actual bona-fide manufacturers operating the most completely equipped hosiery and underwear mills in the United States, located at Beloit, Stevens Point, and Ripon, Wisconsin, with warehouse and selling offices at Racine, Wis. We sell exclusively to the consumer. We are therefore content with the customary manufacturer's profit and can afford to give you the agents', jobbers' and retailers' profits, in valuable premiums, which we buy in large quantities at wholesale prices, or about one-half what you would pay for them at retail. Write for our HANDSOME ILLUSTRATED PREMIUM CATALOGUE with full particulars as to how you can furnish your home without its costing you one cent. Every family must have hosiery and underwear. You can save money and get valuable presents by using the Racine brands. Write for our Catalogue T to-day. RACINE KNITTING CO., RACINE, WIS.

THE NORTH-WESTERN LINE

The Black Hills Yellowstone Park

and a score of other places of interest to the tourist are reached by the complete train service of the Chicago & North-Western Ry. Especially low rates now in effect from Chicago and all points east for the summer season.

St. Paul Minneapolis

Four trains daily from Chicago, rate of $16 round trip throughout the summer; $20 round trip Chicago to Duluth.

Excellent daily train service to the various summer resorts of Wisconsin, Northern Michigan and Minnesota, the Hot Springs of South Dakota, the mountain resorts of Colorado and Utah, and to Yellowstone National Park, California, Oregon, Washington and Alaska.

Summer tourist rates in effect from Chicago and all points east. A series of booklets, one of which is descriptive of Colorado, another of California, and another entitled "Hints to Tourists for 1903," with detailed information regarding routes, rates and schedules will be promptly mailed upon application to

W. B. KNISKERN,
PASSENGER TRAFFIC MANAGER C. & N.-W. RY.,
CHICAGO, ILL.

NW37

COPYRIGHT 1900 BY LIFE PUB CO.

Gibson Pyrography

By contract just closed with Life, we have acquired the exclusive right to reproduce Gibson designs for pyrography. Charles Dana Gibson is not only the most famous living pen and ink artist, his works selling for fabulous sums, but his lines are admirably adapted to Pyrographic reproduction.

T. & C. Outfit No. 95 shown above, value $2.00, is temporarily offered for $1.8(

This is a high grade instrument, splendidly made of the best materials, and includes fine Platinum Point, Cork Handle, Rubber Tubing, Double-Action Bulb, Metal Union Cork, Bottle, Alcohol Lamp, Two Pieces Stamped Practice Wood, and full instructions, all contained in neat Leatherette Box. For sale by your dealer, or sent by us C. O. D. for examination. Write for our big 64-page catalogue with colored inserts No. Y 52—Free. Illustrates hundreds of Gibson and other artistic designs on wood, ready for burning, together with all kinds of Pyrography outfits at lowest prices.

T&C CHICAGO

This trade-mark on everything we make, means quality. Call for T. & C. Pyrographic Goods.

THAYER & CHANDLER, 162-164 W. Jackson Blvd., Chicago
Largest Makers of Pyrography Goods in the World.

What's the use experimenting when by looking on the label for this signature you can be sure of the best shade roller ever made.

THE HARTSHORN
Wood Rollers. Tin Rollers.

ADDICTED TO THE DRUG HABIT?

If so, you can be relieved. Our Sanatorium was established in 1875, for the treatment of Drug and Alcoholic Addictions. Relief Guaranteed.

HOME TREATMENT IF DESIRED.

We have relieved thousands that have failed elsewhere The Dr. J. L. Stephens Co., Dept. H 5, Lebanon, Ohio.

PRESIDENT SUSPENDERS

Comfort and service. Guaranteed—"All breaks made good." 50c and $1.00.
Any shop or by mail. C. A. EDGARTON MFG. CO., Box 209, Shirley, Mass.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
Published 52 Times a Year

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 9, 1903

VOL. 26—NO. 36. PRICE 5 CENTS
Offices: Bible House, New York

Our Relief Expedition to Famine-Stricken Kwang-Si

The upper photograph shows Consul-General McWade (X) and a party of Chinese "gentries" and Charitable Cantonese watching the departure of our relief boats — The second shows our relief flotilla under way — SEE PAGE 751

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Constant Reader, Belvidere Ill. Does the command in Deut. 24:1, imply that a man is justified in suing for divorce if he finds that the woman he has married was unchaste before he married her.

The Mosaic laws of divorce do not apply to Christians. Christ explicitly said (Matt. 19:8, 9) that they were superseded under the new dispensation, and he condemned things that Moses permitted. The husband has a right to be indignant in the case you mention at being deceived, especially if he himself had led an absolutely chaste life up to the time of his marriage. It is possible that the courts would grant him a divorce, but we would rather counsel that he seek the conversion of his wife, and do all that he can to insure the permanent reformation, which one may suppose, by the fact of her marrying, she desires. If he obtains a divorce, it will probably lead to her ruin, while by treating her lovingly and kindly, and praying with and for her, he may be the means of saving a soul from death.

Mrs. M. E. R., Yorktown Heights, N. Y. 1. What is meant by the "400"? 2. Are they engaged in any work of charity, and if so, would they be willing to assist a poor old woman?

1. The "Four Hundred" is a term applied to the fashionable and wealthy social set of New York, who pride themselves upon their aristocratic exclusiveness. 2. There are doubtless many among them who assist worthy charities, although we have not heard that any of the "400" are personally devoted to such work. Without an influential introduction, they would be unapproachable to such a petitioner as you describe.

J. C. H., Frankford, Phila. In speaking of the Bible, is it proper to say, "The Word of God?" It seems to the writer that the term, "the Word," especially applies to Christ (as in John 1: 1, 14; Rev. 19: 13). In speaking of the Bible then as "the Word," do we not speak of it as if it were God or Christ? Would it not be safer to say "the written Word" (or truth) of God?

We do not apprehend any serious danger of widespread misunderstanding, through your referring to the Bible as "the Word." It seems to us that "reading from the Word," "preaching from the Word," "expounding the Word," etc., are phrases that are hardly capable of misconception, and are almost universally used.

Subscriber, St. Louis, Mo. What are the characteristics of the stones called the black onyx and the emerald?

In the onyx, black, brown or red may predominate. Ruskin has called it "the type of all stones, arranged in bands or layers of different colors," which describes it fairly, since it is a variety of quartz, consisting of varicolored layers, usually in even planes. Onyx worn as a gem is the emblem of mutual affection. The emerald is a bright green variety of beryl which, in proportion as it is clear and flawless, is highly valued as a gem. It is the emblem of chastity. Lollia Paulina, the wife of Caligula, had a necklace of emeralds and pearls valued at $1,600,000.

Isaac S., Tyler, Minn. Please give a brief sketch of the theology of Thomas Aquinas? Who was Thomas Aquinas?

He was a theologian of the middle ages, born in Aquino, Naples, 1224 or 1226. He became a Dominican monk and was afterward a teacher of philosophy and theology in Cologne, Paris, and a number of the Italian universities. He was a prolific lecturer and writer. For a full exposition of his theology, see Hagenbach's History of Doctrines.

A. E. S., Portersville, O. Is it possible for fanatical tendencies to religion to be inherited? May it not be that a prospective mother spends so much time in religious devotions of a sorrowful nature that her child comes into life with an inborn disposition to be morbidly religious? Would it not be better for a person believing himself to be so afflicted to eschew all forms of Christian work? Or may the whole fancy be a temptation of the evil one to keep one from using a talent that is burning for expression?

It is possible for a person to inherit optimistic or morbid tendencies, just as the temperament may be sanguine, phlegmatic, nervous, bilious or melancholic, but any undue tendency can usually be checked or counteracted in the training and education. As far as religion is concerned, it should operate to brighten the life, rather than to depress it. It is spiritual sunlight let in on what would otherwise be gloom indeed. The suggestion that a morbid person should avoid all forms of Christian work, is a pitiful one, and shows how far wrong one may go in estimating the value of religion in one's life! Never can men or women know true happiness until they learn to live and do for others. Not even a Christian can be happy unless he is actively working for the Master and for the good of his fellows. That is the real secret, the test which makes life worth living—the spending of ourselves for others.

Theron W. Crissey, Great Barrington, Mass., writes:

In the "Story of John King, Father of Teetotalism," given recently, you say, "It is an open question whether the total abstinence idea first saw the light in 1831, or the year following." An article was published recently in the Connecticut Western News (Canaan, Conn.) giving from the records the facts of the formation of an adult and also a juvenile Temperance Association in Norfolk, Conn., in 1825. A part of the juvenile pledge was as follows: "We, the subscribers, being under the age of fifteen, hereby express our resolution never to drink any ardent spirits, except it be as a remedy for sickness, and we respectfully request all to encourage us to keep this resolution, and to abstain from placing temptation before us." In this article the claim was made that probably this was the first temperance society in the country, but the next week an article appeared in the Litchfield Enquirer, another Litchfield County, Conn., paper, giving the record of the formation of a temperance society in Litchfield in 1789, and the names of thirty-six signers of the pledge. So it is shown that "the total abstinence idea first saw the light," in Connecticut more than forty years before stammering Richard Turner in Preston, England, coined the word "tee-total."

J. W. R., Brooklyn, N. Y. What are the sacred books of China?

There are four books so-called, viz: Ta-hoo (The School of Adults), Chong-yong (The Golden Mean), Lun-yu (A Book of Maxims), all three written by Confucius, and Meng-tse (The Book of Mencius), which is esteemed as the greatest of the four.

Miss Myra A. P., Stoneham, Mass., writes:

Dear Sir:—I am much interested in the poem "The Border-Land," quoted in part in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of August 19; but I think there is some mistake about its having been written by Rev. J. B. Marsh "a few months before he died," January 8, 1903, as I read it more than five years ago in The Converted Catholic Magazine for January, 1898 (if I remember rightly), and copied it at that time into my diary. I supposed then that it was written by Dr. John Hall of New York; but learned afterwards that he simply sent a copy of it to his bereaved friends, Rev. and Mrs. J. A. O'Connor. Twelve stanzas are given there. The poem voices my own experience, and has been a great comfort to me. I should like very much to know for certain who was the author.

Mrs. D. McK., Ridgway, Oreg. The names are pronounced Ko-rell'-ee, Pek'-shee, Oo-termer, Ram-pol'-ee, Du-mas', O-ray'-le-ah'. 2. We have no opinion to express on the other questions.

A. B. C., Crawford, N. J. You will find the poem "A Poor Wayfaring Man of Grief" in The Library of Religious Poetry, issued by Funk & Wagnalls, New York.

Margaret W., Wilkesbarre, Pa. Will THE CHRISTIAN HERALD kindly inform one of its readers who David's mother was?

Her name is not positively known. Some commentators have accepted Nahash (see II. Sam. 17:25) as the name of David's mother, but there is nothing to warrant such a conjecture.

J. E. S., W. Chesterfield, N. H. Your criticism is a just one, and the appearance of any such expression is to be regretted, although it is just as the author wrote it.

H.C., Passaic, N. J. Is it true that one of the oldest capitals in Europe is built on the tops of trees?

To a certain extent, it is true of Amsterdam, of which Erasmus said, jocosely: "I know a city whose inhabitants dwell in the tree-top like the rooks." The city is built on a sand foundation, and a majority of the building are supported by wooden piles to give the stability.

G. A. Broady, M.D., writes to the THE MAIL-BAG:

Could you not do anything for the stokers on board the steamships? Surely there ought to be law passed compelling the steamship companies to furnish these poor toilers of the sea better quarters. Could you not arouse public interest in their behalf? Please do something for them. If nothing else call public attention to their terrible condition.

We print our correspondent's appeal, in the hope that it may reach the proper quarter and produce results. There certainly is ample room for improvement in the condition of the stokers on most of our steamship lines.

Jessie R., Paterson, N. J. 1. What were the Urim and Thummim? 2. How were they employed in deciding questions?

1. They were three stones which were carried within the double or inner lining of the high priest's breast-plate. 2. One of the stones represented "Yes," another "No," and the third, "No answer is to be given." When any question of importance was to be decided, the priest drew a stone, and, which ever of the three came first to his hand, was accepted as final (See Lev. 8:8; I. Sam. 28:6).

Reader, Allegheny, Pa. When did the first White House wedding take place and who were the principals?

The first White House bride was Maria Monroe, the President's daughter, who was married to her cousin, the son of Hon. Samuel L. Gouverneur, of New York. The ceremony took place in the East Room, in March 1820. Only the relatives and immediate friends of the parties were present.

J. P. F., Atlanta, Ga. 1. Is it true that the Apostle Paul's stature was only three cubits, or four and one-half feet? 2. Was he ever married?

1. We have seen no record of his height. It would not be likely to be mentioned in Scripture, and there is little weight in the legends about him. It is not unlikely that he was below the middle height, as his enemies characterized his bodily presence as weak (II. Cor. 10:10). 2. We should infer from his remarks about marriage (I. Cor. 7:8) that he was never married. We think, too, that if he had been, a writer who makes so many personal references as he, would have mentioned his wife in some way. On the other hand, if he was ever a member of the Sanhedrin, which some passages appear to indicate, he must have been married, as an unmarried man was not eligible. It is not, however, quite certain that he was a member of the Sanhedrin. He is said to have been only thirty-five years old when he was converted, and so may have been below the eligible age when the opportunity of admission occurred.

J. E. T. 1. The following from a book called Golden Sheaves, will answer G. E. N., Unadilla, Ga., in MAIL BAG, August 12:

A lady had written on a card, and placed in her garden-house, and on the top of an hour-glass, a beautiful and simple stanza from one of the fugitive pieces of John Clare, the rural poet; it was at the season of the year when the flowers were at their highest beauty:

To think of summers yet to come,
That I am not to see;
To think a weed is yet to bloom
From dust that I shall be!

The next morning she found penciled on the back of the same card:

To think when heaven and earth are fled,
And times and seasons o'er,
When all that e'en die shall be dead,
That I must die no more!
Ah! where will then my portion be?
How shall I spend eternity!

2 Where does one write to learn the requirement for joining the Colonial Dames?

1. Thanks for the information, which will interest many. 2. Write to the Mail and Express, New York.

M.F., Bancroft, Mich. We do not know the verses.

Reader, Pennsylvania. We think not, but we must be careful not to judge others, lest we do so unjustly. Never decide in such matters without hearing all the facts.

Reader. 1. The thirty-eighth annual report of the National Temperance Society, just issued, contains all the information you desire and it may be procured by addressing the field secretary, Rev. Hervey Wood, 3 East 14th street, New York. 2. Since November 1, 1902, about 3,000,000 Temperance pledges, in connection with the Twentieth Century Pledge Signing Crusade, have been secured. Secretary Wood will supply blank pledges free.

A Blessed Opportunity

WE are greatly in need of a new chapel at Mont-Lawn, the present one being altogether too small for our needs, and in such a rickety condition that only last year we found it necessary to brace the walls in order to prevent their falling.

While we have found our subscribers ever willing to contribute to the support of this glorious work—and how greatly we appreciate their generosity is more than we dare undertake to state—we do not think that they should be burdened with any share of the expenses incident to the raising of a new building—even though that building be a chapel dedicated to the service of our Master—and the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has devised a plan which, we believe, will furnish the necessary funds, without entailing any hardships too grievous to be conveniently borne.

Getting More Than You Give

As the Mont-Lawn work has fully established its claim to permanency, nothing less than a stone chapel will fill our requirements, and one large enough to accommodate not less than 400 auditors. Our children and the helpers, even at the present time, aggregate nearly 300—then there are the visitors and villagers, and finally, we must provide for natural growth with the course of time. To erect such a spacious and substantial chapel, with all the necessary furnishings, together with administration quarters, and rooms for the entertainment of visiting friends, especially visiting CHRISTIAN HERALD subscribers, would require not less than $20,000.

Fifteen Per Cent. Annuity

This money we propose to raise by selling 2,000 Life Subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (donated for that purpose by its proprietor), at $10 each. A Life Subscription causes your name, or the name of any one you may thus wish to favor, to be placed for life upon the subscription list of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Each ten dollar subscription thus pays to the fortunate subscriber every year an annual subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, worth $1.50 per annum, equal to a life annuity of 15 per cent. on the investment, and at the same time contributes $10 to the erection of a Children's Temple at Mont-Lawn. Finally, these two thousand Life Subscribers will have a share in the blessings daily prayed by the little ones down from heaven upon the hearts and the lives of those who had helped in the erection of this house of worship and of praise.

The Only Opportunity of its Kind

No other Life Subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have ever been accepted, and none will be accepted, as far as we can now tell, except such as come properly within the scope of the offer here published. If our readers will kindly remember this, it will obviate much useless correspondence.

Do It To-day! Do It Now!

Let all who are interested, address, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City, and place at the left-hand lower corner of the envelope the words "For the Children's Temple."

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 9, 1903

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

GENERAL VIEW OF THE SHAKER SETTLEMENT AT MOUNT LEBANON, N. Y.

A VISIT TO THE SHAKERS AT MOUNT LEBANON

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

THE beautiful mountains of Columbia County, N. Y., reach their fullest charm at Lebanon. All the valley is brimmed with beauty like a cup that cannot hold another drop. On Mount Lebanon stand a group of buildings, substantial, ample, dignified in their entire absence of pretension or ornament, and here reside, honored and beloved by their neighbors, the two or three families that remain of what was, years ago, a much more numerous community of Shakers. They own and cultivate a wide dominion, embowered in fruit trees, waving with corn, tilled with wisdom and industry. A celibate Order, the brethren and sisters, share everything in common as the primitive Christians did, the government and administration of the several households being committed to elders and eldresses, men and women of great tact and discretion, who know how to exercise authority without petty interference with individual liberty, and whose character is a guarantee of their influence. To them, the members of the community resort, very much as children to a parent, asking permission to go or come, and referring to them all mooted points.

I wish the housekeepers who read this page could see the immaculate and sweet-scented cleanliness of the Shaker kitchen, and homes. Everything shines with such grace of absolute wholesome tidiness, that it is a rest of heart and eye, to behold the floors and tables. The reposeful atmosphere is felt everywhere about the Shaker homes, so pure and clean, and so devoid of superfluous bric-a-brac, and encumbering dust-concealing draperies. Flowers, however, flourish in garden beds and borders, and bloom lavishly in the windows, for the dear Shaker sisters have a love of the beautiful, and gratify it in cultivating vines and thrifty plants. The kitchens, and the cool, fragrant dairies, are replete with labor-saving contrivances and every modern convenience. There is a great deal of work to do, but the old adage, "Many hands make light work," finds verification here, for the labor is subdivided, and apportioned, and every one takes hold heartily and does whatever is the duty of the hour, I truly believe, as unto the Lord. The brethren undertake the outdoor work and the heaviest indoor tasks fall to them. The sisters do whatever belongs to woman's province from preserving and pickling to plain sewing, from butter making and bread making to the most painstaking work of the laundry.

Shaker cloaks are made by a group of sisters under the direction of a lovely-looking sister, Emma Neal. These long hooded wraps, with their graceful folds, are made of the finest cloth, and the stitches set in them are fitting for the wardrobe of a queen. Many American queens know this and buy these garments, one bride of a year ago ordering four for her trousseau. They make particularly sumptuous carriage wraps for luxurious people. Besides these garments, these sisters, pledged to the austere life of celibacy, make the finest, daintiest clothing for the nurseries of women who know the joys of motherhood; make little socks for baby feet, and blankets for baby cribs, shawls, slumber shoes, rugs. A great variety of useful and ornamental articles are made by their deft fingers and sold for the benefit of the community.

These sisters receive and teach a limited number of pupils, to whom they give an excellent book education, instructing them at the same time in the practical accomplishments of the home-maker.

Among the women gathered here are some of liberal education, and of native gifts of a very high order. One sister has published a volume of felicitous verse. Another has compiled a very useful book of brief biographies of famous men and women. A brother, who has spent his life since his eighth year on that lofty hill, who is now beyond three score and ten, spends much time in writing thoughtful and able treatises on the Shaker doctrines.

The pictures show the buildings of the community, but not the outlying farms and acreage, which extend for many miles. In the faces of the sisters and brother here given, I, who write, see the countenances of those who are my friends, at whose beautiful board I have sat, and whose hospitality has been accepted freely, extended to me more than once. The brother in the laboratory brewing the

A GROUP OF SISTERS OF THE MOUNT LEBANON SHAKERS

CONTINUED ON PAGE 749

The American Pulpit

: : Sermon by : :

Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage, D.D.

Labor's Evenings

TEXT—Ps. 104: 23: Man goeth forth unto his work and to his labor until the evening

"WHAT time is it, Mister?" the workman asked, as I went through a large factory. "Twenty minutes past five," I answered. "Ah, then," said he, "I have forty minutes more labor before I am my own boss." The workman kept on pounding, five, ten, fifteen, twenty, twenty-five, thirty, forty minutes. During this interval, while the minute-hand was moving slowly around the dial towards the numerical twelve, that man with his co-laborers continued at their work. But no sooner did the clock begin to strike six, than a loud factory whistle was blown. Immediately the men and the women, the boys and girls alike, dropped their tasks and turned their backs upon the wheels and the leather bands. They took off their aprons, and donned their coats and hats. The front and the side doors of the great building were a vortex from which poured an onrushing flood of humanity. The electric cars and the elevated trains and suburban expresses were jammed and crowded by the scattering employees, not only from one but from many stores and factories. Everywhere in our large cities, "Man goeth to his work and to his labor" in the morning. In the evening hour, man, for the most part, has finished his daily tasks and heads toward home. My text rightly describes the social conditions of Davidic times. It as truthfully pictures the labor conditions of the present day.

An Important Problem

The ordinary average laboring man works from sun to sun. Now comes the practical and pertinent question, "How is he to spend his evenings?" This is to be our theme. It is to be our subject for two reasons: First, because to-morrow is Labor Day. It is a day legalized as a holiday by the State legislatures, during which all thoughtful men and women should discuss or hear speeches upon the great problems which affect the laboring classes. Such a subject as "Labor's Evenings" naturally grows out of a Labor Sunday service.

It is our theme, because this imminent moral and spiritual problem can never be rightly solved by the laboring man alone. He needs the help of sympathetic men who have leisure to think and plan, and who have capital which they can invest in educational appliances, that will yield them a return in higher efficiency and grateful loyalty to their interests. The problem of capital and labor must be solved, if ever solved, by the Christian co-operation both of the rich and the poor; by Christian philanthropists placing in their employees' hands the means by which they can lift themselves up. The Macedonian cry which once sounded over the Mediterranean waters for Paul to come and help his foreign brethren, is now echoing across the black chasm which separates the employer from the employee. It comes from the laborers, who wait for no annual dividends, but live from hand to mouth on the pay which they receive in weekly instalments.

In the solution of this problem the Church of Christ should take a prominent part. It cannot afford to go on its way indifferent to the social conditions which are fast becoming intolerable. The miseries of the poor cry aloud unto heaven. To whom have they a right to look for help if not to that institution which Christ established for the redemption of the world. What can the church do for them? It may do much, and first among the agencies it may employ, I would place

The Institutional Church

Do not imagine for a moment that the church will be desecrated by such use. It can never be a more sacred temple than when it provides a place in which the working man will be glad to spend his evenings. This does not mean that the future Church of Christ is to be a dance or a billiard hall, a bowling alley, a lounging place for smokers, or a free restaurant, where tramps and beggars shall come to get something for nothing. It does mean, however, that the Church of Jesus Christ is to be something more than a mere place of preaching and hearing. It is to be a place of sacred practical helpfulness. It is to become eyes for the blind, and clothing for the naked, and crutches for the lame, and food for the hungry, and a warm welcome for the friendless, and comfort for the hopeless. It is literally to be all things to all men.

"Please explain yourself more in detail," some one says. Well, I will. In the first place, I find that the social instinct is a God-implanted instinct, and must and will find vent out of the human heart. The gregarious tendency is strong in men, as it is in animals. Cattle travel in herds. If a farmer turns out his cows upon the mountain sides, he only has to place one bell upon one cow. Then it is very easy for him to find the rest of the herd. Some years ago, an inexperienced German came to live in Pike County, Pennsylvania, where I was at that time preaching. He set that whole county laughing. Why? In his lack of knowledge of animal instinct, he placed a different bell on every cow. Thus, his herd of cows would go over those mountains clanging their discordant bells, like a big orchestra tuning up their instruments for a concert piece. It only needs one bell for one herd of cattle. Cows always travel together. The same law applies to sheep, and horses, and buffaloes, and mostly to birds and fish. They love to be in each other's society. They live in herds or flocks, or schools. The social instinct in the human race as in all animals, is a God-implanted instinct. Man will associate with man, and no power on earth can help it. He will associate with man in the church, or else in the saloon, or club, or secret society. He must and will find perpetual companionship during his evening hours. The church should provide a place for the harmless indulgence of that craving.

Work Blessed in the Doing

Statement second: I find by study of books and personal investigation, that every church which has first been baptized by the Holy Spirit, and then gone forth to reach the middle or the laboring classes through the Social Gate, has always been blest of God in a marvelous way. A conspicuous illustration of that fact is seen in St. George's Episcopal Church, of New York City. This was once the famous church of the great Doctor Stephen Tyng. This church is situated in East Sixteenth street. A short time after the good Doctor Tyng died, the wealthy parishioners of this church began to move away. There was great talk at one time of abandoning this site, and going farther up town. Then came Doctor Rainsford to this pulpit. He is a big, warm-hearted, practical Christian. What did he do? Desert that magnificent down-town field to Satan, as many of our down-town churches have done? No, he made St. George's Parish right about face. He made that church appeal to the classes around its very doors. He made it accomplish its work by appealing to the neighborhood through the social gate. The result is, St. George's Episcopalian church, great as its former pastors were, never did the good that it is doing to-day. It is now appealing to the great unchurched classes. Its parish houses and social beehives are busy Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, as well as having its church auditorium open on Sunday. It is a church of the "glad hand," and the "every night welcome," as well as the church of "Holy Prayer." What is true in reference to St. George's Church is true of the Judson Memorial Church of New York, and of Russell Conwell's Church in Philadelphia, and of the Park Presbyterian Church of Newark, N. J., and in one sense of the Moody Church of Chicago. Oh, why will not all of the churches like those named, learn the value of doing their work by appealing to the social instincts?

Sociability and Hospitality

In the most congested parts of our cities, the saloons have no difficulty to live. They appeal to mankind through the Social Gate. Upon their windows, I see these words, advertised everywhere: "Free Lunch." What does that mean? Have the saloon-keepers suddenly become philanthropists? Are they animated with the Gospel desire to feed the poor and care for the starving? Oh no! The saloon-keeper is a man shrewd and keen in business. He says, "If I, with a sandwich, can only entice my victims into my hell-hole, then I can keep them here by the social instinct. I will then surround them with my hirelings and hold them in grips of steel." There is an old saying in church circles, "Give the people a free lunch, and there is no difficulty in collecting a crowd." If the saloon-keepers can afford to give a free lunch every morning, noon and night in the service of the devil, I do not believe it a poor policy once in awhile, on a week night, for the Institutional Church to give a "Free Lunch" in the name of Christ.

When, some months ago, I went through the Chicago slums, in company with the officers of the law, hunting for the debauched husband of one of my church members, I found in many of these evil resorts that free vaudeville shows were given in order to decoy and to draw in crowds. If the Satanic proprietor can afford to do that, I do not believe it out of place for Christians, on the week nights, to offer refined social entertainments to gather the great unchurched masses into a church fellowship, in the name of Christ.

When I go down the street of a Monday night, past church after church, tomblike and silent, and dark, on account of their closed doors, and find the billiard halls in full illumination, and crowded with the young men of our land, I know then that there is something wrong. I know that these young men are not being appealed to in the name of Christ, through the Social Gate. I know that the Institutional Church is right when, to counteract that evil influence, it throws wide open its church buildings, and offers to the young men and women of its neighborhood, libraries in which they can read the best books, and gymnasiums in which they can develop their muscle, and places in which they can be brought into the best of Christian association. You who decry the mission of the Institutional Church, did you every stop to realize that in the congested districts of your tenement buildings, there is hardly a public place for a working man to go and get warm except to a saloon? There is hardly a place where he can go to meet the most sacred wants of his physical nature except in a saloon? Therefore can we, and dare we decry the mission of the Institutional Church in furnishing wholesome and elevating amusement for the working man and a resort in which he can spend a pleasant social evening?

"But," some one says, "how then do you distinguish between the work of the Social Settlement, and the work of the 'Institutional Church?'" They are diametrically different. They are as far apart as the arctic and the antarctic poles. They have entirely different purposes. The Institutional Church believes that the "Social Gate"

Should be the "Strait Gate" leading to the foot of the Cross. While the Social Settlement is in nearly every instance managed by Christians, and while it is inspired by Christian principles and motives, it is compelled, by the exigencies of its work, to keep creed and denomination in the background. Its opportunities of getting in touch with men and women of every faith and of no faith would be restricted if not altogether lost if it became known as a proselyting institution. The Institutional Church believes in being all things to all men, so that Jesus Christ can be glorified. It is trying to carry out the command of Christ, which says—'And I if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me.' The Social Settlement can never take the place of the Church, though it may prepare the way for it. Its work, valuable as it is, does not reach its true culmination, until the people whom it strives to influence, have found in the Gospel of Jesus Christ the panacea for all their afflictions and in Jesus himself the bearer of all their burdens. So the Institutional Church, strong in its conviction of the efficacy of its remedy, makes Jesus its motto; presents, Jesus at the Social Gate; Jesus in our libraries; Jesus in our gymnasiums; Jesus with us in caring for the children; Jesus the countersign with which we shall commune on the Sabbath day; Jesus the name of fellowship with which we shall associate together on the week night; Jesus! Jesus only. Always Jesus!

Another means of benefiting the working man is to insist on the observance of the Lord's Day. The Sabbath day as a sacred rest-day is to be a great factor in teaching the laboring classes how rightly to spend their evenings. It is not only, as William E. Gladstone once expressed it, to be "the great conservator of physical health," but also the golden gate which shall open to let the laboring man into the higher and nobler life of the Spirit. It is to be the foundation stone of the sacred church. It is also to be the foundation stone of the pure home, and of the pure place of wholesome, elevating, evening entertainment.

Social Degeneration

An Oriental legend in a very graphic way taught the truth of Ralph Waldo Emerson's terse saying, "The Sabbath day is the very core of civilization," both spiritual and temporal. It pictured King Solomon on his way to visit the Queen of Sheba. While journeying along he came to a valley filled with a peculiar tribe of monkeys. By inquiry from the neighboring people, he found that this tribe of monkeys were the direct descendants of a Jewish colony, which long ago had settled in that valley. This people as a people had started on their social degeneracy, when they, through avarice, had learned to despise the Sabbath day. Sabbath desecration always means a degenerating man. It means the human race descending from the God-like to the brute-like. On the other hand, the indirect lessons of this legend are also true. Teach a man how to worship God aright on Sunday and you stiffen his backbone. You will raise his forehead's dome. You will also teach him how to live aright, both during the week day and the week night.

"But," again says some one to me, "why do you use future tense? Why do you say, 'the Sabbath day is to be the golden gate which shall open to let the aspiring man into the higher and the nobler life of the Spirit?' Why do you not use the present tense, or even the past tense?" Because, my friend, to a great extent, avarice, with her dusky handmaids, Blasphemy and Wanton Pleasures, have stolen away our blessed Sabbath. When Agassiz first landed upon our shores he was asked what most impressed him about the new world. "The quiet of the American Sabbath," was his reply. But alas, alas, the American Sabbath is not now a day of rest and worship, but of work and pleasure seeking. In many large cities, and in many country villages, the stores are opened and business, if not running at full blast, is being done at least with driving force. The barber shop and grocery stores, and drug stores, and dry goods stores, and liquor stores, and billiard halls, and theatres, and often foundries and factories are open, and know no difference between Sunday and Monday or Saturday. "The question, How shall we keep Sunday, is fast acquiring a secondary significance," once powerfully spake Bishop Huntington. "Once the fear was that the Sunday might be broken. Now the anxiety is lest it be wholly lost. In a word, we are threatened with the forfeiture of an available franchise, the annulment of an ancient charter, and it is high time that we bestir ourselves." Yes, yes! Bishop Huntington well spoke the truth. The Sabbath day is to be a great factor in the future in teaching the laboring classes how to spend their evenings, because now the Sabbath day, as a day of rest, has been stolen away. It must be recaptured. It is high time that the labor unions of this land and the Church of Jesus Christ join hands to win back that Sabbatic treasure which Lord Beaconsfield—who like King Solomon was a Jew—once declared, "was the greatest blessing ever given by God to man."

Need of Weekly Rest

The labor unions may logically base their claims upon physical grounds. Rest, rest! Give us more rest!" cry the Barber Union, and the Grocery Clerk Unions, and the Drug Store Clerks' Unions, and all other unions. "Our men must have physical rest. Periodical rest for the eye, the foot, the hand, the brain, the heart. Rest and complete rest on physical grounds. And, thank God, a beginning has already been made, for the labor unions are everywhere presenting their just claims for a restful Sabbath.

On the other hand, the Church of Jesus Christ must go into this battle for a restful Sabbath, emphasizing the spiritual as well as physical claims. The Church of Jesus Christ must have at least one whole day per week to tell the people about God. One whole day per week to teach men how they should be good husbands and good sons and good fathers. One day per week to teach a man his duty to his fellowmen and to his State. One day out of every seven to teach a man how his life may be spiritual and his death glorious. "Rest Rest!" A Sabbath for sacred rest and worship should be the cry of the church. May this Christian pulpit on this Labor Sunday, help to be the means of leading the church and the labor unions to clasp hands in the holy conspiracy of capturing the Sabbath for God. Recapturing it for physical and mental and spiritual rest and invigoration.

A Political Necessity

A consecrated and Gospelized ballot-box is also to be a great factor in teaching the laboring classes how to spend their evenings. This means that by the election of the proper health officials and district attorneys and municipal representatives, the better classes shall be able to go into the city slums, and clean out the vile formations and accumulations of filth. Jacob A. Riis, in his great book, How the Other Half Lives, declared that in some of New York's back alleys, a choke with refuse piles, the light of the sun, as in Devil's Canyon, in Arizona, can never shine. He declared that the walls of one tenement in "Blind Man's Alley," were so covered over with filth, that though it caught fire six times in winter, it could not burn. The filthy incrustations accumulated upon the walls of that tenement did literally smother the flames. It means that these elected officers shall see that each family must have rooms for itself. No moral lessons can ever be taught where there are four or five married couples with their children occupying the same apartment. A Dublin missionary said that once he found five different families, all living within the same four walls of one room. One husband and wife for each corner, and one family for the centre of the room, and "one of those families was taking in boarders." It means, that no criminals shall be allowed to collect in one region.

But some one again interrupts me! "In these charges against the city tenements, are you not slandering our laboring classes? You surely do not compare the American army of labor with those wild, desperate crowds of frenzied men who, emerging from the cellars and foul haunts of Paris, started on their famous journey to Versailles, which ended in the death of Louis XVI., and Marie Antoinette, the haughty daughter of the Austrian War Queen, Maria Theresa? Do you charge the laboring classes with being the physical and spiritual menace of the world?" Oh no, my brother. I am in no way slandering the laboring classes. I believe that some of the most cleanly and moral and refined homes of the world are found among the laborers as well as among the capitalists. But this is what I do assert. The laboring man is the economical king of the world can dollar buy. What he votes in last. It rests upon his shoulders to a great extent, how our cities and counties are to be ruled. It rests with him whether the sewers shall be clean, whether the tenements shall be made sanitary and not overcrowded, whether the one millions immigrants who landed at the country last year, some of whom come to the mining district and graduate of European inhabitants, shall be made to observe decencies, and whether we shall have Alsace and hole in the darkness. How the laboring man spends his evenings is the road to a great extent to the question whether the laboring man shall become one and be leering eyed tempters that through our cities and towns, like the Indian Juggernaut which crushes its victims at every turn of the fatal wheels.

Divine Help

But, ye laboring men, how are we to win to these three great movements which we have been discussing? How are we to get the Holy Spirit moved in Sabbatical Church, and the Christian Sabbath as a day for rest and worship, and a Gospel baptism for our city for our depraved? Shall we accurately, or even through in these three great movements for the amelioration of the laborer's evenings? Not in our own strength, but in the strength of Jesus Christ, we shall and we can do everything if we will only trust Him and work for Him.

One day, so goes the story, an old Scotch preacher arose, and first gave out as his text the following words from Philippians 4 13, "I can do all things." Then he stopped. A look of surprise went around the congregation, for this minister was a humble man. But after a pause the preacher said "Ah, I did not read the text aright. If any man says to me 'I can do all things,' I know he is a liar. But if he reads my whole text and says, 'I can do all things through Christ which strengthen me,' then I say he tells the truth. Christ is omnipotent, and Christ will always give us his promised aid." So, laboring men, I beg and plead with you to throw yourself upon the divine strength. I plead with you, by the power of Jesus Christ, to go with me into the battle of trying to save the lower as well as the socially higher classes. I plead with you to help solve the question—"How the Laboring Man Shall Spend His Evenings," by appealing for help to a Saviour who was once a laboring man. He was Jesus, the Carpenter. He was Jesus, the Worker for daily bread. He was Jesus, whose companions were, for the most part, men of knotted muscles, and swarthy limbs, and furrowed cheeks, and coarse hands. He is Jesus, who is ready to be your co-laborer for the emancipation of a sinful world. Jesus, who perhaps is your co-laborer now.

A Visit to the Shakers at Mount Lebanon

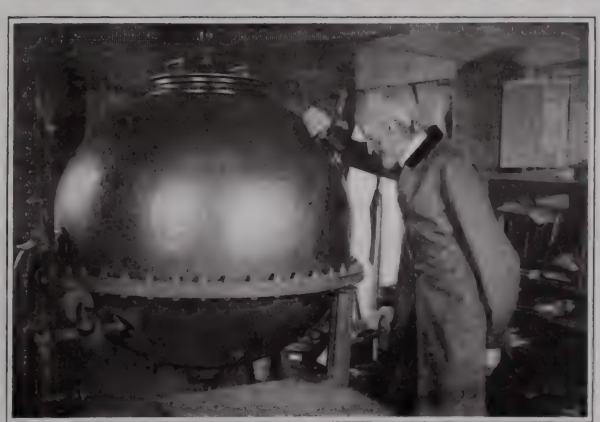
Continued from page 747

herbs and roots into medicines for the body, is a most interesting and scholarly man,—a mystic and a dreamer, with a kind heart and cordial hand.

Eldress Anna, Sister Catharine, Sister Corinne, Brother Alonzo, Brother Timothy, you and the others are among the good people one likes to meet. The marvel is that you do not know how to grow old. Shaker sisters at eighty are vigorous women, with unwrinkled cheeks and bright eyes. Probably the regular and simple life, freed from excitement, competition and anxiety, has something to do with the freedom from sickness and the longevity of the Shakers.

A picturesque sect, they are not increasing. They are in odd contrast to the restless, hurrying, fiercely onrushing world of the twentieth century beyond their doors. They are a reverent community, worshiping God after their unique fashion, observing the Lord's Day with care, and passing hence when their earth-life ends, in the hope of the resurrection.

M. E. S.



PREPARING HERBS IN THE SHAKER LABORATORY ON MOUNT LEBANON

As far back as the first half of the eighteenth century, the Shakers were known as a distinct religious body. They were accustomed to trace their origin to the Camisards of France (a sect which made its appearance in that country during the terrible oppressions towards the end of the seventeenth century). These Camisards were so-called from the fact that they wore the Camise, or peasant's jacket. Many of them were put to the torture in 1702 and 1705, and died the death of martyrdom, while others found a refuge in England, and there propagated their doctrines and found many followers. In 1757 Ann Lee joined the Society, and became its head. It was about this time that these people adopted the name of Shakers. In 1774 Ann Lee and a number of her followers left England for the United States. Their first settlement was at Watervliet, near Albany, N. Y. Mother Lee died in 1784, having already formed her little following into a model for Shaker organizations, and having also formulated her ideas of community of property. Elder James Whitaker succeeded her as head of the movement, and under his administration the first Shaker church was built in 1785. He died in 1787. In that year, Joseph Meachem, a convert of Mother Lee, assembled all the Shaker following and founded the present settlement in New Lebanon. In the five years following, ten other Shaker settlements were founded, viz.: At Watervliet, N. Y., Hancock, Tyringham, Harvard and Shirley, Mass.; Enfield, Conn.; Canterbury and Enfield, N. H.; and at Alfred and New Gloucester, Me. In 1805, six other settlements were established, all the communities together numbering probably between 6,000 and 8,000 souls.

In their religious belief, the Shakers hold that God gives to man four revelations, viz.: 1. Through the patriarchs by promise: 2. Through the law by Moses; 3. Through Christ's appearance in the flesh; 4. Through the second appearance, yet to come. They teach the immortality of the soul, the resurrection, celibacy (not imperative, but as desirable), and non-resistance and non-participation in any earthly government. They believe oral confession of sin necessary to receive power to overcome it; they practice healing through prayer and fasting; they regard themselves as under the immediate guidance of the Holy Spirit. They decline to take oaths in court or elsewhere; they abhor compliment and exaggeration, and they abstain from all games of chance. Their peculiar methods of worship, their religious dances, their quaint and not unmusical singing, and their earnest exhortation to all to lead pure, spiritual lives, are probably too well known to need any extended description here.

Two brethren and two sisters compose the usual Shaker ministry in a parish, which may include from one to four societies. Members are divided into three classes: Novitiates, Juniors and Seniors. The Novitiates are those who "accept the doctrines of the Society, but do not enter into temporal connection with it, remaining with their own families, and controlling their own property." The Juniors are "those who become members of the Society and unite with it in labor and worship, but who have not surrendered their property to the Society, or if so, only conditionally." The Seniors are "those who after a satisfactory probation solemnly agree to consecrate themselves, their services, and their property to the Society, never to be reclaimed."

In many things the Shakers set an example that might be profitably heeded by other religious bodies. They are kind, hospitable, charitable. They have reduced to practice the principles of a Christian community: they esteem purity of character and a noble life as greater than worldly riches and honors. As their name of "The Society of Believers in Christ's Second Appearing" implies, their hope and expectation are constantly and steadily fixed upon that event as the consummation of the redemption of a sinful world.

A SHAKER BROTHER

NOW SIXTY-ONE "DOORS OF HOPE"

MULTIPLICATION OF AGENCIES FOR THE RECLAMATION OF THE VICTIMS OF SIN AND SORROW

By MRS. E. M. WHITTEMORE

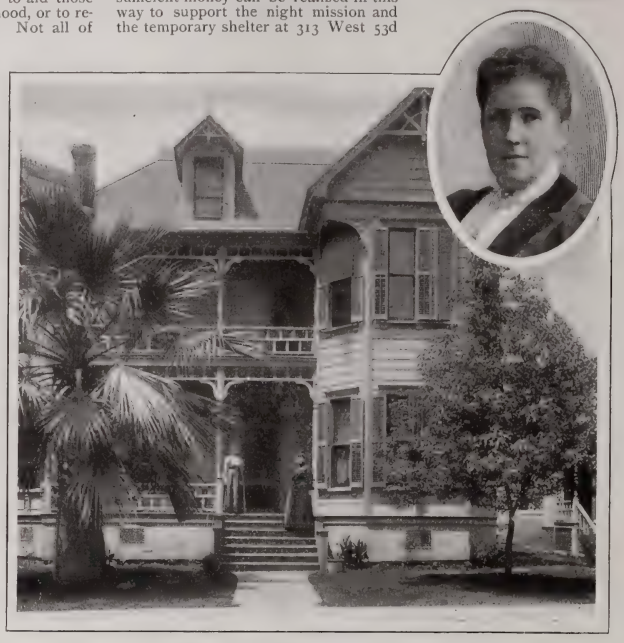
SO many kindly letters and welcome help have reached me from the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, in response to my account of my work, published in this journal last summer, that it is a duty, as well as a pleasure, to report the progress made during the year.

We have now sixty-one homes and shelters in as many different cities, in which efforts are made to rescue fallen women from their evil life, and to aid those who have left it to earn an honest livelihood, or to restore them to their homes and friends. Not all of these are in this country. Unhappily, the need of this mission is world-wide, and the victims of evil passions, and of man's perfidy are found everywhere. The Door of Hope Union is now represented in Africa, China, New Zealand, France, and Scotland. The reports of the work recently received from these widely scattered agencies are most encouraging.

Four new homes have recently been opened in Western States. During the winter and early spring, many meetings were held in California and other States, which were signally blessed by God. Friends of the movement were enlisted, and finally a Door of Hope was established at Los Angeles, in a suitable location, about two miles away from that dreadful section of the city in which most of the victims that the mission is organized to help, are numerous. It has a fine three-story house, capable of sheltering many applicants, and affording comfortable quarters for the matron. At El Paso, also, a house in a central location has been secured, and the friends who are interested in its management feel that they have reason to bless God for the support that has been given to it. A new home has been founded at Cedar Rapids, Ia. It adjoins the Sunshine Mission, founded by Mr. Ward. In recognition of his kindly interest in the movement, we have called it The Sunshine Door of Hope. The fourth of our new homes is at St. Louis, Mo., and is under the charge of a lady singularly successful in her efforts to reach the class of girls we seek to save.

The wisdom of the removal of our headquarters from New York City to Tappan has been fully proved by experience. The advantages are many. The girls are away from reach of the temptations of the city and the old surroundings. They are where they can have the benefits and freedom of out-door life, with its pure air and sunshine. And those who have simply made a convenience of the Door of Hope as a temporary shelter, are largely eliminated, which leaves more room for those who really desire a better life. The Home is situated upon a beautiful piece of land of forty-three acres. Here various out-door industries have been attempted, and it is hoped that before very long, sufficient money can be realized in this way to support the night mission and the temporary shelter at 313 West 53d street, known as The Door of Hope Gospel Mission.

MRS. E. M. WHITTEMORE



A NEW "DOOR OF HOPE" AT LOS ANGELES, CALIF.

As the demands at the Tappan Home are continually increasing, it has seemed best to classify the entire work. In order to do this a number of small cottages will be erected upon the grounds. Each house will accommodate six or eight girls and a matron in charge, and will have a room for each person, and a general sitting room. The large house will be the centre of the Settlement life. There all meals will be served, and all the indoor industries carried on.

When upon the Pacific coast, a few months ago, holding services in many places, a gentleman came forward and said he would like to help erect a chapel upon our grounds in memory of his son. Two days later one hundred dollars more were given to be used for this purpose, for which we were very grateful; this was followed by seventy dollars.

From the very beginning of this work to the present time, the guidance and care of the Lord has been very wonderful. We never know where the next dollar is coming from, and yet when the lesson of faith and truth is learned, it is always received. The financial testings have been experienced alone. Not even my dearest worker is allowed to share them, as I feel that the workers should be relieved from any extra strain or care, so that they may be left free to labor more effectually for those entrusted to us. The difficulties, as they arise, are laid before the Lord, and hitherto they have all been met.

Since the beginning of our work, nearly thirteen years ago, we have received in answer to prayer—for we never resort to collections or soliciting—over $91,500. With this we have purchased our large piece of property, which is free and clear, and supported and clothed over 3,800 girls while under our care.

Many of these girls are living consistent Christian lives. Some of them have their own comfortable little homes, others have been returned to their families, and a few have already passed into their eternal rest, with rejoicings in their hearts.

The prayers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers are earnestly solicited for this entire enterprise, and especially for the younger homes, as it is by no means an easy task to start and carry on such work. Much grace and wisdom are required to accomplish even a little. But by combined effort through the ministry of prayer, great things can be done for the glory of God and the salvation of lost souls.

Morning Worship in the Northfield Woods

ONE of the most interesting features of the summer meetings in Northfield is that of the Y. M. C. A. The regular conference of the Association is held in July, but the camp is kept open all summer, and hundreds of young men spend from one to two weeks at the Y. M. C. A. camp between June and September. The camp is most beautifully situated in the pine woods, a short distance from the great auditorium. A great many tents are pitched under the spreading branches of the pines, and the young fellows who come here demonstrate the fact that it is possible for a company of young men to have a thoroughly delightful time without the least rowdyism, although there is no lack of merriment.

A popular feature of the camp is the morning prayer service, at eight o'clock. Large numbers of visitors in Northfield attend these services. Our illustration is of one of these morning prayer meetings held in the camp last August, with the Rev. A. C. Dixon, of Boston, seated in the chair as leader of the meeting.

One cannot help feeling impressed by the reverent attitude of those who attend the meetings. There is absolute attention to the speaker, and the atmosphere of the place is one of sincere worship. The attendance at the camp during the past summer was very large and the meetings were intensely spiritual and helpful.

J. L. H.

AN EIGHT O'CLOCK A.M. SERVICE AT THE Y. M. C. A. CAMP, NORTHFIELD

. . .

It was the late D. L. Moody who was the first to establish open-air worship in the beautiful groves of Northfield. Many an excellent discourse has the grand old evangelist delivered to the students under the big pines, their branches shielding all from the hot sun, while the layers of "pine-needles" made a soft and pleasant carpet for the feet of the worshipers.

How Our Famine Flotilla Saved Kwang-Si

Eight Junks Loaded with "Christian Herald" Food-Supplies, Drawn by Eight Steam Launches, and all Towed by U. S. Warship, "Callao" --- Thousands of Lives Saved

(From official despatches by U. S. Consul-General McWade)

ANOTHER glorious triumph of benevolence has to-day to be added to the long roll of distinguished Christian service rendered by the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Two years ago, they reached out hands of help and saved thousands of lives in the province of Shansi, China. To-day we print the official record, which shows that under Divine blessing, their recent efforts towards fighting back the famine in Kwang-Si province, Southern China, have been crowned with complete success.

We congratulate all who have had a share with us in this latest life-saving crusade upon the splendid results accomplished. Consul-General McWade tells the story in a series of graphic dispatches from Canton. His pen-picture places vividly before the reader the two expeditions up the great river to Kwang-Si—an imposing flotilla of food-laden junks, flying the American flag and manned by American sailors, drawn by eight powerful launches, and the whole towed by the mighty engines of the American warship Callao. The picture is one that will long be remembered.

Never was a relief work more cordially urged forward or more generously aided from first to last than this. To Consul-General McWade, to the brave Commander, officers and crew of the Callao, to our self-sacrificing missionaries along the river from Canton to the interior, and to the Chinese officials themselves, are due, individually and collectively, the magnificent results that have been accomplished with the gifts of Christian America to the starving Chinese. The latest contribution to the Kwang-Si sufferers from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have aggregated $30,000, and it is peculiarly gratifying to note that Consul-General McWade declares that the contributions received from this journal "have undoubtedly been the means of saving many thousands of human lives."

OUR SECOND RELIEF EXPEDITION ON ITS WAY UP THE CANTON RIVER TO THE RELIEF OF KWANG-SI

The Consul-General's Report

We give below extracts from the correspondence forwarded by Consul-General McWade relative to the expeditions:

"CANTON, CHINA, June, 30th.

"Hon. Francis B. Loomis,
State Dept., Washington, D. C.

"In further continuation of my No. 283 regarding the famine in Kwang-Si, I have the honor to report as follows:

"The second American Relief Expedition, composed of eight large Cargo Junks, loaded with 6,000 piculs of rice and 200 sacks of American flour, towed by eight steam launches and convoyed by U. S. S. Callao, Lieutenant Anderson commanding, and by a Chinese torpedo boat, left here for Kwang-Si on the morning of June 21, 1903. . . . Prior to the departure of the expedition, the bund of Shameen, fronting on the Canton River, was thronged with Chinese gentries, representative members of the Charitable Guilds of Canton, all of whom embarked on government torpedo boats and gunboats, and accompanied the expedition as far as the Macao fort. The accompanying despatches announce the arrival of the expedition at Wuchow and Samshui, and the distribution of the rice and flour by our missionaries among the starving natives. You will please note the different dates of the despatches, the earlier ones—for instance, that of the Rev. Dr. Shumaker, dated Kwai-Un, June 7, 1903—refer to the distribution of the rice from the first relief expedition.

The Christian Herald Thanked

"I have the honor to suggest that copies of these despatches be forwarded to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for publication. The contributions of the readers of that excellent journal for the relief of the famine-stricken sufferers have undoubtedly been the means of saving many thousands of human lives. I desire to join the poor sufferers in appreciative gratitude of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S abounding charity.

"I also enclose photographs of the first and second Relief Expeditions, taken as they were about starting from Canton to Kwang-Si. Photographs will be forwarded later, with the missionaries' final report of striking scenes and incidents at Weng Shun, Kwai Ping and elsewhere. As soon as the relief work has been completed, an itemized account of the expenditure, etc., will be forwarded to the Department, with all necessary vouchers annexed.

"The accompanying dispatches are as follows: From Rev. A. J. Fisher, June 6, 1903; Rev. Dr. H. K. Shumaker, June 7; Rev. Dr. H. K. Shumaker, June 20; Rev. Dr. H. K. Shumaker, June 22; Rev. H. O. T. Burkwall, June, 23; Lieut. E. A. Anderson, June 28; Midshipman Sterling, June 22; Rev. Dr. H. K. Shumaker, June, 26.

"The cabled despatch from Governor Wong Chih Chune, upon which my despatch to you of June 4 was based, reads:

"'YOUR HONOR — I have read your telegram, and beg to inform you that as the weather in Kwang-Si being dread for years, and with the additional disturbances of the rebels and the failure of the agricultural purposes, many hundred thousands of persons are suffering from hunger. Although several large cargoes of rice have been purchased, and distributed to them with energies, yet very many hundreds are starving daily. Help is urgently needed to save them. Can you give it?' I feel extremely gratified, and will never forget your favorable kindness and the great charity of America given to our suffering people and for having saved them lives from hunger.'

One Cake Daily for the Starving

"In another parcel or package," adds Consul-General McWade, "I send the wooden measure used in the distribution of rice to the starving people at Kwai Ping. One measured the rice was the daily allowance for each adult. I also send one of the famine cakes, sent up from Canton for distribution amongst the unfortunate, one cake per diem being held to be sufficient nourishment for each adult."

We quote below from the despatches enclosed in Consul-General McWade's letter:

KWAI PING, June 6, 1903.

"To His Honor, the Consul-General of the United States, Hon. Robert M. McWade.

"I beg to submit the following report of the rice sent to the famine district of Kwang-Si Province as the gift of the United States: [The rice purchased with the contributions of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers is here referred to.] Your Honor has already a full report of the safe arrival of the rice at Wuchow. After a delay of two and a half days at Wuchow we secured a launch to tow the rice up to the famine district. We wish here to acknowledge the kind services rendered by Mr. Alabaster, C. of I. M. Customs at Wuchow, and Mr. Braun, the Harbor Master, in securing this launch.

"The rice was towed up to Kwai-Peng, where, under the direction of the Rev. Mr. Fee, distribution has been going on for two months in various ways. After consulting with Mr. Fee and others it was thought best to open a new station at Peng-Nam, about thirty miles below Kwai-Peng. One boat, the largest one of the three, was taken back to Peng-Nam and arrangements were at once made for proper distribution.

Distributing Food in the Temples

"The examination hall and the adjoining temple, Man Cheung Hung were thrown open for our use. The rice is stored in the temple and the examination hall is being used for the distributions. The other two boats are left at Kwai-Peng, for the time, as there was some question as to just where it had best be taken up. It is in the care of Mr. Fee and is well guarded.

"There can be no question as to the need for rice in these places. The distress and suffering are appalling. At Kwai-Peng twenty-thousand men, women and children are being fed. Many have nothing left of earthly possession. Children are sold every day. Some sell themselves for rice to eat. Many have nothing to eat except what is given to them on distribution days, twice a week. Many come in and tell of a brother or a husband who has fallen by the way in his efforts to get to the place of distribution. Again and again we have been told that this or that one has come for twenty miles. Every day the aged and the weak are falling away.

"At Peng-Nam the distress is perhaps even greater than at Kwait-Peng. Making a rough estimate, I should say that not more than two-fifths of the fields are planted with rice, which is about the only thing they raise there.

"The first distribution day at Peng-Nam was on Saturday, May 30. It was not generally known, yet more than six thousand people came to ask for a portion of rice. Some had to be turned away because, in the judgment of the distributors, they were well taken care of.

"More rice is needed to help the sufferers over another five or six weeks. [Signed] REV. A. J. FISHER."

The Relief Work Described

"Hon. R. M. McWade, United States Consul General.

"This report has to do with the famine relief work under my charge in Kwai Un. In company with Mr. Fletcher on May 19, I left Kwai-Peng, and on same day at evening arrived in the district city of Kwai-Un. Being informed that the southern part of the district was most needy, we, on the 20th ult. traveled thirty-odd miles on horseback, looking over the field. We found the two important towns to be Kiu-Hu and Mah Kak, situated two miles apart and were much cut from any navigable stream.

"The present status of the work is as follows: Mr. Fisher receives the rice at Kwai-Peng at the former point. He weighs it and transfers it to smaller cargo boats, containing about one hundred piculs each. I then proceed on my journey from the city and overtake my boats to the shore, whence it is delivered to me after some hours by coolies.

"The work of getting the rice into the hands of the people as practiced at Kwai Ha is as follows: Our boats tie at a establishment consisting of several compartments, one in a large house-stables, courtyard, and a threshing ground. This place we have divided into two distinct parts, one has its own entrance. Coupons having been placed in circulation by some other way than the main gate, as soon as about sunrise in the morning. The people as they enter are numbered by the foreigners and several keepers appointed by the gentry. These recognized as paupers are not permitted to go out. Those in actual need, but ashamed to beg, have coupons issued in one of the two parts of the works and those in greatest need, into the other part.

"At one o'clock the gate is closed and the two buckets placed at the doors. The distributors at once draw out a measure containing one and a third pounds, or about one and two thirds of a pound is dispensed to each one. This amount of rice is sufficient for two meals more. The people gather once in three days. The men and women come on separate days. The third day I have spent at Mah Kak, where the work is arranged a little differently. I got looking on this work at Kwai Ha and we agreed to feed the women while the gentry carried the rice home. The very needy at Mah Kak were in a dying condition and their allowance is one for three days and seven pounds and in special cases we have given more pounds. I respected the privilege of seeing to rice in the very need in Now after I am through with the women these men come and we give each one one and two thirds pounds of rice.

"Soon after arriving here I discovered that many of the gentry, who ordinarily gain a living by school teaching, were in great need. Scholars they lacked not, but the parents had nothing to pay. It seemed to me hard to entrust these gentlemen that they come to the general distribution. Therefore, upon due investigation, in proportion to the number dependent upon them, we supplied rice to keep them until the harvest. The same method has been followed with aged men and women too feeble to adventure themselves in the jostling crowds.

Many Dying by the Way

"At the beginning of our work, scores of those coming for help died by the ways, but since then I have seen none, and the gentry report none. I feel that relief work has prevented many lives coming to a premature.

"It may be asked, 'Do the Chinese appreciate our efforts in their behalf?' The gentry most certainly do. As Your Honor knows, the fountain head of all anti-foreign feeling among this people has been the conservative literary class. Having suffered much at the hands of foreign nations, the gentry have added to their natural antipathy to the 'Barbarian' an intense hatred. We have, however, this year shown them that we are not wholly evil, and I believe that the timely assistance rendered the gentry and common people of Kwang-Si by the two great English speaking nations, has gone far to change hatred and distrust to friendship and confidence. [Signed] H. K. SHUMAKER."

Appended to the Rev. Mr. Shumaker's report are notes describing the "famine bread" as follows:

"During this famine there have been sent up from Canton famine cakes for free distribution. The cake is round about two inches in diameter and three eighths of an inch thick. It is dark gray in color with black specks, and is quite hard, evidently having been pressed in a mould. The cakes are made of goose rice or grain very rich in gluten, sesamum seeds, red adzuke beans, and brown sugar. The taste is not unpleasant, but one's teeth discover nothing like it, it is said. The Chinese assert that one of these cakes per day is sufficient to satisfy the hunger. The cakes are sent up in small rolls, and the directions, in addition to the printing, tell that the cake should be eaten with hot water, and under no circumstances should more than one be eaten in twenty-four hours.

Picking Up Grains in the Streets

"How terrible must be the pangs of hunger when people go about the streets picking up a grain of rice that could have just as a chicken would.

"When relief work was first opened at Kwai Ha the deaths among those who came for help was so many as four a day. This number has decreased greatly, so the gentry tell me, and stands at about one a day. Of course there will be many whose digestive organs and system generally will never fully recover from the effects of this famine. They will cease to misery for a little while longer, but are the exception. Most

CONTINUED ON PAGE 750

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, ASSOCIATE EDITOR — LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor — G. H. SANDISON, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscriptions.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter

A Glorious Relief Work

ONE of the most remarkable features of Christian work, when we enter upon it with no purpose of self-seeking, but solely for the glory of God and the welfare of our fellow-men, is that it receives Divine blessing in unstinted measure, and expands to proportions that exceed all anticipations. This has been singularly demonstrated in the case of the relief work undertaken by the readers of this journal in China. Begun quietly and without any preparation other than earnest prayer, their efforts were largely the means of checking the awful famine in Shansi, and of saving thousands of lives. Our missionaries have since reported that the generous help then rendered by America, has exerted a powerful influence in transforming the Chinese officials and people from an attitude of hostility to one of cordial friendship for the messengers of the Gospel, and that the Christian religion has secured more adherents and a better foothold in China through that instrumentality, than could have been accomplished by long years of arduous effort under ordinary conditions.

And now has come the unexpected sequel, proving conclusively that the "double blessing" comes to those who give quickly and who add their faithful prayers to the gift. In Kwang-Si province, far to the south of Shansi, the famine-wave, rolled back from the north, settled with terrible intensity upon the peasant population. On the appeal of United States Consul-General McWade at Canton, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD devoted the balance of the Relief Fund, with added contributions, to the rescue of the sufferers. With our Consul-General were associated a number of American missionaries in Kwang-Si, the actual work of distribution being in the missionaries' hands. A fleet of cargo junks was loaded with rice and other grain purchased at Canton, and these vessels, drawn by steam launches, and the whole commanded by American officers and seamen from the United States warship Callao, and flying the Stars and Stripes, our Relief flag and the Chinese colors, sailed up the Canton River for the land of famine.

This great expedition went in two sections, like two food-bearing fleets, and so hearty was the co-operation of our naval officials that, the towing force of the second fleet being inadequate, the gallant Callao towed that fleet—launches and junks together—over a considerable portion of the distance up-river. Never were the engines of an American warship put to nobler service than when those great machines, at every throb and revolution, were speeding the American gift of food to the hungry-stricken peasants of Kwang-Si.

Consul-General McWade's despatches, published elsewhere in this issue, give the story of this wonderful relief expedition. It is a narrative that probably has no parallel in the history of humanitarian service. In the years to come, the simple Chinese in the villages along the Canton and West rivers, will relate to their children, in trembling voices and with tears, how the great warship, and its strange flotilla, came to save them from the cruel death of hunger, in the year of the famine.

We rejoice, with all our readers, that we have been privileged to be the instruments in a work that has been so divinely prospered. In the announcement in the Consul-General's despatches, that it has already been the means of saving thousands of lives in Kwang-Si, we recognize the hand of Him who has thus crowned the Chinese relief work with the "double blessing."

Spiritual Apprehension

YOU look on a noble picture, like "The Angelus," for instance, and you feel the power of the silent attitude of the humble and reverent peasants as the sound of the distant call to prayer is heard, but you cannot explain your emotions to one who has no sympathy with art. Your soul is thrilled by eloquence or by music, but you cannot explain the witchery they throw about you to one who never felt their power or beauty. Your eye fills with tearful wonder gazing into the starry depths of heaven at midnight; there is an echo in your soul from out those depths, for a faculty deeper than thought is wakened.

So with truth, or honor, or purity; they are not weighed and measured and tested and tasted, as physical substances are; they are not proved by logic and argument. They cannot be demonstrated to those who have not corresponding qualities in their own souls. Moral truth is recognized by moral perceptions, apart from formulas and theologies. Creeds and confessions, and articles of faith may help us, but they cannot shut up the truth within themselves. We must have the confirming sentence of individual consciousness. Spiritual things are only spiritually discerned.

Zionism's New Phase

NEW developments of an unexpected character have appeared at the sixth Zionist Congress recently in session at Basle, Switzerland. Hitherto the world has regarded Zionism as purely and simply a movement for repatriating the Jews in the Holy Land. Naturally, it took cognisance of the peculiar trials and persecutions to which the race is subjected in Russia and elsewhere, but these were relevant chiefly as a reason for reorganizing a Jewish State in its ancient seat. At this Congress, however, a proposal was presented by Dr. Herzl, the originator and leader of the Zionist movement, of an entirely different character. Great Britain has offered a site in East Africa for a Jewish colony, promising that it shall be governed exclusively by Jews, under British suzerainty. The offer, though strongly opposed by some members of the Congress, was favorably received by an influential section, and a commission was appointed to inspect the section offered and to report on the terms proposed.

Another development, which may have a subtle connection with the British offer, originates in Russia. Dr. Herzl produced the memoranda of a conversation with M. Von Plehwe, the Russian Minister of the Interior, in which the minister announced the terms on the which he would favor Zionism, and assist it. The Russian government, it appears from this document, would countenance a movement for the removal of large numbers of Jews to Palestine, and would use its influence with the Sultan of Turkey to secure the rights and liberties of the Jews who might settle there.

The question between the two schemes is one of sentiment on the one hand, and practical advantage on the other. The Jews would feel greater security under British protection in Africa than under Turkish suzerainty in Palestine. The natural fertility of the soil, too, is greater in Africa than in Palestine, and there is more opportunity for expansion. The whole of Palestine is not so large as the State of New Jersey, and it would be uncomfortably crowded if five million Jews should decide to settle there. On the other hand, there is the love of the historic land, the land given by God to the founder of the race, and there are all the tender associations connected with its beloved sites. To orthodox Jews, especially to those of Russia, from whom the first settlers would naturally come, the offer of a home in Africa would have no attractions. It is to their own beloved land that they desire to go. Otherwise, they would prefer to come to America, where they can trade, instead of tilling the soil, as they would have to do in Africa. The Jews of other lands, however, perceive the advantages of the African scheme, and are less influenced by sentiment than their orthodox brethren.

It will be extremely interesting to watch the developments of this dilemma. Every believer in the prophecies of Holy Writ is convinced that in the end, the Jewish nation will be re-established in Palestine, and that it will extend the borders of the land to the area promised to the patriarchs, which it never fully occupied even in the days of Solomon. At present, unless the help now promised by Russia is effectual, the prospects of a return to Palestine are gloomy. But God can repatriate them as he has done twice already, when the difficulties in the way were greater than now. He has means at his disposal of which we know nothing, and his purposes will be fulfilled even though the Turkish empire be shattered in the process. In the meantime, the British offer has its interest, especially to those students of prophecy who regard the Anglo Saxons as the representatives of ancient Israel. In taking a colony of Jews under their protection they may be fulfilling a fraternal destiny.

THE STORY OF "FOUR PRODIGAL

"Likewise I say unto you, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth." Luke 15: 10.

IT has been my privilege lately to spend a short vacat in England. When it became known that I was go to the Old Country, many of our boys begged me to and see "the old folks at home," for the purpose of pers ally assuring them of the restoration of the wandering one the favor and peace God.

I have done so, and I wish it were possible to convey Dr. Klopsch, to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERA and to the supporters of the Bowery Mission, something of t intense joy I felt at witnessing the delight, and at hearing t expressions of gratitude of fathers and mothers, sisters a brothers over the reclamation of the prodigals. I never u derstood before as I do now, the beautiful meaning of o Saviour's words quoted above.

The first visit of this kind that my wife and I paid was the city of Dublin, Ireland. Many letters had passed b tween us and the dear godly mother of one of our most c voted converts and workers. But she had begged that s might hear from our own lips the wonderful story. So f this purpose we crossed one night in the Channel steam from Holyhead, returning the following night, thus securi for ourselves a whole day in this beautiful city, and in th truly lovely Christian home. What a kindly eager face w that of the mother as she met us at the door! The sister, sweet-faced Christian woman, had come in many miles fro the country to meet us. The brother, bright, intelligen courteous, occupying a trusted position with one of th largest firms in Ireland, had obtained leave of absence f the day, and with his wife and family, had joined the grou

So, seated in happy circle, we told the story (portions which are related almost nightly in our testimony meetin by the redeemed one himself) of the sad misfortunes tha befel the prodigal on his arrival, two years ago, in New Yo City; how, in a state of intoxication, he was robbed everything he possessed; how he became a homele wanderer, sleeping nightly in the parks; at last, hopeless, d spairing and famishing with hunger, he was attracted in the Mission by hearing the sound of the organ through th open doors; how he at once embraced the opportunity making a fresh start in life; how he never swerved to th right or left, but bravely and determinedly struggled to d the right in the face of multiplied temptations and dis couragements, and how he had so devotedly helped us i our work that he had become one of our leaders, and ha now secured a splendid position with one of the best firm in the city. The mother's tears fell like rain, as she listene to this recital of God's copious answer to her prayers.

Our last pleasurable duty before leaving this happy famil circle, was to sing the saved boy's favorite hymn, "I'm hold ing on," and offer prayer for him and them. When brother bade us good-bye at the railroad station, he grasped me by the hand, and with tears of joy in his eyes, said "Tell Si I believe it all now."

It was a similarly happy scene we witnessed in a home i the west-end of London. There sat the gray-haired father and the joyfully weeping mother, the tenderly interested sisters, and the elder brother—not the churlish, jealous elde brother of the parable, but one proud and happy at th thought of the return of the prodigal to his father's love Once again the story was told of a precious soul rescue from the sin and sorrow of the Bowery, and once again th passage from Luke 15 flashed into our minds.

At another town, Blackburn, in Lancashire, where thou sands of looms every day busily weave American cotton into cloth, and where thousands of clogs clatter on the sidewalk another home was visited. This time it was a kindly-faced motherly tradeswoman who shot out her eager hand across the counter when I announced myself as being from the Bowery Mission of New York. My coming had been notified by a letter from the boy himself, and for two weeks they had been eagerly looking for me every day. Quickly I was taken into the little parlor behind the "shop," and there, to the dear old mother and her sturdy and steady stay-at-home sons who sat one on either side of her, I spoke of the boy who had come to America a scapegrace, and who had been redeemed from a life of sin, in the Bowery Mission.

The morning we left the great city of London, we were invited to take breakfast in one of the large hotels, with a lady and her son, who had come several hundred miles for the express purpose of meeting us. The lady is connected by family ties with several of the best known and most highly respected philanthropists of England. Upon her sweet and radiant face there rested that benign calm and peace which is never seen anywhere else than on the face of a truly trusting Christian follower. An earnest, genuine gratitude beamed in her eyes, as she expressed her thanks to God and the Bowery Mission for the conversion of her stalwart son who sat by her side. Leaving a life of luxury behind, he had come to America, and after several years of wandering had found himself in the great moral cesspool of the continent—the Bowery. He had entered the Mission, had heard the dear old Gospel of Christ and his love preached, and had seen it lived within its hallowed walls; he had turned to his mother's God in answer to his mother's prayers, and here he was at his mother's side, with the light of pardon, and the radiance of peace shining in his eyes.

J. G. HALLIMOND, Superintendent.

THE BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

The Seething Balkans

STORIES of massacre and outrage, horrible and inhuman, come from the wretched country in which the Macedonians and Turks are contending for the mastery. The reports from Bulgaria scribe brutalities committed by Turkish troops, vil-es in flames, houses pillaged, women and children chered in the streets. The reports from Constanti-le are full of cold-blooded murders, perpetrated by Macedonian insurgents, treacherous assassinations, l plots for wholesale massacres. Perhaps, in both es, the facts have been distorted and the crimes ex-erated, but there can be no doubt that an appalling dition exists, and that either side getting an advan-e over the other, shows no mercy nor ordinary hu-nity. The centre of conflict appears to be in the hilly ion of Monastir and south toward Adrianople. The ole country between those points and the Bulgarian ntier is in arms. The Macedonian committee has led on all Christians to refuse to pay taxes and to n the revolution. On the other side, the Sultan is ling out the reserves, and will shortly have two hun-d thousand men in the field. He has not sufficient ney to pay them regularly, and as the country around nastir has been devastated, they are unable to supply mselves, according to wont, by robbing the Chris-n inhabitants. Their temper may be understood by way they acted at Krushevo. Three days were spent in pillaging the town, and it was then set on fire. The imperiled survivors, driven out of their hiding-laces by the flames, found themselves, no matter in hich direction they fled, in the presence of Turkish oops, who stripped them of clothes and valuables, and hen pitilessly butchered them, without regard to age or ex. Such stories exasperate the insurgents to frenzy, nd they retaliate, whenever they have opportunity, ith corresponding brutality. Meanwhile, the patience f Europe is becoming exhausted, and in spite of the ultan's large army, the intervention of the Powers can-ot long be postponed. The most difficult part of the roblem is what shall be done with the people, if they re liberated from the yoke of the Sultan. They would ot be satisfied to be annexed by any other Power, and heir conduct shows that they are not fit for self-govern-ent. At present, the Apostle's warning seems to be he one that is most suitable to their case.

If ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another (Gal. 5:15).

Plight of a Runaway

A policeman on duty at Hollis, N. Y., reported the finding on his post of a ten-year-old boy, a few days go. As he was passing an unfrequented path he heard moan, and looked around for the cause. No one was n sight, but on pushing his way through a thicket, he ound among the tall grass a child, lying apparently sleep. The officer aroused him, and saw that the boy was not asleep, but extremely faint and weak. He could scarcely stand, and the policeman at last took him up in his arms and carried him to the nearest farm-house. The child was ravenously hungry, but the far-mer's wife was too wise to give him much food. Small quantities at intervals with drinks of coffee were given as seemed safe, and gradually the boy gained strength to speak and tell his story. He was the son of a me-chanic who lives in Brooklyn. An irresistible desire to see the world had come over the boy, and one day, when he was left to take care of his younger brother and sister during the absence of his parents, he had set out alone on a journey of discovery. He took a little food with him and walked away, not knowing whither he went. When it grew dark he lay down to sleep in a doorway, and in the morning resumed his walk, resting from time to time by the roadside. Before sunset he was in the country, and that night he slept in a hovel near a farmhouse. In the morning he was hungry, and his food being exhausted he ate some apples, and drank some water from a brook. One day after another pass-ed in wandering, with little or no food. Finally he had become too weak to walk and lay down, thinking he was going to die. He lay a long time before the policeman found him. Meanwhile his parents, almost frantic, were searching for him, and were delighted when a tele-phone message told them he was found. He had wan-dered eleven miles and had been away eight days. He was as thankful as they when they came and took him back home. How many of God's children, indulging a similar foolish desire to see the world, have had a far more painful experience. Happy they, who at last are restored, for their joy causes gladness in heaven, as well as to themselves.

I say unto you that likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth (Luke 15:7).

HIGH-CLASS BULGARIAN WOMEN

MACEDONIANS IN A STREET OF MONASTIR

BULGARIAN PEASANTS

Flowers of Prey

A remarkable species of insects which simulate flow-ers, in order to deceive butterflies and other honey-seekers, is described in the current issue of the Scientific American. The insects are known to entomolo-gists as Mantidœ. They masquerade sometimes as a pink and at others as a white orchid. The whole flower insect is either conspicuously white or of a resplendent pink color, and both in color and form perfectly imi-tates a flower. The lower or apparently interior petal of an orchidaceous blossom, the labellum, often of a very curious shape, is represented by the abdomen of the insect, while its posterior limbs represent the re-maining petals of the flower. As the mantis rests, head downward, amid the stems and leaves of a plant, and the fore legs drawn in so that they cannot be seen, and the thorax raised, the insect might easily at first sight deceive more discriminating entomologists than the honey-seekers that settle upon it. Its specialty is allur-ing and capturing butterflies. The expected guest hav-ing arrived, the seeming feast spread out for his delec-tation arises and devours him. It is marvelous that insects should have such craft. They seem to know that the best way to attract their prey is to pretend to be something that their victims love. How many men have been brought to ruin by a similar device!

For Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light (2 Cor 11:14).

Radium for the Blind

A New York physician, aided by an electrical engi-neer who is an expert in Radium, conducted an interest-ing experiment last week. The physician has a favorite patient, a girl eleven years old, who has been totally blind since her third year. She was unable to see any light even from a burning magnesium ribbon, added is said to be the most decisive test that can be applied. Satisfied that she was hopelessly and completely blind, the radium operation was commenced. Seven tubes of radium were ranged around her head, at the temples, the base of the brain and the forehead. The Roentgen rays were then introduced. At this point the child be-came so agitated that the experiment was discontinued, and was regarded as a failure for that time. It was in-tended to renew it when the patient's nerves were in better condition. As she was being taken home, how-ever, a car with a brilliant light met the one on which she was riding, and the child started up in her seat, ask-ing what that was. Later she saw the lights on other cars. Thinking that her imagination might have been playing her a trick, aided by the rumble of approach-ing cars, she was taken for a walk down a quiet street. On her way she clearly saw the electric lights and pointed to where they were. The physicians say it is too early yet to encourage hopes of a cure, but the re-sults so far achieved fulfil their expectations and justify further experiments. It would appear that the doctors base their hope on the theory that the nerves still exist, but are dormant or paralyzed, and that they may be stimulated by radium or some other agent to perform their functions. It is so with the spiritual vision. Happ-ily there is no doubt about the agent in that case. It is effectual and freely imparted.

For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ (II Cor 4:6).

BRIEF NOTES

Dr. John R. Hykes, agent of the American Bible Society in Shanghai, reports that more Mandarin Bibles have been sold in that city during the past eight months than in the entire eight years previous. The demand for books and Testaments comes from all parts of the Chinese Empire, and there has never been so free a spirit of inquiry concerning the Word of God.

A prominent Hebrew paper published at Bombay, the Israel's Messenger, in a recent issue, calls attention to the fact that the work that is constantly going on in China, Japan, Korea, Persia, Arabia, Egypt, and the lands of the Bible, in the translation and circulation of the Scriptures, is not the least of the evidences of the progress of the Christian religion. The Hebrew paper says that these translations and circulations of the Bible must be considered as the harbingers of those to whom the Bible was first given, and that they prepare the way for the conversion of the Jews.

The plan recently formulated for the union of the Congregational Church in Japan with Presbyterian and Methodist churches was formally endorsed at the recent Congregational meeting in session at New Bedford, Mass. Missionaries of the Congregational Church are now at work in Japan, China, India, Turkey, Spain, Mexico, Micronesia, Africa, Bulgaria, Austria, and Hawaii. Missionaries of the Presbyterian Church are in Japan, Mexico, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Kansas and Nebraska. It has been suggested that a general representative council may thus be constituted for proposed union.

WAIFS OF MANY NATIONS AT OUR CHILDREN'S HOM

THIS summer, the number of visitors at our Children's Home at Mont-Lawn has far exceeded that of any previous season. It is a pleasant picture to these occasional guests, to see the merry groups of children dotting the lawns and engaging in a great variety of juvenile amusements, which are instantly suspended when the visitors come into view. Then, with a unanimous movement, the waifs sweep down to the front of the big lawn, and lining up beside the picturesque cottage at the entrance gateway, they give vociferous welcome to the stranger to beautiful Mont-Lawn. Such a strength of lung! Such a wild flutter of handkerchiefs! Such a nodding and tossing of frowsy heads, with eyes all dancing with excitement! No wonder the visitors smile and feel almost tempted to join in the ovation. There is a wholesome heartiness in the welcome that breaks down all barriers of reserve and makes the visitor feel that Mont-Lawn is not an institution but a real Home.

Mont-Lawn this year has presented as wide a range of races and nationalities among the children it has sheltered, as could well be imagined. Besides native American boys and girls, there have been Germans, French, Mexican, British, Polish, Swiss, Italian, Spanish, Finnish, West Indian, and many others. It is interesting to watch those who have never been in the country before. All is new and beautiful to them.

Eddie was known as the little "blue" boy, not blue by nature, but he was born with abnormal heart-action, which caused such deeply colored lips, face and hands, that strangers seeing him would exclaim, "Ah, there's a boy who has been in the blackberry patch." Eddie came to Mont-Lawn early in the season, and on account of his very frail physical condition was permitted to remain several weeks beyond the time limit. He never could run about and play as other boys did. His silent, sad little figure became a familiar sight about the grounds, as he sat quietly watching the other boys at their play or reading some book. A new Testament had been given him, and his expression, as he repeated a verse of Scripture which he had committed to memory, will not soon be forgotten. Eddie always looked happy, and when spoken to his face would light up like one who has a deep well of joy in his heart. The time came for him to return to his home. The night before he left, his teacher said to him, "Are y a Christian, Eddie?" "Yes." "Wh did you become a Christian?" "To-d in chapel." "Who was speaking then "No one, they were praying." The wishing to know if he really und stood what he was talking abo the teacher said, "What did y say to God?" And with qui breath and shy manner he repli "I told him he would keep r heart and maybe some day I wou see him." And looking into h pathetic little face, she thoug "Yes, dear child, you will see hi 'For of such is the kingdom heaven.'"

HOUSEMOTHER COLLINS (x) AND HER STAFF OF WORKERS AT MONT-LAWN

Among the little visitors Mont-Lawn recently were fo little Cuban boys, who speak English, but to whom all the bea ties and delights of our Children Home were a revelation. The are War Orphans, who have know little comfort and less pleasur and their exclamations of wond and delight were good to hear.

Every contribution of $3 to ou Fresh-Air work secures for a litt tenement boy or girl a ten day health-giving outing. It is hope that those of our readers wh have not already done so, will r member the little waifs, and sen in their mite towards this philan thropic work. Do not let the sun mer pass without helping some li tle white-faced waif to an outin thus making at least one child-heart glad

All contributions in aid of the wor should be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HER ALD, 92 Bible House, N. Y. Gifts c clothing should be sent to the Matron Mont-Lawn, Nyack, N. Y.

A FAMOUS MISSIONARY DEAD

Miss S. F. Gardner, of Calcutta, After Twenty-four Years' Service, Called to Her Reward

THE sad news comes from the Catskills, N. Y., that Miss Sarah F. Gardner, the famous missionary and helpful friend of the women of India, has ended her beneficent earthly work. A brief telegram from her friend and colleague, Miss Edith May, announces that she died peacefully on August 27. About three months ago Miss Gardner was in the office of this journal, looking bright and well, and though admitting that she felt somewhat fatigued and run down, and acknowledging that her many years of labor in Calcutta had depleted her constitution, she was confidently expecting to return to her beloved sphere of labor early this month. She made light of her ailments, and felt sure that a few weeks in the Catskills would completely restore her exhausted vitality. There, surrounded with loving attention, and medical skill, she passed her last weeks on earth. She did not gain strength so rapidly as she expected, but still hoping to return, she packed her trunks and sent them to New York ready for embarkation, but a relapse came, and she learned that not more service, but eternal reward, was the portion appointed for her by her adored Lord.

It is difficult to realize that one so full of energy and enthusiasm as Miss Gardner was when she visited us in May last is really no longer numbered with the living. She made this office one of her first places of call on her arrival in her native land, that she might, as she said, congratulate THE CHRISTIAN HERALD on the glorious results of the enterprise for the support of the orphan children of India, in which its readers are engaged. Miss Gardner had seen a great deal of that work, as she occupied a supervisory position over schools at Calcutta, Cawnpore and Allahabad, in which fifty-three of our orphans are being educated. "It is impossible to tell you fully," she said, "what bright little girls they are and how well they are turning out. It is one of the most beautiful beneficences I have ever known and one full of promise for the people of India. Your readers are doing a grander work than they know." Miss Gardner readily consented to write an account of the work from her own observation, and her article was published in this journal on June 3.

It is twenty-four years ago this month since Miss Gardner, accepted by the Woman's Union Missionary Society, went out to the work in India. She had, at that time, given evidence of her remarkable fitness for such service. At Dr. John Hall's church, in New York, and in Dr. Thayer's church, at Newport, R. I., she had won all hearts by her devotion and sweet helpfulness. The children in her Sunday School class, and the young women in the churches almost worshiped her. Dr. Phillips Brooks had made her acquaintance, and so impressed was he with her fine personality, that when he heard of her intention to go out to India as a missionary, he recommended his church to undertake her entire support. His suggestion was adopted, and every year since then Trinity Church has sent its check for her expenses.

THE LATE MISS S. F. GARDNER — THE MISSION PREMISES AT CAWNPORE, INDIA

At Cawnpore, where Miss Gardner was first stationed, she began a vigorous and far-reaching work among women and girls. She came in touch with them in their homes, learned the miseries of their lives, and by her gentle sympathy won their hearts. It was in no small measure due to her persistent efforts with the Government that the law was passed raising the age of child-marriage, which has done so much to alleviate the wretchedness of the children of India. Her work at Cawnpore was a decided success and continued nearly seven years. Miss Lilian Deitrich, who is now in charge of it, has ably maintained the methods that Miss Gardner inaugurated, and the efficiency of the institution is now recognized throughout India.

It was a grief to Miss Gardner to leave Cawnpore but her removal to Calcutta opened for her a wider sphere of usefulness. Miss Hook, who had been in charge there, was compelled by ill-health to retire from it and there was no one so well adapted as Miss Gardner to succeed her. There the high culture, the broad scholarship, the knowledge of several European languages, and the grace and dignity of person that Miss Gardner possessed, rendered her an acquisition to the Christian community.

When Miss Doremus, the honored Secretary of the Woman's Union Missionary Society, visited Calcutta in 1901, she found her in the centre of numerous Christian activities, and the adored friend of whites and natives alike. Mr. Banerji, one of the most influential native orators in India, declared to Miss Doremus that God had sent Miss Gardner to India, and told her how she had won the native heart, and how blessed her influence had been. "It was affecting," Miss Doremus says, "to see how the children ran to greet her as soon as she appeared, and how they hung about her chair, and how the teachers depended on her for guidance. Though at the head of so many departments, she never became confused or embarrassed, but with quiet dignity and exquisite tact kept the whole institution running in perfect order."

Not the least part of Miss Gardner's usefulness still abides in the literary works that have been circulated far and wide. She had perfect command of several India dialects, and had translated Stalker's Life of Christ and several other useful works into the vernacular. A book-store became part of the Mission, and was always well-supplied with books and tracts in the native languages, many of which came from her pen. It was a busy and beneficent life full of kindly activity. The loss caused by her death is a heavy one. The Society feels it keenly; but is thankful that in Miss Edith May, Miss Costellow, and others who have been associated with Miss Gardner in her work, they have consecrated laborers who will carry it forward on the lines she so wisely laid down.

THE NARROW GATE

by REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON, D.D.

Author of "In His Steps."

CHAPTER V.—Continued

THE days went slowly by for Douglas while Esther was away. Mr. Edwards insisted on having him at the house most of the time during Mrs. Edwards' absence. Esther wrote brief letters, each one anticipating her bereavement. Then one afternoon Douglas received a telegram as he sat at his desk in the Beacon office.

"Mrs. Harris passed away this morning. Julia Edwards."

Mr. Edwards came in a few moments later with a similar telegram.

"I'm going down to Bergen to the funeral to-morrow. I want you to go with me. I am sure Esther will want to see you," Mr. Edwards said.

A note from Esther the next morning gave a few details relating to her loss, and expressed a wish that Douglas and Mr. Edwards might both be present at the service. So they went on to Bergen, and the whole experience through which Esther was passing, and in which Douglas sympathetically shared, deepened and enriched his affection for her, and their trust in each other. Her calm faith in the future, and her unselfish attitude even in the midst of her loss, gave Douglas a clearer knowledge of her strength, and made him feel more thoughtfully grateful for the gift of such a life to share his lot.

Esther remained with her father for a few weeks until a widowed sister should come to keep house for him. Douglas returned the next day to his work, and at once found himself confronting a new difficulty, which Quits had hinted at, but which Douglas had never seriously considered, because he did not think it could be within the range of possibility. Almost the first words Quits spoke to Douglas the day after his return from the funeral were concerning paper for that week's edition.

"That order you sent in to Clifton hasn't been filled yet, Mr. Douglas. If we don't get some paper this afternoon we can't go to press."

"Why! Do you mean to say we are out of paper?" Douglas asked incredulously.

"You can see for yourself, Mr. Douglas," Quits answered.

Douglas went over to the shelf where the paper was kept, and saw at once that the supply was very low. He realized that he had recently been absorbed by the experience which Esther was having, and he had been so certain that the order sent in to Clinton would be met on time that he had not given the matter any more thought.

He came back to where Quits was standing.

"What's the matter with the Clinton people?"

"I 'phoned over while you were at Bergen, and they said they were having trouble to get their orders from the eastern mills, but they expected to get us some by the first of this week. If it doesn't come this afternoon it will be too late."

Douglas went right out and telephoned to Clinton from Mr. Edwards' store. A telephone from the Beacon office was as yet a necessary luxury beyond the reach of the young editor.

The firm in Clinton answered with regret that it was impossible for them to fill their order. There had been trouble in the eastern mills, and it had been impossible for them to secure enough paper for their customers. They were very sorry, but they could not fulfil their contract, and did not know when the paper would be forthcoming.

Mr. Edwards was busy and Douglas did not trouble him with the matter, but at once went back to the office to consult with Quits. Under the inspiration of his new life in Christ Jesus, Quits had developed with remarkable rapidity into a strong, healthful, earnest soul, for whom Douglas thanked God every day of his life.

"What can we do?" Douglas asked, while Quits gravely continued to set type just as if the office were filled to the ceiling with paper.

"Might try the Sentinel," Quits suggested.

Douglas was silent. He had thought of that himself on the way back from Mr. Edwards, but he naturally shrank from going to his rival to ask a favor. Quits seemed to understand his hesitation.

"I worked on the Register, at Bergen, once; and it was fighting the Index all the time, and the two editors once came to blows on the street. But I remember two times, when our press broke down, the Index loaned us theirs, as a favor. Of course we paid a good price, but they didn't refuse to let us have it; and we did the same for them, once. It was simply a case of exchange, and didn't mean any real friendliness. The editor of the Register called the editor of the Index a mugwump, and several other names, in the edition printed on the Index's press, and so it was not a case of kiss and make up; just simply newspaper courtesy."

George was listening.

"I'd sooner get out the Beacon on tin shingles, than ask the Sentinel for anything," George remarked. "Only last week they called Mr. Douglas a college journalist. Any paper that uses the language the Sentinel uses, ought to have a tin can tied to its tail and turned loose in an alley."

"But we must have some paper if we go to press," Douglas said, seriously. Then, after a moment he added, "I'll go over to the Sentinel and see if they will help us."

George shrugged his small shoulders but did not say anything. Quits smiled in his serious fashion.

"We are commanded to love our enemies," he said, not as if speaking to Douglas, but as if talking to himself.

"Do you do that, Quits?"

"I find it difficult Mr. Douglas, 'cause I'm my own worst enemy," Quits answered slowly.

Douglas went out with an air of decision, as if he feared to argue the matter. The Mayor's organ had, from the start, fought the Beacon with every newspaper weapon known to the profession. It had lampooned and caricatured the editor; had derided his ideals; flung ironclad brands at his Sunday School politics, and in every issue had used invective, sarcasm, and ridicule against Douglas. To all this personal attack, Douglas had never once replied by so much as recognizing the existence of the Sentinel. This course on his part had enraged Bartlett tremendously. If Douglas had replied with taunt for taunt, the Mayor would have been delighted. To meet with absolute silence on the part of the Beacon, was simply maddening to the Sentinel.

It can be easily understood, therefore, that Douglas naturally hesitated when he thought of asking Bartlett for a favor, even though he was prepared to pay for it a market price. When he entered the Sentinel office and inquired for the editor, Douglas nerved himself for a disagreeable interview.

The Mayor was in, and as Douglas entered he looked up and said, to Douglas' surprise, in a cordial tone, "Ah! Mr. Douglas! Take a seat. What can I do for you?"

Douglas was taken back. It struck him the Mayor was too cordial. But in a few words he made known his errand.

"Of course, I'll pay spot cash for whatever paper you can spare. I'm caught in rather an embarrassing position, and shall be glad to return the favor if you are ever in a tight place." He spoke in a business tone, but he could not avoid the glance out of the Mayor's eye that spoke a silent triumph.

The Mayor bowed his eyes a moment as if thinking. Then he went to the door and called out to Coleman, who was at the case nearby.

Coleman came into the office. He grinned at Douglas and carelessly returned his greeting.

"Coleman, have we any extra supply of paper? Mr. Douglas here wants to borrow some for the Beacon."

"I don't want to borrow, I want to buy," Douglas interrupted, a little sniffy.

Coleman shook his head slowly. "We haven't any to spare. Our orders from Clinton are behind. We have just enough for the Sentinel this week."

"You hear that, Mr. Douglas," the Mayor said gravely. "Sorry we can't accommodate you. It would hardly do for us to give you the Sentinel paper. We could hardly make our subscribers understand our apology." The Mayor spoke with a quiet satisfaction that made Douglas mad inwardly. Outwardly, he simply said, "Out of the question. Good day, sir."

"Call again," exclaimed the Mayor with a smile.

Douglas did not answer. As he passed out, he noted in the press-room two type-setting machines.

Coleman noted his glance at the machines.

"We've just got 'em in," he volunteered to Douglas. "The Sentinel is getting a big country support. Our list is growing pretty fast. I suppose the Beacon is doing a land-office business."

Douglas did not trust himself to reply. As he went out and crossed over the alley that ran across the street by the rear of the Sentinel office, the sight of an express wagon in the alley backed up to the rear door of the press-room seemed to start a suggestion that he acted on when getting back to the Beacon office. The little room, with its cheap furniture, its second-hand press, and its general air of old-fashioned equipment, smote him with a sense of defeat which he bravely tried to beat off.

In a few words he related to Quits the result of his visit to the Sentinel office.

"There's something about the paper order from Clinton that I want to look into," he said to Quits, who never stopped in his work. "I'll be back again soon."

He went out again, this time down to the railroad depot. The station agent nodded good-naturedly at him as he walked into the baggage-room.

"Nothing for me from Clinton yet, Mr. Rowell? I've been expecting some paper from Rice & Co."

Rowell shook his head. "Nothing for you. Might come up on the 4.5."

Douglas walked out of the room, and the agent followed, throwing a box down on a truck and wheeling the truck up to the end of the platform. Douglas walked along by him. Near the edge of the platform, on the side facing the street, were a number of packages marked for "THE SENTINEL, COLBY."

"If anything comes from Clinton, you will let me know at once, won't you Mr. Rowell?"

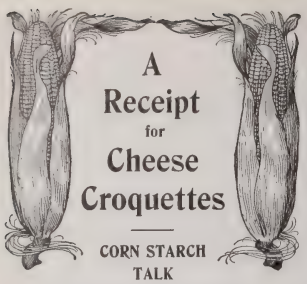
"Yes, certainly," said Rowell, who like all the working men in Colby had a great liking for Douglas. "I don't know why your paper doesn't come. The Sentinel has been getting their paper right along. There's one lot there. And they took up a load day before yesterday, too."

Douglas looked at the packages on the platform, and did some hard thinking. It was evident that the Mayor and Coleman had done some lying. It was also evident that in some way the firm in Clinton had

CONTINUED ON PAGE 159

"SORRY WE CAN'T ACCOMMODATE YOU," SAID THE MAYOR

Copyright, 1903, by Charles M. Sheldon.



A Receipt for Cheese Croquettes

CORN STARCH TALK

By MRS. HELEN ARMSTRONG.

The use of cheese in various forms is becoming more frequent every year and it is well that it should be so as cheese furnishes proteid in a high degree. A mild cream cheese, cooked only enough to be melted, is easily taken care of by the average stomach, and greatly to be preferred to the raw article. Cheese by itself is too concentrated and needs starchy food with it to make a perfect combination. The ideal form of starch is obtained in Kingsford's Oswego Corn Starch, a product which has stood the test of years and is considered the standard of excellence. By combining this with cheese we may prepare many wholesome and delicious dishes. One of the daintiest perhaps, is in the form of a croquette, and this may be served either as an entree, with broiled tomatoes, or a tomato sauce, or as an accompaniment to a salad.

CHEESE CROQUETTES.

Make a cream sauce with two tablespoons of butter, three level tablespoons of Kingsford's Oswego Corn Starch and a cup of milk. Beat into this the yolk of an egg and season highly with paprika and a little salt. Add two tablespoons of grated cheese, and when melted remove from fire and stir in gently one and one-half cups of mild cheese cut in cubes. Cool the mixture thoroughly, shape into squares or diamonds and bread them as any croquettes. Fry in hot fat, drain well on soft paper and serve in a nest of parsley or lettuce.

(CORN STARCH TALKS TO BE CONTINUED.)

How Our Famine Flotilla Saved Kwang-Si

Continued from Page 751

will have been added to the list of the famine victims though dying amidst plenty.

"Any one familiar with village life in China knows how the pigs, chickens and ducks fairly swarm. Now as one passes through the villages, now and then a pig wearily plods across the path in a lonesome sort of way, and the grunt so characteristic of the porker is not heard. Ducks one sees none. And chickens are so few that the egg-eating foreigner has a hard time to get his favorite food at any price. This is only another indication that everything salable has been sold to buy food.

"One of the results of this famine, which will be felt in years to come, is the present numerous disparity in the number of males and females in the rising generation. Valuing the boy above the girl, as the Chinese do, the sale of female children has far exceeded that of males. In our relief work I think it is not at all beyond the truth to say, that for one young girl that applies for relief there are twenty small boys.

In a subsequent report, Rev. Mr. Shumaker, says:

"I beg to submit the following report on famine-relief work in and about Tung-Tsun, Kwai-Un, Kwang-Si.

"Having completed the work at Muk-Kah and Kiu-Hu I reported to Mr. Fletcher at Kwai Un City. He immediately placed at my disposal all the rice in his custody, being 47,800 lbs. This food supply we immediately transported to the market town of Tung-Tsun. The gentry received us cordially and provided a good place for storing the rice, and also laborers. In company with one of the gentry I immediately began to canvass the district. Our plan was to enter a town, at once seek out a leading man, inquire of him whether help was needed and if so by whom. We then visited the people in their homes and issued orders for rice in proportion to the need. Those helped most liberally have been farmers who have had no means to buy seed grain, hence have no harvest, and women who have no one to support them.

"The local gentry have shown me every kindness, and facilitated the work I had to do in their community in every way possible. In addition to one of their number as companion they have supplied me with a house and a guard of two soldiers (the country not being wholly freely from robbers). The district Magistrate has, as hitherto, been deeply interested in the work and has shown me every courtesy. H. K. SHUMAKER."

How the Warship Towed the Relief Flotilla

Commander Anderson, of the U. S. S. Callao, writes to the Consul-General from Hong Kong, June 28, as follows:

"I forward herewith a letter from Midshipman Sterling, in regard to the conveying of the American Relief Expedition from Canton to Sam Shui. The launches furnished were no more powerful than those that went with the previous expedition. Three of the launches were utterly useless for towing, so they were sent back to Canton, and the lighters left at Sam Shui. It was utterly useless for the launches, unassisted, to attempt to tow against the very swift current of the West River, which, as the river was high, ran from five to six knots in places; I took the entire tow behind the Callao, and by steaming day and night reached Wuchow on the morning of the 25th.

"I was informed by the missionaries that there was immediate need of grain in parts of the famine districts to keep the inhabitants from starving to death; that a delay of two or three days meant the death of thousands and the utter loss of all the previous work. It is true that on the north side of the river the rice crops have begun to yield, but on the south side they have not matured, and would not for from ten days to two weeks, and the poverty-stricken inhabitants had no money at all to buy rice at any price. Besides this there is but little rice planted on the south side, in some districts, as the people were too poor to get the seed, and too sick and weak to cultivate the ground. For these reasons, I am informed that the grain you sent can be disposed of to great advantage.

"I was also informed that the Governor stated that he would furnish no more launches to take rice above Wuchow, so I advised the hiring of a launch to take one lighter of rice up to relieve the most urgent needs. This was done, and the tow left about noon of the 26th, with Dr. Todd on board."

Midshipman Sterling's letter describes the voyage which has already been outlined in the missionaries' reports.

Later despatches may shortly be expected, in which the closing phases of the relief work will be duly reported.

Christian Testimony

WHY AND HOW THE CHRISTIAN . . * SHOULD BEAR WITNESS FOR CHRIST

GREAT changes must have taken place in the Disciples between the time of our Lord's arrest, when they all forsook him and fled, and the time when they were brought before the Council charged with preaching in the streets. Their fear and cowardice had disappeared, and their testimony was so bold as to be almost defiance. How can the change be explained? The record gives no clue to the cause except that scene in the upper room when the Holy Spirit descended upon them. This fact is significant. When we wish that we could have known Christ in the flesh, when we think how much we should have loved him, and what a privilege it would have been to follow him and hear his words, we are apt to forget that even his personal influence did not work the change in his disciples that was worked by the Holy Spirit that is given to us as to them.

In these days no such ordeal as that of the disciples comes to us, though even in our own time, in China and Armenia confession of Christ has involved death, but there are circumstances, even in Christian lands, when courage is needed to make an open confession. In fashionable society, in companies of scoffers, in a factory, or on board ship among irreligious companions, and in other situations, the person who avows himself a Christian needs an undaunted spirit to bear the taunts and jeers that will be hurled at him.

Yet confession of Christ is a duty that must not be neglected. Christ expects and requires it. It is also a duty to our fellow-men. There is no other means so effective in attracting them to Christ. It is due to them as well as to Christ that we declare ourselves his followers. Better than argument, than pleading, than eloquence, is the avowal that we have proved by experience the power of the Gospel. That testimony cannot be gainsaid. The man who can say, "My disposition, my whole mind and conduct have been changed by my faith in Christ, is a living argument of the strongest kind for the Gospel. People are impressed by it more than by theorizing. Like the man recovered from a critical disease through the skill of a certain doctor, or the taking of a certain medicine, the Christian can speak with personal authority when he pleads with sinners to come to Christ. If to the testimony of the tongue is added the testimony of a Christ-like life, then indeed, the witness is one of mighty power.

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society and Baptist Young People's Union for September 20. Acts 5: 27-32.

Child Redemption in Africa

Rev. E. H. Richards writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD that the following sums have already been paid toward the redemption and education of native children in the East Central African Mission: Mrs. Cornelia E. Tremble, $90; Leonard Hillis, $45; Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Place, $15; Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Bunten, $7.50; Louis B. Mellon, $14; Richard Cochran, $30; S. H. Smith, $15; Mrs. B. H. Edmonds, $15; B. Warren, $15; Mrs. Mary A. Tear, $7.50; Mrs. Divina Brownlow, $5; G. L. Harrington, $15.

Other sums have been promised, but not yet paid in. Nearly all those above are the first instalment of similar sums to be paid annually for five years.

The New Testament in the Sheetswa language is now all in type. This is its first translation into that language, which is spoken by some three millions of people in Portuguese East Africa. The work, which was completed this week, has occupied much of Dr. Richards' time for the last four years.

Her Sunday Sermon

I am often deprived of the privilege of going to church, but find great spiritual benefit in reading the sermons in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I pass my paper on to four other families, who cannot afford to take it. We all appreciate and enjoy the beautiful Art Gallery that comes with the paper.

Goshen, Ind. MRS. S. T. D. MATHEWS.

ZOBO
CORNETTO
The Musical Wonder
Solid metal (brass finish)
Sample sent prepaid for 25c.
You Can Play it on Sight Without Being Taught
Entertains Everybody Everywhere
Free Zobo Entertainments for Home, Church and Sunday School sent on receipt of name and address.
Strauss Mfg. Co., 138 W. 14th St., Dept. 19, New York

GET YOUR GLASSES AT WHOLESALE
Examine your own eyes without an oculist, send for our "OCULARSCOPE," the latest invention of the 20th century. SENT FREE, with our beautiful illustrated catalogue of spectacles and eyeglasses. MAIL ORDER ONLY. Send today.
GRAND RAPIDS WHOLESALE OPTICIANS, Dept. G, 400-401 Houseman Bldg., Grand Rapids, Mich.

I Print My Own Cards
Circulars, Newspaper, Press $5. Larger size, $18. Money saver. Big profits printing for others. Type-setting easy, rules sent. Write for catalog, presses, type, paper, &c., to factory.
THE PRESS CO., Meriden, Conn.

55 Cents Cheaper
WHEN MADE WITH
Knox's Gelatine
It's extravagance to pay 80 cents fo eight 10-cent Sweetened and Flavore Packages of Gelatine to make a gallo of Jelly, when two packages of Knox' Gelatine, total cost 25 cents, make gallon of decidedly better dessert. C course you wouldn't do it if you actu ally realized how expensive it is. Be sides, only KNOX'S is made fro absolutely pure calves' stock. Alway ready to serve in one hour. Enoug for ten large portions cost only 15 cents
Free Pint Sample and Instructiv Cook Book fo
4 cents in stamps to cover packing and postage
One 15-cent package make ½ gallon dessert. 2 for 2 cents. Include grocer' name. Money refunded i unsatisfactory.
CHAS. B. KNOX
55 Knox Av., Johnstown, N.Y

$1.00 Worth of Music for 10 cents
IF there is a piano in your home, we will send you, without charge, four splendid musical compositions, two vocal and two instrumental. Three of these selections are copyrighted and cannot be bought in any music store for less than $1.00. With them we will send four portraits of great composer and four large reproductions of famous pain ings of musical subjects.
Why We Make This Offer
We make this offer to reliable men an women to enable us to send information re garding our Library of the World's Bes Music, which is absolutely the best collectio of vocal and instrumental music ever pub lished. It contains more music, more illus trations, and more biographies of composer than any other. It is for general home use an enjoyment, as well as for students. Send you name and address, and ten cents in stamps t pay for postage and wrapping. Mention THE CHRISTIAN HERALD when writing.
THE UNIVERSITY SOCIETY (Dept. D
78 Fifth Avenue, New York.

$5.00
The Coffman Typewriter
Simple and accurate in construction. Durable but light and portable. Made of cold rolled steel—full nickel. In short, A PRACTICAL TYPEWRITER sent on receipt of $5.00, guaranteed for a year. Write for detailed description.
We want agents everywhere—Write for our proposition to agents.
Coffman Mfg. Co., 540 Spruce St., St. Louis

PIANO
Do You Want a Genuine Bargain
Hundreds of Upright Piano returned from renting to b disposed of at once. They include Steinways, Knabes, Fischers Sterlings and other well known makes. Many cannot be dis tinguished from new yet all are offered a a great discount.
FROM Upright as low as $100. Also beau tiful New Up rights at $125, $135. $150 and $165. A fine instrument at $290, fully equal to many $400 pianos. Monthly payments accepted. Freight only about $5. Write for list and particulars. You make a great saving Pianos warranted as represented. Illustrated Piano Book Free
LYON & HEALY
38 Adams St., CHICAGO.
World's largest music house; sells Everything known in Mu

BIBLE STUDY BY MAIL
BIBLE STUDY COURS
At home by mail. This book "Hom Bible Study" free if you enroll no Terms easy. For free catalog write C. J. BURTON, President Iow Christian College, Oskaloosa, Iowa

NEW FALL SUITS
$8 to $40.
Everything Made to Order—Nothing Ready-made.

120 Original Paris and New York Styles.
400 fashionable foreign and domestic materials.

Make your selection from our new Fall Catalogue and samples sent FREE, and we will fill your order in one week. If we do not give satisfaction, we will refund your money.

There are great changes in styles and fabrics this season. The lady who would be fashionably gowned will certainly need a new suit or cloak.

If you wish something decidedly new and entirely different from ready-made suits which are seen everywhere we can be of service to you. We employ only skilled cutters and tailors, and our garments are fashionably cut and made. There is character to every garment—an air that distinguishes the wearer at once.

Our Catalogue illustrates and describes Tailored Suits from $8 to $40; Church and Visiting Costumes, $12 to $40; Skirts, $4 to $20; Jackets, $10 to $35.

Our improved measurement diagram insures perfect-fitting garments. 15 years experience has resulted in our present faultless system. We can save you the storekeeper's profit of from $5 to $20 on every garment.

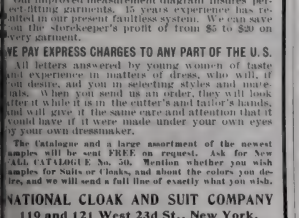
WE PAY EXPRESS CHARGES TO ANY PART OF THE U. S.

All letters answered by young women of taste and experience in matters of dress, who will, if you desire, aid you in selecting styles and materials. When you send us an order, they will look after it while it is in the cutter's and tailor's hands, and will give it the same care and attention that it would have if it were made under your own eyes by your own dressmaker.

The Catalogue and a large assortment of the newest samples will be sent FREE on request. Ask for New CATALOGUE No. 50. Mention whether you wish samples for Suits or Cloaks, and about the colors you desire, and we will send a full line of exactly what you wish.

NATIONAL CLOAK AND SUIT COMPANY
119 and 121 West 23d St., New York.

Send Only 25c



$1.95
Buys this $5 Pattern Hat

Write to us at once enclosing 25c and we will ship to your nearest express office, express paid, this rich Jet Hat.

Hand made, of materials imported direct from Paris, and bought by our own foreign buyer especially for this hat. If you find the hat richer, more stylish and better than you can buy of your home milliner at from $4.00 to $5.00, pay the express agent $1.95 and wear a hat ordered from one of the latest imported models, that will win the admiration of all your friends. This beautiful pattern hat is strictly hand-made over buckram frame. The shape is the new effect, one of the most stunning ever shown, and suitable to wear for all occasions.

The underlying fabric of this swell jet hat is made of the finest quality imported black mohair felt. The crown is completely covered with an elegant imported jet crown, made of small, bright jet spangles woven into an artistic design. A novel, wide, pure silk Louisienne silk scarf, fringed at the ends, forms the drape around the rim and ends at the back with two bows and long, full streamers. This is further ornamented with a band of imported jet made of bright jet spangles. On left side of the crown are placed two long, genuine, black ostrich feathers, made of long, hard, glossy fibres, finished off at the end with large loop bows of velvet, extending down over the back.

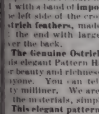
The Genuine Ostrich Feathers and Imported Jet Crown on this elegant Pattern Hat make a combination of material that for beauty and richness has never been equaled for the price by anyone. You can tell at once that it comes from an artistic milliner. We are selling you this hat at barely the cost of the materials, simply to increase our list of customers.

The elegant pattern hat comes in black only, but you can order with any color of silk or imported mohair felt you wish. The Jet Crown and genuine Ostrich Feathers in all cases will be black. In sending to us, remember you are dealing with the largest retail millinery mail-order house in the world.

Send 5c in stamps for finest millinery art catalogue ever issued. It shows you how you can buy hats from the very newest styles for less than half of what you would ordinarily pay, so contains our great special offering in Skirts and Furs.

TODD, SMITH & CO.
31 to 35 Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

LOCKE ADDER



ONLY $5.00
ADDS SUBTRACTS MULTIPLIES DIVIDES
CAPACITY, 999,999,999
C. E. LOCKE MFG. CO.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SONGS OF PRAISE
Best of the Price & Songs Suit all the People.
25 cents per copy. 270 songs, new and familiar.
BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

A Beautiful Golden Wedding

MR. and Mrs. Charles Alfred Howell, of Bridgehampton, Long Island, who are among the oldest readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, celebrated recently the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage. It was an occasion of unique interest, and the rejoicing with the still stalwart husband and his gentle wife was shared by children, grandchildren and friends, including the venerable clergyman who officiated at the wedding, July 30, 1853. The house at Flatbush, Long Island, was lavishly decorated with yellow roses, golden wheat and a profusion of palms. On a dais covered with a creamy cloth, and placed against a background of ripened wheat, yellow roses, wreaths of golden laurel and smilax, Mr. and Mrs. Howell were seated, the latter being too feeble to stand in receiving her guests. Behind them were the dates 1853–1903, and the monogram S. E. T. C. A. H. in gleaming golden device. The Rev. Geo. Taylor, pastor in 1853 of the Bridgehampton Methodist Church, of which Mr. and Mrs. Howell have been members fifty years, offered prayer. Mr. Taylor is in his eighty-sixth year. It seemed peculiarly fitting that his voice should pronounce a benediction on the throng of descendants gathered to honor the aged bride and groom.

MR. AND MRS. CHARLES A. HOWELL

Mr. Howell is an old inhabitant of the eastern end of Long Island, one of the few surviving old whalers who once darted wide and wave on stormy seas. During his whaling career, he made seven trips around the world. Born seventy-eight years ago at Centre Moriches, Long Island, the old seafaring man carries lightly the burden of his age. Mrs. Howell is a member of another well-known Long Island family. She is a daughter of Adamson Topping, whose ancestors came from England two centuries ago, settling in Southampton, a few miles only from Mrs. Howell's life-long home.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Howell are Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Wright, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. Howell, and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. Adams. Many beautiful gifts were bestowed on the pair, and the day will not soon be forgotten by those who were present.

THE NARROW GATE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 754

good reason for violating their contract with the Beacon.

He went back to the office and told Quits what Rowell said. Quits listened gravely.

"Looks like a corner on paper, doesn't it, Mr. Douglas?"

"Looks like it. But do we go to press just the same, Quits?"

"We do if you say so, Mr. Douglas," replied Quits, with cheerful faith in his employer's resources.

"Such a little matter as having no paper ought not to get in the way," said George, who was cleaning the rollers. "It's getting out of ink that's serious."

"If we ever do, we can get enough off of you by giving you a bath," said Quits soberly.

"That's all right," said George grinning. "Sooner than let that Coleman get the start of the Beacon I'd get out a special edition on meat-market paper."

Douglas stared at the boy.

"Why not?" he said to himself.

Quits looked doubtful, but did not say anything nor stop in his work.

"Wait a minute. Let me think it out," Douglas said, as he went over to his desk.

He sat there a few minutes and then got up suddenly, and went out and up to Mr. Edwards' store.

In a few words he made clear the situation.

Mr. Edwards listened attentively.

"Do you know Rice and Co.?"

"No, not very well. They have always dealt promptly and honestly with me heretofore."

"But within the last month the Mayor has become the heaviest shareholder in the firm. That may account for the fact that the Sentinel can get paper when there isn't any for the Beacon."

"Do you mean to say," asked Douglas in disgust, "that even Bartlett would descend to such a low trick in business?"

"I am afraid he would, and he has. You don't know the Mayor, my son. He will stoop to anything short of crime to gain his end. You do not realize the fight he is making on you. He would like to crush you out of existence. He stands for the lowest, narrowest, most primitive type of political and commercial success. Such men do not work on any moral or ethical basis. They are living in the stone age of man, and their motto is, 'The strongest wins.'"

"Knowing these facts does not help me to paper," Douglas said, with a faint smile. "I don't like to be always troubling you with my little woes, but I wondered if you had any considerable quantity of wrapping paper in the store that I might use. I don't like to be beat out of an edition altogether."

"Come out here and let's see what there is," Edwards took Douglas' arm and went out into the store with him. Inquiry from the head clerk, disclosed the fact that there was a good stock of ordinary brown wrapping paper on hand.

"You're welcome to all of it," said Edwards, "if you need it. Until I can get more my customers can carry their things home in their pockets. It'll be a little embarrassing on 'em when they buy a dollars' worth of granulated sugar or a peck of beans, but they'll have to do it all the same."

Douglas remonstrated, but before he could say two sentences, Mr. Edwards had Banks carrying the paper out, and down to the Beacon office.

When it came in, Quits looked at it and shook his head, as he fingered the sheets critically.

"Don't believe we can make it go, Mr. Douglas. It's too coarse, and besides, it isn't wide enough for the forms."

"It will have to go," Douglas spoke doggedly. "There's nothing else. Dampen it a little and ink up well. We'll let our subscribers see something, even if it is a curiosity."

"It's a curiosity all right," George muttered late that afternoon as that astonishing edition of the Beacon began to come off the press. Quits had brought to bear on the problem all the technical skill he possessed after many years' experience in a printing office. But the paper happened to be an unusually poor quality even of wrapping paper. It was rough, and of various degrees of weight. The type did not bite, and even the editorial that Douglas wrote apologizing for the appearance of the Beacon was almost entirely illegible. To add to the general weird effect of the whole thing, there was so little margin on some of the sheets that in spite of Quits' ingenious devices on the old press, scores of papers showed only a part of a column in width on the outer edges of the page.

TO BE CONTINUED

Cereal Foods

without cream are not appetizing, but good raw cream is not always easy to get. Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Cream is superior to raw cream with a delicious flavor and richness. Use it for general cooking purposes. Borden's Condensed Milk Co., proprietors.

Your Choice IN Spoons

"1847 ROGERS BROS."
Our Catalogue No. 61 is free.
Meriden Britannia Co.

Garland's Garments go everywhere.

THIS WAIST $1.39

This Shirt Waist, No. 1080, mailed free in any address in the U. S. or Canada for $1.39. If you think it worth less than $1.50 return it and money will be refunded.

It is tailor made of all wool Brilliantine, mercerized, cream-white or black; has broad shoulders, French pleated back and clusters of pleats, as illustrated.

MAILED FREE IN UNITED STATES AND CANADA

Garland's
LADIES' CLOTHING STORE
Dept. F ST. LOUIS, MO.

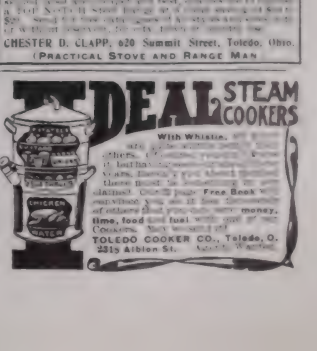
Absolute Range Perfection

Sold for Cash or on Monthly Payments.
$10 to $20 Saved.
Your money refunded after six months' trial if

Clapp's Ideal Steel Range

CHESTER D. CLAPP, 620 Summit Street, Toledo, Ohio.
(PRACTICAL STOVE AND RANGE MAN

IDEAL STEAM COOKERS



With Whistle.

Free Book

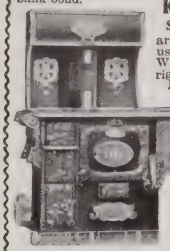
money, time, food and fuel.

TOLEDO COOKER CO., Toledo, O.
2315 Albion St.

All Kalamazoo ranges and cook stoves are equipped with patent oven thermometer. Makes baking sure and easy.

The KALAMAZOO

A better stove or range than you can get from any other source. A saving of from 25% to 40% in price. Prompt shipment from factory to user. Factory prices—no dealers' profits. Freight prepaid by us. 360 days approval test. Guarantee backed by $20,000 bank bond.



KALAMAZOO
Stoves and Ranges
are manufactured by us in our own factory. We know they are all right "clear through." Don't confuse them with cheap mail order goods.

We are the only stove manufacturers in the world selling their entire product direct from their own factory to the user.

There isn't a better stove or range at any price

and by eliminating all dealers' and middlemen's profits we save you easily 25% to 40%. Moreover we give you a 360 Days Approval Test. If your purchase is not satisfactory in every way, return the goods at our expense. We have a complete line of ranges, cook stoves and heaters for fuel of all kinds. All stoves blacked, polished and ready for business.

It will pay you to investigate.

Send for catalog No. 103 and prices, freight prepaid.
THE KALAMAZOO STOVE CO., Manufacturers, Kalamazoo, Michigan.

DIAMONDS ON CREDIT

You may have a Diamond handed to you at your own door, and pay for it in such easy monthly amounts that you will hardly miss the money. You simply make a selection from our illustrated catalogue, then we send the Diamond to you with all express charges prepaid. If you are entirely satisfied you keep the Diamond and pay for it in eight equal monthly payments, otherwise return it at our expense and your money will be refunded immediately. We are one of the oldest (Est. 1858) and by far the largest house in the business, and refer to any bank in America. For instance, ask your local bank how we are rated in the Dun or Bradstreet books of commercial ratings. You will be told that we stand at the top in credit, promptness and reliability, and that our proposition may be accepted without question. Beautiful booklet explaining everything and catalogue, sent free. Write to-day

LOFTIS BROS. & CO. Dept. K 95 92 to 98 State-st
Opposite Marshall Field & Co. Chicago, Ill., U. S. A.

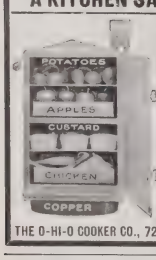
"A KITCHEN SAVINGS BANK"



We can save you the services of a cook or make a good cook out of a poor one. Saves you 50 per cent in fuel, labor and time. Insures well-cooked, easily digested, never spoiled, steaming hot meals, all cooked to perfection by one burning of coal or gas. Cooked by Steam Heat. Use the O-hi-o Steam Cooker With Copper Doors, and the great problem of cooking is solved. $1.00 Cook Book free. 5 cents postage. Prices, $2.50 to $9.50. Handsomely illustrated catalogue free. We want good agents and guarantee them $50 to $40 per week and expenses. Agencies in all cities.

THE O-HI-O COOKER CO., 727 Jefferson St., Toledo, O.

DEAFNESS

The Morley Ear-Drum

is the most recent and most effective invisible device for the relief of DEAFNESS.

It is easily adjusted, comfortable and safe. Send for descriptive booklet.

The Morley Company,
Dept. E,
19 South 16th Street, Philadelphia.

LEARN PROOFREADING

If you possess a fair education, why not utilize it at a genteel and uncrowded profession paying $15 to $25 weekly. Situations always obtainable. We are the original instructors by mail.

HOME CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL PHILADELPHIA

A PLEASURE CLUB TRANSFORMED

HOW THE VANITY FAIR SOCIETY OF MEMPHIS FORSOOK FRIVOLITY FOR WORKS OF CHRISTIAN BENEVOLENCE...

ONE of the best-known charitable organizations in the city of Memphis, Tenn., had its beginning in a very unique way. Ten years ago, twelve society girls, all of them under twenty years of age, formed themselves into an organization which they called "The Vanity Fair Book Club." The leading literature of the day was to circulate among the members. Each one of them was to give an elaborate function during the year, at which expensive souvenirs were to be made a specialty.

BEDTIME IN THE MEMPHIS EPISCOPAL ORPHAN HOME

The real purpose of the club was pleasure. At one of these entertainments, during the second year of the club's existence, the mother of one of the girls chanced in upon them, and let fall a few words which were destined to transform those thoughtless maidens into forceful charity workers, and their pleasure club into a charitable society of eminent worth.

They were told of a worthy orphanage which was in debt to the amount of $750. If $250 could be raised within a certain time, the debt would be cancelled. "Why not help us?" continued the mother. "You would be all the happier for aiding these little orphans."

"We might raise $100 for you," answered one of the girls carelessly. The subject was further discussed, and before the afternoon had worn away, the club had determined upon giving a bazar and dinner for the benefit of the orphanage. Work was commenced at once, with the result that, in a few weeks $650, the proceeds of a bazar and dinner, was cleared for the orphans. The members of the Memphis Merchants' Exchange attended the dinner in a body, as did also the members of the Memphis Cotton Exchange; and at the conclusion of the entertainment, a young society man auctioneered off the remains of the feast.

So encouraged were the girls by their novel experience, that they decided to give an entertainment every year for the benefit of the poor children of Memphis, and that the money they intended to pay out for elaborate souvenirs should be donated to charity. The members of the club approved a system of fines for being late at the meetings, and for keeping books longer than the time allowed. Since its beginning, ten years ago, $15,000 has been raised by the club for the needy children of Memphis.

Besides private charity—for no little waif ever appeals to the members of this society in vain—among the institutions regularly aided financially by The Vanity Fairs, are The Church Home; The Children's Home; The Margaret Chamberlain Kindergarten; The Tennessee Protective Association, and The Day Nursery, which last is the latest charitable enterprise to be started in Memphis.

The twelve original members of the club are all married now, and some have moved to other lands; but the good work goes on, and Memphis has no more enthusiastic charity workers than the present members of The Vanity Fairs—sixteen in all. Mrs. Ceylon Frazer is president, and Mrs. John Austin, Jr., secretary and treasurer. The Society is non-sectarian.

HELEN GRAY.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

E. C. B. H; K. P., N. Y. "Have had a very precious evidence of God's faithfulness of late. The answer came through an utter stranger, a person whose name even was not known."

Eva. "God has answered my prayers many times, and when he did not, it always turned out for my good."

H. M., Ingram, N. J. "I know by personal experience that God answers our prayers when we come to him in the right spirit, and gives us many blessings in answer."

Reader. "I prayed the Lord for a long time to bring a dear one through a very trying ordeal My prayer has just been answered."

Believer, Yonkers, N. Y. "My prayers have been answered numberless times, and my eyes have been opened to see clearly how the promise has been fulfilled. I pray that this may encourage others to have more faith, and trust in prayer."

Young Believer, Springhill, Mont. "God has truly answered my prayers. Hail destroyed many crops, but ours is safe. Many other troubles I took to him, and he has answered them also."

Mrs. M. C. "I have prayed earnestly that my only child might be saved from certain company, and the Lord has answered my prayers."

A. C., Brighton, Colo. "I was in deep trouble and prayed to God and he delivered me. I positively know from personal experiences that God answers."

A. C. Herman, Neb. "We belong to a little country Sunday School, where there were a few earnest Christian workers; but, for the most part, the people were interested in Sunday visiting, baseball, etc. Our Sunday School decreased in numbers, until only four or five attended, and we became greatly discouraged; but we kept persevering and praying for help. Right here, in the hot summer weather it came. Now we have preaching services every Sunday afternoon. It has helped the Sunday School, and more interest is manifested now than for a long time. To the discouraged ones I would say, keep on with your work, and pray without ceasing, and when God answers, it will be in larger measure than you have asked."

Letters acknowledging answers to prayer have also been received from: "Reader from Oregon," Mother, Rochester, N. Y.; M. E. H., Hood River; A. L. E., Meyers, Texas; Mrs. E. H., Canton, Ohio; "R. E.," Thankful Reader, Sioux City Iowa; W., Lake Port, Ark.; A Mother, Tiogo Co., Pa.; H. P. Bestos, Shannon City, Iowa; A Wife, Ill.; A. K. G., Endora, Kans.

A Lovely Present

The premium Speaking Oak is fine, it will make a lovely present for any one. This book will be the means of doing much good.

Charles City, Iowa. MRS. J. W. DICKSON.

"It Has Gladdened Many Hearts"

God bless THE CHRISTIAN HERALD! God bless the first idea that started THE CHRISTIAN HERALD! God bless the improvement in it, and God ever bless the noble work done by it! THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has made more glad hearts than any other paper in the known world. Had I the power, I would build a panegyric in its favor as high as heaven. F. M. SHIELDS.

Coopwood, Miss.

Blizzard Proof

Outside texture so closely woven it resists wind and wear alike. Lined with wool sleeve that defies the cold. Snap fasteners, riveted pockets.

PARKER'S Arctic Jacket

"Arctic" Trade Mark Registered. Better than an overcoat for facing cold and work together. Warm, durable, comfortable. Ask your dealer, or sent postpaid on receipt of $2.35.

JOHN H. PARKER, Dept. K, 25 James St., Malden, Mass.

An aching tooth is a neglected tooth.

RUBIFOAM

is an elegant, agreeable cleaner, easy to use, just the thing for children. Prevents decay, assures a sweet breath, and keeps the teeth and gums in perfect condition.

25c. at Druggists.

For Free Sample Vial, address

E. W. HOYT & CO., - LOWELL, MASS.

Banner Lye

is NOT OLD-STYLE Lye

Our patented safety package is easily opened and permits of as much of the contents—which are colorless and odorless—being used at a time as is desired.

Banner Lye is safe to have and is satisfactory and should be in constant use in your household as a cleanser and disinfectant. Use it in your

Toilets Sinks
Drains Slop-jars

and, in fact, any place where dirt is likely to collect.

Banner Lye will keep all your household appliances sweet and clean, as it does away with the "dirt that you can't see." You physician will tell you this dirt is the most dangerous. Commence at once by using Banner Lye; do not delay until the "dirt that you can see" appears.

"Just as good" will not answer for Banner Lye.

At your grocer, druggist or store for 10c.

Soap-Making No other soap in the world is better or purer than the 10 pounds of pure hard soap you can make with Banner Lye and 5½ pounds of kitchen grease. Takes only ten minutes, without boiling and without large kettles. Makes 20 gallons of pure soft soap.

Every housekeeper should have our book "Uses of Banner Lye." Mailed free.

The Penn Chemical Works, Philadelphia, U.S.A

ANNUITIES AND FIXED INCOMES

If you have $500 or more to invest annually, or $10,000 and upward immediately, let me show you the way to ease and comfort for life. Full particulars can be had concerning the ANNUITIES sold by the

Strongest Financial Institution

in the world. Also, by the same Company, a new

FOUR PER CENT. INCOME BOND,

which runs during the life of the purchaser and twenty years thereafter. Purchased outright (no installment or insurance plan); delivered immediately; bearing interest at once; safe as government bonds.

WM. MILL BUTLER, Investment Specialist,
471 Bullitt Building, Philadelphia.

Dwiggins Good a Lifetime

Wonderful resistance to climatic changes. Retain their rigidity and trimness for years. Doubly galvanized steel wire. Catalog (FREE) shows styles 10 to 50c. a ft.

Dwiggins Wire Fence Co., 12 Dwiggins Ave., Anderson, Ind.

Individual Communion Cups

Send for FREE catalogue and list of 2,000 churches now using our cups.

Sanitary Communion Outfit Co., Dept. 7 Rochester, N.Y.

MELLIN'S FOOD
FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS
TRADE MARK
Sweet sleep comes to the baby who is properly fed with a proper food. Mellin's Food babies sleep well.
A postal request will bring a sample of Mellin's Food right to your home.
MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

WONDERFUL STOVE OFFER.
OUR FREE STOVE CATALOGUE shows a picture of our Newark, Ohio, stove foundry, THE LARGEST STOVE FACTORY IN THE WORLD, where we make every kind of RANGE, COOK AND HEATING STOVES, which we sell direct to users at LESS THAN ONE-HALF the prices charged by others. OUR FREE STOVE CATALOGUE pictures, describes and prices every kind of stove we make, explains our liberal pay after received terms, our 30 days' free trial offer, our 6-0 delivery guarantee, our quality and durability guarantee and also carries with it the most astonishingly LIBERAL OFFER ever heard of. Just to give you a little idea of the wonderful values we are offering we show two popular stoves taken at random from our big assortment as shown in our free Stove Catalogue.
$3.98 buys this handsome NEW 1904 MODEL OAK HEATER. Burns wood or coal and is one of the handsomest oak heaters made; beautiful 20-inch cast iron base, top and front, best sheet steel body, very elaborate nickel plated ornamentations and trimmings, including side rails, bands, top, handsome urn, medallions, checks, drafts, etc. OUR FREE STOVE CATALOGUE shows a very large picture of this and an endless variety of other direct draft and DOUBLE HEATER WOOD AND COAL HEATING STOVES.
$4.85 buys this handsome COOK STOVE. Latest 1904 model, one of the latest and best cook stoves made; 8-inch ghest grade casting, large oven shelf, oven door kicker, nickel medallions and trimmings, heavy covers and centers. Our free Stove Catalogue shows a very large picture of this and an endless variety of other cast iron cook stoves and cast and steel ranges at correspondingly low prices. Our big $11.98 nickel trimmed steel range is the greatest steel range value ever offered. Our $13.95 reservoir nickel trimmed steel cook stove and our big 500-pound reservoir high shelf range, which we sell at $15.95 ARE THE EQUAL OF RANGES THAT SELL ELSEWHERE AT DOUBLE THE PRICE. Our free Stove Catalogue shows large pictures and complete descriptions of all the stoves we make, explains our liberal terms, 30 days' free trial proposition, our guarantees, etc., and carries with it the most liberal stove offer ever named. Don't buy a stove anywhere until you see our free Stove Catalogue. Simply write us a LETTER or on a POSTAL CARD SAY "send me your free Stove Catalogue," AND IT WILL GO TO YOU BY RETURN MAIL, POSTPAID, FREE. Address,
SEARS, ROEBUCK & CO., CHICAGO.

If after examining our catalogue you are not convinced that a Vandergrift Washer
is the best for your use, the fault lies in our advertising and not in the machines. We made seven different styles at varying prices. One of these machines will meet with your requirements.
If you have not seen them, do not fail to send for our new catalogue and price-list free. Take no imitation.
The best is always the cheapest.
The Blackstone Mfg. Co. Dept. 9 Jamestown, N.Y.
Formerly the Vandergrift Mfg. Co.

The "Best" Light is a portable 100 candle power light costing only 2cts. per week. Makes and burns its own gas. Brighter than electricity or acetylene and cheaper than kerosene. No Dirt. No Grease. No Odor. Over 100 styles. Lighted instantly with a match. Every lamp warranted. Agents Wanted Everywhere.
THE "BEST" LIGHT CO.
9-70 E. 5th Street, CANTON, OHIO.

$100. to $300. MONTHLY.
Men and women. Salesmen, Managers and General Agents. Delightful business year round. Hustlers getting rich. Write today for brand-new plan and Special Offer this month. 100 per cent profits. No risk. Goods well advertised. National reputation. Fully guaranteed. Customers delighted. We're an old firm, capital $100,000.00. Catalogue FREE. Any energetic man or woman can get good position, paying big wages.
WORLD MFG. CO.,
81 World Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio.

Founding a Waif's Settlement

The New Departure of the New York Juvenile Asylum in Its Reformatory Work

ONE of the most important sociological steps of recent times is now being taken by the management of the New York Juvenile Asylum. Founded over half a century ago by a number of well known New York philanthropists, including Peter Cooper, it has, during its existence, cared for nearly 40,000 waifs, and made respectable citizens of a great majority of them. Of this number, fully 6,000 have been sent to the West and placed with reputable farmers, there to grow up in a healthy physical, mental and moral state, free from the contaminating influences of their former slum surroundings. A great many have prospered, and are leading citizens in their adopted homes. One of them is now a candidate for governor in a prominent Western State.

The advantages of a life approaching the home condition, therefore need no affirmative argument, and the move now being made is the result of some years of exhaustive investigation and preparation. The best features of other prominent child-saving institutions throughout the world have been adopted in this new scheme. The project consists in a change from their present barrack system to a separate cottage plan, which, when completed, will include at least eighty buildings. The site of this new colony is about thirteen miles above New York City, overlooking the Hudson and near Dobbs Ferry. Two hundred and seventy-seven acres constitute the area, in which varied desirable qualities of the country abound, there being a central elevated plain on which will be located the heart of the community. Here the administration buildings and church will face each other across a plaza containing athletic fields, parade grounds, play grounds and the like. This plain will be flanked on each side by schools and living cottages. Of these cottage homes there will be about sixty; forty for the boys, the balance for girls. No more than twenty boys nor fifteen girls will live under one roof. One of the most salient features will be the individual dining-rooms, each house being a complete home, even to that detail. This will allow freedom of conversation at meals and will do away with the funeral condition that characterizes the average institutional hall. In charge of every cottage there will be a guardian or "house-parent," who will exercise as far as possible the duties of a real parent.

In most cases the cottages will be conducted on the dormitory plan, but in order to promote and reward deserving qualities among the children, several separate room houses will be provided for each sex. These "Honor" cottages will be potent factors in bringing out the better characteristics among the waifs, and the effect will be to draw even the most indifferent children to a sense of something higher. Beyond the cottages will be the industrial buildings, including shops for printing, shoemaking, tailoring, carpentry, painting, sloyd, and in fact for every desirable calling for the artist or artisan. Boys will provide the labor in the aforesaid departments. For the girls, stenography, telegraphy, typewriting, art and household duties, etc., will be provided. The space beyond will be used for agricultural purposes, and will be a weighty factor in helping the food supply problem.

"Echo Hills" is the name chosen for this remarkable village. Many people suppose the New York Juvenile Asylum is a State or city-supported institution, but it is not so. The city provides sufficient funds for a certain percentage of the expenses, but the balance comes from the charitable public. Wise and prudent investments by the directors and careful management have resulted in their being able to commence this new work and carry it well on with funds already on hand, but additional money is necessary in order to carry out the plans to completion. Opportunities will be afforded at Echo Hills to those who desire to aid the work by erecting Memorial Cottages—a very beautiful and increasingly popular form of philanthropy. The present officers and directors include some of New York's foremost citizens, all of whom give gratuitous services. Mr. John Seely Ward, the Treasurer, 1 Broadway, New York, will answer all inquiries and acknowledge contributions.

COMING

SOMEBODY'S coming your way, my friend,
Somebody 'll soon be here,
Just where the road makes a sudden bend,
The sound of his feet I hear.
A stranger, yet with the hand of a king,
He'll take your hand to-day,
Largesse of gift to your life he'll bring,
'Tis Love who is coming your way.

Hark, he is fluting along the path,
And the notes are silver sweet,
Sowing and reaping and aftermath,
The dew, the frost, and the heat,
They ripple all in the rime he flings
A sparkle of shining spray,
And your heart will leap at the word he brings,
'Tis Love who is coming your way.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Guy Holmes
in a small town in Nebraska, earned $77.18 in December, selling
The Saturday Evening Post

IN A DAINTY little booklet, which we will send to any boy free, twenty-five out of more than three thousand bright boys tell in their own way just how they have made a success of selling THE SATURDAY EVENING POST. Pictures of the boys—letters telling how they built up a paying business outside of school hours—interesting stories of real business tact.
Some of these boys are making $10 to $15 a week. You can do the same. NO MONEY REQUIRED TO START. We will furnish ten copies the first week free of charge, to be sold at five cts. a copy. You can then send us the wholesale price for as many as you find you can sell the next week. IF YOU WILL TRY IT WE WILL SEND THE COPIES AND EVERYTHING NECESSARY.
$225 IN EXTRA CASH PRIZES will be distributed NEXT MONTH among boys who sell 5 or more Copies Weekly.
The Curtis Publishing Company
403 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

"Time is the soul of business" and the ELGIN
WATCH
the business man's timekeeper
Every Elgin Watch is fully guaranteed. All jewelers have Elgin Watches. "Timemakers and Timekeepers," an illustrated history of the watch, sent free upon request to ELGIN NATIONAL WATCH CO., ELGIN, ILL.

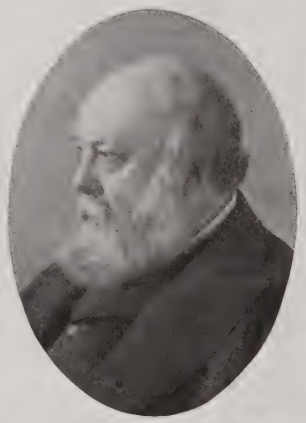
Become a Nurse
No occupation open to women can compare with that of the trained nurse. It is elevating, enjoyable work—graduates earning $15 to $30 a week. We teach this profession by mail.
For attractive booklet giving full details with valuable suggestions, address
CHAUTAUQUA SCHOOL OF NURSING
241 Main Street, Jamestown-on-Chautauqua, N. Y.

$17.50 BUYS TELEPHONE EQUIPMENT COMPLETE FOR 2 MILES
For $17.50 we will supply you with two of our high grade, absolutely complete "RITE" long distance telephones, complete with batteries. These instruments were formerly in use in some of the large central stations and before shipment were built complete, and are absolutely up to date in every respect. Will talk as well and cost you, comparatively, twice as much. The wood work is in good condition. You will also supply with these phones the following: 40 gauge galvanized iron, 40 OAK brackets, 80 porcelain knobs, 50 feet of annunciator wire, two miles of No. 14 galvanized iron wire, or, in other words, sufficient equipment for connecting lines of any two points, making a three-party line, with the proper porcelain knobs, annunciator plates, annunciator wire, and we will make the additional charge of only $2.50 on a 4 party line, the same addition will be required. Full directions will go with each shipment, so that any body can install the line. Write for Catalogue No. 3972.
CHICAGO HOUSE WRECKING CO., West 35th and Iron Sts., CHICAGO.

A GREAT STATESMAN DEAD

THE MARQUIS OF SALISBURY, EX-PREMIER OF GREAT BRITAIN, PASSES AWAY .....

AFTER a political career of fifty years, during which he served in several high offices before attaining the Premiership, Robert Cecil, Marquis of Salisbury, has laid down the burden of life. The end had been expected for some weeks, for it was known that he was suffering from an incurable disease, and that he had lost the desire to live, which is an ominous sign in a septuagenarian, in ill-health. He had lost his wife, whose love and devotion had been his support in many a trying hour, and the blow had gone home. He never ceased to mourn for her, and all the elasticity of temperament which had previously characterized him, disappeared. He aged rapidly, and his interest in public affairs ceased. He resigned his offices and retired from public view, and neither state ceremonies nor Parliamentary debates could draw him away from his home. The Government has offered him a grave in Westminster Abbey, the highest ambition of an Englishman's heart; but he had foreseen the offer, and had left directions that he be buried beside his beloved wife, under the oaks of his ancestral home.



THE LATE MARQUIS OF SALISBURY

Though a scion of one of England's most noble families, the Marquis' career was in its early stages a time of darkness and trial. He was the second son of an eccentric father, who, according to law and custom, would transmit his estates to his eldest son. Besides this, he had the misfortune to quarrel with his father, so that even the slender provision allowed to him as a younger son was curtailed. He had married, and a young family was growing up around him, but his income was very small. It was then that he turned to journalism. The Saturday Review, the Quarterly Review and other publications, welcomed the vigorous, scholarly, trenchant articles he produced, and paid him liberally for them. Thus he managed to live, and having been elected to Parliament unopposed, by a small constituency, he soon made his influence felt.

In 1866 his ability was recognized by the Earl of Derby, who made him Secretary for India. He was one of the most distinguished members of that Cabinet, and his eloquence and strong common sense gave him potent influence in the House of Commons. But the death of his elder brother, and a little later of his father, changed his career. Inheriting the title and estates of his family, he could no longer sit in the Lower House, but must remove to the duller, less influential branch of the Legislature—the House of Lords. It was predicted by many that his career was closed; but its most effective and brilliant period was still to come The war-clouds hung heavy on the Eastern horizon. Russia was at last near the goal of her ambition, and had Constantinople almost within her grasp. Disraeli was at the head of the British Government, and though cordially disliking Salisbury, had firm confidence in his ability. He showed his magnanimity in offering him the crucial office of Foreign Secretary, and Salisbury accepted. Together they went to the Conference of Berlin, and compelled the Muscovite to retire from his prey. From that time forward Salisbury's hold on the confidence of his countrymen was secure. They respected the solid, grim, tenacity of the man, and felt that the interests of the country were safe in his hands.

After the death of Disraeli, the Marquis of Salisbury was unrivalled in the leadership of the Conservative Party. He became Premier, but knowing, as none of his colleagues did so thoroughly, the intricacies of European diplomacy, he was his own Foreign Minister. His tact, his firmness and his patriotism were everywhere recognized, and his power within his party and with the country was unbounded. It had in no degree abated when, last year, unable any longer to serve his country with the energy and efficiency that were his ideal, he handed the reins of power to Mr. Balfour, and retired to Hatfield to close his career in quiet.

* * * * * * * * * * * * * *

The Call of Jeremiah*

THE MESSENGER OF DOOM SUMMONED AND EQUIPPED FOR SERVICE

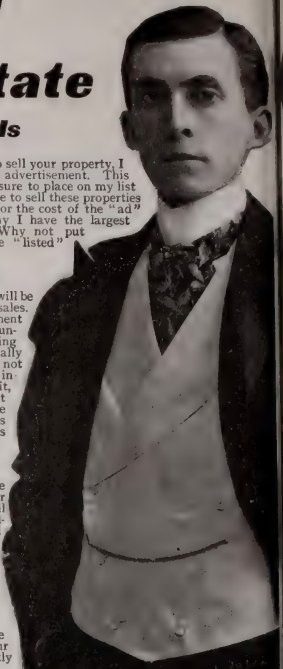
POOR and desolate at this day, and probably little better in the time of Jeremiah's childhood, is the village of Anata, or Anathoth, about five miles from Jerusalem, in which he first saw the light. We should judge from the sermons of which his book is composed, that he was a modest, delicate, thoughtful youth, well-educated in the history of his people, and perceiving, as few of his contemporaries did, the causes which were combining to bring his beloved country to ruin. Though he was the son of a priest and belonging to a family owning land in his native town, he was evidently not reckoned among the aristocracy, nor held in high esteem at the capital. In the retirement of his native village, he appears to have brooded over the sacred writings, among which would be the earlier chapters of Isaiah's prophecies. Manasseh, one of the very worst of the kings of Judah, was on the throne, and Jeremiah would see every time he went to Jerusalem the abominations with which even the Temple was defiled. No wonder that, as he says (20 : 9), his indignation burned in him like a fire. But who was he, that the corrupt priests and the wicked rulers should listen to him? Like Moses at the burning bush, he shrank from the mission to which he was called, but when he did begin to speak, his fitness for it was abundantly proved. Clearly, impressively, affectionately, he uttered his warnings, and not even when his life was threatened would he hold his peace. It is a sad story, and the hopelessness of his task seems to have almost broken his heart.

The lesson of his call is the same as that of others among God's servants who have been chosen to be messengers. When God sends them, he endows them with all the gifts they will need. He does not promise them success, he does not even promise them immunity from suffering. They fulfil their mission when they deliver the message intrusted to them, whether men hear or whether they forbear. It is so to this day. In many a community in our own land saloon-keepers and gamblers have triumphed over the man who has taken his life in his hand by denouncing them, and the battle for righteousness seems to end in defeat. But the end is not yet. God's messengers look to him and not to men for approval, and he will reward them at the last.

*Topic of the Epworth League for Sept. 20. Jer. 1 : 4-10.

I Can Sell Your Real Estate

No Matter Where It Is



IF I did not have the ability and facilities to sell your property, I certainly could not afford to pay for this advertisement. This "ad." (like all my other ads.) is practically sure to place on my list a number of new properties, and I am just as sure to sell these properties and make enough money in commissions to pay for the cost of the "ad" and make a good profit besides. That is why I have the largest real estate business in the world to-day. Why not put your property among the number that will be "listed" and sold as a result of this "ad."?

A Specialist in Quick Sales

I will not only be able to sell it—sometime—but will be able to sell it quickly. I am a specialist in quick sales. I have the most complete and up-to-date equipment the world. I have branch offices throughout the country, and a field force of more than 2,500 men finding buyers. I do not handle any of the side lines usually carried by the ordinary real estate agent. I do not make any money through renting, conveyancing, insurance, etc. I must sell real estate—and lots of it, or go out of business. I can assure you I am not going out of business. On the contrary, I have already sold twice as many properties this year as I did during 1902, and I expect to sell several times as many next year.

Let Me Sell Your Property

It doesn't matter whether you have a farm, a home without any land, or a business; it doesn't matter what it is worth or where it is located. If you will send me a brief description of your property, including your lowest cash price, I will tell you how and why I can quickly convert it into cash, and will give you my complete plan (FREE) and terms for handling it. The information I will give you will be of great value to you even if you should decide not to sell. You had better write now, before you forget it.

If You Want to Buy

If you want to buy any kind of a farm, home or business in any part of the country, tell me your requirements. I will guarantee to fill them promptly and save you some money at the same time.

W. M. OSTRANDER

Suite 161, North American Bldg., Philadelphia

HEALTH, STRENGTH And a GOOD FIGURE

Are More to Be Desired Than a Pretty Face

It is little over one year since I began to teach physical culture by mail, after 12 years of personal experience in prescribing individual work for women. I have never broken faith with my pupils, but have myself dictated every lesson. Were it not that pupils are finishing their courses daily, I could take no new ones. Fully one-third of the pupils who have worked with me this winter have been recommended to me by pupils who worked with me last year. If your vitality is at a low ebb, if you are troubled with any of the so-called chronic ailments—Constipation, Indigestion, Torpid Liver, Sick Headaches, Nervousness, Sleeplessness; if you are overly large and wish to be reduced (and increase your vitality in reducing); if you are thin and want to put on flesh, you can do so by no better means than a course in scientific physical culture. My work is not physical exercise alone. Women do not wish an athlete's strength, but that roundness and symmetry which has made women's form a model for sculptors and painters, and they want that vivacity and force born of a healthful spirit, which Emerson calls "the ecstacy of life." They want perfect health to make them cheerful wives, helpful companions and better friends.

The following extracts from letters from my pupils are on my desk as I write:

"I believe that my lessons are the best investment I have ever made."

"I just read your last advertisement in a January magazine, and from my own experience I know that you claim no more than you accomplish."

"Have left off my glasses, and my eyes seem to be all right."

"My neck and chest are developing finely. I can scarcely believe it is my own neck."

"I used to be so stoop-shouldered; now I carry myself as well as my friends."

"I have not had a headache for four weeks. Menstruation painless, and I can apply myself to mental work all day long and not feel tired and nervous. I think I know how to breathe now."

"I sleep all night, for which I cannot adequately express my thanks."

"Have not had a cold this winter. Have lost 20 pounds in flesh. My friends all note the difference in my size."

"My mother has lost entirely the rheumatism which troubled her for so long."

"My constipation is entirely relieved."

"My indigestion has all gone. I can sit down and eat as I have not done for years."

"My complexion is very decidedly clearer and my eyes brighter."

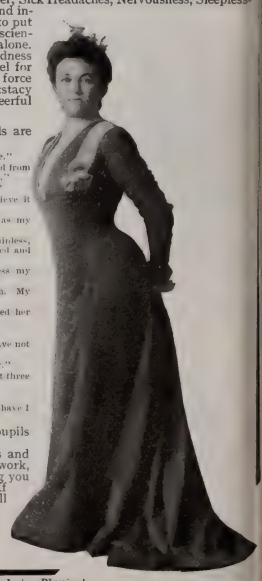
"If the remaining three lessons do me as much good as the first three lessons, you will have done wonders. I am never tired now."

"I cannot be thankful enough that I have made a start."

"I am still well in the literal sense of the word. Not a cold have I had, and never did I enjoy such wonderful health."

Letters similar to the above come to me from my pupils every day.

If you will write me, I will furnish you with names and addresses of women who have been helped with my work, and for ten cents I will send you a little booklet, showing you correct lines of the body in poise and movement. If you need me or wish to know more of my work, I will cheerfully give you all information I can.



SUSANNA COCROFT,

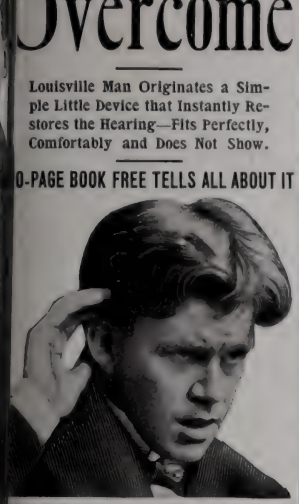
Dept. 224, 57 Washington Street, Chicago.

NOTE.—Miss Cocroft is President of the Extension Work in Physical Culture. This position has given her a wide experience in personal work.

Deafness Overcome

Louisville Man Originates a Simple Little Device that Instantly Restores the Hearing—Fits Perfectly, Comfortably and Does Not Show.

0-PAGE BOOK FREE TELLS ALL ABOUT IT



Since the discovery of a Louisville man it is no longer ecessary for any deaf person to carry a trumpet, a be, or any such old-fashioned device, for it is now poible for any one to hear perfectly by a simple invention at fits in the ear and cannot be detected. The honor elongs to Mr. George H. Wilson, of Louisville, who as himself deaf, and now hears as well as any one. e calls it Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drum, is built o the strictest scientific principles, containing no metal f any kind, and is entirely new in every respect. It is ffective even when the natural ear drums are partially entirely destroyed, perforated, scarred, relaxed, or ickened. It fits any ear from childhood to old age, nd, aside from the fact that it does not show, it never auses the hearer irritation, and can be used with comort day or night.

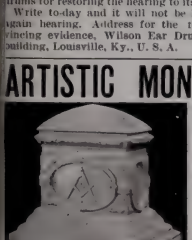
It will relieve deafness in any person no matter how caused, whether from catarrh, scarlet fever, typhoid r brain fever, measles, whooping cough, gathering in he ear, shocks from artillery, or through accidents. It ot only relieves, but stays the progress of deafness and ll roaring and buzzing noises.

Let every person who needs this at once send to the ompany for its 190-page book, which you can have free. t describes and illustrates Wilson's Common Sense ar Drums and contains many bonafide letters from umerous users in the United States, Canada, Mexico, ngland, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, Australia, New ealand, Tasmania, India. These letters are from peoe in every station in life—clergymen, physicians, lawrs, merchants, society ladies, etc.—and tell the truth bout the benefits to be derived from the use of this onderful little device; you will find among them the ames of people in your own town or state, and you are t liberty to write to any of them you wish and secure heir opinion as to the merits of the only scientific ear rums for restoring the hearing to its normal condition.

Write to-day and it will not be long before you are gain hearing. Address for the free book and conincing evidence, Wilson Ear Drum Co., 1081 Todd uilding, Louisville, Ky., U. S. A.

ARTISTIC MONUMENTS

Cost No More than Plain Ones in



White Bronze

Marble is entirely out of date.

Granite soon gets moss-grown, discolored, requires constant expense and care, and eventually crumbles back to Mother Earth.

Besides it is very expensive.

White Bronze is strictly everlasting. It cannot crumble with the action of frost. Moss-growth is an impossibility. It is more artistic than any stone. Then why not investigate it? It has been adopted for more than a hundred public monuments and by thousands of delighted customers in all parts of the country. Many granite dealers have used White Bronze in preference to granite for their own burial plots. We have designs from $4.00 to $1,000.00 Write at once for free designs and information, stating about what expense you anticipate. It puts you under no obligations. We deal direct and deliver everywhere.

Over $90,000 worth of work sold to Christian Herald readers in the last few years. Agents Wanted.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.
70-90 Howard Ave., Bridgeport, Conn.

CHURCH FURNITURE. Pews, Assembly Chairs, Pulpits, S. S. Seating. Largest Line, Latest Styles. Free Catalogue. Mfd. at GRAND RAPIDS SCHOOL FURNITURE WORKS, Salesroom, 22 West 19th Street, New York.

CLEAN CUT CAKE TIN FREE TO AGENTS

Flat tin Knife cuts loose a perfect cake. $2 Outfit free Exp. prepaid. Dept 7. HOUSEHOLD NOVELTY WORKS, Chicago, Ill., or Buffalo, N.Y.

Signs of Conversion

A Change of Nature and Disposition Essential

By Mrs. M. Baxter

THE apostle Peter is most practical in his teaching as to what the life of true children of God should be. "Dearly beloved," he writes, "I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul."

The early Christians instead of feeling hurt and wronged when others did them an injury, took joyfully the spoiling of their goods, knowing in themselves that they had in heaven a better and an enduring substance (Heb. 10:34). They saw all things in the light of God and of eternity. And the clue to such a life lies in the words, "But the end of all things is at hand; be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer." Children of eternity live in the light of eternity; measuring the present by the future; the coming of our Lord, and the judgment seat of Christ (II. Cor. 5:10); and the mainstay of their life is communion with God; watching unto prayer, and having fervent love among themselves.

And this is only a normal Christian life, nothing at all extraordinary; and it is in the same line that the apostle proceeds again to speak of suffering: "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you as though some strange thing happened unto you." The self-pity to which we are prone by nature, is a complete ignoring of the purpose for which we are tried. Every student knows that the hard examination is to put to the proof the hours of diligent study through which he has passed; he does not count it a hard thing, but a thing demanded by his very position as a student. And thus Paul, telling the Ephesian elders of the sufferings that awaited him, could say also, "None of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the Gospel of the grace of God" (Acts 20:22-24). If only the Lord got gain from the sufferings of Paul, Paul counted it worth while indeed to suffer—he understood his vocation.

The great enemy of our souls is busy persuading men everywhere that they can be Christians without suffering, that there is a far easier way than the Bible points out: and thousands upon thousands are failing into this snare, and treasuring up for themselves "wrath against the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God, who will render to every man according [not to his profession, but] to his deeds" (Rom. 2, 5).

To some he applies the sacerdotal snare: they can pay a priest who will be guardian of their conscience, and make it all right for them in the end. But when the judgment is set and the books are opened, then every man will have to stand alone, the priest for himself, and the man who paid him for himself. Then there is the universal snare; Christ died for all, therefore you are saved without being born again; you need not be narrow like those who talk about conversion, and you can enjoy the pleasures and the honors of the world; live according to your conscience, and it will be all right. But Jesus says, "The words which I have spoken"—not your conscience—the same shall judge you at the last day (John 12:49).

Perhaps the most subtle snare of all is the self-deluding snare. Satan persuades men that they are born again because they know mentally or sentimentally, the way of salvation; attend conferences, enjoy the meetings, think themselves very pious, and yet all the time it is a life of self-pleasing. They are just as easily put out of temper, they are just as touchy about what affects them, they are just as selfish as those who have not the knowledge which they possess. These are the stumbling blocks of many honest souls—they talk all right, but their spirit is all wrong—they compare them with the Word of God, and do not find the characteristics of God's children in them, and too often on their account they condemn the whole company of true Christians. Oh, what an unveiling it will be for such as these when they see how God views them.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR, EUREKA } Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC, BRADLEY, BROOKLYN, JEWETT, ULSTER, UNION } New York.
SOUTHERN, SHIPMAN } Chicago.
COLLIER, MISSOURI, RED SEAL, SOUTHERN } St. Louis.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

IF there is an impression in the minds of any that Mixtures of White Lead and Zinc are better than Pure White Lead, it has been created by the manufacturers of the Mixtures, because a much larger profit can be made from the sale of these than by grinding and selling either White Lead or Zinc pure

If interested in paint or painting, address

National Lead Co., 100 William Street, New York.

POND'S Extract

RELIEVES

Burns, scalds, bruises, cuts, sprains, wounds, lameness, soreness, neuralgia, rheumatism, sunburn, bites, stings.

STOPS

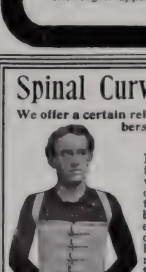
Nose bleed, toothache, earache, bleeding lungs, hemorrhages, and all pain.

Sold in sealed bottles with buff wrappers

The Old Family Doctor

Spinal Curvature Corrected in Your Own Home

We offer a certain relief to all who suffer from this terrible affliction. Throw away the cumbersome and expensive leather and plaster Paris jackets and try our Scientific Spinal Appliance.



It does not encase the body like a vise, but allows perfect freedom of movement. It weighs ounces where others weigh pounds. It is 80 per cent cheaper than the old methods and 100 per cent better. It conforms to the shape of the body so that no one would notice it. It can be worn by the smallest child or the oldest adult with perfect ease and comfort. It will give permanent relief many cases of spinal curvature. They are not made up in large quantities, but each one is made to measure, to meet the individual case, and a perfect fit is guaranteed. If you or any of your friends suffer from any form of Spinal Trouble, write us at once and we will give you full particulars as to how your curvature may be corrected, without inconvenience or discomfort, and Without Leaving Your Own Home. Address,

PHILO BURT MFG. CO., 30 Ninth Street, JAMESTOWN, N. Y.

GETTYSBURG BATTLEFIELD AND WASHINGTON

Personally-Conducted Tour via Pennsylvania Railroad

The tour will leave New York 7.55 A. M., and Philadelphia 12.20 P. M., Saturday, September 26, in charge of a Pennsylvania Railroad Tourist Agent, and will cover a period of six days. An experienced chaperon, whose especial charge will be unescorted ladies, will accompany the party throughout. Round-trip tickets, covering transportation, carriage drives, and hotel accommodations, will be sold at the extremely low rate of $22 from New York, $21 from Trenton, $19 from Philadelphia, and proportionate rates from other points.

For itineraries and full information apply to ticket agents; Tourist Agent, 263 Fifth Avenue, New York; 4 Court Street, Brooklyn; 789 Broad Street, Newark, N. J.; or address Geo. W. Boyd, General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

LOOKING FOR SAFE INVESTMENTS

Will remind you of the WILLIAM R. COMPTON 5 per cent. Mortgages. Recommended by financiers of national reputation. Book free.
Address, No. 5 WARDELL BUILDING, MACON, MO.

The Allegretti Water Bottle

An Enemy of Pain

Neuralgia - Headache Earache

Affords instant relief when filled with hot water and applied to the head or any part of the body. The soothing effect penetrates and relaxes, relieving pain and tension. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price, $1.50. Money refunded if not satisfactory. Send for circular. Liberal discount to druggists. Express charges prepaid in any part of U. S.

T. L. ALLEGRETTI, 117 RANDOLPH ST. CHICAGO, ILL.

ADDICTED TO THE DRUG HABIT?

If so, you can be relieved and completely cured. Established in 1875. Write for free book. Drug and Alcoholic Addictions. Relief Guaranteed.

HOME TREATMENT IF DESIRED.

We have removed to our new and commodious quarters. The Dr. J. L. Stephens Co., Dept. H 6, Lebanon, Ohio.

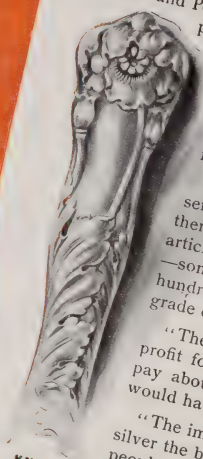
STARK TREES best by Test—78 Years. Largest Nursery. Fruit Book free. Want More Salesmen? PAY Weekly. STARK BRO'S, Louisiana, Mo.; Dansville, N. Y.

PRESIDENT SUSPENDERS Comfort and service. Guaranteed—"All breaks made good." 50c and $1.00. Any shop or by mail. C. A. EDGARTON MFG. CO., Box 209, Shirley, Mass.

The STORY of CERETA

We do not believe in "Gift Schemes."—If the "gift" is worth having it either increases the price of the goods or reduces the quality.

A year or so ago we were talking these points over in our office. We wanted to do something for our customers—to bind them closer, both by sympathy and interest, to Quaker Oats, and Pettijohn's Breakfast Food. One of the young men in our office said: "See here! People who know enough about quality to use Quaker and Pettijohn don't want any flimsy gifts with packages. You're selling Quaker and Pettijohn so close to cost now that you can't afford to give presents with each package. And our customers won't buy fifty dollars' worth of goods to get the coupons for a 50-cent gift.



KNIFE.

"If you want to do them a real service,—to please them, and make them talk about you,—find some article that they will always want —something they pay a retailer two hundred per cent. profit on—a high grade of silverware, for instance.

"Then give your customers that profit for themselves. Ask them to pay about one-third of the price they would have to pay.

"The important thing is to have the silver the best that can be made. The people will feel glad when they look at it. And the gladness will shine back on Quaker and Pettijohn, and us, —ten times as long and strong as if you had given them 'free' one of those ordinary, shoddy premium things.

"You've given them a saving that's worth ten times as much as a 'free-for-coupons' premiums. And they've got something they really want.

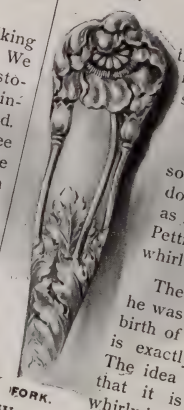
"Won't that hold them to our brands better than if we asked them to save a hundred coupons to get a premium worth ten cents?

"If our Quaker Oats and Pettijohn customers want high-class silverware, we can have manufactured the highest grade at less than even the biggest dealer can buy because of the immense quantity we can use.

"You can charge the loss to advertising. The advertising will be worth it, for the quality and beauty of this silver will make a lasting friend of everyone who gets it.

"It will take a little time, but as soon as people realize what we are doing, that the tableware we offer is as high quality as Quaker Oats and Pettijohn's, the plan will take like a whirlwind."

The young man knew exactly what he was talking about. That was the birth of the "Cereta" idea. And that is exactly what we are doing to-day. The idea has met with such approval that it is literally "a whirlwind."



FORK.

We at once placed one of the largest orders ever placed with one of the most responsible silverware manufacturers in the United States. They made, at our order, the beautiful "Cereta" Pattern, designed and finished in the exact style of modern solid silver. All the knives, forks, teaspoons and tablespoons which have since been added to the Cereta set are of the same beauty and quality. Cereta ware is plated more heavily than triple-plate. The silver used is 999-1000 fine. And with each piece is sent the manufacturer's guarantee for twenty years of family use.

SPOON.

Cereta ware with its rich "French Gray" finish, looks like the solid silver in a Maiden Lane window. You can have no idea of its quality, value, workmanship and beauty until you have received at least one piece. Send, with your order for each piece, four coupons from either Quaker Oats, Pettijohn's Breakfast Food, Apitezo or Zest, and the amount in coin specified on the coupon.

TEA SPOON—4 Cereta Coupons and 15 cents in coin.
CERETA SPOON—4 Cereta Coupons and 20 cents in coin.
TABLE SPOON—4 Cereta Coupons and 30 cents in coin.
TABLE FORK—4 Cereta Coupons and 30 cents in coin.
TEA FORK—4 Cereta Coupons and 25 cents in coin.
TEA KNIFE—4 Cereta Coupons and 30 cents in coin.
TABLE KNIFE—4 Cereta Coupons and 50 cents in coin.

This is about one-third the actual retail value of the ware.

In sending for knives state whether you prefer plated blades or steel blades.

GUARANTEE: If when you receive them, the above articles are not perfectly satisfactory, please return them at once and we will refund you your money.

This Coupon will be accepted with three others as the four coupons taken from packages of Quaker Oats, Pettijohn's Breakfast Food, Apitezo and Zest mentioned in the list above. Address

THE AMERICAN CEREAL CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

COUPON C. H.

Published 52 Times a Year

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 16, 1903

COPYRIGHT, 1903, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

VOL. 26—No. 37. PRICE 5 CENTS

Offices: Bible House New York

CHRISTIAN HERALD

SEE PAGE 570

The Macedonian Revolt---Insurgents Guarding a Christian Village Against the Turks

WHAT IS WOMAN'S TRUE SPHERE = HOME OR A BUSINESS CAREER?

CHRISTIAN HERALD Readers Unite in an Effort to Solve the Great Home Problem

IN a recent issue, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD invited from its readers a frank and general expression of opinion on these two questions, which deal with one of the most important problems of the present time:

1. Is the present system of educating girls for business careers, considered broadly, an advantage or otherwise, and why?
2. If the home life be the ideal vocation for woman, what is needed to make it more attractive and congenial to girls than at present?

FROM the large number of replies received, it is evident that the subject is one which is being widely discussed in families everywhere. It is impossible to give space to more than a limited number of the answers. These appear below.

THE present system is, in my opinion, a distinct advantage. It gives a girl strength of character and self-reliance. By all means, let the girl learn how to earn a livelihood. Then she will not be so liable to throw herself away in marriage on some worthless man. The girl who has been trained to regard marriage as a career, remembers that when her father dies, she will need some one to provide for her, if she is unable to provide for herself, and when some man offers to do it, she accepts him regardless of congeniality. It is also good for the young men that girls should be so educated. They will learn that they must measure up to a high standard if they are to hope for a wife. A young man who looks around in a supercilious way, believing that he has only to choose, and any girl will have him, is apt to be arrogant, lacking in respect, and domineering after marriage; but when he discovers that girls don't have to marry, and can get along without him, he will be more likely to behave himself, and be at some pains to make himself worthy of a girl's acceptance. It is pitiful to me to see the pains a girl will sometimes take to get a husband. I grieve to see her seeking instead of being sought. Make her independent by a business training, and she will not have thus to humiliate herself.

Prevents Humiliation

EDWARD BROWN.
Brooklyn, N. Y.

. . .

No. The average American young woman is taught, from her youth, to think and act independently. She must be as brave and strong as her brother; as well educated and as energetic. Consequently, she is as capable of a successful business career as he. Yet she must waste her capabilities keeping house for an unappreciative man, who grumbles every time she asks for money so justly due her. Who could blame her for wishing to relegate him to a boarding-house existence for the rest of his days, while she demonstrates her independence by going into the world and earning her own money.

The Business Woman the "American Ideal"

London, Tenn. MRS. J. W. CLARK.

. . .

There is no doubt but that looking at the question from the woman's standpoint, women are much happier when they fit themselves for some sphere. A girl cannot answer the question of her future. She may marry; she may not. Shall she sit down and wait? Never! Let her go on and make all she can of her life. Let her be so good a business woman that she may support herself in comfort, and have means for travel and improvement. The question of the home will some day solve itself. Women will marry when the average man is as worthy as the average woman. An educated, refined woman must, to be happy in the home, marry an educated, refined man, a man with a purpose. More worthy men will make home more congenial and attractive to women; nothing else can.

From the Woman's Standpoint

MAY KING.
Colchester, Conn.

. . .

The "strenuous life" is not for the young women of America. The glory of this nation, to-morrow, rests almost entirely with the coming mothers of to-day. The home is where God put the young woman, and there she should stay. Training for a business career might, in some cases, be advantageous; but it causes her to look at the home life as dull and uninteresting. The home life is the ideal vocation, and is attractive and congenial, if the young girl looks at it from the standpoint her Maker would have her to.

The Strenuous Life Not for Women

E. D. VAN DEUSEN.
Delaware, O.

. . .

Jehovah made man for his sphere of action in life; woman for hers; which are separate and distinct. Considered broadly, educating girls for business careers is a disadvantage to the girl and to her true home relations as daughter, wife, and mother. The ideal home life is well portrayed in the Book of Proverbs of the Holy Scriptures, chapter 31, and 10th to 31st verses, to which I invite the earnest attention of all. Scripture precepts on this line should adorn walls of public schoolrooms where girls are taught, and they instructed in duties for home adornment and comfort.

Home her Divinely Ordained Sphere

MOSES H. SYDENHAM.
Kearney, Neb.

. . .

The new departure in the training of women is only a step in the great movement which has for its ultimate object her complete liberation from ages of servitude. She is man's equal intellectually; morally she is his superior. She has not his coarseness of texture, nor his ugly vices. Why should she consent to remain in the position of an inferior and a dependent, when she has already demonstrated that in art, literature, science, business, manufactures, she can make a good living and hold her own? Ever since Creation, she has been driven into a corner and robbed of her divine birthright of equality by man's selfishness. She is tired of the social hencoop, with all of its narrowness and masculine domineering, and who can blame her? Let her try her pinions fairly, and she will demonstrate that she is what the Creator meant her to be—man's equal and his comrade; not his menial and his slave. There will always be women enough to fill the home requirements; but those who have tasted the freedom and independence of the broader career will never return. Nor will the women of America ever be satisfied until the home is revolutionized and idealized—until it is made the Home Beautiful, instead of a lifelong, thankless, unrequited, hopeless, sighing, unescapable, servitude for mothers and daughters, as it is in thousands of homes to-day.

Independence is Woman's Hope

MARCELLA HAYES.
New York.

. . .

The tendency of the age, in its civilization, calls for a broader use of the faculties in women—their intelligent action—thus raising her above the common drudge though she scrub and ply at the wash tub—facilitates the highest possible attainment for business, home, or a wider sphere. God never intended her brain to be dwarfed any more than man's. The educated who affect to despise housework, treat their domestics disdainfully, are not the highest type of women, though heading the graduating column at Vassar. An ideal home has for its management an educated woman; her influence counts, just as high social position wields a power when judiciously used.

An Evolution From Drudgery

Kansas City, Mo. (MRS.) MARY JANE KILLIP.

The present system of educating girls for business careers, though, like all revolutions, it involves incidental evil, is still no doubt part of a great evolution designed by Providence to result in good. Many women are not elected to be wives and mothers, and for such, a lack of business training means too often misery. True, the business girl may marry, and may not be qualified to act as chambermaid, laundress, cook, seamstress, waiter, governess, nurse, etc. But the woman of the future, instead of doing everything herself, like the primitive squaw, will have her housework done by specialists, her children will be in kindergarten or school, and she, herself, doing specialized work. The system of specialized work has developed men in the past, and will develop women in the future. Home will still be home, though the dinner may be cooked outside and brought in, for home is home, when love is there.

The Woman of the Future

Bedford, N. Y. AMELIA HOYT.

. . .

I do not think the young women of America are out of their natural and proper sphere, when they take the places of their drunken fathers and brothers. Some one ought to keep up the home, and so the girls, if there is any home, have to keep it or starve. Woman has just as much right in the world as man. We are all free in Christ Jesus.

Man's Failure, Woman's Opportunity

Lawtey, Fla. MRS. M. M. E. BLANCHARD.

. . .

A girl leaves her proper sphere when she enters any place where her virtue is in peril. Any occupation that throws the sexes constantly together is not a proper place for our daughters when they are not under our own supervision. And if we make ourselves worthy of a man who wants a wife, he will seek us; we need not seek him. I had a mother who was a model Christian, a model housekeeper, a good financier. She taught me that in order to be a true wife and mother it is my duty to look well to the affairs of my household. Give me a home, a true home in the country, with good health, and I am happy.

The Home is Her Kingdom

MRS. L. HOBART.
Himrod, N. Y.

. . .

This is the golden age—an age of discoveries and inventions, and an age of advancement for women. If a woman find the field of business more interesting than household work, let her enter it—that's her business. Rearing children need not tax all a woman's energy. We want fewer, but better, healthier, and more intelligent children. A married woman can assist her husband in many ways. We should not force woman out of active life, when the advancement of the race begins with her advancement.

This is Woman's "Golden Age"

Van Buren, Ark. C. E. STAMPS.

. . .

The present system of educating girls for business careers, is a financial advantage to lazy fathers and widowed mothers, but, broadly considered, is a disadvantage to the nation, diminishing the number of happy homes, arousing ambitions that will never be satisfied, causing discontent that leads to life-long strife.

A Blow at the Nation

REV. CLAUDE M. SEVERANCE.
Brooklyn, N. Y.

. . .

I do not believe that the present business education of women is an advantage to business, for their services are too short—sooner or later girls must quit. Nor to the home, for this part of their life work has received scant consideration. Nor to the girls themselves, for they only hinder the boys, who would and could support both. In regard to the second point, it is not necessary to make the home, but herself, more attractive, by a humble and holy character, and living within the sphere our wise Creator marked out for her.

A Pastor's Plain Opinion

Carmel Church, Philadelphia. REV. A. STAIGER.

. . .

It cannot be that every woman should marry. There are many positions in this world which can only be filled by spinsters. I believe spinsters are indispensable and invaluable, if they have good characters. There are however, women in these days who are out of their sphere; they are following masculine occupations. This certainly ought not be.

Women Who are Out of Their Sphere

HENRIETTE LEHDE.
Milford, Pa.

. . .

Girls who are educated with the idea that they will sooner or later become the mistress of a home are the ones who will have the most enjoyment in life and become the most helpful members of society. Those who are educated for business careers of their own are likely to become disorganizers of society, because they may have to sacrifice marriage, and come into competition with men, which woman is generally not fitted to do.

Home Queens the Happiest

WESLEY N. PECK.
Mt. Carmel Conn.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 772

GREAT BOOK BARGAINS!

IN every large publishing house, remnants of book-lots will accumulate, and eventually must be sacrificed in order to make room for new consignments, and bargain-hunters find exceptional opportunities on such occasions. We present a few of the special bargains, which we offer only to readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and in view of the small number of volumes which are here offered, we must request correspondents to enclose with the price asked a two-cent stamp for the return of the money in case the order comes too late. We Prepay all Charges.

POPULAR BOOKS

TITLES	REGULAR PRICE	OUR PRICE
ART OF HOME-MAKING, By Margaret E. Sangster, 463 Large Pages	$1.00	.60
BEST THINGS FROM AM. LITERATURE, By Irving Bacheller, 416 Large Pages	1.00	.60
HEAVEN, HOME AND HAPPINESS, By Mary Lowe Dickinson, 416 Large Pages	1.00	.75
ONWARD TO FAME AND FORTUNE, By William M. Thayer, 446 Large Pages	1.00	.75
RULERS OF THE WORLD, Up to 1899, by Gilson Willets, 416 Large Pages	1.00	.50
SCENES FROM THE HOLY LAND, By Robinson Lees, 128 Pages, Illustrated	.25	.15
HOW TO SUCCEED, By Orison Swett Marden, M.D., 300 Pages	.25	.10
THE FAIRY LAND OF SCIENCE, By Arabella B. Buckley, 300 Pages	.25	.10

ATTRACTIVE PICTURES

SUBJECT	WORTH	OUR PRICE
CHRIST AT BETHANY, (9 Colors; size 14 x 18)	.50	.10
YOUNG MOTHER, 7 Colors; 9 ½x12 ¾; Morgan, Artist	.25	.05

This stock must be closed out, and hence we offer the goods at these bargain figures. Act quickly, as this offer goes to over 200,000 families, and if you really wish any of these offers, NOW is your time. WE PREPAY ALL CHARGES.

Don't forget the two-cent stamp. Act to-day—to-morrow will be too late.

In every case we refund the money on return of the goods if the purchaser does not think that he got a genuine bargain. No questions asked; money promptly refunded.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BOOK DEPT.,
Bible House, New York City

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 16, 1903

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

A VIEW OF THE FAMOUS FRENCH BROAD RIVER IN THE BIG SMOKY MOUNTAIN (See page)

A RIDE ACROSS THE "BIG SMOKY" MOUNTAINS

By REV. EDWARD O. GUERRANT

IF you are not a mountain climber, you had better not undertake this trip. I am not sure that I would have done it, if I had known what I know now; but God wisely hides the future from us.

Our faithful missionaries, Mr. and Mrs. Barrows, and Mr. Burton, had lived and worked there a long while alone, and I thought it was as little as we could do to go to see them. So, past the Cumberlands and Knoxville, Morristown and the French Broad, we went to Newport on the beautiful Pigeon River, flowing out of the North Carolina Alleghenies. There we walked a mile, to board a little car half full of flour, on the new railroad up the river, bound for Cataloochee, in the Great Smoky mountains. At Hartford, a little station, we met Mr. Barrows and Mr. Burton, who came to escort us to their eyrie on the mountain. It was well they did, for, though I have been climbing the Cumberlands since a boy, and the Alleghenies, and Rockies, I do not think I could ever have found that home in the Great Smokies.

We left the cars where there was no road, and walked half a mile to the iron railroad bridge over the rapid river, which was too dangerous to cross in a boat. Mr. Barrows showed me where he and his family came near being drowned in attempting to cross. Over rocks, and stumps, and trees, where there was not even a path, we made our way down to the mouth of a gorge in the mountain. Here we met little Milburn Brown, with one of the three horses in the neighborhood for me to ride.

The way we went was up a rushing, roaring stream, which came down 500 feet in half a mile, like a dozen cataracts of Lodore. It was magnificent, but it was not a road, yet it was worth the trip to one who never saw nature in her wildest mood and most romantic dress. In that deep mountain gorge I found the finest hemlocks I had ever seen—big and tall as the cedars of Lebanon; giants of the primeval forest. I found a rare tree of most beautiful white and pink bell-shaped flowers, and called by the natives the lizwood. I had never seen it before. It blooms alongside the dogwood, but has a more beautiful flower.

A mile up, the cataract brought us to the little mission house of Mr. Barrows. It was perched in a cleft of the mountain, under the very shadow of Old Smoky, which reared its white head 4,000 feet above, and marked the boundary between Tennessee and North Carolina. We were given a hearty welcome to the humble home, where contented poverty lived happily with Jesus. It was a lovely Christian home, and well served as a vestibule to the golden palaces beyond the tall summit of Old Smoky.

Mr. Barrows (for want of a place to live) had built his own little house, and propped it up with long poles to keep the big storms from moving it down on the river below. It was neither pretty nor warm, but it was better than the Master had. (It will be warmer next winter.) One little stove did the cooking and washing and ironing, and warming the house, when it could. And in this humble home, in the roughest and poorest country I ever saw, I found an educated, cultivated, gentle Christian woman, as happy as she could be in her labors of love among these poor but grateful children of the great mountains. It was a privilege to be there. It was in the suburbs of heaven, more than 2,000 feet above the troubles of the world below.

A CONGREGATION OF MOUNTAINEERS IN THE WATAUGA HILLS, EAST TENNESSEE

That Monday night, we all walked half a mile to a little schoolhouse, where I preached to a house nearly full of people, all of whom had walked, for want of a better way. I couldn't see where they came from, but the mountains seemed to open, and the people came out of vales and dells and nooks all around. How they lived, I do not know; but God, who feeds the birds, will not let his children starve, though some get hungry.

It rained that night—or rather, it poured—and all the next day; but we were five hundred feet above the roaring river, and felt safe. The good people waded through mud and water to the little schoolhouse, at nine o'clock (meeting "takes up" here at nine o'clock a.m.), and it was about full of wet men, women and children, without a single umbrella or overshoe! I did my best, but felt that I couldn't preach well enough for such people. Jesus only could do that.

But I must get along to Cataloochee, Mr. Burton's mission field in North Carolina. He was just recovering from a spell of sickness, and was not able to go with us, so Mr. Barrows, on a diminutive mule, and I on the only horse I saw, waded through the rain and mud, over the mountains and down the valleys to Cataloochee, on Big Creek, in North Carolina. Here we found some three hundred people in a big lumber camp between giant mountains, without a schoolhouse or a church, but the men and a few women crowded the large commissary store, where I preached from a chair, while they stood up. The men were off work on account of the rain. Mr. Burton is doing a good work here, under many disadvantages; but the management promises to build a schoolhouse soon, which will serve for a church also. The Cherokee Indians, who live just up the river, have a good school and church provided by the government, so that the red children are better educated than their poor white neighbors.

On our way back, I saw the only church in this part of the country, a big house, but the roof was off, the floor gone, and the benches piled up in a corner, all for want of religion. It does not always operate that way. It did here, and it did in Jeremiah's time. Negro found us all back in the school-house, which was again full of wet people, who walked through the rain in the dark, without lantern or umbrella. It will take heaven to "even up" things for such people. This was my last service here, and many came forward to express their desire for salvation and faith in Christ. Mr. and Mrs. Barrows keep right prayerfully and faithfully sowing the good seed in this wild and sterile soil, and God will "give it increase."

The want of good schools here moved them to undertake to build the "Seminary of the Smokies," where

CONCLUDED ON PAGE 782

The American Pulpit

A PLEA FOR FELLOWSHIP

A SERMON BY THE REV. CLARENCE A. BARBOUR, D.D.
Pastor of the Lake Avenue Baptist Church, Rochester, N. Y.

TEXT—MATTHEW 6: 10: "Thy kingdom Come"

MATTHEW'S Gospel is distinctly the Gospel of the Kingdom, but, in a very true sense, the Bible throughout is the Book of the Kingdom. If, as one has suggested, the conception of a suffering Redeemer runs as a blood-red cord through the Scripture, it is no less true that the conception of the all-embracing Kingdom and the all-conquering King, runs through all the Scripture as a cord of royal purple.

My fundamental proposition is that the Kingdom is of supreme and transcendent importance. The Kingdom of God, that divine polity over which Jesus Christ is King of kings and Lord of lords—that claims pre-eminent fealty.

The Kingdom is of greater importance than the local church, of greater importance than any communion in any community, of greater importance than any single denomination. With any different conviction, the denominations easily become "sects," something cut off—as the word implies—cut off in sympathy, organization, and belief, from the rest of the Christian world.

A Common Reproach

There is real danger that the local church or the denomination be exalted above the Kingdom of God. You know that our Roman Catholic friends say that Protestantism is split up into innumerable little sects, quarreling among themselves. "In the Protestant missionary work of Japan," they say, "the Japanese, seeing the headquarters of fifteen different and non-co-operating sects in the square of Tokio, wrote to America: 'Do not send us any more kinds of religion.' We, of the Catholic Church, are everywhere the same—in America, in Africa, in Asia, in Europe, in almost every city and village of every land; the same form of worship, the same articulate and compact organization. We are the church, one and united," We might answer that this is not necessarily a ground for self-congratulation; that wherever there is freedom of inquiry, freedom of opinion, freedom of will, there is bound to be diversity. But we are not now discussing the truth or falsehood, the good or evil in Roman Catholicism; we say that this argument the Catholic uses with powerful effect.

True it is that narrow denominationalism is belittling and deadening. That was a significant remark made by one of our college presidents, "The men who least comprehend what I am trying to do in this college are some professors of the college. They are noble, self-sacrificing men, but each one considers his own department the only really important one, and the idea of building up a university is something which none of them can grasp." So there are self-sacrificing denominationalists, who have no adequate conception of the dignity and importance of the church universal—the vast embracing kingdom of God.

"The field is the world," says our Master, nothing less; any smaller conception is a caricature of Christianity, a belittling of our faith; any ideal short of united effort for the conquest of the world-field, is an ideal unworthy of the Christian name. "The good seed, these are the sons of the kingdom"; the words immediately follow the reference to the world-field. "The good seed, these are the sons of the kingdom," not the membership of any local church, nor of any single denominational body.

The Essential Unity

I believe that we are coming to recognize the essential unity of the kingdom of God. Many mountains one globe; many ravines, one mighty earth mass, vastly greater than the wrinkles on her face; many regiments, one army; many denominations, one church; many creeds, one faith; many ways up the hill, one city at the top, where sits the King on his throne. Denominationalism, wisely managed, may be used for mutual provocation to love and good works. Perhaps it is better to be broken up externally, that each denomination may do its own work. But there must be recognition, and that recognition, more than a nominal one, of the practical fellowship, the co-operative fellowship of believers.

I am a Baptist by birth, by training, by conviction. I yield to no one in my loyalty to essential Baptist, principles. There are Congregationalists, and Presbyterians, and Methodists, with equal loyalty. But the Christian should be no bigot, and no species of bigotry is more offensive than that of the denominational bigot. Let no one misunderstand. We are not of those sentimentalists who decry ecclesiastical and denominational organization. We are not of those who idealize the man who perches on the denominational fence. The fence-sitter is nauseating as lukewarm water.

We counsel no sacrifice of conviction, but a mirroring forth of the spirit of our divine Lord, who prayed for his disciples and for those who should believe on him through their word, "that they all may be one, even as thou, Father, art in me, and I in them, that they also may be in us, that the world may believe that thou didst send me," that as of old the world may recognize us as His, when they see that these Christians "love one another."

Such a spirit is a long way beyond the spirit of "toleration." Yet even toleration is in advance of what we have known, even in this "land of the free." In the Harvard Baccalaureate of this year, Dr. Van Dyke eloquently said of the Puritan: "Something too little of sunlight may have come in through the narrow windows of his house. But that house had foundations, and the virtues lived in it." With all deference due to our national forefathers—and to them deference is due—there were tenants in the house other than those readily recognizable as virtues. Intolerance, intense and bitter, was characteristic of Puritanism. The Puritan failed to apprehend the first principles of religious liberty. That it was his independence of conviction, and his demand for freedom of worship which banished him from his native land, but renders his failure in this respect, the more conspicuous. He had no charity for those who read the truth through other eyes than his. The freedom which he demanded for himself, he would not accord to those of different faith. To his view of truth the whole community must yield assent; to his standards of worship all must conform. And this purpose to secure uniformity of worship, did not content itself with seeking to correct error by the gentler arts of persuasion; error must be rooted out, at whatever cost. The arm of the State is invoked to secure uniformity. Upon the shores of the New World were re-enacted scenes of which these exiles should long since have grown weary.

REV. CLARENCE A. BARBOUR, D.D.

The Puritan rivals in cruelty the persecutors from whom he has fled. We see Holmes, and Clark, and Crandall dragged before the governor, and sentenced to heavy punishment. We hear the shrill cry of their clerical accuser, as he smites Holmes before the judgment seat, "The curse of God go with thee." We see the three frail Quaker women scourged through the settlement, until reprieved at last at the point of death. We see Ann Hutchinson, her reason well nigh gone, driven through the deep snows, to perish at the hands of savages. No element of horror is wanting to the scene. Fines, imprisonment, whipping, mutilations, banishment, death, await those who under stress of present convictions seek to be faithful to the lesson of fidelity to conscience, learned from their Puritan fathers and associates in the land from which they have come. Such intolerance was hideous enough, though it was based in part upon strength of conviction.

To-day the pendulum has swung to the other extreme. We are in a day when mischievous moral malaria steals subtly into the fibre of strong endeavor. The age i drunk with materialism, the south wind blows softly and multitudes are enervated by its soothing touch Some would seem to think that in this day the tower of a lofty Christian life and character and of the grea splendid structure of the Kingdom of God are going t leap up in the night like Jonah's gourd; that we ar going to wake up some fine morning to find the buildin miraculously finished, without our endeavor, to the turre stone. Understand me, the heart of the church stil beats strong and true, but great masses of nomina Christians are in a lotus-eating atmosphere, listless, idle unaccomplishing.

Toleration and Indifference

Toleration is a long advance from intolerance, bu toleration easily becomes indifference, and both ar utterly inadequate to express the ideal relationship be tween bodies of Christ's followers. Tolerate? Endure Be indifferent? Shame on those who would thus crucif the Christ afresh! "Like a mighty army moves th church of God," shoulder to shoulder, heart-beat answer ing to heart-beat, steps swinging in time to the martia music of the church militant and the church trium phant, "Like a mighty army moves the church o God." No regimental sacrifice of conviction, but above the flag of the regiment, the flag of the army; above the standard of the denomination, the white banner o the Captain of the host, the Commander of the armies of the faithful, the King, omnipotent and eternal Not intolerance, not toleration, not indifference, bu fellowship, is the rallying cry, and we may believe that it finds a sympathetic chord in every heart o this great company.

A good beginning has been made. Federation is fellowship put into practice. Federation of churches and of Christian workers has ceased to be a dream. It is far from uncommon to-day, in single communities, in counties, in States. Let me indicate a very few of the lines which have been suggested and actually followed in this federated work. A religious census of a given community, resulting in a religious directory, showing church and Sunday School membership and attendance; Christian citizenship efforts, including those against the legalized saloon, and against the desecration and annihilation of the Day of Rest, a bulwark of our national life now thrown down and trampled in the dust—our brethren under other national flags are not free from the bitterness of this assault; a common rallying for the preservation or the securing of an ideal public school system; where it can be done, a wise direction of denominational enterprises in the way of the founding of new churches, thus tending to economy of effort and wise stewardship of resource; but chiefly, chiefly, co-operation in the vital, invaluable work of the church universal in evangelization, this above everything else—the joining hands of those who believe that the world is lost without Jesus Christ, in harmonious and loving fellowship of action for the world's salvation. In all of these endeavors we may work together, our hearts beating as one in our common love and loyalty to our common Lord.

The Vigilant Foe

Let me suggest two thoughts which may strengthen us in our fellowship. First, the enemies of Christ and his followers are neither dead nor sleeping. Luther said, as a representation of the church in his day: "Who would paint a picture of the present condition of the church let him paint a young woman in a wilderness, or in some desert place; and round about her let him figure lions, whose eyes are glaring upon her, and whose mouths are open to devour her substance and her beauty." That is the natural condition of the church. When the church in that age, in this age, in any age, is truly alive, and is fulfilling her destiny, she will find about her, as of old, men more cruel than ravenous beasts. The Gospel means battle. It is rightly on the offensive, not the defensive. The Gospel di vides, when it is manifested in a disciple whose embodying of the Gospel is strong enough to divide anything. The block will bear almost unmarked the edge of an ax handled by the feeble fingers of an infant, but the ax goes cleaving through the wood when the edge comes down under the sweeping power of a strong man's arm. True, multitudes of nominal Christians live on most amiable terms with the world, and know next to nothing of any tribulation or opposition occasioned by their profession of Christianity. But that is not because there is any real alteration in the consequences of close union with Jesus. It is because their union is so very slight and superficial. The world loves its own, and what can it find to hate in the shoals people whose religion is confined to their tongues ostly and has nothing to do with their lives? It has t ceased to be a hard thing to be a real and thorough ristian.

To be sure, opposition finds different foes to-day than some other days. You know to what lengths it has ne. The Inquisition, the massacre of St. Bartholo-w, the reign of Philip II. of Spain, the Duke of Alva th his satanic deeds in the Netherlands, the fires of mithfield, these are not so far in the past that mists of livion have shrouded them. But let us understand, fellow Christians, that the world and the flesh and devil are against Christian building and Christian ing still, just as they always were.

Heroic Religion

I do not believe in people looking for trouble, search-g for some one who will consent to persecute them, t I have an idea that the sting of Smithfield fires and e wrenching of Torquemada's rack, if those experi-ces could be repeated, might correct some vagaries modern theology. The thundering summons of the emy at the door might be a wholesome antidote for me conditions in our churches of to-day. There is mething in the call to battle, battle for a cause which righteous and supremely worthy, which stirs the repest and the best in us. Is it true that there is to-day tle of the heroic in religion to appeal to men? Alas r us if that be so.

The statement comes from some of our theological minaries that there is some dearth of candidates for the inistry. Why? Why is it that the ministry does not ap-al to every stalwart, able, earnest, unselfish Christian an in his college days? It does to some. A part of e product of our seminaries to-day was never sur-assed. But why does not the claim of this great voca-on press upon every such an one until it is soberly ttled one way or the other? It is not because young en are afraid. There was no difficulty in filling up e ranks of the Rough Rider regiment, though every an knew that he was taking his life in his hands when he volunteered. There was no lack of volunteers for service when the Merrimac was to be sunk at the mouth of Santiago Harbor, though it meant a voyage into the jaws of death. Eight men were needed; you know the response to the call for volunteers.

I will not believe that there is among our young men a lack of courage, a lack of willingness to suffer. Can it be that young men have made up their minds that with the present spirit in the church there is little demand for the heroic in her ministry? They say that a minister makes his church. He does leave his stamp upon the church, but it is no less true that the church makes the ministers. And the minister will not go far beyond what the church requires, or, at least, he will not go far beyond the point to which the church will follow him. If the church of the living God is to any considerable degree honeycombed with indifference, permeated with the dry rot of lethargy, if the heroic element in the church is dying, then the church may hold itself responsible for any diminution in number, and for any lessening of stalwart efficiency in its leadership. No man of strength and self-respect is going to submit to being regarded merely as a convenient adjunct to wed-dings and funerals, as a kind of family pet to be cod-dled and fed with sweetmeats. If the church wants much that is heroic in her leaders, she must have much that is heroic in herself. There must be a recognition of the fact that the foes of Christ and of his followers are neither dead nor sleeping; that eternal vigilance, eternal self-sacrifice, everlasting and strenuous struggle, are the price of progress and of victory, now, as always.

The Call for Service

Second — The insistent call for service has not ceased. Dean Frederick W. Farrar, who has but recently passed from among us, has said: "Is not this fatally true, that the lives of very many are frivolous, useless, egotistical; that the lives of very many are wasted and self-ruined by their own vilest passions; that the lives of some are like a mere poison and pestilence to all around them; that it is the lives of few only which are noble and generous, brave and unselfish, merciful and just, pure and true? And the worst curse of most lives is that they touch only of low and base ends for self." I hope that the words contain an exaggeration. I can not believe that each of us is bound by his own inside lives which, owing to fear or to blindness from public vices and knowledge, are "brave and unmanned," "pure and true." But the words of the great dean's mouth are a challenge and an appeal. The insistent call for service has not ceased.

Ever the Same Need

Thank God, history shows that the call has not been in vain. In the secret annals of the life of this world it is good to think of men and women who have not pleased themselves, but have gone about doing good, great souls were by their stubborn resistance to the forces of destruction of brotherhood and love have kept a living world, and the memory of the lives and the names of men and especially criticism, not building their lives over into themselves.

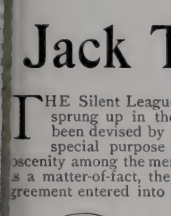
I hear some one say, "We have no such call as they," but we have. The only call they had we have—the call of the need. We realize the hardihood of us, he used. Perhaps very few eyes will be wet for us and they not for long, while others, with less of opportunities than ourselves have gone down to the grave amid the benedictions of the poor. Ah, the insistent call for service has not ceased. Can we not arouse to rise, to rise unitedly, to rise in ever strengthening fellowship, into such a life as is described by the words spoken of our blessed Lord, "He went about doing good."

The great Methodist leader, John Wesley, the bi-centenary of whose birth has just been celebrated throughout the Christian world, nobly said: "I desire a league, offensive and defensive, with every soldier of Christ." So say we. Let it be repeated in ever increasing volume until the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea. "We desire a league, offensive and defensive, with every soldier of Christ."

Jack Tars Against Swearing

The "Silent League," Originated by Chaplain Wright, and its Wholesome Influence . . . .

THE Silent League is a new organization that has sprung up in the United States Navy, having been devised by Chaplain C. Q. Wright, for the special purpose of suppressing profanity and obscenity among the men and boys of the enlisted force. As a matter-of-fact, there is no organization, only an agreement entered into by members to do all they can to discourage and suppress these two vices, both specially prevalent at times. No reports are made nor meetings held. Each member is allowed to work in his own way, to do and say the thing that seems best to him at the time to meet the case at hand; but he agrees to do something. A token is given to each by the chaplain when they enter into this agreement—a plain, metal disc with a hole near one edge. It is without letters or inscription of any kind, and has neither meaning nor value to any other than members.



CHAPLAIN C. Q. WRIGHT, U. S. N.

It is not customary to discuss the League, nor to recognize members, as it is intended to be purely personal in character, each being left free to do his duty as he seems best. The obligation is lain upon his conscience; and, relying simply upon his agreement, he is sent on his way entrusted with this good mission. Members are also instructed to pass the token to other reliable friends they may meet, who, in turn, may pass it to on others whom they deem worthy. As many tokens as are called for are supplied free of charge. No effort has been made to build up a large membership, but rather an earnest, reliable one, as it is still an experiment.

So far, the Silent League has worked satisfactorily on the receiving ship and in the emergency camp at League Island, where the chaplain thinks that profane swearing and filthy speech have been greatly diminished. These are vices condemned by all good people, and this effort appears to have appealed to those of the better sort, who have rallied to the assistance of Chaplain Wright, and in a very quiet way, have made themselves felt among their mates. Occasionally some wag speaks of them as "Them P. and O. people," as he cautions some swearing companion—perhaps he will exclaim, "Look out, the P. and O.'s 'll be after you."

Chaplain Wright tried this plan for suppressing these prevailing sins on the flagship New York and the battle ship Massachusetts, and finding it worked successfully, he gave it a name and a token, and set it in operation at League Island, Pa., and after a few weeks the effects were very marked and gratifying. From the Commandant of the Yard down, the officers, with but few exceptions, endorse the movement, and most of them are members. And so of the petty officers, chief petty officers, non-commissioned officers, and the leading men of the camp and receiving ship. Since launching the League, Chaplain Wright has made several changes in its workings—such as the brief instruction of new members how to work and what to say. For instance, they are advised to say nothing to a drunken or angry man till afterwards; to use either ridicule, rebuke, persuasion, or official report as the case appears to demand; and to report incorrigibles to the officer of the deck, to be made examples of. Set phrases are suggested for their use, such as, "Shame on you;" "Bring the soap and swab boys, and wash out his little mouth;" "Here, you are forgetting yourself, youngster;" "Will some one please spank that naughty little child?;" "Hold hard, mate—stop that, or up to the mast you go;" "None of us is over good, old man, but let's try to be decent," etc., etc.

It has been found that many small lads acquire profane tongues out of the notion that it sounds like a tough sailor man, and is a part of the proper lite at sea—an unfortunate idea that popular sea yarns suggest and encourage. The most effective weapon with such is ridicule.

No fees are collected, as there are no expenses necessary, except for the tokens, which should cost but a trifle. Those now used at League Island were made by a friend, free of charge, out of sheet copper and nickel-plated. With such immediate and tangible results, it would be an easy matter for the chaplain to raise money in the League for its furtherance, but it runs itself, perpetuates itself, reproduces itself, and needs no funds.

Why not start Silent Leagues all over the land—all over the world—on ships, in camps, factories, shops, schools, etc.—wherever men and boys are congregated together? It needs but one thoroughly earnest and very prudent man or woman (in most cases it should be the work of men) to start it. Once started, it ought,

LEAGUE MEMBERS ON THE RECEIVING SHIP

with proper promotion and encouragement, to continue to grow and take care of itself. It would be a good work for Young Men's Christian Associations, Christian Endeavorers, St. Andrew's and other young people's societies to take up. In the Catholic Church they have the Holy Name Society, which undertakes a similar work. The tokens could be made at any stamp mills or machine shop, as there is no inscription nor device, and the cost would be the merest trifle. U. S. N.

New Century Knights and Ladies

IN the first year of the new century Dr. W. B. Palmore, the editor of the Christian Advocate, St. Louis, conceived the plan of enlisting boys to a high purpose and determination under the name of New Century Knights. The following was the "New Declaration of Independence" they were called on to sign:

REV. W. B. PALMORE.

It is my purpose to be something and do something for the betterment of the world, and my determination never to use profanity, alcohol or tobacco in any form.

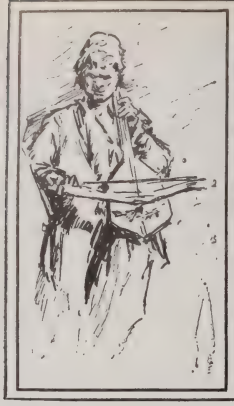
He had no idea of securing more than a few thousand names, nor did he expect to form them into any societies, but so numerous were the applications for membership that it was at once seen to be a providential movement worthy of following up and nourishing for the sake of the rising generation. The local organizations are called "Commanderies," and are usually under the management of one or more Lady Counselors. What with special songs, wall charts, meetings adapted to the boys, outdoor sports, military drills, and other entertainments, the movement is growing, and the first twenty thousand members will soon be enrolled.

Very soon there was a clamor for a similar organization for the girls; but not until recently was a beginning made. The "Aim and Ideal" which the girls are expected to sign to become members is the following:

The aim and ideal of my life is a pure heart, an enlightened brain, a kind manner in service and a womanhood worthy of the New Century Knighthood.

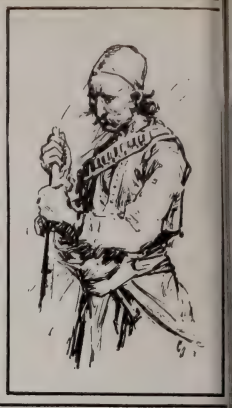
This organization is called the New Century Ladies, and is growing at a more rapid rate than the former, although it is not so large to its present membership. Sometimes the two organizations unite in joint commanderies, but the custom now is a separate organization under the name of "Knights Ladies." A badge (as with N. C. K. in plain white letters on a red background—white symbolic of purity and the red of strength—is furnished to all who sign the Knight's Declaration, and a corresponding badge (as with N. C. L. red with a white background, is furnished to those girls who sign the "Aim and Ideal." These can be had, with full information, by writing W. B. Palmore, 1414 Locust street, St. Louis.

A WANDERING PLAYER



IN THE MARKET AT USKUB

A MACEDONIAN SOLDIER



Macedonia's Struggle for Freedom

DESPERATE FIGHTING, WHICH MAY YET INVOLVE THE EUROPEAN POWERS—MANY MASSACRES BY TURKISH TROOPS—A GENERAL VIEW OF THE BALKAN SITUATION

WITHIN the last few weeks, the long-impending Macedonian revolt against Turkish oppression has broken out with a fury and magnitude that threaten to involve not only the Balkan peoples, but in certain not improbable contingencies, the great European Powers as well. What may prove to be one of the greatest wars Europe has witnessed since the Crimea, began with the rising of a few corps of Macedonian insurgents, under Sarafoff, in the vilayet of Monastir, the locality which became famous as the scene of the abduction of Miss Stone, the American missionary. Quickly the rebellion spread, until the insurgents had thousands of men in the valleys and mountain passes, who conducted operations on a scale that terrorized the northern part of the Turkish dominions. In the beginning of September, the insurrectionaries had 20,000 well-armed men in the field, chiefly Bulgarians, who were fighting the Turks somewhat after the same guerrilla fashion the Boers employed in their campaign against the British in South Africa—by sudden dashes and surprises, rather than by pitched battles. They had overrun a large part of Macedonia and the Bulgarian frontier: they were threatening to isolate Adrianople by destroying the bridges to the south, and were even exciting alarm by their proximity to Salonica. They hoped to be able to force Bulgaria into open war against Turkey, but Prince Ferdinand and his advisers were still ostensibly opposed to the insurrection, although thousands of the insurgents are Bulgarian by birth, speech, and religion. Many women are fighting side by side with their husbands and sons in the ranks of the insurgents.

When the revolt began, Turkey, always prepared for such emergencies, immediately threw a large army into the field, and adopted the usual uncompromising measures for its suppression. In the vilayet of Monastir, the Turks succeeded in driving out the insurgent bands, and then committed the first of a series of frightful atrocities. Macedonian towns and villages were laid waste and swept bare of their Christian population without mercy. In the town of Krushevo, according to a leading newspaper of Sofia, the Dnevnik, "the mutilated corpses of ninety women and children were found in one building; pieces of the bodies had been thrown into the street. Fifteen of the principal merchants of the town were killed and their heads exhibited on poles at Monastir. The churches were demolished and the houses sacked, and the town is now a heap of ashes. The populace fled to the hills, where they are in a starving condition."

Copyright 1903, by Underwood & Underwood.

MACEDONIAN INSURGENTS READY FOR ATTACK IN A MOUNTAIN PASS

A general slaughter occurred in the whole vilayet of Monastir. Nearly all the villages were destroyed. The Turks massacred all the women and children in twenty-two villages of the districts of Florina and Monastir, and afterward burned the villages. At the village of Armensko the Turks destroyed 150 houses out of a total of 157, and massacred every man, woman and child. The women were subjected to the most terrible abuse by the soldiers. Eighty revolutionaries, captured at Krushevo, who were sent in the direction of Monastir in chains, were slaughtered by their guards. The sanitary conditions at Krushevo were described in these reports as revolting. The dead were lying in the streets, stripped of every garment, the Turks even taking the vestments off the body of a priest. The survivors were afraid to bury the bodies.

While sustaining this reverse in Monastir vilayet, the insurgents were making headway in other quarters. Step by step, they fought their way to the centre of Macedonia and southward. In the vilayet of Adrianople they cut all the telegraphs. They occupied all the strategic points around Malkoternovo, captured three Turkish posts north of Losengrad, slaughtered the garrisons of Burgas-Majura, Kantacunovo, and Kurkolibi, blew up the government buildings at Urgas and captured Vasiliko, killing the garrison. Their mobile tactics seemed to defy pursuit by the large bodies of Turkish troops. The latter, however, took sanguinary vengeance, for they fell upon the defenceless Christian population of many villages and slew them mercilessly. Their Bashi-Bazouks burned eighteen villages north of Losengrad, killing and dispersing their population. They burned Bunar-Hissar and massacred the inhabitants and they massacred 300 persons at Vasiliko and Kilisseh. The Macedonian Committee prepared a list of seventy villages pillaged and destroyed, and the people ruthlessly slain by hundreds, in the vilayet of Monastir alone. They assert that the Turkish troops have been guilty of the massacre, murder and rapine of hundreds of defenceless non-combatants, that they have expelled 3,000 men, women and children in a single district, cast 2,800 into prison, shot and burned 200, incarcerated every Bulgarian in Salonica, tortured men and women with red hot irons at Schrif, and been guilty of nameless atrocities against those who were peaceable and unarmed.

It is only just to state here, that the Turkish government has given an unqualified denial to the reports of Turkish atrocities, and has instructed its consuls everywhere to explain that these reports are circulated by the Macedonian Committee for the purpose of exciting sympathy for themselves and arousing public feeling against the Mohammedans. From other sources, however, such confirmation of the massacres comes as leaves little doubt of the dark and bloody vengeance Turkey has visited upon her Christian population, who are suspected of revolutionary sympathies.

At a meeting of the Macedonian Committee held at Sofia, it was resolved that a memorandum should be presented to the representatives of the great Powers, urging their governments to take action. The speakers appealed for the immediate intervention of the Powers, declaring that if the pouring out of blood in Macedonia continued, Europe would find nobody there to save. The Bulgarian ministers were urged not to stand by while their brethren were dying in Macedonia.

Despatches from Turkish official sources in Constantinople, accuse Bulgaria of furnishing supplies to the

A BULGARIAN ARMY FIELD KITCHEN

FUGITIVES FLEEING FROM A MACEDONIAN VILLAGE

Illustrated Press Bureau

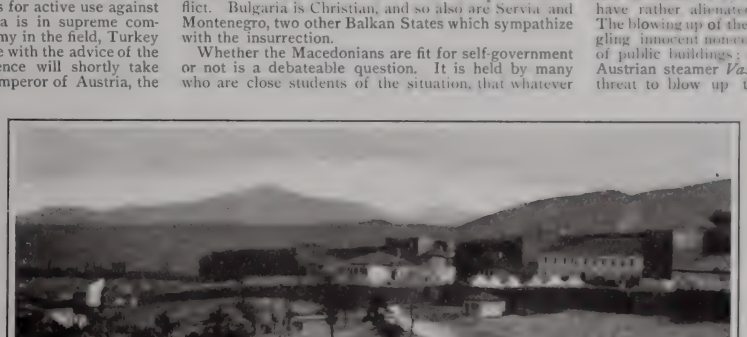
A MARKET DAY SCENE IN SOFIA
Bulgarian Peasant Girls in Sheepskin Coats

A CONSULAR CONFERENCE AT USKUB
(X) M. Mandlestrom, Russian Consul, Murdered by Turks August 6

surgents, and Turkey has notified the Powers to that fect. The Sultan intends to call out his entire Euroean reserve, which, with other forces now in the field, ould give Turkey 350 battalions for active use against e insurgents. Ibrahim Pasha is in supreme comand. In placing this vast army in the field, Turkey aims to be acting in accordance with the advice of the uropean Powers. A Conference will shortly take lace at Vienna, at which the Emperor of Austria, the ing of Greece, King Edard of England, and probaly the Czar and Emperor Villiam, will be present, hen it is believed the Balan situation will be disussed. Servia is represented as sympathizing warmly ith the revolt, and may ct with Bulgaria. Russia as been supposed to be seretly fomenting the strife the Balkans, though the lterior object is not apparent. At all events, the hreatening visit of the Rusan fleet to Iniadi, to exact eparation for the murder of he Russian Consul, Mr. Rostowsky, was regarded with pen hostility by the Turks.

To the average American eader, the uprising in the alkans presents a somehat confusing aspect. They ead in the daily cablegrams f conflicting forces of Maedonians, Bulgarians, Albanians, Greeks and Turks ll seemingly fighting each other. The Macedonians re the inhabitants of that section of European Turkey ounded on the north by Bulgaria, south by Greece nd west by Albania), which coincides with the ancient ingdom of Macedonia, although the name is now a here geographical expression. These people are largely hristian, yet there are many Mohammedan towns and illages in Macedonia. In Albania the population is divided in religion, the northern portion being Greek Church, the southern, Mohammedan, and consequently Albanians are found on both sides in the present conflict. Bulgaria is Christian, and so also are Servia and Montenegro, two other Balkan States which sympathize with the insurrection.

Whether the Macedonians are fit for self-government or not is a debateable question. It is held by many who are close students of the situation, that whatever may have been the character of Macedonia's civilization in the remote past, recent history shows its people to be a wild race of mountaineers given over to lawlessness and bloodshed, and fit only to be ruled by some stronger power. It is argued that, even if Macedonia were freed from the Turkish yoke, Europe would not consent to autonomy; it would simply change masters, and either Russia, Austria, Italy, or possibly a Balkan confederation under the joint auspices of the Powers, would be the new controlling agent in Macedonian affairs. Recent desperate attempts by the revolutionists to enlist the sympathy of Europe, it is declared, have rather alienated than attracted outside support. The blowing up of the Oriental express, killing and mangling innocent noncombatants; the wanton destruction of public buildings; the destruction by bombs of the Austrian steamer Vaskapir, and the still more recent threat to blow up the foreign embassies and legations, are all pointed out as evidence of the desperate resolve of the Macedonian Committee to involve other governments.



F. Moore Photo.

THE CITADEL OF USKUB, NOW CROWDED WITH BULGARIAN PRISONERS

Bulgaria's position is apparently critical. The whole country is actively preparing for war, yet Prince Ferdinand, restrained by the influence of Russia, opposes such a step. If he should declare war, Turkey would instantly invade Bulgaria. On the other hand, if Ferdinand does not declare war, Turkey itself may do so, in which case all the Balkan provinces might revolt, including Servia, Roumania, Roumelia and Montenegro.

It is not probable that any single European Power will intervene, as such a step would be the signal for a conflict beside which the present trouble would appear a mere skirmish. The consciousness of this fact may keep the great Powers from interfering, and they in turn may be able to hold back Bulgaria, Servia and Roumania from taking overt action. Should such restraint be exerted, the insurrection will be suppressed, as former revolts have been, by the Sultan's ruthless hand. But the time must eventually come when the scandal of the Mohammedan rule will become intolerable, and either by diplomatic arrangement or by force the Turk will be compelled to set Macedonia free.

Illustrated Press Bureau

REFUGEES AT RILO, AWAITING DISTRIBUTION OF BREAD

ALBANIAN PRISONERS BEING MARCHED TO A TRAIN

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, ASSOCIATE EDITOR — LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor — G. H. SANDISON, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscriptions.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter

A Temperance Embassy

WHEN a common foe is assailing the welfare of the people in many lands, the course of wisdom is international consultation and co-operation in defence. It is gratifying to learn that this course is being adopted in the war, unhappily required in almost every land, against the evil of strong drink. Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, Superintendent for World and National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, has just returned from Europe, where, by special invitation, she attended a Congress at Bremen, and where she had an interview with the Empress of Germany and other exalted persons. The object of the invitation was to ascertain from her what measures were being taken in the United States to deal with the drinking evil, and to check its progress.

The invitation was a tribute of no slight order to this country. It implied that the wonderful advance in production and trade, made here during recent times, was an evidence that our working-men must be more sober than those of Europe, and that some influence must have been at work to promote such sobriety. We are not sure that this reasoning is justified by the facts, but we are glad to know that the recent Government returns do show that there is a decrease in the ratio of consumption of intoxicating liquors, and that though the quantity consumed does increase from year to year, it does not increase so rapidly as formerly. We are thankful for small mercies in this terrific struggle, and are glad if in our tactics there is any hint that may be useful to temperance workers in other nations.

We are also glad that the duty of representing this country fell to Mrs. Hunt, because she is a firm believer in the method which, in our opinion, is the most rational and effective of all that have been devised. That method is to influence the children. We could bear the present affliction, grievous as it is, if we were sure that the next generation would be a sober one. There is reason to rejoice when the victims of strong drink are rescued from their slavery, but the number of such rescues is comparatively small, and the danger of relapse is continuous. Even Prohibition, if we could obtain it, is beset with difficulty, because the law might be evaded, and the restraint would be irksome to a people so tenacious as ours, of personal liberty. But if we could get hold of the children before they have fallen under the power of the evil, and could convince them of the benefit of total abstinence, so that when they grow up, they will abstain from choice, then there would be hope. Mrs. Hunt was able to explain to the Bremen Congress the measures that we have adopted along this line in our Public Schools, and both the Congress and the statesmen whom she interviewed, expressed their admiration of them. It will be a valuable service that Mrs. Hunt has rendered to the German people, if she has induced the authorities to adopt a similar method in their educational system. Every true patriot, there as here, is concerned in the eradication of this growing menace to the well-being of the people, the prolific parent of poverty, degeneration and crime.

To Extend the Kingdom

EVERY Christian patriot must rejoice to witness the multiplying signs of co-operation among the denominations, in the gigantic struggle between good and evil in the world. A remarkable evidence of that co-operation was seen in the recent annual Conference of the Brotherhood of the Kingdom. This organization, as its name implies, is composed of men of many creeds, who are striving together to make the rule of Christ supreme in society, and convince the world that in obeying him and following his teaching, it is taking the true way to righteousness and happiness. It is one of the most striking proofs of the divinity of Christ, that although living in a period so remote from ours and under conditions so dissimilar from those of the Twentieth Century, he should have laid down prinples which apply to our country and our time, and which would tend to our social development. It would be an ideal condition if that prayer that his people have been offering through the centuries, was granted: "Thy Kingdom Come."

The most encouraging augury of that coming time is seen in the association of the leaders who bear his name, coming together, regardless of denominational demarkations, to devise measures for extending that kingdom. All honor to them and all good wishes for their success! There is, as a contemporary observes, "an increasing number of men who conceive of Christianity not merely as a means of saving individuals here and there from destruction, but as a positive force for the establishment of a Divine order of life in the earth." At the same time, we must not forget that it is in the conversion of individuals that the mass is affected. That is the Divine order. The true regeneration of society will come when the units are transformed, and neither in legislation nor in social restraints can we hope for the establishment of the kingdom, but in the surrender of the individual soul to the rule of Christ.

What Is Woman's True Sphere?

TIMES change, and with them opinions also change. Less than forty years ago, such a symposium as that which appears in another part of the present issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, on the question of "Woman's Sphere—Home Life or a Business Career?" would have been an impossibility. Very different were the social conditions which then surrounded the home life, and so few were the opportunities afforded to women who might have aspired to a professional or business career, that they were scarcely to be considered. It was held to be a settled thing—a destiny divinely fixed and not to be evaded—that woman's rightful realm was the home. To the more strenuous sex belonged the world of business, with all its multifarious duties. If woman essayed to enter the professions, she was a "blue-stocking" or "mannish," and the mere suggestion that she should take up any business calling as a life vocation would have been ridiculed.

And now all this is changed. Woman has become the active competitor of man in a thousand fields of intellectual, industrial and business activity. Our girls have spurned the cook-book, the "sampler" and the work-basket, and clamor for a business education. Even music is less of a home accomplishment than heretofore, and is left more and more to the musical professional. Our athletic daughters, no longer like "shy violets," claim equality with their brothers in sports, in education, and in the freedom to choose a vocation which shall lead to personal independence. We have reached the barrier-lifting era, when nearly all the old-time restraints which society imposed upon womankind seem to have dropped away. New economic conditions, educational progress, man's generosity, and woman's love of change have all contributed to this transformation. At every step in woman's new departure, man has gallantly accorded her loyal encouragement. It is only the disgruntled few who have opposed her.

In our own land, at least, the invasion of the business field by woman is accepted as a fact which it would be folly now to dispute. It has been said, and probably with considerable truth, that a large majority of these Twentieth Century women, after all, regard their business or professional careers as merely temporary, and look forward across the years to the pleasing prospect of a happy marriage and a home as the ideal life. But it is an open question whether a business career, however brief, is in any sense calculated to qualify a woman to make subsequent married life a success. And it may be that in grasping so eagerly at the freedom and independence which a business career affords, she will find later in life that she has thrown away the substance for the shadow, and sacrificed that which every true woman—if she but speak as her heart dictates—must confess to be the dearest ambition a woman knows: the desire to be a queen in her own right, the gentle sovereign in a home which love makes a palace of enchantment, and which, however humble, is the one spot on earth that holds most of heaven.

We believe that the problem is one that will work out its own solution. It will right itself, in the extension of the educational idea to all that relates to home training. We shall yet see a great multiplication of institutions for instruction in the arts of housewifery, in kitchen science, in dietetics, in hygiene, and in the best development of the moral and physical qualities of our children. The home life will become the highest of professions. This is the training which, under vine blessing, will yet help to make the home life of people so attractive, so satisfying, and so beautiful, th it will be in no danger of becoming a lost art throu neglect or indifference.

Among the Workers

—MR. SAMUEL POLLOCK, of Allegheny, Pa., writes that a Methodist camp meeting, which he attended near Pit burgh recently, there were over twenty conversions.

—EVANGELIST ROBERT L. LAYFIELD, of Kansas Cit has just closed successful meetings with the Markham M morial Presbyterian Church of St. Louis, Mo. The meetin were held in their tent "Glad Tidings."

—WONDERFUL PROGRESS is reported by the Cumberla Presbyterian Church, of Van Buren, Ark. In little mo than a year, the church membership has trebled and t Sunday School emolument more than quadrupled. Past C. S. Bass is now looking for means to erect a larger chap

—MISS JULIA B. writes: "A King's Daughter in Washin ton, D. C., has collected a mantel library for a room in t hospital where she spent weeks on a bed of illness. It giv constant pleasure. She desired that her tears 'should l amulets for coming workers.' Will others do likewise? persons will undertake this work she would be glad."

—MISS HELEN M. CLARK, director of the New Yo Foreigners' Mission, wishes to correspond with two Chri tian women who may wish to join the work of the Missi in practical capacities, one as working housekeeper, t other as stenographer, both being also expected to perfor missionary duties. Address her at the mission, 21 Mo street, New York.

—THE UNION EVANGELISTIC tent campaign carried o through July by several of the north side churches i Chicago, under the leadership of Rev. Milford H. Lyon, wa so successful that plans are being made to undertake th work on a far greater scale next season. Several pastors r port large and substantial additions to their church membe ship and a remarkable quickening of spiritual interest. M Lyon, and his singer, Mr. Coulter, worked last month i union evangelistic meetings at Richmond Center, Wis.

WHAT IS WOMAN'S TRUE SPHERE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 766

It is a great advantage. Through a business educatio girls are enabled to become self-supporting, and acquainte with the ways of the world. If the marry, this business training wi still be found helpful through it discipline, and because of the large views of humanity which its possessors will take. A woma trained in business will not be easily overcome by the pett annoyances which occur to all, and she will be able to unde stand somewhat of the difficulties and anxieties encountere by her husband in his daily labors. Home training conduce to purity; business training gives a broader mental vision.

Business Training Gives a Broader Field

Columbiaville, Mich. A. L. VERMILYEA.

. . .

Since nature never meant men to become wives an mothers, it is right for them to have a business educatio

"An Old Maid's" View of It

But when a woman has a business educa tion she wants a "career," to win a name fame and fortune. That is the sore spot. A course of kindergarten instructio should be included in a college education, or a year o study in Gen. 2:18; Pet. 31:10-31, and I. Tim. 5:13, 14. T make home life more attractive to girls, mothers are needec who find their greatest pleasure in their own homes.

Hawley, Pa. OLD MAID.

. . .

The present system of educating girls for business careers is not an advantage, because it does not fit them for the Business Careers Not an Advantage place which God intended they should fill in this world. Doubtless it better fits them for getting their own living independent of man, but that is not the sphere for which God made them. They were created to make the home and bring up the children, and man to provide for and protect that home. I think there can be no doubt that the home life should be the ideal vocation for woman, and the best remedy for making it more attractive and congenial than it now is, would be more self-sacrificing, more appreciative, more willing, more affectionate, generous, loving husbands. PARKER KNAPP.

Leonta, N. Y.

. . .

Answers have also been received from Mrs. L. Hatch, C. P. Dowding, J. Flomerfelt, W. W. Hubbard, L. T. Rightsell, Mrs. Margaret Collins, Lester Sewell, Leon Lewis Hadden, David Kay, Mary K. Marcy, K. A. L., M. H. S., Jeanette Harding, and others.

* * *

Any reader of this journal who knows of the whereabouts of Henry Simmons, who left St. Vincent, British West Indies, two years ago for this country, will confer a favor by communicating with Sarah Henderson, Kingston, St. Vincent, B. W. I.

THE BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

A Disturbing Report

GREAT excitement was caused throughout the country recently, by a cable message to the State Department, from Mr. Leishman, our minister at Constantinople, announcing that our Vice-Consul at Beirut, Mr. Magelssen, had been assassinated. As it was known that Mr. Magelssen had been actively exerting himself on behalf of the oppressed Armenians, it was believed that he had been murdered as the Russian Consul was, by Turks. The President immediately instructed Mr. Leishman to lay the facts before the Sultan, and demand reparation. He also ordered Admiral Cotton to proceed with the European Squadron to Beirut, to be ready to enforce Mr. Leishman's demands and to protect any American citizens whose lives might be in danger. Admiral Cotton promptly obeyed orders, and sailed with the United States warships, Brooklyn and San Francisco and the gunboat Machias to Turkish waters. Happily the report on which this prompt action was based, proved untrue. The statement came later, that a mistake had been made in the cable code by the sender of the original message, and that the Vice-Consul had not been killed, though he had been shot at. A still later report from Turkish sources, has it that he was not even shot at, but that a bullet passed near him as he was driving past a wedding party, who were firing off pistols as an ovation to the bridal couple. The whole affair is to be thoroughly investigated, and though it was too late to countermand the orders to the squadron, Admiral Cotton will doubtless leave Beirut with all speed. The incident is regrettable, in view of the present excited situation in Turkey, and the arrival of our warships in Beirut may be misconstrued, but the mistake may be a useful hint to Turkish officials. It will show them that if they did molest our representatives, or commit a breach of international law, there would be no hesitancy in taking measures to compel reparation. The lives of our citizens in Turkey will be all the safer for this display of power and energy. The Turk is a conspicuous example of the disposition common to all men of hoping to wholly escape a punishment which is long delayed.

Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil (Eccles. 8: 11).

BEIRUT, WHERE U. S. VICE-CONSUL MAGELSSEN WAS SAID TO HAVE BEEN SHOT AT

A Girl's Hair at Auction

A despatch from Castine, Me., to the New York Sun, describes a strange contest as having taken place at a church fair in that town. The object of thefair was to raise money to paint and renovate the church. The members were intensely in earnest, but, though the women had done their utmost to make the tables attractive and sell their goods, the amount needed was not raised. Then, a girl, a daughter of one of the members, came forward and offered to sell her hair, and give the money to the cause. A bid was at once made for it by a merchant from Worcester, Mass. Another offer being made for it by a Boston man. It was determined to make a regular auction sale of it. The girl went on the platform and unloosed the thick coils. Her hair, of a ruddy brown color and very abundant, fell about her shoulders, below her waist. There was a general protest against its being cut off, but the girl insisted that she was willing to make the sacrifice, and the young man to whom she was about to be married, applauded her resolution. The cutting was to be delayed until all bids were in, and the money of the highest bidder actually deposited on the table. When the bids passed the one hundred dollar mark, many of the contestants dropped out, and the struggle resolved itself into a rivalry between the man from Worcester, and he from Boston. The bidding went on until the Boston man became the purchaser at $536, and he surprised all present by refusing to allow the hair to be cut off. He paid the money into the church fund, and the girl went home in triumph, still wearing her beautiful locks. She doubtless feels very glad that her object of getting the money for the church was attained, yet without the sacrifice she was willing to make. The Christian very often has a similar experience in his dealing with God. When he consecrates himself, and all he has and is ready to give up all, he is not required to give up anything. It is the spirit of surrender, not the surrender itself, that God values.

Lay not thine hand upon the lad, neither do thou anything unto him; for now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son (Gen. 22: 12).

A Rescuer Drowned

During the intense heat last week some boys went to the foot of Seventeenth street, New York, to watch their opportunity for swimming in the river. It is one of the narrowest parts of the river, and is very treacherous, for though it looks calm, it gets the full sweep of the tide, and even at flood, rushes swiftly down stream. Some men at work at that point, cautioned the boys, and most of them went away to find a better place, but one of them, proud of his strength and skill, persisted. He had been some time in the water when he turned to swim to the shore. It was much more difficult than he knew, and he was soon exhausted. The men on the shore, seeing him being carried down stream, became excited. One of them, an engineer, engaged in hoisting operations, jumped in after him. He was not a good swimmer, and was unable to reach the boy. A second man perceived that he would fail, and he too jumped in and succeeded in getting hold of the boy, and holding him up until a third man who had found a boat, came to his help, and took both man and boy on board. In the meantime, the other men had been trying to save the first rescuer, by throwing a rope to him. He failed to catch it, and by the time the boat reached the spot where he was last seen he had sunk. His body was subsequently recovered, but life was extinct. The boy was taken to the hospital and resuscitated. If he has a right spirit, he will never cease to grieve that, through his foolhardiness, a man lost his life. Perhaps, however, he will not trouble about it. There are many men who know that to save them from the consequences of their sin, Christ died on the cross, yet they feel neither sorrow for sin, nor love for him who gave his life to save them.

He died for all, that they who live should henceforth live not unto themselves, but unto him who died for them (II Cor. 5: 15).

A Prisoner's Daily Visitor

A remarkable illustration of a dog's fidelity has been witnessed at the city jail in Jersey City, N. J., every day for a week past. Among the men under sentence is one who, when he was arrested, was followed by a mongrel dog. The dog went into the station house with his master, and when the latter was locked up slipped into the cell with him. He was not allowed to go to court, but he waited outside, and when his master was brought out after sentence and thrust into the prison van, trotted beside the van to the jail. He tried to make his way into the jail, but the door-man drove him out. He hung about the jail all night and made several efforts to get inside. His master was assigned to the task of keeping the lawns in order, and when he made his appearance there the next day to begin work, the dog ran to his side, jumping around him and giving expression to his joy. He stayed with him all day, and when the man was sent to jail at night the dog turned disconsolately away. Regularly every morning since, he is at the jail awaiting the appearance of the man on the lawn to spend the day with him. Probably the prisoner has no other visitors, certainly none so regular and constant as his dog. It may be that he does not deserve any, and a man's friends are usually very prompt to desert him when his wrongdoing has brought him into trouble. Happily for us, even in the misery we bring on ourselves, God does not desert us. Christ assured us of his unfailing love for the repentant sinner.

He is kind unto the unthankful and to the evil (Luke 6: 35).

Adults in Juvenile Dress

A novel children's party was given on Aug. 28, at Narragansett Pier, R. I. The correspondent of the New York Herald sends a vivid account of the arrangements. He says: "The lawn was aglow with bright Chinese and Japanese lanterns. Under the cottagers of the Pier drove or accompanied to the fete attired in juvenile frocks and trim, bedecked with ribbons of baby blue and pink. The men wore knee breeches and blue socks with white and blue blouses, while the maids and matrons were attired in pinafores, short skirts, fancy stockings and highheeled shoes. Some wore poke bonnets, with strings tied under their chins, and tresses in curls over their shoulders. A merry frolic on the lawn ensued after which there was dancing in the ballroom. During the midnight intermission between the dances a "good night" supper was served on the green beneath bright lights suspended in variecolored festoons. About forty cottagers sat about one large table, making a picturesque scene." It must have been a very trivial scene, howsoever picturesque it was, and some of the guests must have looked ridiculous in their juvenile costume. It would be well at some one reminded them of the example set by the great Apostle.

When I was a child I spake as a child, I thought as a child: but when I became a man I put away childish things (I Cor. 13: 11).

BRIEF NOTES

A training school for boys and girls is connected at Jerusalem by the Friends and two Americans, Mr. and Mrs. A. Elwood Kersey, have sailed to take charge of it.

The Sunday School at Stockport, England, which claims to be the largest in the world, is erecting an addition to its main building capable of seating three thousand.

A Methodist Hospital called the John L. Hopkins Memorial, has been dedicated in Peking, China. The building is one gift of the brother and brother in law of Dr. N. S. Hopkins, president of the Methodist Mission.

There are now three colored bishops of Western Episcopal Africa. Bishops Hartzell, Ferguson and Gaines. These bishops oversee an area of 900,000 square miles, with an estimated population of 8,000,000 souls.

A recent report of the Lunacy Commissioners of Great Britain gives the number of habitual inebriates now in institutions in that country as 1,004, and adds the significant fact that these persons were committed to such institutions that their condition was due to drunkenness within years of more than a dozen convictions.

A summer school has been held at Kearney, Nebraska, which some of the prominent educators of the State attended. Nebraska. The Governor, State Superintendent and other prominent speakers took part in the programme and an enthusiastic meeting was the conference and a new has been given for permanent institution.

John G. Paton, the Apostle of the New Hebrides, reports that "The converts of the mission stations in Malekula have built a Christian village of seven days last. All the inhabitants, long bush and those newly fled with Jesus and Heaven, are very happy with one another, growing in the knowledge of the Saviour and of the Word and peace of Christianity.

The Church Missionary Society has recently received an offer of unusual magnificence. A few years ago Mrs. W. J. Hamilton, of Bath, presented to the Society a large sum of money for the purpose of building a church in memory of her husband. The income of the investment proved to be more than sufficient for the purpose, and Mrs. Hamilton has now offered to increase the gift to [illegible] The Society has accepted the offer, and the church will be erected [illegible]

The Irrigation Commission appointed by the Russian Government to investigate the question of irrigation in India and the best means of preventing [illegible] has issued its report. It proposes a system of irrigation [illegible] which will be carried out gradually to cover in the end [illegible] The cost of the whole scheme will be [illegible] The report will be completed within twelve years and the total cost will be [illegible] The Commission recommends [illegible] [illegible] tions, for irrigation, [illegible]

Many Friends Help Our Mont-Lawn Waifs

As the summer wanes, the interest of our readers in our Fresh-Air work among the tenement waifs at Mont-Lawn seems to increase. Many kind-hearted friends are now availing themselves of the opportunity in the closing weeks of this benevolent work, to do something for the wee tenement boys and girls, that will make their lives brighter and better for a little while at least.

Some of the letters received lately from contributors to the Fresh-Air fund are full of such genuine appreciation and encouragement that we cannot refrain from quoting a few extracts, which we feel sure will be read with interest:

"Enclosed please find check for $12.00 for your good work at Mont-Lawn (writes Mrs. M. F.A., Atlantic Highlands). I hope four children may enjoy ten days each, and may God's blessing richly follow your good work."

Mrs. J. L. C., Union City, Pa., writes: "I enclose three dollars for some poor child to have a glimpse of Mont-Lawn life. It's a miscellaneous collection from friends of the little ones. I would that I could make it many, many times three, but I have done what I could. May the little one it sends, be happy in the going. God bless them and you."

"May this mite ($1) help some waif nearer heaven," writes M. A. McC., Milo, Mo.

"Enclosed find three dollars to send a little one to Mont-Lawn. I wish I could send you $100, I feel so sorry for the poor children in the city," writes Mrs. M. B., Chesterfield, Iowa.

R. L. L., Connecticut, writes: "In answer to the poor children's piteous cry, 'Won't you send us to Mont-Lawn?' The enclosed $10 is my reply. The enterprise is a noble work, yea, a heavenly. May God reward you abundantly and all engaged in this work."

"I hope health and a new life may be found during the ten days outing," writes Mrs. E. H. A., Townshend, Vermont ($3).

"Please accept our little mite to help along your work at Mont-Lawn. My girls in the Sunday School class have wanted to help out in this work, in which we are all interested," writes E. C. R., Florence, Mass.

Here is a precious and loving gift: "I send you ten cents for the Children's Home at Mont-Lawn (writes G. H., of Bullard, Tex.) I hope it will help to make some poor child happy. I would be glad to send more, but this is all I have. I am a little boy six years old."

"I feel I must have a share if it be only a small one, in the pleasure and benefit that you have given to the little children at Mont-Lawn. Enclosed please find three dollars," writes C. A. R., Haverhill, Mass.

"Our little daughter Gladys Victoria wishes to send thr dollars, which we enclose, so that some little girl may ha an outing at Mont-Lawn," writes Mr. and Mrs. O. M. A., Franklin, in far-off Manitoba.

A Friend, Ft. Edward, N.Y., writes: "I have read with i terest the accounts of t children's life at the Mon Lawn Home, and wish have a share in the work, a though a very small one. E closed is three dollars, se hoping some child will made better in mind and bod by a stay at the Home."

THE MARCH FROM THE DINING TENT TO THE CHAPEL AT MONT-LAWN

The most impressive an sacred spot at Mont-Law is the little chapel ded cated to God's servic where our children me every day to return thank and sing praises to ou Heavenly Father for all hi goodness. It is the olde of all the buildings, an must soon be replaced, w hope, with a substantial on of stone.

Yet this rustic chapel, ol and dilapidated as it no is, has been the scene o many delightful gathering that have brought spiritua blessing. Who shall sa to what extent the mind and heart and the whole life o a very large proportion of those tenement children ar influenced by these simple chapel gatherings of praye and praise. Many of our visitors have attended thes meetings during the past summer, and all have been im pressed with the earnestness of the children at worshi and in prayer.

Contributions in aid of our Children's Home should be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House N. Y. Every contribution will be acknowledged ir these columns.

Souls Won at the Love-Feast

Closing Scenes at the Great Ocean Grove Camp Meeting

THE Ocean Grove Annual Camp-Meeting—the greatest in its history—began on Friday, August 21, and continued until noon of August 31. During the camp-meeting there were from nine to sixteen services a day. From early morn 'till late at night the voice of prayer, praise and exhortation resounded through the Grove. The singing could be heard by travelers on trains, before they reached the station. During some hours there were three services in progress at once.

Five bishops were in attendance. Bishop James M. Fitzgerald, the President of the Association, presided at the Auditorium preaching services. Among the other Bishops on the grounds were Bishop Andrews, Bishop Waldron, Bishop Fowler and Bishop Goodsell.

A conference of Methodist deaconesses was held here one day during the camp-meeting, at which Bishop C. H. Fowler presided, and Bishop J. H. Waldron, officiated as secretary. Official representatives from most of the Deaconess Homes and Training Schools of the United States, were present. The purpose of the conference was to consider the advisability of uniting the Deaconess into one great organization.

